"The bad effects that have flowed from the mill-dam, near Harrisburgh, have been manifestly evident; but the melancholy consequences of a continuation of this evil are enormous in proportion to the former growing prosperity of the place. It is well known that few places in the United States were built so rapidly, or became more flourishing in so short a time, nor could any inland situation boast of more advantages. A county-town, in the heart of a good country, beautifully situated on the Susquehanna, and deriving many extraordinary benefits from that circumstance. That the increase of Harrisburgh was not upon false premises, we may say with propriety; for every industrious man had materially bettered his situation during the health of the place, which continued for six years after the town was laid out. In this situation the mill-dam found us, when its bad effects began to be felt. Paxtang Creek, of itself, and the low ground on each side of it, was to be dreaded, when exposed to the sun, by the loss of the timber near the town; but cultivation would again restore health. Now the mill-dam cuts up every expectation—it is a bed of stagnant water and putrid vegetables, and prevents the possibility of any improvement. It is impossible to drain the swamps upon the creek, there is no fall to carry off the water, nay, occasionally covered with this mill-dam; and when the waters ebb away they retain to the extent of their surface until exhales by the sun; for the land is lower a distance from the creek than immediately at the banks.

"Here our prosperity seems to be arrested—we have not even hope left, because the mill-dam, in truth, does away the possibility of improvement, which, if not immediately, would in time, and according to the extent of it, give this place health. Another truth is, that Mr. Landis dams the water not only upon Mr. Harris's land, of whom he bought, but upon that which was Mr. Maclay's, before the bargain, which is an unjustifiable extension of the mischief. Conscious of the destructive influence of this mill-dam, the inhabitants of Harrisburgh entered into a negotiation with Mr. Landis, last year, for the purpose of buying his property, that they might prostrate the dam. At which time, the extent of his demand was twenty six hundred pounds, £1600 in hand, and the residue in two annual payments; which price, although it was thought too high, there was some efforts made to raise; however, before it could be accomplished, the season became too far advanced to take down the dam, which, together with the greatness of the sum, relaxed our endeavors upon the subject. Another season was experienced, which brought with it its calamities, and the people more unanimously took up the matter again, about the 7th of January '95; when they agreed to give Mr. Landis the £2600 according to his demand. A committee was appointed to wait upon Mr. Landis, to accede to his offer, and he gave them for answer, that £4112 10s. was the lowest price he would take at that time. I ask Mr. Landis, if he did not offer the mill, &c., to the inhabitants of the borough for £2600, as I have mentioned, last March, in a paper subscribed with his own hand? I ask him, if he would not have taken that money for it in May last? I ask him, if he did not take his work from tradesmen in the borough because they would not subscribe to pay a proportionable part of it? We complied with his terms in January, and I ask him, if his mill rose in value £1512 in seven months? It is very well known that Messrs. Elder and Ober's mills take the country custom, and a great share of the town, so that Mr. Landis's mill depends greatly upon the town (to which idea Mr. Landis accedes). It is as well known that the population of Harrisburgh has not increased, and that property has depreciated for some time past—and how his mill, in this situation, could have appreciated £1512 in seven months is beyond all conception. To be sure, lands have increased in price somewhat in 7 months, but not in this proportion. But how a mill, and 3 acres of land, depending, in a great degree, upon its enemies for support, could have thus raised in value, appears truly astonishing; that Mr. Landis would have taken £2600 in May, 1794, for his mill, and won't take less than £4112 10s. in Jan. following, might indeed appear a riddle. However, a thing is always worth as much as it will fetch, and who would stand to make terms with a surgeon, when he has his forceps fixed to extract the stone from the bladder? Who would not readily say, give me relief, and take all I have?

"Upon the present occasion, Mr. Landis sees the people pressed by their calamities, exceedingly anxious and unanimous, and although he took his work from a man last year, for not subscribing his proportionable part of £2600 he may see his way clear this season, in leaving a contribution of £4112 10s. upon the inhabitants of the borough.

"Fellow-citizens, you have acted justly, and you have acted with patience, in offering to pay the man's price, before you came to the resolution of destroying this reservoir of contagion. You have done more than the inhabitants of Carlisle, and other places, who have removed nuisances of this kind without asking who owed them, and without dreaming of compensation. Go on, gentlemen, in an undertaking which is founded in such justice—take up the £2600 and tender it according to the man's terms; and if he does not receive it, have respect for yourselves, for your families, and for your solemn resolution—TEAR DOWN THE MILL-DAM!!—Will you be played upon this way? Will men, who have vested their all here, and are in business, live in a continual state of anxiety about their families, after making up their minds to sacrifice to the amount of this man's demands will they let him assess their happiness, by caprice and sordid principles, at £1512 for seven months?

"Some might say, I'll go and leave the place. I say no—it is not an easy matter for a householder to rise up and leave a place in which he is settled in business, and a place which once offered the fairest prospects. If this idea prevailed, property would sell for little, and little would make us turn our backs upon a place, which, from its situation, promises as much as any inland place in Pennsylvania. No, gentlemen, we can't desert our property and interest. Let us remove the mill-dam, in the honorable way we devised—clear out the creek, and put the lands under cultivation; and he the means, under God's blessing, to give health to the place, which I have no doubt, will be followed with prosperity to the rich and poor, who are industrious."

The following proceedings of the "Committee of Seven" are of interest in this connection:

"At a meeting of the Committee of Seven, appointed to superintend and direct the appropriation of the moneys raised for the demolition of the mill-dam and for the further removing the nuisance in Paxtang Creek, April 8, 1795:

"At Brindle's: present, Potts, Gillmor, Berryhill, W. Graydon, Dentzell, Bucher, Kean.

"John Kean was appointed secretary and treasurer.

"Ordered, that the treasurer take up the bonds due to Adam Boyd and to George Allen.

"Adjourned to Saturday evening next, at six o'clock, at Mr. Berryhill's.

"Saturday, 11th.—The committee met and viewed the dam, and adjourned till Monday evening, at six o'clock, at Berryhill's.

"Monday, 13th.—Met, and the members mentioned the names of persons wishing to borrow money. Agreed, that the money be retained in the treasury a few days longer.

"Agreed, that on Saturday next at one o'clock the bell be rung, and the inhabitants assemble and demolish the remainder of the dam.

"Saturday, 18th.—The committee met and proceeded with a number of the inhabitants to the dam. Committee hired four persons to open the bed of the creek twelve feet wide, which was done, and the persons employed were paid six dollars, which was raised by voluntary contribution on the spot."

The Oracle of Monday following gives this account of the affair :

"On Thursday last a committee appointed by the citizens of Harrisburg waited on Abraham Landis and Peter Landis, and tendered the whole demand they made last year for the mill, with its appurtenances, agreeable to the terms they had proposed ; but they now thought proper to require a much greater sum ; wherefore, apprehending that the owners of the said mill intended, through the distressing calamities thought to be occasioned by the mill-dam, to extort an enormous price from the people for the enjoyment of health, by the unreasonable sum now demanded for the mill, they did almost unanimously proceed, on Saturday afternoon last, to take down and destroy that intolerable nuisance which has for three years past rendered this borough a mere hospital and graveyard ; and therefore it is now hoped that, under the blessing of Divine Providence, this once flourishing place may be restored to its former state of healthiness and prosperity."

The Messrs. Landis subsequently met the "committee of seven," and again demanded two thousand pounds for the water-right, and threatened to bring suit, which was refused. However, the former at last agreed to the citizens' proposition, and on the 25th of April, 1795, Peter, John, and Abraham Landis sold to Stacy Potts, Moses Gillmor, William Graydon, Jacob Bucher, John Kean, John Dentzel, and Alexander Berryhill, of the borough of Harrisburg, and conveyed to them their mill, etc., for £2633 4s. 6d., "to hold and to have the said two pieces of lands, houses, mills, mill machinery, etc." This sum, as before stated, was raised by taxing the citizens. The payments were made in three annual installments ; one-half of the amount assessed was paid in 1794, one-half the balance in 1795, and the balance in 1796. For example, a citizen taxed four pounds had to pay two pounds in 1794, one pound in 1795, and one pound in 1796. It may be remarked that some citizens who refused to contribute to the subscription were obliged to leave the town. No violence was offered to them, but no one would employ them in their several pursuits, and they at length went elsewhere. The following list for the years 1795 and 1796 shows the amount assessed :

A writer, speaking of the old mill-site, says it was "erected about one-quarter of a mile below Harrisburg, about as low down as the old 'White House,' between the 'old mill road' and the canal; and the race extended up along, or nearly along, the present route of the Pennsylvania Canal to a lane which ran across the ridge, about the upper line of the brick-yard field opposite Pratt's rolling-mill, where the dam was erected." This would place the mill-dam north of Paxtang Street, not far below Wister's furnace.

CHAPTER IV.

The Duke de Rochefoucauld at Harrisburg—Aggressions of the French Directory—Address of the Citizens of Harrisburg to President Adams, and his Reply—Cuming's Account of Harrisburg in 1807—Erection of the Harrisburg Bridge.

In the years 1795, 1796, and 1797 the Duke de la Rochefoucauld-Liancourt, of France, made a tour of America. In the course of his travels he passed through Dauphin County, making special mention of Middletown, Harrisburg, and Fort Hunter (McAllister's). We give in this place his impressions of Harrisburg:

"Mr. Harris, lord of the manor on which Harrisburg stands, availed himself of Mr. Frey's error to procure his town advantages that the former neglected. No sooner was it in contemplation to form the tract of country, separated from Lancaster, into a distinct county than he offered to the government of Pennsylvania to sacrifice not only a toll on the Susquehanna, of which he was possessed, and the profits of which he lawfully enjoyed, but also several thousand acres of land in and about the town, reserving to himself only twenty ground shares,

This offer induced the government of Pennsylvania to make this the chief town of the country, though it has neither an anchoring-place for the ships that sail up and down the river, nor can afford them the smallest shelter.

"The new county obtained the name of Dauphin. The first houses were built here in 1785, and their number at present amounts to three hundred.

"The formation of this town being of a more recent date than any other, the buildings were from the very first of a better construction than anywhere else; and such as were not originally good houses have since been rebuilt. Very few log houses are therefore to be found in Harrisburg, but, on the contrary, many substantial and handsome edifices; and though this town is smaller and of later establishment than Reading and many other places, yet it is more compact and has a much better appearance. A malignant epidemic fever has made the same havoc in Harrisburg as the yellow fever did in Philadelphia, and for a whole twelvemonth checked the progress of building. As the fever did not return last year, however, building is still going on; but the prejudice of the town being insalubrious still remains, whether it be really so or, as the inhabitants affirm, merely a scandalous report propagated by the jealousy of the neighboring towns. The unhealthiness of the place being imputed to the stagnation of some water which was made to turn a mill, it was proposed to the miller to throw down the dam, and an indemnification was offered him. He demanded last year four thousand dollars, but this sum not having been raised soon enough in his opinion, he this year raised his demand in proportion to the increased desire of destroying his dam, and insisted on the payment of eleven thousand dollars. The inhabitants, enraged at this exorbitant demand, and at the same time earnestly wishing for the demolition of the dam, unanimously resolved to destroy it, and appointed a commission to award a just indemnification to the miller, which has been determined at the sum he first demanded. All the inhabitants seem to have concurred in this proceeding, which, though not to be applauded, is less censurable on account of the miller's enormous rapacity. The unanimity with which this transaction was accomplished insures its impunity, and the miller will be cautious of entering upon a prosecution, as the grand jury would certainly throw out his bill. He has no one to blame but himself for the destruction of his dam, and the public opinion which by a more prudent conduct he might last year have engaged in his favor, is now decidedly against him; yet with many of the demolishers themselves it remains a matter of doubt whether the demolition of the dam have any way increased the salubrity of the place.

"A prison and a sessions-house have been built at Harrisburg, and a plan is in agitation to form an anchorage for ships. The inhabitants exert their utmost efforts to procure to this place all the advantages of which it is susceptible, and even indulge a hope that the seat of the government of the State will be removed to their town. They form a central point, at least for the population of Pennsylvania, and are less distant from the remote western parts than any other county on this side of the Susquehanna, and on these local advantages they ground their hopes. It is, however, to be wished that their notion of determining the seat of the Legislature by a pair of compasses may be confined to men who cannot influence the decision, and that it may be rightly understood how much better it is for the deputies to travel one hundred miles farther than remove the seat of government from Philadelphia, which is the most populous city, and the only trading town in Pennsylvania, and which consequently forms that point where the best information is in unison with the most important interests. The public expenditure necessary in this newly-formed county causes the taxes to be somewhat higher than in the counties of Lancaster and Berks; the difference may be a shilling in the pound. Unless you chance to meet with a commissioner of taxes, the exact proportion is not to be ascertained, as a general ignorance on the subject every where prevails. The taxes, however, are generally deemed very light, even by those who pay them, which is undoubtedly the strongest proof that they are so. The majority of the inhabitants of Harrisburg consists of Germans and Irishmen, firmly attached to government, sensible and industrious. The number of inns in America is out of all proportion to that in Europe. This place contains no less than thirty-eight. It has twenty-five or thirty shops, where may be found all sorts of merchandise, procured from Philadelphia on twelve and eighteen months' credit, and of which the shopkeepers rapidly dispose at double or treble their prime cost. The price of ground shares in the town of Harrisburg is from one hundred and fifty to two hundred dollars. The land in the surrounding country is good; its price is from thirty-two to forty-eight dollars an acre. Day laborers are paid here three shillings and sixpence a day, with their board, or five shillings without it.

"The Susquehanna near Harrisburg is about three-quarters of a mile in breadth; in summer it is frequently fordable. The navigation is extremely dangerous for several months in consequence of some rapid currents, and never safe except in spring and autumn, when the water is sufficiently high to cover the rocks, which become more numerous at the point where the Juniata falls into the Susquehanna, nine miles above Harrisburg, and greatly increases the dangers of the navigation. The government of Pennsylvania has offered eight hundred thousand dollars for clearing the river of these rocks from the above point down to Middletown, but hitherto no one has ventured upon this enterprise. I entertain no doubt, however, but that this vast undertaking will shortly be accomplished, though the sum hitherto offered may not be sufficient, but must probably be increased. The industry and prosperity of Pennsylvania will in time overcome this, as well as many other disadvantages which have heretofore been deemed insupportable. A Frenchman resides at present at Harrisburg who was born in France, but came hither from Martioico. He is a physician, and though he speaks but little English, and has resided here only a few months, enjoys already considerable practice.

"We had a letter to Gen. Hanco, and as we intended to stop here but a few hours, we delivered it as soon as we alighted from our horses. Gen. Hanco is a man of about thirty-six or thirty-eight years of age, and brigadier-general of militia. He was a member of the Senate for Pennsylvania, but went out by rotation last autumn. Before he was engaged in the service of the State he was a lawyer, but he has since relinquished that profession, and has commenced farming. He married a daughter of old Mr. Harris, the founder of the town, and appears to be an upright, worthy character. Not being prepared to give us a dinner, as we came unexpectedly, he offered to attend us to our evening quarters, seven miles from this town, as some token of respect for the letter of introduction which we brought him. As our horses wanted shoeing, we were obliged to make him wait some time, which we passed in the true American style, quaffing a bottle of Madeira and smoking cigars. The general is not fond of them, but prefers chewing tobacco; yet from motives of politeness he smoked with us. Being at our lodgings we proposed as a toast 'The President,' upon which he immediately gave 'Lafayette.' I noticed this trifling circumstance to introduce once more the remark that Lafayette is constantly toasted next to the President, which in my judgment reflects honor on America."

The aggression upon American commerce, commenced by the French Directory in 1797, and subsequent insults offered our ambassadors, aroused such great indignation in our country that Congress, on the 28th of May, 1798, passed an act authorizing the President to raise a provisional army. Gen. William Irvine was appointed by Governor Mifflin as commander-in-chief of the quota of eighty thousand militia requested from Pennsylvania, and took active measures to organize his troops. When the Directory became aware that their conduct would not be tamely submitted to, they began suddenly to retract their measures, and there was no necessity for bringing the provisional army into the field. At this period the people in all sections became aroused. A meeting of the citizens of Harrisburg was held at Andrew Berryhill's on the evening of May 1st, and an address was unanimously agreed upon and signed by all present, to which the signatures of others of the inhabitants as were not present were secured, and the whole transmitted to President Adams. This address is as follows:

"HARRISBURG, May 2.

"At a respectable meeting of the inhabitants of this Borough, last evening, at Mr. Andrew Berryhill's; the following address was unanimously agreed upon, and signed by all present to the number of 51. Six gentlemen were appointed to procure as early as possible the signatures of such of the inhabitants as did not attend, and to transmit the address when completed to the President.

"To the President of the United States:

"SIR,—AT a time, when the minds of men are so intoxicated with ideas of reform, and visionary schemes for meliorating the condition of humanity, as to be fatally inattentive to their own security, and regardless of considerations which have hitherto been deemed the most sacred and obligatory—there may be a propriety in the declaration of sentiments, which in more settled times, might at least be thought superfluous: From the generality also, of the practice of expressing approbation of the measures of government at the present crisis, motives might be attached to the omission of it, less honorable than a disinclination, to intrude upon the managers of the public concerns, or a reluctance to suppose that in the resistance of outrage and maintenance of national independence, they would not receive the support of the virtuous and unprejudiced part of the community. Under these impressions, we the subscribers, inhabitants of the Borough of Harrisburg, beg leave to declare, that we are too highly sensible of the prosperity we enjoy, to be willing to relinquish it without an effort for its preservation; and that in our wishes for the happiness of others, we have not lost sight of our country & ourselves. That in our opinion, the conduct and designs of the French Republic (scarcely aggravated or made more apparent by the profligacy of their avowal) are such as to produce alarm and indignation in every breast which feels for the honor and happiness of America, and to excite the apprehensions of every man, of whatever nation or country, who may place a sense of justice, of morality, and piety among the ornaments of his nature and the blessings of society. That under this persuasion, we hold it wise to be prepared for every event, and shall therefore most cheerfully acquiesce in such measures of defence, as may be adopted by you, Sir, and the other branches of the administration, at the present momentous period. And that as your past conduct has invariably commanded the respect and approbation of every ingenuous mind, so we have the most perfect reliance, that in future it will continue to be influenced by the purest motives and clearest perceptions of the public good.

"We beg you to accept our cordial wishes for your personal welfare and happiness."

To this address President Adams sent the following characteristic reply:

"To the inhabitants of the Borough of Harrisburg, in the State of Pennsylvania:

"GENTLEMEN,—Your address has been presented to me by Mr. Hartley, Mr. Sitgreaves, and Mr. Hanna, three of your Representatives in Congress.

"I know not which to admire most, the conscience, the energy, the elegance, or profound wisdom of this excellent address.

"Ideas of reformation, and schemes for ameliorating the condition of humanity, should not be discouraged when proposed with reason and pursued with moderation; but the rage for innovation, which destroys everything because it is established, and introduces absurdities the most monstrous merely because they are new, was never carried to such a pitch of madness in any age of the world, as in the latter end of the boasted eighteenth century, and never produced effects so horrible upon suffering humanity.

"Among all the appearances, portents of evil, there is none more incomprehensible than the professions of Republicanism among those who place not a sense of justice, morality, or piety, among the ornaments of their nature, and the blessings of society. As nothing is more certain or demonstrable than that free Republicanism cannot exist without these ornaments and blessings, the tendency of the times is rapid towards a restoration of the petty military despots of the feudal aarchy, and by their means a return to the savage state of barbarous life.

"How can the press prevent this, when all the presses of a nation, and, indeed, of many nations at once, are subject to an impetator by a veto upon pain of confiscation, banishment, or execution?"

"That America may have the glory of arresting this torrent of error, vice, and imposture, is my fervent wish; and if sentiments as great as those from Harrisburg should be found universally to prevail, as I doubt not they will, my hopes will be as sanguine as my wishes.

"PHILADELPHIA, 12th May, 1798."

"JOHN ADAMS.

Until the year 1804 the business of the town and county was conducted in "pounds, shillings, and pence." On the 4th of February that year, on settling the accounts of the county treasurer, Adam Boyd, the statement made by the county auditors was as follows:

Cash on hand.....	1133	8	5
Outstanding debt.....	652	14	3½
	1766	2	10½
Equal to.....			$4769.71.

From that time onward the accounts were rendered in dollars and cents. The change to American currency was at the same time made in the financial accounts of the borough.

In 1807, Francis Cuming made a tour to the West. In his journey he passed through this section, and gives in his interesting narrative his impressions of the places and people.

Mr. Cuming forwarded his baggage by a Conestoga wagon for Carlisle. The wagon made fifteen miles a day. He traveled about twenty-five, and on the 13th of January, 1807, he arrived at Lancaster. Remaining at Lancaster several days, he continues his account:

"On Thursday, 29th January, I left Lancaster on foot, proceeding along the Harrisburg road at a steady pace of about three miles and a half an hour. The weather was remarkably fine, and the road in excellent order, and, what was remarkable for the season, a little dusty. About a mile and a half from Lancaster I passed a turnpike toll-gate, from a little beyond which I got the last view of the steeples of that town, and soon after I crossed a stone bridge over a branch of Conestoga Creek. The road continued fine and the country rich, laid out in large farms, with good dwelling-houses of brick and stone and immense barns. Though hill and dale, woods and cultivated farms presented themselves alternately, yet there was nothing very striking in the scenery.

"The road continued fine nine miles, to a rivulet called Big Chickey, which I crossed over on an Indian bridge, which is a high tree cut down so as to fall across the stream from bank to bank, and then its branches lopped off. The banks being high, and the bridge long and narrow, my nerves were so decomposed when I reached the middle that I had like to have fallen off, but balancing and tottering, I at length reached the end. Two miles farther I had to cross another Indian bridge over Little Chickey Creek, which I did boldly, without any difficulty, which is one proof of the use of practice and experience.

"The road now became very bad, the turnpike intended from Lancaster to Harrisburg not being as yet finished farther. The country also is not so highly improved as in the neighborhood of Lancaster, the inhabitants still residing in their original small log houses, though they have generally good and spacious stone barns.

"After four hours' walking I arrived at Elizabethtown, eighteen miles from Lancaster, and stopped at the sign of Gen. Wayne, where for a five-penny bit (six cents and a quarter) I got a bowl of excellent egg punch and a crust of bread.

"It is surprising that at so short a distance from Lancaster the necessities of life should be at least a third cheaper, which an inquiry I found them here. This village contains about thirty tolerable houses, has a meeting-house and a school, when the master can be got, which is not always the case, the place having now been some months vacant, to whom the trustees insure twenty-five scholars, at two dollars each per quarter, which, being only two hundred dollars per annum, I would have supposed insufficient for his support, if at the same time I had not been informed that his board and lodging in the most respectable manner will not cost him above eighty dollars a year in this cheap and plentiful county.

"After resting about an hour, and not feeling at all fatigued, at half-past four I proceeded for Middletown, eight miles farther, first loading one of the barrels of my gun with a running ball, as I had to pass near where one Eshelman was robbed and murdered last fall.

"The road over Conewago Hills was bad, and by the time I arrived at the bridge over Conewago Creek, three miles from Elizabethtown, my left foot began to pain me, so that I was forced to slacken my pace, which made it dark before I arrived at Swatara Creek, when the pain had much increased, which was occasioned by my stepping through the ice up to my knees in a run which crossed the road, which the darkness prevented my seeing.

"The boat was at the other side of the creek, and the German family at the ferry-house let me kick my heels at the door until I was quite chilled before they invited me in, which old Mrs. Smith did at last with very bad grace, and she almost scolded me for risking the dropping on her very dry floor the spirits of turpentine with which I was wetting the feet of my stockings to prevent my catching cold, a phial of which I carried in my pocket for that purpose.

"In about half an hour, which appeared to me an age, the boat returned, and I gladly left the dirty, boorish, inhospitable mansion, crossed the creek in a canoe hauled over by a rope extended from bank to bank, seventy yards, and in a few minutes after I found myself in Mrs. Wentz's excellent inn, the sign of Gen. Washington, in Middletown. My foot being much blistered I bathed it in cold water, and then injudiciously opened the blisters with a lancet and spunged them with spirits of turpentine. I then got a good supper and an excellent bed, but my foot pained me so much as to prevent my sleeping, so I rose early, unrefreshed, and breakfast with my landlady, an agreeable, well-bred woman.

"The view down the Susquehanna from Mrs. Wentz's back piazza is very fine. The town contains about a hundred houses, and is well and handsomely situated about half a mile above the conflux of Swatara Creek with Susquehanna River, the former of which forms a good harbor for boats, which it is in contemplation to join to the Schuylkill by a canal, in order to give Philadelphia the benefit of the navigation of the Susquehanna through its long course above Middletown. If this is carried into effect, it will draw to Philadelphia a vast quantity of produce which now goes to Baltimore.

"The Susquehanna is a noble river, here about a mile wide, with fine sloping wooded banks, and abounds with rock-fish, perch, mullet, eels, suckers, catfish, and white salmon, which last is described as a fine fish from seven to fifteen pounds weight, but a distinct species from the real salmon of Northern rivers. Notwithstanding their plenty, Mrs. Wentz assured me that she was seldom gratified with a dish of fish; for though there are many poor people in the town and neighborhood who might make a good living by fishing, she says they are too lazy to do anything more than will procure them some whiskey, in addition to a miserable subsistence, which a very little labor will suffice for in a country where work is so well paid for, and where the necessities of life are so abundant and cheap.

"Was it not that the Susquehanna abounds with falls, shallows, and rapids, which impede the navigation, it would be one of the most useful rivers in the world, as its different branches from its different sources embrace a wonderful extent of country, settled or rapidly settling, and abounding in wheat and maize (Indian corn), which most probably will always be staples of the large and flourishing State of Pennsylvania.

"The road to Harrisburg leads parallel to the Susquehanna, in some places close to the river, and never more distant from it than a quarter of a mile, along a very pleasant level, bounded on the right by a ridge of low but steep wooded hills, approaching and receding at intervals, and affording a fine shelter from the northerly winds, and the farms between them and the river, which perhaps is one reason that the orchards are so numerous and so fine in this tract.

"I have rarely seen in any country a road more pleasant than this, either from its own goodness or the richness and variety of the prospect. The Susquehanna on the left, about three-quarters of a mile wide, sometimes appearing and sometimes concealed by orchards, groves, or clumps of wood; the fine wooded islands in the river; the mountains which terminate the ridge called the South Mountain (which crosses part of Virginia and the southern part of this State) rising abruptly from the margin of the river, in which they are charmingly reflected, altogether form scenery truly delightful.

"About three miles below Harrisburg the mountains terminate, and the south bank of the river becomes more varied, though still hilly, and here on an elevated promontory, with a commanding view of the river from above Harrisburg to below Middletown, is a large and apparently fine stone house, owned by Gen. Simpson, who resides in it on his farm, and is proprietor of a ferry much frequented by the western Waggoners, as the road that way is shorter by two miles than that by Harrisburg. He turns out the ferry on his side for about three hundred dollars per annum, while on this side the proprietor rents it at four hundred and seventy. The value of this ferry, called Chambers', may serve to convey some idea of the state of traveling in this country, particularly if one reflects that there are many other well-frequented ferries where public roads cross the river within thirty miles both above and below this one, and which are all great avenues to the Western country.

"When two miles from the ferry I observed a long line of sleds, horses, men, etc., crossing on the ice, which scene, at that distance, had a curious and picturesque appearance, as the ice was glassy, and in consequence they appeared to be moving on the surface of the water, on which their shadows, inverted and reflected as in a mirror, struck the eye with very grotesque imagery.

"Some laborers who were at work in a barn at the ferry-house, and of whom I was asking some questions relative to the country, were much astonished at my double-barreled gun, admiring its work and lightness, and calling it a curious creature.

"When within a mile and a half of Harrisburg the white cupola of its court-house and the roofs of the houses of the town are seen peeping over the trees, and have a good effect.

"At one o'clock I entered that town, turning to the left over Paxtang Creek bridge. I stopped at the ferry-house, which is also a tavern, but appearance of accommodation not being very promising, I continued my walk along the bank of the river, and stopped at another tavern, where I asked if I could have a bed that night. A dirty-looking girl at the stove drawled out that she believed I might. I then asked for some milled wine. She said eggs were scarce, and she could not get any. From these symptoms of carelessness I thought it best to try my fortune a little farther, so putting on my shot-belt and taking my gun I quietly walked out in search of a place of more civil reception, and fortunately I entered Bennett's, the sign of the white horse, fronting the river, at the corner of the principal cross street, which leads to the market-place. I say fortunately, for I found it an excellent, plentiful, and well-frequented house, and Mr. and Mrs. Bennett, two fine girls, his daughters by a former wife, and a Mrs. Fisher, an assistant, and apparently some relation, all attentive and studious to please.

"After getting some refreshment, I wrote some letters and carried them to the post-office. The office being shut, the postmaster very civilly invited me into his parlor to settle for the postage, where, seeing a large map of Pennsylvania, I took the opportunity of tracing my journey, which the postmaster observing, he very politely assisted me in it, pointing out the most proper route. There were some ladies in the room, apparently on a visit, and there was an air of sociality and refinement throughout which was very pleasing.

"Leaving the post-office, I walked through the town. It contains about two hundred and fifty houses, most of them very good, some of brick, some of stone, and some of wood. The principal street was nearly east and west, and has two small market-houses in the centre, where the street is widened purposely into a small square.

"Parallel to this main street is a street charmingly situated on the bank of the Susquehanna, open to the river on the side next it and tolerably well built on the other, having a wide footway, in some parts paved, and marked in its whole length by a row of Lombardy poplars regularly planted, which serves also to shade the houses from the scorching rays of the summer's sun. This street, though at present wide enough, has not been laid out sufficiently so to provide against the gradual encroachment of the river on its steep gravelly bank of about twenty feet high above the common level of the water. The view from every part of this street is very beautiful, both up and down the river,—about five miles each way,—terminated upwards by the long ridge of the Blue Mountains, through a gap in which of about three miles long, which is also open to the view, the river rolls its rapid current, contracted there to less than half a mile wide, while downwards the eye rests on the South Mountain, impending over Gen. Simpson's house, which in its turn seems to overhang the river from the high promontory on which it is situated. Several islands add to the beauty of the view, particularly one on which is a fine farm of nearly one hundred acres, just opposite the town.

"The court-house is near the market-square on the principal cross street, and is a handsome, plain brick building of two lofty stories, with a cupola rising from the centre of the roof, remarkable for its vane of copper gilt, representing an Indian chief as large as the life, with a bow in his left hand and a tomahawk, in the act of cutting, in the right. The house is about seventy feet by fifty, with two small receding wings. The hall for the court is very neat, spacious, and convenient, doors opening from it into the record and prothonotary's offices in the wings. A fine, easy, double staircase leads to the great room over the hall for the courts. This room is now used as a temporary place of worship by the English Presbyterians until their own meeting-house is finished, which is of brick, and in great forwardness. From each corner of this room a door opens into the register office, the library, and two jury-rooms.

"There is as yet no other place of public worship in Harrisburg, except an old wooden house used as such by a congregation of German Lutherans.

"This town, which is now the capital of Dauphin County, was laid out twenty-three years ago by the late proprietor, Mr. Harris, whose father is buried near the bank of the river, opposite the stone house he lived in, under a large old tree, which once during his life concealed and saved him from some Indians by whom he was pursued.

"I observed in the office of a Mr. Downey, a magistrate, a newly-invented patent stove made of sheet-iron, consisting of two horizontal parallel cylinders about a foot apart, one over the other and communicating by a pipe; the upper one is heated by the smoke from the lower, which contains the fuel. Mr. Downey informed me that it saved much fuel. The patentee lives here.

"On returning to my inn I found there a Mr. W. Porter, of Pittsburgh, just arrived. In the course of the evening he gave me much good information of the Western country, accompanied by a friendly invitation to call on him at Pittsburgh should I be detained there until his return from Philadelphia, where he was now going. He had formerly lived in Harrisburg for some years after his arrival from Ireland, his native country. The joyful eagerness with which numbers of his old acquaintances flocked to Bennett's to visit him evinced his having been much esteemed and respected.

"On Saturday, 24th, I arose early, but the ferry-boat not being ready, I partook of an excellent breakfast with my friendly host and his family, and at ten o'clock I embarked in a large flat with the Western mail and several passengers and horses. The flat was worked by nine stonemen with short setting-poles shod and pointed with iron, to break the ice and stick in it to bottom. Only one set or pushed on the upper side, while eight set on the lower side to keep the boat from being forced by the current against the ice, while a tenth steered with a large oar behind. A channel for this purpose had been cut through the ice, and was kept open, as loaded wagons could cross the river in a flat with more safety than on the ice.

"In twenty-two minutes we landed on the western shore of the Susquehanna, in Cumberland County, and I trudged on, my foot painin'g very much, until half-past twelve o'clock, when I stopped at a tavern seven miles from the ferry and got some refreshments. Here I found a tall, active old man of the name of Jameson, seventy-six years of age, who had crossed the ferry with me, and had afterwards passed me on the road on horseback. He had accompanied his parents from the county Antrim, in Ireland, when only six years old, had resided thirty-six years at Paxtang, near where Harrisburg has since been built (where he had been on business), and had afterwards removed to a part of Virginia about two hundred miles distant, where he has a large farm and distillery. He insisted on treating me, as he said he liked to encourage the consumption of whiskey, of which and the telling of old stories he was so fond that he appeared to forget he had so long a journey before him until reminded by seeing some travelers pass on horseback, whom he hastened to overtake for the sake of their company.

"He did not, however, neglect finishing his whiskey, which he swallowed with great gout, and on mounting his horse cracked jokes about a buxom widow at whose tavern beyond Carlisle he proposed sleeping that night. Among other stories with which he had entertained me, he told me the particulars of the massacre of the Indians at Lancaster, and he took a good deal of pride to himself for having been one of the heroes who had assisted on that memorably disgraceful expedition. In justice, however, to the old man, I must observe that he related with pleasure that the party he accompanied arrived too late in Lancaster to assist in the carnage."

In 1809, April 3d, the Legislature passed the act authorizing the erection of the Harrisburg bridge; the capital authorized was four hundred thousand dollars, in twenty thousand shares at twenty dollars per share. Section 1 of the act recites, "The commissioneers shall reserve three thousand shares, which shall be appropriated by the president and directors, and used if the same be found requisite for the purpose hereinafter mentioned of vesting therein the moneys to be applied for a sinking fund to free the bridge." The originators were looking far into the future and providing in their day and generation for the present. Section 2 says "the subscribers shall have perpetual succession, etc.," under the names, etc., of "the president, directors, and company for erecting a permanent bridge over the river Susquehanna at or near the borough of Harrisburg." Section 7 says the bridge must be erected in fifteen years, and be begun within five years. Section 10 says the property shall be vested in a bond for thirty years after the bridge is completed. The rates of toll allowed were: Two-wheeled vehicle with one horse, thirty-two cents; a single horse and rider, eighteen and three-fourths cents; horse or mule without rider, twelve and one-half cents; foot passengers, six and one-fourth cents. The section then says, "When the tolls shall exceed fifteen per cent. net annual profit, the excess shall compose a fund for the redemption of the said bridge, so as to render it free, save that there shall always be a small toll or other revenue for the keeping of it in repair; this excess shall be laid out in bridge stock, or some other productive funds, and the dividends or annual product shall also be added to this fund; and all private donations for freeing said bridge shall likewise be received and invested in like manner." Section 13 relates entirely to dividends.

The company to construct the bridge was chartered July 6, 1812, and organized on the 8th of August following. The first foundation stone was laid Dec. 2, 1812. In a report of John Downey, the then treasurer, made up to July 30, 1813, it is stated that Theodore Burr was the contractor for the sum of one hundred and eighty thousand dollars, and of that he was to take thirty-five thousand dollars in stock, "the residue to be paid him in proportion as the work progresses; he is to find all the materials and to have the bridge completed on the first day of December, 1815." The report further says, "It is with no small degree of satisfaction that the board have it in their power to inform the company that the displeasure expressed by some of the stockholders on account of the site of the bridge being fixed where it is now erecting has nearly subsided." The directors were Thomas Elder, Jacob M. Haldeman, John Ritscher, George Brenizer, Samuel C. Wiestling, John Howard, William Bryson, George Hoyer, Jacob Boas, Henry Beader, Michael Krehl, John Mytinger. The first toll received by the company was on Oct. 16, 1816. The bridge and the toll-houses were completed in 1817, at a total cost of one hundred and ninety-two thousand one hundred and thirty-eight dollars. The total length was two-thirds of a mile; width, forty feet; and elevation, fifty feet. The bridge running from the island to the Cumberland shore is the original Burr plan, and the only one of the kind in existence. That part between the island and the city was carried away by the great freshet of March 15, 1846, and for about eighteen months after, the passage was made by means of a "ferry rope." The rope used was about three inches in diameter, and suspended between the two abutments, supported in the centre by masts on the piers. The flats were connected to this rope by two small guy-ropes, and by an ingenious contrivance were propelled across the stream by the action of the currents. The rope, especially during high water, frequently obstructed the passage of the rafts and arks descending the river, and was finally cut by one of the incensed river men with an axe. The bridge was rebuilt in 1847, and burned in the summer of 1866, the present structure taking its place in 1867.

By the act of April 2, 1811, the Governor is authorized to subscribe for ninety thousand dollars of stock of the company. By the act of Jan. 17, 1812, the Governor is authorized to issue letters patent where thirty (in place of one hundred in original act) shall have subscribed two thousand shares, etc. The act of Jan. 31, 1814, provides for the payment of installments on stock subscribed for by the Governor, and the issuing of certificates,—eleven hundred and twenty-five when each fourth part is paid,—four thousand five hundred shares. The act of Feb. 10, 1817, provides for the payment of the last installment of twenty-two thousand five hundred dollars, and for raising the rates of toll from thirty-two cents to thirty-seven and one-half cents; for every single horse and rider, from eighteen and three-quarter cents to twenty-five cents. The act of April 14, 1828, repealing so much of the act of April 10, 1826, relative to roads, bridges, etc., in which the State owns stock, be repealed. By the act of Feb. 28, 1832, the bridge company is authorized to subscribe thirty-five thousand dollars to the stock of the New Haven and Harrisburg Bridge Turnpike Company, and have the name changed to "The Harrisburg Bridge Company." In the act of April 7, 1846, section 1 authorizes the company to borrow fifty thousand dollars, and to sell seven thousand shares for the purpose of rebuilding the bridge. Section 2 says no share shall be sold for less than one-half of the par value. Section 4 says voting by proxy shall not be allowed. One vote is allowed for every share of stock, "provided no stockholder shall be entitled to more than one-eighth of the whole number of votes." Section 5 authorizes the Cumberland Valley Railroad Company to sell, the one to the other, the exclusive right to accommodate common travel, "so far as said exclusive right may be vested in either of the said companies." The act of Feb. 20, 1867, authorizes the company to conform to modern methods in collecting tolls. The act of April 4, 1867, is in relation to the establishment of a free bridge, and provides for the holding of an election twenty days after the passage of the act. The act of March 2, 1873, provides a penalty for the carrying of fires and lights over the bridge. When the State decided to dispose of its turnpike, canal, and railroad property, its stock in the bridge was put up at sale and purchased by James McCormick and Jacob M. Haldeman. They paid nine thousand dollars for the ninety thousand dollars' worth of shares.

CHAPTER V.

Removal of the Seat of Government to Harrisburg—Act establishing the same—Laying of the Corner-stone of the Capitol—Occupation of the Capitol—Cost of Construction.

THE removal of the seat of State government from Philadelphia began to be agitated at the close of the Revolution. In March, 1787, the Assembly, then a single branch, in obedience to this sentiment, resolved that Philadelphia was "an unfortunate location," expressing by votes its determination to build a State house "at Harrisburg, on a plot of ground, the property of the Commonwealth," etc., being four and a half acres, conveyed by John Harris in 1785. Harrisburg was then a town of nearly six hundred inhabitants.

In subsequent sessions, as in 1795, the House voted thirty-six to thirty-four in favor of removing to Carlisle, Cumberland Co. The Senate did not concur. In 1798 the House again agreed to remove to Wrightstown, York Co., "without delay." The Senate refused to concur. In 1799 the effort in favor of removal was crowned with success. Both branches voted to remove to Lancaster, then a town of great importance, much the most considerable in the interior. Accordingly, in December, 1799, the Legislature met in Lancaster, continuing to do so until the spring of 1812, when (in December) the seat of government was removed to Harrisburg, at which point it was voted it should be as early as 1785. The provisions of the Constitution now require that no removal can hereafter be made without the consent of the people at a general election. Very many attempts have been made to relocate at Philadelphia since 1812, but it is not probable that that location would be acceptable to any considerable section of the State.

The choice of Lancaster did not appear to have been entirely satisfactory. Agitation for another removal was almost immediately commenced, taking form as early as 1801, or within two years after the removal from Philadelphia. As an abstract proposition a majority was in favor of removal in 1790, but a location was not easily decided upon. The agitation was thus kept alive until the importance of the Susquehanna Valley overshadowed all other considerations. On the 9th of December, 1801, a few days after the meeting of the Legislature, the subject was introduced. There is no abstract of the debates of that day preserved that we are aware of; none at least in printed form. Extracts from the journal of the House will inform us what occurred.

"LANCASTER, Wednesday, Dec. 9, 1801.

"A motion was made by Stacy Potts, of Dauphin County, seconded by Mr. Lori Butler, of Luzerne, and read as follows, viz.:

"As the happiness and convenience of the citizens of this Commonwealth, and the preservation and security of their property, are the primary and important objects of legislative deliberations, it becomes our duty to consider the propriety of placing the officers attached to the government thereof in such a situation as will permit their procuring for themselves residences with convenient accommodations during the time they may continue in office, without subjecting them to the caprice of others; and the immense property held under the records of the State, at least in as secure a situation as the less important records of the different counties; therefore

"Resolved, That a grand committee be appointed to take these important objects into consideration, and report the most eligible place to fix the permanent seat of government of this State, with such other further observations as the case may require.

"Ordered to lie on the table.

"On motion, Ordered, That Tuesday next be assigned for the second reading of the said resolution, and that it be the order for that day.

"TUESDAY, Dec. 22, 1801.

"The motion of Mr. Potts, seconded by Mr. Butler, and read the 9th inst., relative to fixing the permanent seat of Government was read the second time.

"And the same being under consideration,

"Ordered, That Thursday, January 7, next be assigned for the further consideration thereof, and that it be the order for that day.

"THURSDAY, JAN. 7, 1802.

"Agreeably to the order of the day the House resumed the consideration of the resolution relative to the permanent seat of government, and

"On motion, Ordered, That Wednesday, the 13th inst., be assigned for the further consideration thereof, and that it be the order for that day.

"WEDNESDAY, JAN. 13, 1802.

"Agreeably to the order of the day, the House resolved itself into a committee of the whole, Mr. Isaac Wayne, of Chester, in the chair, with resolution relative to the permanent seat of government before it.

"And after some time

"The Speaker resumed the chair, and the chairman reported that the committee of the whole had negatived the resolution; and "On the question, 'Will the House agree to the report?'

"The yeas and nays were called for by Mr. (afterwards Governor) Snyder and Mr. Painter, of Philadelphia, and are as follows, viz.:

"Yeas—Messrs. W. Anderson, J. Anderson, Barnett, Boileau, Broadhead, Bull, Butler, Cooke, Conrad, Davis, Eichelberger, Engle, Folwell, Goodman, Gordon, Hiester, Holgate, Ingels, Kaufman, Kimmel, McDowell (Chester), McElroy, J. Miller, A. Miller, Mohler, Neuhard Odenheimer, Penrose, Preston, Pugh, Rea, Roberts, Slagle, J. Smith, B. H. Smith, Statler, Steele, Thornburg, Trevor, Wayne, Wetherill, Wilson (Northampton and Wayne),—42.

"Nays—Messrs. Alexander, Alter, Beule, Blair, Brady, Bratton, Buchanan, Cunningham, Dale, Ewalt, Ferguson, Follmer, Franklin, Gibbons, Hall, Helman, Kerr (Washington), Kerr (Huntingdon), Laycock, Lyle, McDowell (Washington), Mitchell, McMasters, John Moore, Jesse Moore, Montgomery, Painter, R. Porter, C. Porter, Potts, Rose, Simpson, F. Smith, Snyder, Udree, Erie Wilson (Dauphin), W. Wilson, Witman, Weaver Speaker—41.

"So it was determined in the affirmative."

This disposed only of the question of "consideration," leaving the main subject open for future efforts. The opponents of removal, however, were powerful enough to prevent any further revival of the question during this session.

Mr. Potts writes of this defeat the letter of 1802, now quoted exactly as he penned it. The letter has no postmark except "8" cents, then the rate of postage between Lancaster and Harrisburg, addressed "Adam Boyd, Harrisburg."

"LANCASTER, JAN' 19th, 1802.

"FRIEND BOYD: At thy request of the 2d INSTANT I presented thy Vouchers." [Some business in relation to a settlement of the State Treasury with that of Dauphin county, of which Capt. B. was treasurer.]

"You will undoubtedly feel with me, the mortification of finding the turn our expected removal of the Seat of Government has taken. However, altho' very sensibly chagrined by that measure, yet shall not despair, altho' it may be some time before so great an object can be accomplished. I hope the work is yet upon the wheel, and all things will yet work together for good; and if the fixing our permanent Seat of the Government seems at present out of sight, there is a preliminary motion on the way, which, if carried, I shall think a good point gained toward forwarding the grand object. For yesterday a motion was made, to appoint a committee to enquire and report the propriety of converting all the property of this State, consisting of houses and lots in the city of Philadelphia, into an Active Capital in aid of the present deranged finances of the Commonwealth, on which a committee has been appointed and from their completion I have great hopes of a favorable report.

"If that measure can be successfully accomplished the greatest obstacle in our way will be removed. However, it has already raised the hornet's nest, and there is as great a buzzing alarm as my resolution occasioned on the 9th of last month. Our Philadelphia gentlemen would insinuate that it would be as great a sacrifice to sell the old State-House and its appurtenances in Philadelphia as the aristocrats would persuade us at the city of Washington, it will be to repeal the judiciary system created by the last Congress in the last night of their existence.

"But however terrible the iniquitous act may be estimated by those scrupulous gentlemen at both places, I hope and firmly believe both will be accomplished. And while this is maturing in our House, I hope they will not continue quite indolent in the Senate, and perhaps by the time they are ready to produce anything to our House we may not have so many of our members looking back towards the old State-House in Philadelphia. Then we may hope for two votes at least for every one of those which we had counted on that deserted us in the late discussion.

"However, as I have written last evening to William Maclay and Thomas Elder a pretty circumstantial account of the manner we were out-generated by the fineness of the sophistical gentlemen of our eastern counties, the subject seems to be so much exhausted that without going again over the same ground I must wait for further occurrences, when I may be able to give you some further account which may be interesting enough to be worth communicating. From thy friend,

"STACY POTTS.

"TO ADAM BOYD."

That year the measure was brought forward in a fresh dress, that of erecting a structure for the "safe preservation" of the State papers. Under this thin disguise the subject of a removal of the seat of government was the real point. It was very skillfully avoided by the managers opposed to removal in a debate extending through December, 1802, and not ending until late in January, 1803. Then the subject was again postponed without determining the real question at issue.

This year closed the legislative career of Stacy Potts. The next year the subject had assumed so much importance that Harrisburg was honored with two of the three representatives, to wit: Messrs. Maclay and Bucher. It was not, however, until the session of 1808-9 that we have the first indications of the realization of the prophecy of the founder, John Harris, that the town he had laid out on the banks of the Susquehanna would become the future seat of government of Pennsylvania. In the State Senate on the 4th of January, 1809, Mr. Laird presented the petition of sundry inhabitants of the town of Northumberland, in Northumberland County, stating the central situation of that place, and showing the advantages of fixing the State government there, offering accommodations for the officers of the State and members of the Legislature, and praying a removal of the seat of government thither. The petition was referred to a committee consisting of Messrs. Laird, Heston, Doty, Hiester, and Laycock. On the same day the following preamble and resolution was presented to the Senate, and also referred to the same committee:

"Whereas, The books, records, and documents belonging to the different departments of the government of this Commonwealth, particularly those of the land-office, are in want of suitable buildings for their safe keeping, greatly exposed to dangerous accidents by fire and otherwise, for a remedy whereof,—

"Resolved, That a committee be appointed to prepare and report a bill to fix the permanent seat of government at —, in the county of —, and provide for erecting thereat suitable buildings for the accommodation of the Legislature, and the several offices attached thereto, before the first Tuesday in December, 18—."

The committee to whom the subject was referred shortly after submitted a report recommending the removal of the seat of government to the town of Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland. The Senate, however, when considering the report struck out the words "Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland." From that period onward the subject was constantly agitated, and we give such notes as may be valuable for reference:

"Feb. 17, 1809.—In Committee of the Whole, in the Senate, Mr. Sommer moved to fill the blank with the words 'City of Philadelphia.'"

"Mr. Sommer said he was as far removed from being influenced by any local interest as any member of the Senate. He wished to fix the seat of government permanently where it would most conduce to the interest of the people, and he believed Philadelphia to be that place. Wherever the seat of government is, to that place trade will in some measure be directed; and it is the interest of the State to secure the trade to her metropolis."

"Mr. Dorsey said there were already buildings in Philadelphia sufficient for all the officers of government and for the Legislature. This was not the case elsewhere. If they removed to any other place, much expense would be incurred in the erection of these buildings. He had many other reasons for voting for Philadelphia; but, under a belief that the seat of government would not be fixed there, he would not take up the time of the Senate in mentioning them. Any other place than Lancaster, however, would be cordially voted for by him. He would vote even for Pittsburgh."

"The motion to fill the blank with the word 'Philadelphia,' was lost, only eight yeas voting in favor of the same."

"Mr. Laird moved to fill the blank with the words 'town of Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland.'"

"Mr. Burrows said this question was of the first importance to Pennsylvania; it was important to the State to concentrate her whole interest in fixing the permanent seat of government. And how is this to be done but by fixing upon as central a place as can be found. He confessed that, for this purpose, Harrisburg was next to Northumberland, but then Harrisburg was but twenty miles from the southern boundary of the State, and Northumberland was eighty. And (said Mr. B.) are we to fix it at Harrisburg, and make the people come over the mountains with knapsacks on their backs, only that the rich at this end of the State may have an opportunity of riding to the seat of government in their coaches."

"Mr. Irish observed that he had lately examined all the situations from the mountains above Harrisburg down to Columbia, and he thought the most suitable situation was near to Middletown. That place, he said, was best to divert the trade to Philadelphia; a canal was contemplated which would afford water carriage for produce to the city of Philadelphia from Middletown. The situation at Harrisburg was very pleasant and handsome, but it was not so eligible for the purpose of intercepting the trade and preventing its going to Baltimore. He thought a committee should be appointed to examine the situations on the Susquehanna, and make report to the next Legislature."

"The question was then taken on filing the blank with the words 'the town of Northumberland, in the county of Northumberland,' and lost, seven only rising in favor of it."

"Mr. Lane then moved to fill the blank with the words 'borough of Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin,' which was agreed to,—14 to 10."

"The resolution attached to the report was adopted, when the committee rose and the Speaker took the chair."

"The Senate proceeded to consider the report."

"Mr. Weaver moved to postpone the report for the purpose of introducing a substitute, which contemplated a purchase by the State of one hundred and fifty acres of land, the property of Abraham Huey, a short distance above Harrisburg."

"This (with the motion to postpone) was opposed by Burrows and Dorsey, on the ground that this land was to be purchased for the purpose of speculation, and that it was disgraceful for the Legislature to enter into it. Neither, they said, did this tract of land adjoin Harrisburg."

"The report was postponed and the substitute introduced."

"Mr. Sommer moved to strike out that part of the substitute which authorized the purchase by the State of one hundred and fifty acres of land from Abraham Huey. Carried. Yeas, 13; nays, 9."

"The part appropriating money for the erection of public buildings, etc., was also stricken out."

"Mr. Roberts moved that the blank in the resolution attached to the substituted report be filled up with the words 'first of November,' which was agreed to; and the substitute as amended was carried."

Subsequent to this action a bill for the removal of the seat of government to Harrisburg was prepared and considered in the Senate, and postponed until the next session. The House of Representatives refused to take up the bill during that session. No further action on the subject appears to have been had in the Legislature until February, 1810, when a bill, of which the following is a synopsis, passed both branches of the Legislature, and became a law:

"An act establishing the seat of government of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania at Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin."

"SECTION 1. Be it enacted, etc., That within the month of October, 1812, all the offices attached to the seat of government of this State shall be removed to the borough of Harrisburg, in the county of Dauphin, by their respective holders, and shall after that period cease to be exercised elsewhere, at which said borough of Harrisburg the session of the Legislature thereafter, as well as all future sessions, shall be held; and the said borough of Harrisburg is hereby fixed and declared to be the seat of government of the said Commonwealth."

"SEC. 2. [Directs the Secretary of the Commonwealth, State Treasurer, Auditor-General, Secretary of the Land-Office, and Surveyor-General, the clerks of both Houses of the Legislature, and all officers whose official duties are attached to the seat of government, to remove, or cause to be removed, all books, records, papers, etc., to the said offices respectively, or to the State generally, to the borough of Harrisburg, in the manner provided for in this act.]

"SEC. 3. That Robert Harris, George Hoyer, and George Zeigler shall be, and they are hereby appointed commissioners, who, together with the respective officers aforesaid, shall superintend and direct the removal of the books, records, papers, and other documents aforesaid, and shall provide at the borough of Harrisburg good and suitable rooms and apartments for the convenient accommodation of the Legislature, and also for the receiving, opening, and depositing the said books, records, papers, and other documents, and for conducting and transacting the business of the offices aforesaid respectively; and in case of the resignation of any of the aforesaid officers, or of their or any of their neglect and refusal or incapacity to attend to the business of the removal aforesaid, then it shall be and may be lawful for the said commissioners, or a majority of them, to proceed therein as if the said officers were attending."

"SEC. 4. That the Governor be, and he is hereby authorized and required, on behalf and in the name of this Commonwealth, to accept of the offer of ten acres of land in or adjoining the said borough of Harrisburg, at one hundred dollars per acre, made by William Macray, adjoining to the four-acre lot formerly appropriated by John Hallis for the use of the State, and to pay for the same and receive sufficient conveyances and assurances in fee-simple therefor, to be recorded in the office for recording of deeds in the county of Dauphin aforesaid."

"SEC. 5. [Appropriates three thousand dollars for the purpose of making the aforesaid purchase and discharging the expense of removal, to be paid in advance,—two thousand dollars to the said commissioners, and one thousand dollars for the said purchase.]

"SEC. 6. [Appropriates the further sum of thirty thousand dollars for the purpose of erecting the offices at the seat of government, to wit: one for the Secretary of the Commonwealth, one for the Secretary of the Land-Office, one for the Surveyor-General, one for the Auditor-General, one for the Treasurer, and one for any purpose to which it may hereafter be applied, each of which shall be fire-proof, for the safe-keeping of all the records and papers belonging to said offices.]

"Sec. 7. That the Governor is hereby authorized and required immediately after the passage of this act to appoint, and by supplying vacancies happening from refusals to act or other causes to keep in appointment as long as may be necessary, three commissioners, whose duty it shall be, immediately after their appointment, to fix upon a site in or on the four-acre lot described in the fourth section of this act, or on the ten-acre lot purchased from William Maclay, and procure one or more plans or plans on which the said offices are to be built; and after a place shall be agreed on, according to the provisions which hereafter follow, it shall be their duty to contract for, direct, and superintend the building and completing of the said offices. And it shall also be the duty of the said commissioners, as soon as they shall have ascertained the site for the said offices and procured one or more plans, to lay the said plan or plans before the Governor, Secretary of the Land-Office, Surveyor-General, Auditor-General, and the Treasurer of the Commonwealth, who, together with the three commissioners aforesaid, shall each have one vote in order to decide on a plan for the offices aforesaid; and such plan as shall have a majority of the votes aforesaid shall, by the commissioners aforesaid, be carried into execution.

"Sec. 8. [Directs that as soon as the plan shall be decided on, the commissioners shall give notice in two newspapers of Philadelphia, Lancaster, York, Carlisle, Harrisburg, Pittsburgh, and Reading, for four weeks successively, that proposals will be received by them until a certain day, by them to be fixed, from any person or persons who shall be willing to undertake the building of the offices aforesaid: Provided, that every contract shall be made in writing, and that the parties contracting with the said commissioners give bonds with sufficient surety for the performance of their contracts.]

"Sec. 9. [Provides that the money appropriated for this purpose shall be paid by the treasurer of the commonwealth, on the order of any two of the said commissioners, who are required to keep strict accounts of their transactions, and to transmit an abstract thereof to the Governor once in every three months after their appointment.]

"Sec. 10. [Provides that the aforesaid commissioners, before entering upon the duties of their appointment, shall subscribe to an oath or affirmation that they will faithfully perform the duties enjoined upon them by this act; and that each of the said commissioners shall receive for every day's attendance upon the duties herein enjoined upon them the sum of two dollars and fifty cents, and that any two of them may do and perform any act or duty herein enjoined on the said commissioners.]

The commissioners on the part of the State, named in the third section of the above act, in their negotiations with William Maclay for the purchase of the ten acres upon which the capitol now stands, wished to have it adjoin the four acres and thirteen perches granted by John Harris; but as the grant of Harris was separated from the Maclay property by a range of five lots, extending from High Street to Third Street, originally the property of the heirs of Harris, viz.: of David Harris, Mrs. Maclay, Mrs. Hanna, James Harris, and Robert Harris, Mr. Maclay could not convey the title without first purchasing these lots from the then owners, which he did, and then conveyed the ten acres, as described in the deed from him to the commonwealth. This deed, however, did not convey all the ground now inclosed as the public ground. In order to obtain it the State, by virtue of an act of the Legislature, purchased lots Nos. 271, 272, 273, 274, and 275 in the plan of the borough from the individual owners, and after inclosing what was necessary to complete or square the grounds and open High Street as it is, sold the residue of said lots, lying between High Street and Tanner's Alley, and from Cranberry Alley to the Maclay line, to the present owners or their vendors.

The commissioners appointed by the Governor, by authority of the seventh section of the above act, were William Findlay, Richard M. Crain, George Bryan, John B. Gibson, and William Graydon, who immediately invited architects to exhibit to them plans and elevations for the contemplated buildings. A premium of four hundred dollars was to be given for the plan adopted by the board, and two hundred dollars for that which they should adjudge the next best. Stephen Hills, Esq., was declared the successful competitor, his plan contemplating the connection of the main building with the offices by corridors.

A supplement to the foregoing act was passed Feb. 7, 1812, which provided in the first section for the removal of all the offices, within the month of April, to the borough of Harrisburg, the change of all papers, records, books, and documents placed with the clerks of the two Houses, and expenses to be paid, under the authority of the second section, out of the money already appropriated for that purpose.

The second supplement to the original act was passed the 10th of March, 1812, which appropriated, in the first section, thirteen thousand dollars to complete the fire-proof offices at Harrisburg contemplated in the sixth section of the original act.

In the second section it directed the clerks of the two Houses, on or before the 1st of June next (1812), to remove, or cause to be removed, "all the papers, records, books, and documents belonging to each House, as aforesaid, together with whatever furniture may be thought fit for removal."

From the above record it is ascertained that the government of the State was removed, in all its departments, in the year 1812, from Lancaster to Harrisburg, and that the first organization at the latter place was in December of that year.

The first sessions of the Legislature in Harrisburg were held in the old court-house building, the courts, as stated in the chapter devoted thereto, having vacated all the rooms therein excepting those occupied by the prothonotary and register for that purpose. The large room on the second story was occupied by the Senate, and the court-room proper by the House of Representatives. The State Library was in a room on the second floor. The remaining rooms were used by the transcribing clerks and the committees of the Legislature.

On Monday, the 31st of May, 1819, the cornerstone of the capitol was laid by Governor William Findlay; Stephen Hills, architect and contractor for the execution of the work; William Smith, stone-cutter; and Valentine Kergan and Samuel White, masons; in presence of the commissioners and a large concourse of citizens of Harrisburg, and was followed by three discharges from one of the public cannon. The Harrisburg band of music attended, and added much to the interest and satisfaction which all seemed to feel and enjoy, and, after the ceremonies of the occasion had been concluded, the commissioners, architect, stonecutters, masons, carpenters, and workmen, with a number of citizens, partook of a cold collation provided on the public ground by Mr. Rahm. The commissioners deposited in the stone copies of the following-mentioned documents :

- Charter of Charles II. to William Penn.
- Declaration of Independence.
- Constitution of Pennsylvania, 1776.
- Articles of Confederation and perpetual union between the several States.
- Copy of so much of an act of the General Assembly of Pennsylvania, by which indemnity was made to the heirs of William Penn for their interest in Pennsylvania.
- Treaty of peace, and acknowledgement by Great Britain of the independence of the United States.
- Constitution of the United States, 1787.
- Constitution of Pennsylvania, 1790.
- Acts of the Legislature of Pennsylvania, by which the seat of government was removed from Philadelphia to Lancaster and Harrisburg, and the building of a State capitol at the latter place authorized.
- A list of the names of the commissioners, architects, stonecutter, and chief masons; likewise a list of the then officers of the government of Pennsylvania, embracing the Speakers of the two Houses of the Legislature, the Governor, the heads of departments, the judges of the Supreme Court, and attorney-general, with the names of the President and Vice-President of the United States.

The capitol was rapidly pushed forward to completion, and in December, 1821, was ready for occupancy. On Wednesday, the 2d of January, 1822, the Assembly took possession of the building.¹ The members of both branches of the Legislature met in the morning at ten o'clock at the old State-House (court-house), from whence they proceeded in procession to the capitol in the following order :

- The Architect and his Workmen, two and two.
- Clergy.
- Governor and Heads of Departments.
- Officers of the Senate.
- Speaker of the Senate.

¹ It may be interesting to know the expense of the State capitol and other buildings at that period erected:

By "an act to erect the State capitol, passed the 18th of March, 1816," there was appropriated.....	$50,000
By "a supplement to an act providing for the erection of a State capitol, approved the 27th of January, 1819," there was appropriated.....	70,000
With the provision that said capitol building should not cost more than.....	$120,000
By a further supplement, passed the 25th of March, 1820, for the purpose of constructing the columns and capitals thereof of hewn stone, and to cover the roof of the dome, etc., there was appropriated.....	15,000
Whole cost of capitol.....	$135,000
By the fourth section of a supplement to the act, approved the 27th January, 1819, the sums appropriated were directed to be paid to the builder and architect, as follows:
First payment.....	$50,000
Second payment.....	30,000
Third payment.....	35,000
Fourth payment.....	10,000
Making.....	$120,000
The fourth payment of $10,000, by Act of Assembly hereafter recited, was divided into two parts, for what reason is not stated; the first of $3000, and the last of $7000.
The entire cost of the public buildings and grounds up to January, 1819, was as follows:
Cost of executive offices northwest and southeast of capitol building.....	$93,000
Cost of capitol.....	135,000
Cost of arsenal.....	12,000
Public grounds, its inclosure and embellishment.....	35,000
Total.....	$275,000

- Members of the Senate, two and two.
- Officers of the House of Representatives.
- Speaker of the House of Representatives.
- Members, two and two.
- Judges.
- Civil Authorities of Harrisburg.
- Citizens.

In front of the capitol the architect and his workmen opened into two lines, and admitted the procession to pass between them and the capitol. The service was opened by an impressive prayer by Rev. Dr. Lochman, of Harrisburg, quite lengthy, and a brief discourse by Rev. D. Mason, of Dickinson College, who, after alluding to the aborigines who inhabited this locality, concluded his remarks by this reference to Harrisburg: "In the room of all these there has started up, in the course of a few years, a town respectable for the number of its inhabitants, for its progressive industry, for the seat of legislation in this powerful State. What remains to be accomplished of all our temporal wishes? What more have we to say? What more can be said, but go on and prosper, carry the spirit of your improvements through till the sound of the hammer, the whip of the waggon, the busy hum of man, the voices of innumerable children issuing from the places of instruction, the lofty spires of worship, till richly-endowed colleges of education, till all those arts which embellish man shall gladden the banks of the Susquehanna and the Delaware, and exact from admiring strangers that cheerful and grateful tribute, 'This is the work of a Pennsylvania Legislature.'"

CHAPTER VI.

Harrisburg in 1818—Visit of Gen. Lafayette—Reception at the Capitol —Extension of Borough Limits in 1838—The Harrison Nominating Convention—"American Notes."

In 1818, James Flint, of Edinburgh, Scotland, passed through Harrisburg. In his "Letters from America," published in 1822, we have the following notes :

"Sept. 21, 1818. The coach stopped at Elizabethtown last night for three hours, and started again before three o'clock. We were near Middletown (eight miles on our way) before the light disclosed to our eyes a pleasant and fertile country.

"It was near Middletown that we got the first peep of the river Susquehanna, which is here about a mile in breadth. The trees on the east bank confining the view to the right and left, produced an illusory effect almost impressing on the mind a lake instead of the river. The highly transparent state of the air, and the placid surface of the water united in producing a most distinct reflection of the bold banks on the opposite side, cliffs partially concealed by a luxuriant growth of trees sprung from the detritus below, and by smaller ones rooted in rifted rocks. Over these a rising background is laid out in cultivated fields. The eye is not soon tired of looking on a scene so richly furnished and so gay.

"Harrisburg, the seat of legislation of Pennsylvania, is a small town which stands on a low bottom by the river; a pleasant situation. Opposite to the town is a small island in the river connected with the eastern and western shores by very long wooden bridges. The waters of the Susquehanna are limpid but shallow at this place, and ill adapted to navigation, except in times of flood."

The years 1824 and 1825 are made memorable in the history of America by the visit of Gen. Lafayette, who had so greatly assisted in securing the independence of the United States. Everywhere he was received with great ovation and hailed with delight. Most of the general officers of the Revolution had passed away, but there were in every section of the country representatives of that gallant band of heroes who had achieved our liberty. Upon his arrival at Philadelphia, Governor Shulze, with the Dauphin Cavalry as an escort, went there to receive him and welcome him to Pennsylvania. While there the general promised to visit Harrisburg before his return to France.

On Sunday, the 30th of January, 1825, notice was received that Gen. Lafayette and suite were on their way to Harrisburg; whereupon Messrs. Hawkins and Baker, of the joint committee of the Legislature, and M. C. Rogers, Esq., Secretary of the Commonwealth, proceeded from town in carriages towards York, by the way of Middletown, for the purpose of meeting the general's party. Dinner was prepared for them at Middletown, and an outrider sent forward to ascertain if the general was upon that road. At about half-past ten, the general, accompanied by his son, George Washington Lafayette, and secretary, Gen. Spangler, Col. Spangler, and Dr. King, a committee deputed to escort him from York, were received at Middletown, and took dinner. At about five o'clock they arrived in Harrisburg, and were hailed by the expecting crowd with great enthusiasm. The general and suite were then escorted to the Governor's residence, in consequence of an invitation which had been forwarded to him for that purpose.

A committee from the Dauphin Cavalry waited on the general at the Governor's, and tendered a renewal of their respects paid to him in Philadelphia as the Governor's late escort to that city. He recognized them, and informed them it would give him great pleasure to see them all at his lodgings that evening. After which the members of the troop, who resided in town generally, with many other citizens, paid their respects to him, and were highly delighted.

He remained at the Governor's that night, and on the next morning he was waited upon by the legislative committee of arrangements, on behalf of whom Mr. Hawkins welcomed the general to the seat of government in a neat and feeling address, to which the general made a happy response.

The following reminiscence of that eventful day may be interesting to our readers: An open carriage was wanted to convey the illustrious visitor. To constitute a brouche an old carriage belonging to William Calder, Sr., was cut down, making it as open as desirable; and to get mettle horses a bay of Gabriel Hiester's, with one eye, and one of Mr. Calder's, without any eye, made the team,—just one eye to the pair. They were right good-looking, however, as they stood pawing the earth in front of Governor Shulze's residence on the river-bank, awaiting the distinguished guests for the parade. "It was a remarkable livery," says an eye-witness.

About eleven o'clock the general and his party were conducted to the Executive Chamber in the capitol, where the greater part of the members of the Legislature and many others were introduced to him. A little after ten o'clock the members of the Harrisburg bar waited upon him in a body, when George Fisher, Esq., on their behalf, made an appropriate address, to which the general replied. At two o'clock he returned to the Governor's residence, and at eight o'clock in the evening he visited Perseverance Lodge of Masons, and remained there about an hour.

On Tuesday, at twelve o'clock, he was conducted again to the capitol, escorted by a corps of dragoons, under the command of Maj. I. M. Forster, and companies of volunteers from the counties of Cumberland, Lebanon, and Dauphin, and the firemen of the borough. His arrival at the capitol was announced by a salute of thirteen guns, under the direction of Lieut. Weise, of Carlisle.

He was introduced to the Senate by Mr. Hawkins, and the Speaker, Mr. Marks, welcomed him by an eloquent address, to which the general made an appropriate reply. He was then invited to a seat at the Speaker's right hand, and presently afterwards the Senate adjourned. A number of gentlemen and ladies were then introduced to him.

At one o'clock he was introduced to the House of Representatives by Mr. Baker, when the Speaker, Gen. Sutherland, welcomed him by an eloquent address, commencing as follows:

"Dear General,—About half a century ago, one of the purest of the patriots of the Revolution, the venerable John Hancock, occupied the chair from which you have just risen."

To which the general returned an appropriate reply, commencing as follows:

"Mr. Speaker and Gentlemen of the House of Representatives,—Amidst the patriotic recollections which the sight of the Presidential chair of my venerable friend, John Hancock, could not fail to excite, and which have been described by you, Mr. Speaker, in a manner adequate to the sublime theme, it is hardly permitted to indulge private remembrances; yet, encouraged as I am by the kindness of this House in my behalf, I beg leave to acknowledge before you the emotions connected with the thought that from this chair also he signed my early admission as a soldier in the American army."

He was then invited to a seat at the Speaker's right hand, and presently afterwards the House adjourned. At two o'clock he was waited upon by the students of Dickinson College with an address, to which he replied. About three o'clock he returned, escorted as before, to the Governor's.

At four o'clock a subscription dinner was given to the general at Matthew Wilson's hotel at Third and Walnut, by a number of the members of the Legislature, at which his Excellency the Governor, the heads of department, Judge Gibson, George W. Lafayette, the committee from York, a few veterans of the Revolution, and a number of the residents of the borough were present. Mr. Speaker Marks presided. The most cordial hilarity prevailed on the occasion. At the particular request of the general, "Hail Columbia" was sung by himself and the whole company standing. After the cloth was removed, a number of patriotic toasts were given, among which were the following: "Gen. Lafayette: Our fathers hailed him as a defender; we rejoice to welcome him as a guest."

The general rose, and after having expressed to the members of the Legislature the grateful sense he had of their kind welcome, gave the following toast:

"The State of Pennsylvania: First founded upon the basis of justice and philanthropy, now governed by universal suffrage on the unalloyed principle of equal rights; may it long preserve these dignified and fruitful blessings."

The Governor and Gen. Lafayette retired about eight o'clock, and the company presently afterwards broke up.

The students of the school at Shoop's Church, about three miles from the borough, sent a written patriotic address to the general, which was handed to him at his lodgings, to which the general replied a few days after by letter from Washington.

On Wednesday morning the volunteers were paraded in Market Square and reviewed by the general, supported by the Governor, after which they saluted him at his quarters. At eleven o'clock he took his departure for York, accompanied by his suite, two of the committee of arrangements of the Legislature, and the Secretary of the Commonwealth.

On the 16th of April, 1838, the General Assembly passed an act extending the borough limits. The seventeenth section of that act recites, "The north-western boundary line of the borough of Harrisburg shall be, and the same is hereby extended and enlarged as follows: Extending along the river line to the upper line of the land of the late William Mac-lay on said river; thence to Paxtang Creek; and thence along said creek to the northwestern corner of the present boundary," thus annexing that district north of South Street which went by the name of Maclaysburg (extending to now Herr Street), from the river to Paxtang Creek. The eighteenth section of the same act gave its inhabitants the privileges and subjected them to the same liabilities as if they had been originally included within the corporate limits of the old borough.

Harrisburg had the honor of having been selected for the holding of many State Conventions of the different political parties, but the number of national political conventions which met here is confined to one, that which resulted in the nomination for President and Vice-President of William Henry Harrison and John Tyler. In 1839 the body met in the then unconsecrated Lutheran Church on Fourth Street, and was composed of many of the prominent Whigs in the country. At that time Harrisburg was a borough of about four thousand inhabitants, and presented a very dull and ancient aspect as compared with its business and buildings now. Of the candidates nominated for President and Vice-President in this city, William Henry Harrison died within a month after assuming the duties of the chief magistracy of the nation.

In 1843, Charles Dickens, the English novelist, was at Harrisburg. He came thither by stage from Baltimore. From his "American Notes," which were published upon his return to England, we have the following relating to our city of Harrisburg, then a plain country town:

"We crossed this river [the Susquehanna] by a wooden bridge roofed and covered in on all sides, and nearly a mile in length. It was profoundly dark, perplexed with great beams crossing and recrossing it at every possible angle, and through the broad chinks and crevices in the floor the rapid river gleamed far down below, like a legion of eyes. We had no lamps, and as the horses stumbled and floundered through this place towards the distant speck of dying light it seemed interminable. I really could not at first persuade myself as we rumbled heavily on, filling the bridge with hollow noises, and I held down my head to save it from the rafters above, but that I was in a painful dream; for I have often dreamed of toiling through such places, and as often argued, even at the time, 'this cannot be reality!'"

"At length, however, we emerged upon the streets of Harrisburg, whose feeble lights, reflected dimly from the wet ground, did not shine out upon a very cheerful city. We were soon established in a snug hotel, which, though smaller and far less splendid than many we put up at, is raised above them all in my remembrance by having for its landlord the most obliging, considerate, and gentlemanly person I ever had to deal with.

"As we were not to proceed upon our journey until the afternoon, I walked out after breakfast the next morning to look about me, and was duly shown a model prison on the solitary system, just erected, and as yet without an inmate; the trunk of an old tree, to which Harris, the first settler here (afterwards buried under it), was tied by hostile Indians, with his funeral pile about him, when he was saved by the timely appearance of a friendly party on the opposite shore of the river; the local Legislature (for there was another of those bodies here again, in full debate), and the other curiosities of the town.

"I was very much interested in looking over a number of treaties made from time to time with the poor Indians, signed by the different chiefs at the period of their ratification, and preserved in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. These signatures, traced, of course, by their own hands, are rough drawings of the creatures or weapons they were called after. Thus the Great Turtle makes a crooked pen-and-ink outline of a great turtle; the Buffalo sketches a buffalo; War Hatchet sets a rough image of that weapon for his mark; so with the Arrow, the Fish, the Scalp, the Big Canoe, and all of them.

"I could not but think, as I looked at the feeble and tremulous production of hands which could draw the longest arrow to the head in a stout elk-horn bow or split a bead or feather with a rifle-ball, of Crabbe's musings over the parish register, and the irregular scratches made with a pen by men who would plow a lengthy furrow straight from end to end. Nor could I help bestowing many sorrowful thoughts upon the simple warriors whose hands and hearts were set there in all truth and honesty, and who only learned in course of time from white men how to break their faith and quibble out of forms and bonds. I wondered, too, how many times the credulous Big Turtle or trusting Little Hatchet had put his mark to treaties which were falsely read to him, and had signed away he knew not what until it went, and cast him loose upon the new possessors of the land a savage indeed.

"Our host announced before our early dinner that some members of the legislative body proposed to do us the honor of calling. He had kindly yielded up to us his wife's own little parlor, and when I begged that he would show them in I saw him look with painful apprehension at its pretty carpet. Through being otherwise occupied at the time, the cause of his necessities did not occur to me. It certainly would have been more pleasant to all parties concerned, and would not, I think, have compromised their independence in any material degree, if some of these gentlemen had not only yielded to the prejudice in favor of spoons, but had abandoned themselves for the moment even to the conventional absurdity of pocket-handkerchiefs."

That afternoon Dickens left in a canal-boat for Pittsburgh. His remarks about the Indian treaties is very funny reading, and only go to show how somebody must either have deceived him or his sentimentalism ran away with his better judgment.

CHAPTER VII.

Improving the Navigation of the Susquehanna—Steamboats thereon—Internal Improvement—Pack-Horse Teams and Conestoga Wagons—The Pennsylvania Canal—Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroad—The Cumberland Valley—The Pennsylvania Railroad.

THE subject of internal improvements was one which early commanded the attention of the citizens of Pennsylvania, and one hundred years ago, as now, communication with the Western country was the great aim of the business men of Philadelphia. The first effort was the removal of obstructions in the various streams, and especially that of the Susquehanna River; and although a considerable amount of money was eventually spent in improving the navigation thereof, the result was far from satisfactory. Previous to the Revolution (1774), the attention of the Provincial Assembly was called to this matter, and as a preliminary it was proposed to lay out a town or city on that stream. John Harris, the founder of our city, immediately gave notice of his intention of laying out a town, which seemed to quiet the movement of undoubted land speculators. The Revolution coming on, such enterprises, if ever seriously considered, were abandoned.

As the settlements increased in the interior of the colony the Susquehanna River became an important avenue of transportation, at first by means of canoes, then by keel-bottom boats or "broad horns," as they were often called. Grains and other produce were the chief articles carried in those conveyances. Harris' Ferry and Middletown were noted marts for the storage and sale of grain at this period. In 1790 there were over one hundred and fifty thousand bushels of wheat brought down the Susquehanna and passed through Middletown for the Philadelphia market.

About the year 1794 or 1795 the first vessel in the shape of an ark, but of small dimensions, arrived at Harrisburg from Huntingdon on the Juniata. It passed the Conewago Falls in safety. About the same time that arks were introduced, the Conewago Canal, at York Haven, was commenced, and on its completion, in 1797 or 1798, keel-bottom boats were passed through, which caused a great portion of the trade in grain to be diverted from Harrisburg and Middletown to Columbia. But in a few years afterwards boats ventured beyond the Conewago Falls, and thus reached tide-water, when the grain trade was measurably diverted from both Middletown and Columbia, concentrating at Port Deposit.

Public attention was again directed to the navigation of the Susquehanna about 1795. The Legislature, however, appears to have taken no definite action in relation to the matter until March, 1823, at which time an act was passed for the improvement of the river from Northumberland to tide-water, and appointing Jabez Hyde, Jr., John McMeans, and Samuel L. Wilson, commissioners to superintend the work. These commissioners, in a report made to the Legislature, Jan. 14, 1828, state,—

"That the contracts entered into for the improvement of the navigation of the Susquehanna River, between the town of Columbia and tide, is nearly completed, and when the residue is finished, they believe all will be done that is necessary to perfect the descending navigation between said points. Crafts will then be able to descend from Columbia to the head of the Maryland Canal carrying from fifty to sixty tons, at a stage of water at which, previous to the improvements, they could not arrive at the latter place with more than one-half that quantity.

"The commissioners further report on the improvement of the river between the towns of Columbia and Northumberland that the unfinished contracts of the years 1825 and 1826 are completed, but will not be of that infinite advantage until further improvements are made to correspond with those already finished, the Legislature having suspended the appropriation for the past year."

The total amount of expenditures made by the commissioners for the improvement of the river from the town of Columbia to the town of Northumberland, up to Jan. 14, 1828, as stated in the report, was $1201.50, and that for improving the river between the town of Columbia and tide-water to the same period, $14,323.37, making the sum total of $15,524.87.

This action of the Legislature, together with the favorable report of the commissioners, induced a number of enterprising citizens of Baltimore to form a company for the purpose of testing the practicability of running steamboats on the Susquehanna between the towns of York Haven and Northumberland. The project was favorably received, and the stock of the company immediately subscribed. Three light-draught steamboats, named respectively the "Codorus," "Susquehanna," and "Pioneer," were constructed, all of which arrived for the first time at Harrisburg in the fall of 1825. The following extracts have reference to these boats:

"The sheet-iron steamboat 'Codorus' paid another visit to Harrisburg on Sunday last, with the members from York County as passengers. The members of the Legislature in general are much pleased with the performance of this boat, and express great satisfaction with the success of the experiment. From what we have heard we infer that there will be a Legislative enactment in favor of the enterprising proprietors."—Chronicle, Dec. 5, 1825.

"STEAMBOATS.—The steamboat 'Susquehanna' left this place on Monday last for York Haven.

"The 'Pioneer' returned to Harrisburg on Wednesday last. The machinery of the vessel is not of sufficient power to stem the current of Hunter's Falls.

"The 'Codorus' is lying at Montgomery's Ferry, about twenty miles above Harrisburg."—Ibid., April 3, 1826.

In a letter dated July 14, 1834, addressed to the Secretary of War, Lewis Cass, by Henry K. Strong, of Harrisburg, on behalf of the citizens of Harrisburg, relative to opening a steamboat communication between the Chesapeake Bay by way of the Susquehanna and the lakes, allusion is made to one of the above-named steamboats, perhaps the "Codorus," as follows :

"Eight years ago a sheet-iron steamboat, built at York, in this State, was put upon the river, about twelve miles below Harrisburg, and forty from tide-water, and was propelled by steam to the line separating the States of Pennsylvania and New York, nearly two-thirds of the whole distance from the Chesapeake Bay to the lakes. If this was not the first iron-clad steamboat ever constructed, it was the first that ever sailed upon American waters."

The editor of the Harrisburg Chronicle, Hugh Hamilton, appears to have been somewhat skeptical as to the practical use of these boats, as will be seen by the following extract from that paper :

"The people of Baltimore are in high spirits in consequence of the successful trip of the 'Susquehanna' up the North and West Branches to Danville and Milton. While we think great credit is due to the enterprise of the Baltimore Steamboat Company and congratulate them upon the result of the experiment, which has demonstrated that a steamboat can move against the rapids of the River Susquehanna, we remain skeptical as to the practical use of the boats which have visited us. The weight of an engine of sufficient power to propel the boats up the rapids produces such a draught as must prevent their running unless the water should be at a high stage, and such a stage we have not more than three months of the year,—March, April, and May."

The steamboats continued to visit the borough at short intervals during the continuance of a medium stage of water in the river, until after April, 1826, when one of them, the "Susquehanna," exploded its boiler while making its way through a narrow passage of shoal water in the river at or near Berwick, Columbia Co., which almost totally destroyed it, beside killing two and severely injuring several of its passengers, among whom was Christian Brobst, member of the Legislature from Columbia County. This accident appears to have dampened the ardor of the proprietors, and shortly afterwards the boats were removed from the river to a more favorable latitude.

The steamboat enterprise was not again renewed on the Susquehanna in this vicinity until the spring of 1857, when a company of citizens purchased and brought here a small side-wheel steamboat that had formerly been used as a pleasure-boat on the river Delaware at Philadelphia. The boat made frequent excursions on the river during the summer following, but the speculation proving a failure, the stockholders resold it to its original owners, and in the fall of the year it was returned to Philadelphia.

In this connection we cannot omit the following reference to a correspondence between the citizens of Harrisburg and the War Department on the subject of sloop and steamboat navigation :

On the 20th of September, 1833, a large and respectable meeting of the citizens of Harrisburg was held at the court-house in Harrisburg, to take into consideration the propriety of opening a steamboat and sloop communication between the Chesapeake Bay and the lakes, by way of the Susquehanna River.

The following were the officers of the meeting: Valentine Hummel, Sr., president; Joel Bailey and Henry Buehler, vice-presidents; Charles C. Rawn and Mordcael McKinney, secretaries.

At this meeting resolutions were passed declaring the project national in its character and advantages, and necessary for national defenses. A general committee was appointed, from which select committees were chosen to draft an address to the people of the United States; to draft a memorial to Congress, and to address the Secretary of War.

On the 17th of October following, Henry Buehler, Esq., from the select committee, published an address to the people of the United States.

At the same time, G. W. Harris, Esq., from the select committee, reported a memorial to Congress, which was published, circulated, and signed by a large number of citizens in various parts of the country, and sent to that body at its next session. A bill favorable to the project, and making a specific appropriation for a survey, was reported by the Internal Improvement Committee in the House of Representatives, but at so late a period in the session that it was not acted upon.

On the 26th of July, 1834, Henry K. Strong, Esq., from the select committee, transmitted an able and convincing address to Hon. Lewis Cass, then Secretary of War, in which, after showing the advantages of a sloop and steamboat communication between the Chesapeake Bay and the Lakes, by way of the Susquehanna, he inquired, "whether a survey of the route could not be made by an engineer in the service of the government during the present summer?"

In reply, John J. Abert, Lieut.-Col. Topographical Engineers, stated that "the department was fully impressed with the importance of the route described, but the condition and engagements of the office were such that it was not in its power to attend to the project during the present season."

A few days after the receipt of this intelligence, Mr. Strong again addressed the Secretary of War, repeating a request for the services of an engineer to survey the river; to which Col. Abert, on behalf of the Secretary of War, again replied, stating that "Dr. William Howard, with two assistants, are the engineers whose services would be placed at the disposal of the parties interested in the matter."

At a meeting of the general committee of the citizens of Harrisburg, held Aug. 16, 1834, the following officers were chosen: Valentine Hummel, president; Mordcael McKinney, secretary; Henry Walters, treasurer. A communication was received from Dr. William Howard, United States engineer, estimating the expense, and making several suggestions relative to the proposed improvement, and stating that "by his orders he was entirely under the direction of the committee, and ready to execute any plan of operations which they might determine."

The following gentlemen were then chosen an executive committee: Henry K. Strong, George Mish, Valentine Hummel, Sr., Jacob M. Haldeman, John C. Bucher.

The report of Dr. Howard was referred to the executive committee, with instructions to devise a plan of operation for the survey. The project was ultimately abandoned in consequence, we believe, of the death of Dr. Howard, and the refusal of Congress to extend pecuniary co-operation.

There are many facts connected with the history of internal improvements in this locality which it will be impossible within our prescribed limits to do little more than briefly refer to, and we shall present them as they occur to us in this connection. Very few persons have any idea of the difficulties of transportation prior to the era of canals and railroads. Eighty-five or ninety years ago it was not an uncommon sight to see as many as five hundred pack-horses passing the ferry here westward, loaded with merchandise, salt, iron, etc. The iron was carried on horse-back, being crooked over and around their bodies; barrels or kegs were hung on each side of these. The pack-horses were generally led in divisions of twelve or fifteen horses, carrying about two hundred weight each, going single file, and managed by two men, one going before as the leader, and the other in the rear, to see after the safety of the packs. Where the bridge road passed along declivities or over hills, the path was in some places washed out so deep that the packs or burdens came in contact with the ground or other impeding obstacles, and were frequently displaced. However, as the carriers usually traveled in companies, the packs were soon adjusted, and no great delay occasioned. The pack-horses were generally furnished with bells, which were kept from ringing during the day drive, but were loose at night, when the horses were set free, and permitted to feed and browse. The bells were intended as guides to direct to their whereabouts in the morning. When the wagons were first introduced, the carriers considered that mode of transportation an invasion of their rights. Their indignation was more excited, and they manifested greater rancor than did the regular teamsters when the line of packets or railroad cars came into use about forty years afterwards.

Fifty years ago the currency was eleven-penny-bits, fippenny-bits, and shillings,—eight shillings one dollar. Eight yards of calico at a shilling a yard was one dollar. Goods were marked in this way and groceries sold in the same way. As a general thing families bought articles at the store just as they wanted to use them,—one-quarter of a pound of tea, two or three pounds of coffee, or five of sugar, and when more was wanted some youngster of the family was off to the store. Some accounts ran six months, and the merchant made all his purchases twice a year on six months' credit. The goods were purchased at Philadelphia or Baltimore, and were brought thence in large covered wagons, called Conestoga teams, drawn by six horses, sometimes one horse before the other, and all wearing bells upon the collar. These large wagons held from four to five tons of goods. They were built for regular transportation wagons on the great turnpikes of the day. In those early years turnpikes were not the miserable apologies for roads which grand jury after grand jury would stop to feed and water their horses. They carried a long feed-box with them. This was placed lengthwise of the tongue and the horses placed on either side. These were the kind of wagons in which goods were hauled from the cities alluded to,—westward, to Harrisburg and farther on. What is now Harris Park was constantly filled with these teams, awaiting their turn to ford or to be ferried over the river.

The business activity of the people sought out new channels; roads were made, attempts at slack-water navigation ventured on, until finally the Pennsylvania Canal, from Columbia to Pittsburgh, opened up an avenue to trade, and brought prosperity to all the towns on its route. On none had it better effect than Middletown and Harrisburg,* and the former place at one period was destined to retain a supremacy in population, enterprise, wealth, and influence. It was a great lumber mart; the Union Canal and its admirable location always made it a rival to the capital city.

Pennsylvania, as heretofore observed, embarked in the work of constructing her public improvements in the year 1822, when an act was passed authorizing the construction of the Pennsylvania Canal at the expense of the State. In 1827 the canal commissioners were authorized to make examination for a railroad to connect sections of the canal already partially connected. In 1828 they were directed to locate and put under contract a railroad from Philadelphia through Lancaster to Columbia. Millions of dollars were spent on the canal and railroad improvements, the expenditure being made necessary by the completion of the Erie Canal, which was taking the commerce of Philadelphia to New York. In 1832 portions of the Columbia Railroad were completed and cars were run upon it. In 1834 the entire line, partly canal and partly railroad, between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh was opened to trade and travel. It consisted of the railroad from Philadelphia to Columbia, eighty-two miles; the eastern division of the canal, from Columbia to Hollidaysburg, one hundred and seventy-two miles; the Portage Railroad, from Hollidaysburg to Johnstown, thirty-six miles, and the western division of the canal, from the latter place to Pittsburgh, a distance of one hundred and four miles, making an aggregate length of three hundred and ninety-four miles. Horse-cars were for several years run over the Columbia road, occupying nine hours in traveling eighty-two miles. About 1836 locomotives were regularly put at work on the road to the exclusion of horse-power. The cost of the line to the State was nearly fourteen and a half million dollars.

When the Harrisburg and Lancaster road was being located in 1835, much opposition was manifested by the farmers on surveying the road at having their farms "cut up" or divided. The road, however, was partially completed at different points during the following year. In August, 1836, it was finished as far as Middletown, terminating here at Paxtang Street. As cars were soon needed, Messrs. William Calder, Sr., & Co. had a car built by Eben Miltimore at his coach-shop, then located on the corner of Chestnut Street and River Alley. The car was a plain, open, four-wheel car, similar, though smaller, to the present excursion cars of the street railroad now used. When finished it was taken down to the railroad, and a trial trip was made two or three miles down the road with two horses attached to it by a short tow-line, as the track between the rails could not be used for horses. In September, 1836, a locomotive engine was brought from the State road (which had been previously constructed) from Columbia on a flat in the canal and landed at Middletown, from whence it was run to Harrisburg; and during the time, Saturday and Sunday, excursions were had to Middletown and back about every two hours with the car built by Mr. Miltimore. The small car was always crowded. Governor Ritner, the heads of the State department, and prominent citizens were first treated to a ride. This locomotive was made in England, and was one of the first placed on the State road. It was called the "John Bull," and would be a diminutive novelty now. It was a small, black affair with two driving-wheels, the piston connected inside of the wheel. The first locomotives put on the Harrisburg and Lancaster road were built by Matthew Baldwin, of Philadelphia, and were named after the three or four principal towns along the road. They had but two driving-wheels, with the crank and piston inside; and were used for both freight and passengers.

The next engines purchased were two built by Messrs. Norris & Sons, of Philadelphia, and were used for hauling freight trains. They were named Henry Clay and David R. Porter, were heavier and lower than the first ones, having but two driving-wheels, with the piston connected to the driving-wheels on the outside, as they are now constructed.

The road was not fully completed until some time in 1838, owing to the slow work on the tunnel near Elizabethtown. During its construction the passengers were conveyed around in stage-coaches. The Cumberland Valley Railroad was completed about the year 1837, except the erection of the bridge over the river. The first locomotives for that road were brought from Columbia on the canal, and landed on the wharf at Second and Vine Streets, from thence hauled over the Market Street bridge by six farm-horses. Bells were first used on the locomotives; the first brought here for the Cumberland Valley Railroad had whistles.

Several abortive attempts were made towards the construction of a through railroad from the Ohio to the Delaware, but it was not until 1846 that the project assumed tangible shape by the incorporation of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. The charter was granted on Feb. 25, 1847, and the law granting to the Baltimore and Ohio Railroad the right of way to Pittsburgh was abrogated in August following. Mr. J. Edgar Thomson prosecuted the work of building the road from Harrisburg to Pittsburgh with energy.

On Sept. 1, 1849, the first division, from Harrisburg to Lewistown, a distance of sixty-one miles, was opened to travel. A year later the line was opened to the Mountain House, one mile east of Hollidaysburg, and on the 10th of December, 1852, cars were run through from Philadelphia to Pittsburgh, connections between the eastern and western divisions being formed by the use of the Portage (State) road over the mountains. The Pennsylvania Company's road over the mountains was opened early in 1854. In 1857, after a long discussion, a law for the sale of the State works was passed, and the Pennsylvania Railroad became the purchaser of the main line, and was thereby released from the payment of tonnage, freight, and certain other specified taxes. The section of the law releasing the company from the payment of taxes was decided by the Supreme Court to be unconstitutional, and in 1861 an act was passed "for the commutation of the tonnage tax."

During the years immediately following the completion of the road it was greatly improved, the tracks doubled, other lines leased or bought, depots and extensions built, and more recently almost the entire line has been relaid with steel rails, the line straightened and regraded. During the war the Pennsylvania Railroad was largely used for the transportation of troops and supplies, and its president, Col. Scott, was charged by the government with the special duty of furnishing transportation for large bodies of troops and immense quantities of army supplies.

Twenty-five years ago the Pennsylvania Railroad was but a link between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh, extending from Harrisburg to the latter city; now it has its eastern termini at New York, Philadelphia, Baltimore, and Washington, and unites them by its own direct lines with Pittsburgh, Erie, Cleveland, Toledo, Chicago, Cincinnati, Indianapolis, Louisville, and St. Louis.

The railroads which centre at Harrisburg or pass through are as follows:

Cumberland Valley, connecting southward with the Valley of Virginia.

Pennsylvania, connecting the mighty West with the Atlantic seaboard.

Northern Central, to Washington City southward, Sunbury and Erie north and west.

Lebanon Valley, connecting with the numerous ramifications of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad.

Dauphin and Susquehanna, to Dauphin, through Stony Creek Valley to the anthracite coal regions.

Steelton Branch of the Philadelphia and Reading.

Several railroads are projected, two great trunk lines, which will largely add to the growth and prosperity of Harrisburg. The great southern line from Boston and Poughkeepsie through Harrisburg to the South and the Vanderbilt road promise advantages and facilities unsurpassed by any city in the Union.

CHAPTER VIII.

Prosperity of Harrisburg—Additions—Incorporated as a City—Visit of the Prince of Wales—The War for the Union—The Railroad Riots of 1877.

THE completion of the Pennsylvania Railroad and the absolute necessity for erecting a round-house and repair buildings at the then end of the road added a new impetus to the growth of the borough. The enterprise of one individual alone is so deserving of honorable mention in this record that historic accuracy demands it.

In 1857, William K. Verbeke purchased in the borough of Harrisburg the block of ground fronting on Short and South Streets, and extending from Young's Alley to Curtis' Alley (now Angle Avenue), upon which were erected some twenty or thirty huts, principally occupied by colored people. This ground Mr. Verbeke wished to lay out in building lots, and in order not to distress those persons who had their homes upon the leased ground, he bought of Messrs. Miller and Fernley ten acres of land in Susquehanna township, situated some distance above the borough line, on the west side of the "State-House Lane," adjoining property of Dr. Reily on the north, Mrs. William Reily on the west, and of Robert Gillmor on the south, and offered to sell them lots and remove their buildings thereto upon the payment of a dollar a week, as many were laborers or at service, which sum they could conveniently pay out of their wages, and thus become owners of the property. To this proposition they all gladly consented, and when the frail buildings were being pulled down, and being asked what they were doing, would reply, "We are going to put up our houses in Verbeketown." This was the way Verbeketown first obtained a "local habitation and a name." Independently of this Mr. Verbeke saw there was great need in Harrisburg of cheap lots for the moderately circumstanced, the laborer and mechanic, and he therefore laid out the lots small, and put the price very low, as an inducement to buy and locate. He also set to work to improve the locality, as the land was wet and boggy, a water-course passing through the centre of it, and at times when a heavy rain set in the whole place was entirely covered with water. In old times this was the usual condition of things, and it received the name of "Lake Harry," where some of our oldest inhabitants were accustomed to go to shoot ducks. It became necessary therefore to have the ditch newly dug, which was done, extending the sewer at North Street.

The streets laid out were filled up with gravel and cinders nicely graded to afford facilities for ingress and egress. A cinder walk was laid from North Street to the ground. While this was being done many persons were buying lots and paying their dollar installment, and in less than a month one hundred and twenty were disposed of. To induce people to locate Mr. Verbeke had two good houses erected, one on William Street and the other on Fulton Street, which he sold to persons without any means, never expecting they would ever be able to pay for them, so as to get them inhabited, and upon the same terms of one dollar a week. Two wells were dug, one on William Street and one on Susquehanna Street, the water of the former running over the top and forming a moderately-sized rivulet, which continued running for several years in consequence of the swampy condition of the ground in that neighborhood. To facilitate building up the place Mr. Verbeke bought a number of rafts at the river, and commenced the erection of rough houses for those who desired it. In this way, perhaps, a hundred small houses sprung up as if by magic. But as the frogs piped by night, an abundance of water-privileges had, and it was the poor who took up their abode there, the people of the borough derisively spoke of it as "Warbecktown," though through the great improvements which have taken place since that locality is looked upon as a marvel of prosperity and energy. This land cost two hundred and sixty dollars per acre, and in consequence of these rapid improvements ten acres of land in the immediate vicinity, owned by Nicholas Reamshart, in the month of July sold for one thousand dollars per acre. About the same time Mr. Verbeke bought three acres of Jacob Shaffner for three hundred and thirty-three dollars per acre, which was laid out to conform to the other, making the same improvements upon it, and selling upon the same terms.

The plan of Mr. Verbeke being so successful, in April, 1858, he purchased the adjoining farm of twenty acres of Robert Gillmor, at six hundred dollars per acre. This land was very unfavorable for building purposes. The eastern portion was low and wet, and the western part was full of hills and depressions. Mr. Verbeke considered that if the streets and alleys were graded the lots would sell at once, and if laid out larger interest could be charged, which would be a full return for the expenditure of grading. The sum expended in grading the land bought of Mr. Gillmor, which extended from Fulton to Front Streets, and from Sayford Alley to the lower line of Charles and Hay Alleys, was four thousand dollars. Verbeke Street, or, as it is erroneously called, Broad Street, runs through the middle of this piece of land. The proprietor, in order to favor the people buying of him, erected a two-story frame school-house at the corner of William and Verbeke Streets, thirty feet square, which was supplied with teachers by the township school directors; reserved a large plot of ground, fifty by eight hundred feet, in the centre of Verbeke Street, from Third to Fulton, for a market-house, and donated lots to the Methodist and Church of God congregations for churches and parsonage. This piece of land was also being rapidly disposed of, and purchasers selling again obtained large profits. As an instance of this, three lots at the corner of Third and Verbeke Streets were sold originally for six hundred and seventy-five dollars, resold for two thousand five hundred dollars, afterwards divided into smaller pieces, and brought ten thousand dollars. A few years later Mr. Verbeke added several acres, from Susquehanna to Front and adjoining the Gillmor tract, which he purchased of John Shannon at fifteen hundred dollars per acre. All the land was divided into five hundred lots, and the total expenditure of grading the streets was seven thousand dollars.

In the beginning of the year of 1857 there was not a house in what was called "Verbetektown," and hardly half a dozen in what is now the Sixth Ward, while at the present time Verbetektown is compactly and in most parts well built up, while the ward has nearly, if not quite, seven thousand inhabitants, with two election precincts, and a voting population of fifteen hundred. Thus it will be seen what enterprise, and the small inducements held out to the people for a given purpose, will produce.

In the year 1860 Harrisburg received its highest corporate honors,—that of a city. The boundaries were extended in all directions, commissioners were appointed from the most reputable and staid citizens of the borough to lay out streets and avenues and set the municipal machinery in motion. Although at the time arousing much opposition, yet its subsequent growth and prosperity have fully realized the fondest expectations of its earnest advocates. In population it ranks the sixth in the State, and in manufacturing interests it is the third, Pittsburgh and Philadelphia alone exceeding it, while in the Union it ranks high among the inland cities. The chief municipal officers from the period of its incorporation until the present year are as follows:

MAYORS.

William H. Kepner, April 20, 1860-March 27, 1863.
A. L. Roumfort, March 27, 1863-March 23, 1866.
Oliver Edwards, March 23, 1866-Jan. 11, 1869.
W. W. Hays, Jan. 11, 1869-March, 1870 (died in office).
George B. Cole, April 4, 1870-Jan. 9, 1871.
William K. Verbeke, Jan. 9, 1871-Jan. 13, 1873.
J. D. Boas, Jan. 13, 1873-Jan. 11, 1875.
John D. Patterson, Jan. 11, 1875-Jan. 8, 1881 (resigned).
John C. Herman, Jan. 8, 1881-April 2, 1883.
Simon Cameron Wilson, April 2, 1883, to serve two years.

CITY TREASURERS.

Alexander W. Watson, April 20, 1860-March 28, 1862.
John T. Wilson, March 28, 1862-March 27, 1868.
George F. Weaver, Sr., March 27, 1868-Jan. 13, 1873.
Grafton Fox, Jan. 13, 1873-Jan. 11, 1875.
David S. Herr, Jan. 11, 1875-April 2, 1877.
William Shesley, April 2, 1877-April 4, 1881.
Leonard H. Kinnard, April 4, 1881-April 2, 1883 (re-elected to serve for two years from April 2, 1883).

PRESIDENTS OF COMMON COUNCIL.

Daniel W. Gross, April 20, 1860-March 28, 1862.
William O. Hickok, March 28, 1862-March 27, 1868.
John H. Ziegler, March 27, 1868-Oct. 23, 1868.
David Mumma, Oct. 23, 1868-Oct. 22, 1869.
Christopher Lewis, Oct. 22, 1869-Oct. 28, 1870.
J. Brishen Boyd, Oct. 28, 1870-Oct. 27, 1871.
Daniel C. Maner, Oct. 27, 1871-Oct. 25, 1872.
John D. Patterson, Oct. 25, 1872-Oct. 24, 1873.
W. H. H. Sieg, Oct. 24, 1873-Oct. 22, 1875.
J. A. Sleutz, Oct. 22, 1875-April 1, 1878.
John C. Kirk, April 1, 1878-April 7, 1879.
William H. Checkner, April 7, 1879-April 5, 1880.
John J. Hargest, April 5, 1880-April 4, 1881.
Samuel W. Myers, April 4, 1881-April 3, 1882.
Charles A. Miller, April 3, 1882-April 2, 1883.
John C. Hutton, April 2, 1883.

PRESIDENTS OF SELECT COUNCIL.

A. Boyd Hamilton, March 22, 1867-April 20, 1868.
Robert L. Munch, July 27, 1874-Feb. 19, 1875.
Joseph Strominger, Feb. 19, 1875-April 7, 1879.
John A. Gramm, April 7, 1879-April 4, 1881.
William J. Adams, April 4, 1881-Jan. 28, 1882.
Charles L. Bailey, Jan. 28, 1882-April 2, 1883.
William L. Gargas, April 2, 1883.

CLERKS OF COMMON COUNCIL.

David Harris, April 20, 1860-April 1, 1868.
John T. Wilson, April 1, 1868-Oct. 23, 1868.
John Shiffler, Oct. 23, 1868-April 2, 1883 (re-elected April 2, 1883, for three years).

CLERKS OF SELECT COUNCIL.

Ovid F. Johnson, March 22, 1867-April 20, 1868.
C. A. Wilhelm, July 27, 1874-Feb. 19, 1875.
John W. Young, Feb. 19, 1875-April 8, 1876.
B. Frank Peters, April 8, 1876-April 4, 1881.
W. J. Baker, April 4, 1881-April 2, 1883.

The year 1860 is especially noted for the visit of the Prince of Wales to America and to the new city of Harrisburg. He was formally received by his honor, Mayor Kepner, and at the capitol was invited to a seat in the Hancock chair, introduced to the citizens by Gen. Cameron, and welcomed to the State by Governor Packer. Among the distinguished visitors to the city, he was the first scion of royalty since the days of Teedyuscung, king of the Delawares, who had honored this locality with his presence.

In the general history of the county we have dwelt very fully upon the great civil war, and in this place can only casually allude to it. The location of the first and greatest military camp in the Northern States was adjoining the limits of Harrisburg, named, by Gens. Knipe and Williams, in honor of the chief magistrate of Pennsylvania, Camp Curtin, which with being the central point of communication, especially with the oft-beleaguered Federal capital, made it a prominent rendezvous. The citizens of the city were equal to any emergency, and the community fed gratuitously twenty thousand returned three months' soldiers for several days, the proper authorities failing in their duty. Hospitals were established, and, although in charge of the government, the ladies of the State capital never wearied in well-doing, caring kindly for the sick and wounded.

From the commencement of the war the charity of the citizens was unbounded and without stint, the doors of hospitality freely opened, and to our honor be it said two citizens, Messrs. John B. Simon and Eby Byers, established the Soldiers' Rest, where the sick and wounded patriot on his way homeward found rest and refreshment and gentle care. Thousands were kindly ministered to, and until the "boys came marching home" the good work went on unabated. In every cemetery and graveyard within the borders of Dauphin County lie the remains of her brave and true sons, while in the cemetery at Harrisburg the grass grows green over the graves of Union and Confederate soldiers from far-off States. In all the struggles for life, for liberty, for right, and for the Union Harrisburg was never behind. But these dark days of our country have passed like "a dream that has been told." May the lesson taught be heeded by those who come after us,—that the Union of States is not a rope of sand which may be broken at the will of any section.

On the 19th of July, 1877, while the Governor and commander-in-chief of the forces of Pennsylvania was on his way to visit the Pacific coast, a general strike was inaugurated by the employés of nearly all the railroads in the United States. In many portions of the commonwealth the municipal and county authorities failed to restore traffic, and for several days the rioters, for such many proved to be, had control of affairs. The burning of the round-house, depot, and cars at Pittsburgh, with the attack of a reckless and infuriated mob upon the soldiery at that exhausted, at once took measures to preserve peace and restore order. A proclamation was issued calling upon the law-abiding citizens to aid him in the faithful discharge of his duty. The city was placed under military rule, and the sheriff summoned all reputable citizens for the support of "law and order."

In the afternoon quite a number of Philadelphia soldiers, who had reached Fairview on the west side of the Susquehanna, surrendered their arms to a handful of the rioters, who, with increasing numbers, brought the former to the city, marching them through Market Street to the depot. It was a pitiable sight, and only proved what was in store, had not the prompt measures of Col. Jennings checked this ebullition of outlawry.

On Monday night the rioters, several hundred in place, gave cause for great uneasiness and alarm. Travel was suspended on all the railroads centering at Harrisburg.

Sunday, the 22d, was one of great suspense. The authorities, however, were quietly preparing for the emergency. That evening, one by one, the City Grays found their way to the arsenal, which had been defenseless. On Monday the Mexican trophy cannon were duly spiked, but the mob increased by tramps showed signs of disquiet, and affairs were assuming such a situation that became suddenly alarming. The sheriff, Col. Jennings, returned to Harrisburg on Monday afternoon and found the city in the power of the mob, the proclamation of the mayor of the day previous availing little. The sheriff met the committee of citizens, and when Mayor Patterson informed him that his power to quiet affairs had been number, began breaking into the stores, ostensibly for guns, but in reality for pillage. At this juncture the sheriff gathered the citizens, and placing himself at their head came upon the mob, who soon dispersed, while upwards of thirty were arrested and placed in prison. On Tuesday evening twelve hundred of the citizens organized into "law and order" companies, paraded through the city, and from that time, during the emergency, the citizens patrolled the city, preserving order without calling to their assistance the military. Governor Hartranft, in the subsequent message to the Assembly, highly complimented the example of the officers and citizens of the capital city.

In the mean time the military gathered for the defense of the different railroads so as to insure peace and restore traffic, and when this was accomplished the citizen-soldiery returned to their homes.

CHAPTER IX.

WATER SUPPLY.

Early Efforts to Supply the Town with Water—The Water-Works of 1840—Shiplasters—The New Water-Works.

EFFORTS to supply the town of Harrisburg with water were made at a very early period in its history. Reference has been made to the proposition for converting Paxtang Creek into a canal by diverting it from its course, and augmenting its supply of water from the Susquehanna by means of a wing-dam north of the present residence of Judge Hiester. This was for manufacturing purposes primarily. Legislative aid and approval failed, and the project was abandoned.

About the year 1800 several trial surveys were made of the supply of water obtainable from some of the springs on the high ground east of Paxtang Creek, and below South Street. Nothing came of it, except that Pott's tannery obtained, by a wooden service pipe and very primitive basin, a supply for its uses. That was on the line of the present Philadelphia and Reading Railroad on Paxtang Street. It is impossible to state at whose expense these surveys were made, but we have always understood that John A. Hanna, Stacy Potts, Adam Boyd, Joshua Elder, Robert Harris, and Moses Gillmor had much to do with this examination.

In 1818, '19, '20, Thomas Elder, Hugh Hamilton, Joseph Wallace, John Forster, Robert Harris, James R. Boyd, Jackson Watson, Abraham Bombaugh, George Beatty, Samuel Holman, John Fager, and John Roberts, determined upon and made survey for a water-supply for the town of Harrisburg, having then a population of three thousand, a highly cultivated community, "very poor in purse so soon after the war."

The design was to confine the springs on the lands of Dr. Wiestling and Mr. Bombaugh, near the present new basin and on the line of Market Street, in a dam at the junction of Market and Thirteenth Streets. Also to utilize the springs on Messrs. Hielman's and Berryhill's lands, west and south, in a dam on Mr. Hamilton's land, east of the present Paxtang tannery, both points quite one hundred feet above the low water of the Susquehanna River. The water thus gathered was to be conducted in wooden pipes to the town and supplied by gravitation. It was expected that this project would cost thirty-three thousand dollars, and afford two hundred thousand gallons a day. The municipality had no authority to aid the enterprise, the community was too poor to carry it out, so the whole came to be abandoned.

About this time the borough had incurred a debt of nearly two thousand dollars. Some of the members of the Council—four of nine—proposed and urged a sale of the reservation on the west side of Front Street. Capt. Alexander Graydon had showed the burgesses, Stacy Potts and Andrew Mitchel, as well as the public, in a newspaper discussion twenty years before, that this land could not be used for any purpose, except as a pleasure-ground, if any regard was had to the bequest of John Harris, the founder. Most of the lawyers of that day agreed with Graydon. In its necessity the Councils after 1809 rented "the bank" for lumber-yards, in defiance of all contrary opinions. In a few years this violation of the grant of Harris produced a second,—the proposition to dispose of the whole of it from Paxtang to South Streets in town lots. Fortunately, the intelligence and sense of right in the community was aroused. It made its influence felt, and, after a brief struggle, effectually defeated this scheme to aid an empty treasury. The present generation enjoy in this particular the foresight of the founder and the good taste of our early citizens in the preservation of this delightful reservation.

The subject of water-supply was, however, kept alive by its friends, and that seems to have been the whole community. The newspapers occasionally alluded to it, notably the Chronicle. That paper of the 5th of August, 1822, gave its support vigorously to any plan of supply, stating that "the introduction of a constant, a plentiful supply of fresh water into the town from the Susquehanna, or from the springs in the neighborhood, if such there are, of sufficient volume and elevation, is a subject that has been agitated for several years past. All admit the necessity for and are convinced of the utility of this thing."

The article further sets forth the great convenience arising from the then recent introduction of water into Philadelphia, and urged the formation of a Harrisburg company with power to introduce water. This was a year previous to the passage of the first act of Assembly on the subject. That embraced a plan both brilliant and practical, nothing less than a canal sixty feet wide, six feet in depth, and nine miles long.

In March, 1823, an act of the Legislature was passed incorporating a company "to supply the borough of Harrisburg with water, and to insure against fire." The incorporators were John Zinn, John Forster, Jacob M. Haldeman, Obed Fahnestock, John Capp, Samuel Pool, Peter Keller, Robert Harris, John B. Cox, Abraham Oves, Christian Gleim, John S. Wiestling, William LeBarron, Jacob Bucher, John Gingerich; shares twenty dollars, two dollars to be paid at subscription. It was not until December, 1825, that the necessary amount of money was subscribed to set the company going. An election was then held by the subscribers. John Forster, cashier of the Harrisburg Bank, was chosen president, Dr. Thomas Whiteside treasurer, John Roberts secretary. Directors, John Zinn, tanner; John S. Wiestling, printer; Christian Gleim, printer and sheriff of the county; Samuel Pool, carpenter; John Ritchey, farmer, of Lower Paxtang; Benjamin Kugler, M.D., of Philadelphia; Abraham Bombaugh, farmer; Valentine Hummel, saddler. Laomi Baldwin, C.E., of Boston, was chosen engineer. John Davis, Esq., made the preliminary survey. The fall from the mouth of Stony Creek at Green's mill (Dauphin) to the Market Street bridge across Paxtang was found to be twelve feet fifty-nine one-hundredths, which it was decided would afford the requisite supply.

The company was engaged in preparations to carry out its project, when the then canal commissioners determined to locate the proposed eastern division of the Pennsylvania Canal over exactly the same ground chosen by Mr. Baldwin for the water line of the Harrisburg Company. The State had the right and used it, thus dismissing the company without damages for the considerable expense its corporators had incurred in surveying its line. It was a most indefensible exercise of power on the part of the commonwealth. The company took the case to the courts. Whilst the question was pending, discussions were lively and heated, both at stormy town-meetings and places of public resort. At last in May, 1827, the Supreme Court decided against the company, and the State proceeded to construct the canal as it is seen to-day. The company dissolved, and the corporators lost most of their two dollars a share.

In February, 1833, a new act was passed having as corporators John Forster, Jacob M. Haldeman, Robert Harris, William Graydon, Hugh Hamilton, George Geiger, Frederick Kelker, John M. Forster, Abraham Bombaugh, Francis R. Shunk, Henry Buehler, James Lesley, Luther Reily, Joseph B. Henzey, and Isaac Updegraf. The charter allowed the company to take water from the river, "without a dam, at Brushy Rock," thence "to Pine Street," where works were to be constructed to force the accumulated fluid to "a point on the uninclosed public ground, having careful regard to the safety of the arsenal." The basin was to have been where the present Mexican monument now stands. The cost was estimated at one hundred and twenty thousand dollars. This project was never very popular, and after much controversy the company dissolved.

The project, however, which resulted in the successful introduction of Susquehanna water into the borough of Harrisburg originated with Wm. Ayres, a distinguished member of the Harrisburg bar. Having been elected a member of the Borough Council in January, 1839, he applied himself to the work forthwith, and on March 26th following he secured from the Legislature the passage of an act to supply the borough of Harrisburg with water. In compliance with this act, the Town Council on the 20th of April appointed the following members a committee to carry out the provisions thereof, viz.: William Ayres (chairman), Samuel Pool, Jacob Seiler, John Knepley, Michael Burke, George Beatty, and Christian F. Haehnel.

But the names of the two latter gentlemen do not appear in subsequent proceedings, and George S. Kemble and Henry Beader were added to this water-works committee.

The scheme as first proposed did not include any special plan or defined ideas. Everybody could see that there was plenty of water in the river and plenty of land for a "basin," but the manner in which to accomplish the work was yet to be reduced to a practicable conclusion.

The committee was, however, empowered to employ a competent engineer, and with his assistance "ascertain what head and fall can be had in the Susquehanna River from the head of 'Miller's Ripples' to the foot of the borough, specifying the same at the several points along the contemplated line, both with and without a dam." They were also to inquire into the expediency of using water-power or steam, the construction of the necessary "basin" (reservoir), the cost of water-pipes and laying them in the streets, together with all other information necessary to complete the works, special reference being had to "expense, utility, and practicability, and their probable revenue."

The twin conflagrations of the previous year, which had destroyed two blocks of valuable property, including the Lutheran Church, on opposite corners at Fourth and Market Streets, were still fresh in memory, and the water-works committee, imbued with the faith and indomitable energy of its chairman, proceeded during the summer of 1839 to examine the ground and draw such conclusions as made the result practicable and only a matter of time. In this they were assisted by the engineering talent of the town, chiefly by Col. John Roberts, who made the survey and plot of the reservoir grounds, and by the spring of 1840 their plans were quite definite and awaited confirmation and acceptance by the Council.

Edward F. Gay, of Philadelphia, an engineer of considerable reputation at that time, was engaged to make a formal test of these preliminary measures, which he did by actual survey, and made a favorable report thereon.

The general plan was now matured, and Messrs. Ayres and Pool were delegated by Council to negotiate for the necessary land upon which to locate the reservoir. The site deemed most eligible was on the heights of the ridge between the river and canal, at the intersection of North and High (now Fourth) Streets, which was the most elevated spot practicable, the top of the proposed reservoir to be ninety-two feet above low-water mark at the (Market Street) bridge, and ninety-one feet above the noted low water of 1803, marked on Maclay's Rock. As it was also intended to bring the feeding main pipes up North Street from a water-house to be located at its intersection with the river, the locality aforesaid was clearly the proper one. After many interviews, disputes, arbitrations, and suits the required amount of land was ultimately secured for the reservoir, with its adjoining streets, eight acres and ten perches, at a total cost of four thousand four hundred and thirty-seven dollars and thirty-four cents.

It was solely through the instrumentality of William Ayres that the money was secured to construct the Harrisburg water-works. On Dec. 26, 1839, Gen. Ayres personally addressed the directors of the Bank of the United States, asking for the loan of twenty-five thousand dollars at six per cent. interest, payable semi-annually, the principal to be paid any time after 1850. The faith, credit, and responsibility of the borough was pledged as security under the act of March 26, 1839, already mentioned. The money was not to be furnished until April next ensuing. Certificates of loan were to be prepared and then issued.

The confidence in the integrity of the borough, shown by the liberal subscriptions of the bank referred to, although far short of the sum required to complete the works, encouraged the Council to issue (April, 1841) in its own behalf certificates of indebtedness ("borough notes," as they were called) in payment for labor, and received for taxes and all municipal dues. These notes were for twenty-five and fifty cents, termed "shinplasters," and one, two, and three dollars. They were graciously accepted by the people, and constituted the currency of the town for nearly three years.

It may be here noted that they were gradually canceled, and by the autumn of 1843 the necessity of further issue ceased.

By September, 1841, the works were considered as finished, anything further being considered as simply extension, and required only the superintendence of the water committee. Mr. Erdman, whose engineering skill had been secured during their construction, consequently relinquished his engineership, and formally handed over the management to the Town Council on the 20th of that month.

In the year 1843 the capacity of the water-works was commensurate with the necessities of the town. Its income had so far increased that the deficiency to be made up by the borough issues was only about eleven thousand dollars. The labor done upon them was chiefly in finishing up and completing; the disputed land damages were settled finally; very little amount of pipe was laid; so that this year closed with the Harrisburg water-works an accomplished fact. It may be here stated that by the 1st of January, 1844, the pipe laid was equal in distance to eight miles; stop-cocks set, 107; fire-plugs erected, 99. The total cost of construction, for labor, materials, real estate, freight, and salaries, $120,459.12. The general expense of operating the entire works was reduced to $1482.50 per annum. The number of dwellings, manufactories, and other buildings supplied with water was 658. The total amount of borough debt, $170,733.37.

By the extension of the city limits, especially on the east side, the rapid increase of population, a demand was made for an improvement in the water supply of the city. The old reservoir it was found was too contracted, and its height insufficient even at the full level to supply the old part of the city, while beyond the rise of ground east of Paxtang Creek, where there was at least one thousand inhabitants, no improvements of the old reservoir could be made which would render aid to that locality. In 1868 active measures were inaugurated and proper legislation secured looking to an improved water supply for the city.

The water commissioners then appointed were Messrs. William Calder, A. Boyd Hamilton, Charles F. Muench, David S. Herr, and John J. Shoemaker. On the 16th of June, 1869, the commissioners elected H. P. M. Birkinbine engineer, who at once began an investigation of all the different sources of possible water supply. The following were examined and fully reported upon:

1. Locating the works on the western shore of the Susquehanna opposite the city, forcing the water from the river into a reservoir on Fort Washington Hill, and conveying it across the river by pipes.
2. Constructing a water-power in the Susquehanna in the neighborhood of Rockville, and forcing water from the river into a reservoir constructed by damming up Roberts' Valley, or else locating the reservoir on the southern slope of the First Mountain.
3. Constructing a water-power in the Susquehanna River at Brushy Rock, near McAllister's, and conveying it by a canal to a point at or near the present works, where it will be used by suitable water-motors, driving-pumps, for supplying the city.
4. Conveying the water of the Yellow Breeches Creek in Cumberland County by gravitation into a reservoir located on Fort Washington Hill, and carrying it in pipes across the river into the city.
5. Conveying the waters of Stony Creek by gravitation into a reservoir located upon the elevated ground east of the city known as Prospect Hill.
6. Conveying the waters of Manada Creek by gravitation into a reservoir located on Prospect Hill.
7. Pumping from the Susquehanna River at the site occupied by the present works (or at a better one if it can be found) by means of improved steam machinery, and forcing the water into a reservoir of sufficient altitude and capacity to meet the present and future wants of the city.

The fifth, sixth, and seventh sources were favorably regarded, the others decidedly objected to for various reasons. The commissioners, however, themselves thoroughly examined every source of water supply, and after careful consideration decided upon the seventh plan, with a reservoir on Prospect Hill, and pumping from the Susquehanna at the foot of North Street (or, as it should be gratefully named, Ayres Avenue). At once reports were made to the City Councils, and immediate measures taken to secure the ground, construct the reservoir, and erect such additional works at the river-front as was proper and necessary. The cost of all the improvements required to secure to the city of Harrisburg one of the most satisfactory systems of water supply in the Union has been less than three-quarters of a million of dollars, and the entire establishment is an honor to those who managed its construction, and a credit to the capital city of Pennsylvania.

REFORMED CHURCHES.

FIRST REFORMED CHURCH.—Early in the eighteenth century a large number of the members of the Reformed Church emigrated from the Palatinate and settled, as we have before stated, in Pennsylvania. These early settlers brought their Bibles, catechisms, and hymn-books with them, and as their numbers increased organized congregations in various sections of the Province. They then invited ministers of their faith to visit their rude log cabins or churches, in order that they might preach to them, baptize their children, and administer the sacrament of the Lord's Supper. As the country became more thickly settled the want of a spiritual head was greatly felt by the members of the church in Pennsylvania to gather the scattered flock and organize churches. Accordingly, in 1747, application was made to the mother-church for a pastor, and Rev. Michael Schlatter, of St. Gall, Switzerland, was sent to the Province. He arrived at Philadelphia on Sept. 6, 1746, and immediately entered upon his labors. On the 23d of the same month we find him in Lancaster, and from that time he made frequent and often laborious journeys through this and the neighboring counties, extending his visits as far west and south as Frederick City, Md. Wherever he went he preached with great acceptance to the people, baptized their children, and administered communion. He formed neighboring congregations into pastoral charges, and united them more closely with one another and with the mother-church in the Fatherland, so that by mutual co-operation the infant church might be more firmly established, and more readily supplied with such aid as it needed in its weak, scattered, and destitute condition.

At this time there was no regular church building in Harrisburg. The inhabitants of all religious denominations, whenever a minister visited them, worshipped together in a one-story log school-house which then stood at the foot of Capitol Hill, on the north corner of Third and Walnut Streets. When the town was laid out the first settlers took measures for the erection of a church building, and John Harris granted lot No. 187 on the town plat, situated at the corner of Chestnut and Third Streets, for that purpose. The following is a copy of the English subscription-list for the erection of the "first church in Harrisburg":

We, the subscribers, do each of us promise to pay, or cause to be paid, unto John Norton, Christian Gunckel, George Redig, and Henry Brunner, or their order, on demand, the sums annexed to each of our names respectively, to be held and appropriated by the said John Norton, Christian Gunckel, George Redig, and Henry Brunner in purchasing materials for and in building a church and school-house in some convenient part of the town of Harrisburg for the use of the subscribers. In witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands, with the sums annexed, this 12th day of March, A.D. 1787.

A sufficient sum having been raised by subscription, a log church was erected with a front of thirty-five feet and five inches on Third Street, and a depth of thirty feet and five inches to Cherry Alley. The lot had a front of fifty-two feet and six inches on Chestnut Street, and a depth of two hundred and ten feet to Cherry Alley. The first church building being for the use of all denominations, the original subscription papers, as we have seen, very properly recited that the edifice was "for the use of the subscribers," and for many years clergymen of different denominations officiated in it. A majority of the subscribers, however, being those who professed the doctrines of Martin Luther and Ulric Zwingle, the church was owned and occupied statedly only by the German Reformed and Evangelical Lutheran congregations. These two religious denominations worshiped together in this building until the Lutherans purchased a lot on Fourth Street, between Market and Chestnut, and erected a handsome church for themselves, the cornerstone of which was laid in 1814. They sold their interest in the old church and lot in 1816 for one thousand dollars. In 1791 the two denominations erected a school-house on the old property, as will be seen by the following subscription list:

Da zum Nutzen und gehrsuch der heranwachsenden Deutsche Jugend ein Schulhaus neben die Kirche erbauet worden und in dasselbige, auch ein stuben ofen gesetzt worden, und nun mehr auch bequemer ist Winters zeit Gottes dienst darin zuhalten und da es eines jeden Christen sein Pflicht ist, vor seine Kinder zu sorgen damit sie in gutem unterricht kommen werden, so werden alle diejenigen freundlich ersucht ein gefaelligen Beytrag zu thun, damit die dadurch verursachte Unkosten des Baues bezahlt werden koennen. After the death of John Harris his heirs released for five shillings all their interest in the church lot to the trustees of the Reformed and Lutheran Churches. The first pastor of the Reformed congregation was Rev. A. Hautz, and of the Lutheran, Rev. F. D. Schaeffer, the latter of whom then resided in or near Carlisle. The first records of this church bear date Oct. 18, 1788.

Both congregations appear to have been united in their temporal affairs and all church regulations from 1787 to 1795. Rev. A. Hautz was the first stationed pastor of the German Reformed Church, and the first resident pastor of any denomination settled in Harrieburg. He owned and occupied a house situated on Chestnut Street, the third house southwest of the church. It appears by the first record of an election, held Sept. 12, 1790, that the following persons were chosen by the respective congregations:

The entry for 1795 is as follows:

"Im Jahr 1795 wurden die zwei Gemeinden in Harrieburg, naemlich die Reformirt und Lutherisch, von einander Separirt, und wählten auf Reformirter Seite zum Kirchenthath:

"TRUSTEES.—George Haeyer, Henrich Brunner; Aeltesten, Jacob Shultz, Simon Schneider; Vorsteher, Henrich Liphart, Johannes Pfeiffer."

Up to this time the two congregations had worshipped together, but in this year they separated, although they occupied the same building. In the same year the old church was wainscoted and put in thorough repair. In 1804 the vestries of the two denominations erected a pulpit and put up galleries on three sides. The walls were plastered and the exterior weatherboarded and painted white. On the 28th of March, 1812, Rev. Philip Gloninger, George Hoyer, Frederick Kelker, Nicholas Ott, and Frederick Boas purchased of Joseph Allen lot No. 186, adjoining the old church property, for fourteen hundred dollars, for the exclusive use of the German Reformed Church. On the 13th of July, 1813, the Lutherans formally proposed a division of the church property, which was declined by the Reformed brethren. On June 17, 1815, a second proposition was made by the Lutherans, that the German Reformed should purchase an undivided half of the new Lutheran Church which had been built on Fourth Street in 1814. This occasioned considerable discussion, but the majority of the Reformed Church opposed the proposition, and the result was that on the 1st of April, 1816, the German Reformed congregation purchased for one thousand dollars the interest of the Lutherans in the old church lot and buildings. On the 3d of July, 1818, "The German Reformed Salem Church of Harrisburg" was incorporated with the following incorporators:

Vestry: Trustees, Christian Shaeffer, John Zinn; Elders, George Wetherholt, John Kelker; Deacons, John Horter, John S. Wiestling, George Kunkel, Jacob Hise; Members, M. Rahm, A. Dorsheimer, George Hoyer, Henry George, Jacob Miesch, Jacob Cunkle, Jacob Hoyer, Jacob Bucher, George Snyder, Frederick Beisel, Joseph Doll, John Henning, Henry Frey, Henry Weltshover, Jacob Balsley, Frederick Kelker, David S. Forney, Jacob Steinman, Jacob Greenawalt, Peter Bachman, Jacob Kunkel, Samuel C. Wiestling, Jr., Samuel Swartz, Conrad Knepley, Michael Derstein, Nicholas Ott, John Horn, David Beissel, Peter Snider, Daniel Snider, John A. Stehley.

On the 15th of January, 1821, a meeting of the members was held in the old church, at which Frederick Kelker presided and John S. Wiestling acted as secretary. At this meeting it was resolved to erect a new church of suitable dimensions, to front on Chestnut Street, and the following persons were appointed to collect subscriptions for the purpose: Jacob Bucher, John Kelker, John Zinn, John S. Wiestling, Rev. John Winebrenner, John Horter, Frederick Kelker, and Conrad Knepley. Three weeks afterwards (on Feb. 5, 1821) the committee reported six thousand and six dollars in cash and subscriptions, and the vestry were requested to contract for the erection of a new church.

On the 8th of March, 1821, the vestry contracted with Messrs. Samuel Pool and Henry V. Wilson for the erection of a brick church, sixty feet front and seventy-five feet deep, and with a tower one hundred and ten feet to the top of the wood-work, to be completed by July 1, 1822, for the sum of eight thousand dollars. To carry the plan into execution, the old log school-house and the brick house, both of which stood on the church lots, were taken down and removed. The church building was immediately commenced, and on the 11th of June, 1821, the cornerstone was laid with appropriate ceremonies. On the 21st of June, 1822, the bell, weighing six hundred and sixty-seven pounds, which had been procured in London at an expense of three hundred and forty-six dollars and fifty-six and one-half cents, was taken to the church and placed in the tower. The following inscriptions are upon it: "T. Mears, of London, Feecit 1822;" "May all whom I may summon to the grave the blessings of a well-spent life receive." The church was finished Aug. 1, 1822, and on the 4th of the same month dedicated to Jehovah. The total cost of the church up to Feb. 15, 1823, was eight thousand five hundred and thirty-seven dollars and fifty-four cents, exclusive of bell.

In 1827 the old church was altered by extending an upper floor from the eastern to the western gallery, thus converting the interior into two large rooms. The upper one was used for some time by the Sunday-school, and the lower as a day-school. They were afterwards occupied by public schools. In the summer of 1841 the pulpit of the brick church was replaced by a new one, the walls painted, and many other improvements made. In the same year a spacious lecture-room one story high, twenty-eight by fifty-four feet, with thirteen-feet ceiling, was erected in the rear of the new church. It was subsequently extended to Cherry Alley, making a room twenty-eight by ninety-one feet. In 1855 its interior was handsomely frescoed by George Seiling, the noted fresco-painter of Reading, and in January, 1856, a splendid organ, purchased from Jardine & Son, of New York, and presented to the congregation by five members thereof, was put up. The "confirmation table," which stood before the pulpit in the first church since 1787, has been carefully preserved and is used as the speaker's desk in the new chapel, erected in 1880.

In 1854 the old log church, corner Third Street and Cherry Avenue, was taken down and four brick dwelling-houses erected on its site. The congregation also erected three additional brick dwellings on Cherry Avenue in 1881, after the completion of the chapel.

The church was remodeled in 1876, and Salem Chapel, an extensive and beautiful building for Sunday-school purposes, erected in 1880 and 1881, in the rear of and adjoining the main church building.

The following are the names of the stationed pastors of the Reformed Church from its foundation to the present time:

Rev. Anthony Hautz, from probably 1788 to 1797. In the tax duplicates of Dauphin County it seems that Mr. Hautz was first taxed in 1792, and the last year in which he is noted as a resident of Harrisburg is in 1797.

Rev. Jonathan Helfenstein, from Sept. 7, 1805, to 1808.

Rev. Philip Gloninger, from July 17, 1808, to June 26, 1814.

Rev. Frederick Rabauser, from April 5, 1816, to April 5, 1819.

Rev. John Winebrenner, from Oct. 22, 1820, to March 23, 1823.

Rev. Albert Helfenstein, from March 1, 1824, to Sept. 8, 1829.

Rev. Daniel Zacharias, from Feb. 21, 1830, to March 31, 1835.

Rev. Joseph F. Berg, from Nov. 1, 1835, to Nov. 6, 1836.

Rev. John H. Smaltz, from Nov. 1, 1838, to Nov. 1, 1840.

Rev. John F. Mesick, from Dec. 17, 1840, to February, 1855.

Rev. Daniel Gans, from 1855 to 1864.

Rev. W. H. H. Snyder, from Dec. 18, 1864, to the present time.

SECOND REFORMED CHURCH.—On the 20th of April, 1861, Miss Rebecca Elizabeth Reily and Rudolph F. Kelker donated to the trustees of the First Reformed Church of Harrisburg a certain lot of ground fronting on Reily Street one hundred and twelve feet, and on East Fifth and Sixth Streets one hundred feet, in trust for the use of any persons who might thereafter unite in forming a Second Reformed congregation, to be in connection with the Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States; the said trustees to convey the said lot of ground, with all improvements that might be erected thereon, to the trustees of said Second congregation, whenever they should be incorporated, for the sum of one dollar free of all incumbrance. Nothing was, however, done by the officers of the First Church in the premises until in February, 1863. On the 8th of that month the superintendent and teachers of the Sunday-school resolved in meeting that they would raise two hundred dollars for a prospective Sunday-school and Second Reformed Church. On the 12th of the same month, on the petition of the same parties, the consistency of the church elected William H. Seibert, one of the teachers in the Sunday-school, as superintendent of the proposed new school. During the week a member of the First Church secured the second story of the Good Will engine house, on Ridge Road between Cumberland and Broad Streets, and furnished it at his own expense. On the Sunday of April 19, 1863, at 8.30 o'clock A.M., William H. Seibert, superintendent-elect, with Miss Sarah Jane Gutelius, Miss Margaret Ulrich (now Mrs. Benjamin Umberger), and Miss Jane W. Umberger (afterwards Mrs. John F. Traut, now deceased), all teachers in the First Reformed Sunday-school, opened the new school with nine scholars. On the following Sunday, April 26, 1863, Rev. George Kurzman, pastor of a Reformed Church at Middletown, but a resident of Harrisburg, preached the first sermon. On the 19th of November, 1863, Rev. Frederick Fox entered upon his duties as a missionary of the Board of Home Missions, preaching in both the English and German languages. On the 31st of January, 1864, a meeting of persons of the Reformed faith was held at the dwelling of William H. Seibert, then in South Street, between Second Street and Raspberry Avenue, and the following-named individuals agreed to organize as the Second Reformed Church of Harrisburg: William H. Seibert, Philip Hoke, Eli Hollinger, Henry Fuehrer, Isaac Moyer, Solomon Wirtz, Daniel Eckert, Jacob Derstein, and Christian Ehrman. On the 24th of April following twenty-seven others united with the congregation.

On the 3d of June, 1865, the trustees of the First Church conveyed the real estate above mentioned to the trustees of the Second Church, the latter having been duly incorporated. In this year funds were collected, and a chapel built and dedicated Oct. 8, 1865, free of all incumbrance. Rev. Fox preached his farewell sermon March 11, 1866, intending to visit the Pacific coast and labor in the cause of missions there. The Rev. William A. Gring succeeded him, beginning his pastorate on the third Sunday of August, 1866. His connection with the congregation continued until Aug. 2, 1868. Rev. Nathaniel E. Bressler was pastor from Nov. 8, 1868, until February, 1872. On the 26th of January, 1873, the congregation called the Rev. George W. Snyder, then laboring in Danville, Pa., who entered upon his pastorate April 16, 1873, and has since occupied the same as a faithful laborer in the Master's vineyard. During the summer of 1874 the chapel was enlarged by the erection of an additional Sunday-school-room, and also a room in the basement of the building so as to accommodate the infant and senior Sunday-schools separately. Dedicatory services were held in the chapel and new annex on Dec. 5 and 6, 1874.

In the spring of 1876 the large frame church building situated at the corner of Broad Street and Two-and-a-half Street, erected by the Second Advent congregation, was offered for sale. March 13, 1876, the congregation unanimously agreed to purchase it for six thousand dollars, for which sum they mortgaged their church property on Reily Street. On the 19th of March, 1876, the first service was held in the lecture-room of the building, and on the 23d of April, 1876, the newly-purchased building was formally reopened and rededicated to God with appropriate services. The Reily Street property was disposed of by the congregation to W. H. Seibert for six thousand nine hundred dollars in July, 1877.

ZWINGLE REFORMED CHURCH.—This congregation was organized in 1870 by a number of the members of the Second Reformed Church of Harrisburg, who desired German preaching exclusively. They purchased a property on the corner of North Street and Church Alley, and erected thereon a neat brick church. The pastors who have respectively served the congregation are as follows: Rev. Arnold Zullig, Rev. H. Bielfeld, Rev. Moritz Noll, Rev. Frederick Fox, and Rev. H. A. Friedell. At the present time, June, 1883, the congregation is without a pastor, Rev. Friedell having deceased in the early part of this year while pastor of the church. Rev. George W. Snyder, pastor of the Second Reformed Church, has been a lot on Fourth Street, between Market and Chestnut Streets, and erected thereon a handsome brick church. The building committee to which the erection of this edifice was intrusted was appointed Jan. 26, 1814, and consisted of Christian Kunkel, George Youse, George Ziegler, John Shoeh, and Christian Stahl. Plans and specifications having been presented, this committee made a contract on Feb. 14, 1814, with Stephen Hills for the construction of the building. The corner-stone was laid on June 22, 1814, at which time the following ministers were present: Revs. George Schmucker, of Yorktown; George Lochman, of Lebanon; Heinrich Danhoff, of Jonestown; W. G. Ernst, of Marietta; and J. P. Hecht, of Carlisle. An immense con-

The founders of this congregation were John Henry Blumenstein, Sr., George Blumenstein, Conrad Blumenstein, Christopher Nolde, George Rettburg, Ludwig Orth, Stephen Kohler, George Kohler, William Streinung, Christian Sturtz, John Nolde, Conrad Nolde, George Bachman, Henry Fuhrer, and Daniel Deckel.

LUTHERAN CHURCHES.

FIRST OR ZION'S CHURCH.—Up to 1814 the Lutheran congregation in Harrisburg worshiped with their German Reformed brethren in the church which, as elsewhere stated, the two congregations had erected for their joint use. In 1814 the Lutherans purchased a course of people was in attendance. After repeated and earnest appeals for assistance to sister congregations, the church was finally dedicated on Oct. 1, 1815. On the forenoon of that day Rev. G. Schmucker preached a German sermon. In the afternoon the Rev. Mr. Armstrong preached an English sermon, and in the evening Rev. Mr. Hendel, a German Reformed minister, preached in German. On Monday, in the forenoon, Rev. Mr. Vanhoff conducted services in German, and in the evening Rev. J. P. Hecht preached in English. The collections during these services amounted to six hundred dollars. The following week it was decided to rent the pews, and the afternoons of October 16th and 17th, between the hours of two and five o'clock, were set apart for that purpose. In the language of the original record, "to the complete surprise of everybody every pew was taken the first day." Rev. F. C. Schaeffer and Valentine Hummel, about a year before, had gone to Litiz and purchased an organ, built by Mr. Bachman, which was now placed in position in the new church.

In 1816 the congregation sold all their interest in the old church property on Third Street to the Reformed Church for one thousand dollars, and in 1822 erected a large two-story brick school-house adjoining their church.

Rev. F. D. Schaeffer, from near Carlisle, preached stately until 1795, when Rev. Henry Moeller be-

June 22, 1829. "It was further also determined that Mr. Holman superintend the building of the steeple on the Lutheran Church, employ workmen, select the materials, for which he is to receive fifty dollars as a compensation for services."

The building thus remodeled was the place of worship of the congregation until Oct. 21, 1838, when the entire edifice and the adjoining school-house (erected in 1822) were entirely destroyed by fire. On the following day, in compliance with a request from the vestry and the pastor, Rev. Samuel Sprecher, the came first stationed pastor. The following are the founders of this church, who in 1795 signed the articles of church government: Benjamin Kurtz, Henry Saylor, George Pfeiffer, Matthias Hutman, George Jauss, George Hartman, Frederick Youse, Johannes Ebert, John Shoch, George Ziegler, Martin Krieger, George Seidel, George Scheile, George Emrich, Peter Walter, Caspar Schmidt, Stephen Horning, George Buks, Balthazer Sees, John Fager, Peter Bricker, Christoff Sess, John Mytinger, Bernhard Geiger, Peter Brua.

The original building of 1814 continued in use unaltered until 1829, when the following record shows steps were taken to erect a steeple:

congregation assembled at the ruins and determined to rebuild the church. A committee consisting of Messrs. Dock, Hummel, and Pool was appointed to prosecute the work of rebuilding, with power to appoint collectors to solicit subscriptions. The following gentlemen were appointed: South Ward—Messrs. Valentine Hummel, Brown, and German. East Ward—Messrs. David Hummel, Dock, and Seiler. West Ward—Messrs. Pool, P. Keller, and Fager. North Ward—Messrs. M. Keller, Barnitz, and Buehler.

The work was vigorously prosecuted, and the completed church was dedicated on the 10th of November, 1839. It was sixty-four feet front by eighty-four deep, and had a large lecture-room and several Sabbath-school-rooms in the basement. It was built of brick, covered with composition, painted white, and the cupola had two bells. The edifice was remodeled and enlarged in 1866-67, and is now one hundred and four feet deep and sixty-four feet front. In the tower, which is one hundred and seventy-five feet high, is a chime of eleven bells. The pastors have been:

1795-1803, Henry Moeller; 1803-12, J. D. Peterson; 1812-15, F. C. Schaeffer; 1815-26, John George Lochman, D.D.; 1827-36, Augustus H. Lochman; 1836-40, Samuel Sprecher, D.D.; 1840-49, E. W. Schaeffer; 1849-65, Charles A. Hay, D.D.; 1865-75, and German members. The German portion, after several preliminary meetings, organized and founded on Jan. 8, 1843, the present German Lutheran St. Michael's Church. At this meeting Rev. G. J. Martz was chosen pastor, and on February 22d a committee was appointed to draft rules for the government of the congregation, which were adopted on the 6th of July following. Services were held at first in the court-house, in the old Methodist Church, and in the Reformed Church and lecture-room. The congregation then purchased of Thomas Elder a lot on Second Street, below Meadow Lane, and appointed a building committee, consisting of John G. Jauss, Christian

Up to 1843 the pastors preached in both German and English, with the exception of the first two, who officiated in the German language alone. In consequence of the increase of both the German and English branches of the church, an amicable separation was effected in 1843, when the German portion organized the German Lutheran St. Michael's Church.

GERMAN LUTHERAN ST. MICHAEL'S CHURCH.—In the fall of 1842 difficulties in relation to services in the English and German languages existing in the Evangelical Lutheran Zion's (First) Church led, as heretofore stated, to a separation between its English

Maeyer, Jacob Boger, Jacob Reeve, and John Gastrock, with authority also to collect funds. Rev. Mr. Martz's term having expired, Rev. J. Vogelbach, of Philadelphia, was installed pastor, July 21, 1844. Soon after this the building committee contracted with Jones & Zimmerman for the erection of the church. The corner-stone was laid May 4, 1844, and on September 15th following the church was dedicated. Owing to some difficulties the edifice would not have been completed but for the liberality of four of its members, John G. Jauss, Christian Maeyer, Jacob Boger, and Frederick Rauch, who advanced each one hundred and fifty dollars to carry on the work. The edifice is a handsome brick building thirty-eight by sixty feet with basement, and has a front gallery, organ, and Gothic windows. The cost, with the lot, was about four thousand dollars. In 1844 the congregation was incorporated, the articles providing that services should be in the German language only.

The pastors have been: 1843-44, G. J. Martz; Jan. 1, 1844, to Sept. 22, 1847, J. Vogelbach; Oct. 1, 1847, to Oct. 1, 1850, L. Gerhardt; Oct. 13, 1850, to April 11, 1852, J. Vogelbach; April 12, 1852, to March 26, 1855, D. Maier; 1855 (few months), H. Vossler; Oct. 25, 1855, to Oct. 11, 1857, C. M. Jaeger; 1857-58, W. S. Porr; Dec. 1, 1858, to Jan. 12, 1860, J. J. Kucher; 1860-71, H. Liesmann; 1871-74, C. Schwankousky; June 10, 1876, George Pfuhl, the present pastor.

THE SECOND LUTHERAN CHURCH originated in the mission Sabbath-school founded Jan. 11, 1858, by the Sunday-school Association of Zion's Lutheran Church at the suggestion of William Parkhill. A house on East State Street was rented, in which the first Sabbath-school meeting was held in a front room below, and on the fourth Sunday two floors of the house were filled. In March following a lot was leased on the northwest corner of State and Fourth Streets, on which a chapel was built. It had a small tower and bell. Rev. C. A. Hay, of the Zion's Church, preached every alternate Sunday afternoon during the following winter. On Sept. 13, 1860, the congregation was regularly organized. The first pastor, Rev. E. S. Johnston, began his labors June 24, 1860. The first church officials were: Elders, Jacob Reel, D. A. S. Eyster; Deacons, Charles Osman, E. S. German, George Krichbaum, G. T. Murray. The chapel, erected on leased ground, was removed to Williams Street, and on its site the Free Baptist congregation erected its church. A lot was then purchased on the corner of Forster and Elder Streets for fifteen hundred dollars, on which the corner-stone of the present edifice was laid May 29, 1863, Rev. F. W. Conrad, D.D., delivering the discourse. The building was dedicated July 14, 1867, having cost eighteen thousand dollars.

The pastors have been: June 24, 1860, to Nov. 4, 1866, E. S. Johnston; Jan. 13, 1867, to 1870, G. W. Halderman; September, 1870, to 1873, F. P. Thompson; Nov. 2, 1873, to 1882, L. M. Heilman; 1883, H. S. Cook.

ZION'S GERMAN LUTHERAN CHURCH is a one-story frame, located on Elder Street. The congregation was organized and the edifice erected in 1863, and in 1865 its constitution was adopted.

Its pastors have been: 1863-68, E. M. Yeager; 1868-73, Rev. Mr. Badenfeld; 1873-78, D. Spangenberg; 1878-80, William Strobel; 1881, J. G. Abele.

LUTHERAN JUBILEE CHAPEL is located on Fourteen-and-a-half Street, corner of Shoop. The congregation grew out of a mission Sunday-school organized by the Sunday-school Association of the First Lutheran Church, which built the frame chapel in 1871. The congregation was formally organized in February, 1872, by Rev. S. Dasher, with thirty-five members. Mr. Dasher also preaches at Shoop's Church, four miles east, on the Jonestown road, and at Churchville, near Steelton.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCHES.

MARKET SQUARE CHURCH.—Prior to 1790 the Presbyterians of Harrisburg worshiped at, but were united with, the Paxtang Church, a short distance from the town. After the laying out of Harrisburg, in 1785, the population increased, and the residents invited traveling preachers to officiate for them on several occasions.

In October, 1786, a petition was presented to the Presbytery of Carlisle from residents in Harrisburg and the parts adjacent, requesting that they be erected into a congregation, and be allowed to have a place of worship in the town, and to have supplies appointed them for the pulpit services. No action was taken upon these requests at that time, but in April, 1787, the Presbytery met at Carlisle, and the following account is taken from the records of the meeting:

"A representation and a petition of a number of the inhabitants of Harrisburg and others in the township of Paxtang was laid before the Presbytery and read. The said representation sets forth that these people desire to be considered as a Presbyterian congregation, and to have supplies appointed to them by the Presbytery, and that in order to promote peace and harmony between them and the Paxtang congregation some proposals had been made and considered, though not accepted by that congregation, a copy of which also was laid before Presbytery. Mr. Elder also gave a representation of the case as concerning these people and the Paxtang congregation. The Presbytery, upon consideration of the case, agreed to propose the following articles to the consideration and acceptance of these people, which may have a tendency to preserve peace and unity in that part of the church:

"I. That Harrisburg shall be considered as the seat of a Presbyterian Church, and part of the charge of Rev. John Elder, and in which he is to preach one-third of his time.

"II. That Mr. Elder's salary, promised by the congregation of Paxtang, shall be continued and paid by the congregation in common who adhere to these two places of worship, viz., Paxtang and Harrisburg.

"III. That the congregation thus united may apply for and obtain supplies as assistant to the labors of Mr. Elder, to be paid by the congregation in common.

"IV. That when the congregation may judge it proper, they shall have a right to choose and call a minister as a colleague with Mr. Elder, to officiate in relation with him."

Rev. Dr. Davidson, of Carlisle, president of Dickinson College, and Rev. John Waugh, pastor of Silver's Spring Church, were appointed to attend at the church in Lower Paxtang, on the last Tuesday of May, 1787, to moderate and assist in the matter.

At a subsequent meeting of the Presbytery, held in June, 1787, Rev. Dr. Davidson and Mr. Waugh reported that they had fulfilled their appointment at Paxtang, and that the following had been agreed to by Mr. Elder, his congregation and Harrisburg:

I. That the congregation shall have two stated places of public worship,—the one where Rev. Mr. Elder now officiates, the other in Harrisburg.

II. That the Rev. John Elder shall continue to have and receive during his life or incumbency all the salary or stipends that he now enjoys, to be paid by his present subscribers, as he and they may agree, and continue his labors in Derry as usual.

III. That the congregation may, for the present, apply to the Presbytery for supplies, which when obtained, the expenses shall be defrayed by those who do not now belong to Mr. Elder's congregation and such as may think proper to join them; and should such supplies be applied for when Mr. Elder is to be in Paxtang, then he and the person to supply shall preach in rotation, the one in the country and the other in town; but should Mr. Elder be in Derry, then the supplies shall officiate in town.

IV. That the congregation when able, or when they think proper, may invite and settle any regular Presbyterian minister they or a majority of them may choose, and can obtain, as co-pastor with Mr. Elder, who shall officiate as to preaching in the manner specified in the third proposal.

Notwithstanding the permission granted by these articles, Mr. Elder continued to be sole pastor of the two congregations of Derry and Paxtang, the latter including Harrisburg, until his death, in July, 1792.

In 1793, Rev. Nathaniel R. Snowden, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Philadelphia, was ordained and installed as pastor over the congregations of Derry, Paxtang, and Harrisburg. In 1794 the latter church was regularly organized, with Moses Gillmor, Adam Boyd, and Samuel Weir as ruling elders. In April, 1796, Mr. Snowden's pastoral relations had ceased with Derry and Paxtang, and he officiated at Harrisburg alone, but he was afterwards permitted to preach at Middletown. Worship was held in the loft of the old jail until the erection, in 1799, of the court-house, when it was used. As it was the custom in those days to raise money for benevolent purposes by lotteries, application was made to the Legislature for permission to raise by lottery a sum not exceeding five thousand dollars to buy a lot and erect a church.

On March 16, 1798, a law was passed appointing Robert Harris, George Whitehill, Christian Kunkel, William Graydon, George Brenizer, Adam Boyd, Jacob Bucher, Archibald McAllister, and Samuel Elder commissioners for that purpose. The Governor approved the scheme, which was completed, and the drawing took place from June 1 to 7, 1803. On June 7, 1804, these commissioners purchased a lot on the corner of Second Street and Cherry Alley for four hundred pounds, on which the edifice was erected by William Glass, builder. It was opened for worship Feb. 12 and 13, 1808, when Rev. James Buchanan was installed as pastor, Rev. Mr. Snowden having retired June 25, 1805. This house was built of brick, and was forty-five by sixty feet. In 1816 an addition to the front was built, which was occupied by the Sabbath-school and used as a lecture-room. Mr. Buchanan, who was a licentiate of New Castle Presbytery, served the congregation two-thirds of his time, and the Middle Paxtang congregation the remainder. He continued as pastor until Sept. 10, 1815, when on his application his connection was dissolved. In the language of the Rev. Dr. Dewitt, "Mr. Buchanan was much esteemed by his congregation as a man of intelligence, piety, and an excellent preacher: he wrote his sermons with great care, and committed them accurately to memory; his style was remarkably sententious, and his sermons short. "Under his ministry the church was enlarged; it became established in the doctrines of the gospel. After Mr. Buchanan closed his ministry in Harrisburg he remained for some years without a charge in consequence of ill health; when sufficiently restored he took charge of a congregation in Greencastle, Franklin Co., Pa.; afterwards he removed to Logansport, Ind., where he ceased from his earthly labors, greatly beloved and respected."

After Mr. Buchanan's resignation, the Harrisburg congregation remained vacant for three years. On the 5th of October, 1818, the Rev. William R. Dewitt, a licentiate of the Presbytery of New York, received a unanimous call to become their pastor; he shortly after signified his intention to accept their call, and removed to Harrisburg in December, 1818, and commenced to preach stately to the congregation. On the 26th October, 1819, he was ordained to the gospel ministry, and on the 12th of November, 1819, installed as pastor of the congregation.

The congregation received its legal charter in 1818. In 1838 the division occurred in the general church. The Presbytery of Harrisburg was formed in connection with the New School General Assembly, and this church became a part of that Presbytery. In the winter of 1840-41 the trustees repurchased of the heirs of Robert Sloan a part of the original church lot, which had been sold to him, and on which he had erected a three-story brick house. In the spring of 1841 the old church was torn down, and a new edifice built and dedicated Feb. 13, 1842. It was constructed of brick, and covered with white cement, and its dimensions were sixty-three by eighty-four feet. It was adorned in front with a portico, supported by pillars of the Corinthian order, an exact copy of the front of the celebrated Choragic monument of Lysicrates at Athens. The basement story was above ground, and contained a lecture-room, a Sabbath-school-room, and a studio for the pastor. The pulpit was of fine polished Italian marble. In July, 1854, Rev. Thomas H. Robinson was called to act as a colleague of Rev. Dr. Dewitt, and commenced his labors on the 1st of October following. On the 21st of January, 1875, he was installed as pastor, in which relation he still continues.

On March 31, 1858, the church edifice was entirely destroyed by fire, which was the work of an incendiary. It broke out in a small stable in the rear of the church, and spread with great rapidity to several adjoining frame buildings, from which it was quickly communicated to the church. After its destruction a part of the congregation withdrew and formed the present Pine Street Presbyterian Church.

The original congregation worshipped in Brant's City Hall, Market Street, until its new edifice was completed. The cornerstone of the latter was laid Oct. 26, 1858, and the edifice was dedicated March 18, 1860.

It was built on the corner of Second Street and Market Square, under the direction of J. C. Hoxie, architect, of Philadelphia. Its style is a rich Romanesque, and its size is one hundred and thirty-three feet by sixty-six, exclusive of projections. Its front is on Second Street, from which it has three entrances, with one at the side, leading to the lecture- and Sabbath-school-rooms, which occupy a distinct part of the building in the rear. There are two turrets on the front part of the building, besides the steeple, which is located on the upper corner of the edifice, and is one hundred and ninety-three feet in height. A number of minarets adorn the sides. The audience-room is seventy-six by fifty-eight feet, and contains one hundred and forty pews a good distance apart. There is no gallery, except a small one for the choir, and the ceiling is ornamented with paneling and stucco-work. The height of the walls at the lower corners of the roof is thirty-two feet, and to the cone of the roof in front fifty-six feet.

The ruling elders of Market Square Presbyterian Church¹ since its organization have been: Adam Boyd, Moses Gillmor, Samuel Weir, John Stoner, William Graydon, Robert Sloan, Joseph A. McJimsey, Samuel Agnew, M.D., John Nielson, Richard T. Leech, John C. Capp, James W. Weir, Alexander Graydon, Alexander Sloan,* Alfred Armstrong, Samuel W. Hays, William McClean, William Root, John A. Weir, Mordecai McKinney, Robert J. Fleming, James Fleming, William S. Shaffer,* Walter F. Fahnestock, James F. Purvis, Samuel J. M. McCurrell,* Gilbert M. McCaulay,* Jacob A. Miller,* M.D.

The pastors were: 1793 to June 25, 1805, Nathaniel R. Snowden; Feb. 12, 1809, to Sept. 10, 1815, James Buchanan; Nov. 12, 1819, to Jan. 21, 1875, William R. Dewitt; July, 1854, when called as colleague of Rev. Dr. Dewitt, Thos. H. Robinson, present pastor.

James W. Weir was superintendent of the Sunday-school for nearly fifty years.

THE PINE STREET PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH, or "The Presbyterian Church of Harrisburg," its legal designation, was founded on the 22d of May, 1858, and on that day a committee of the Presbytery of Carlisle consisting of Revs. Messrs. Thomas Creigh, of Mercersburg, Isaac N. Hayes, of Shippensburg, and W. W. Eels, of Carlisle, organized a congregation of fifty church members. The congregation then proceeded to elect ruling elders, and Messrs. Francis Wyeth, H. Murray Graydon, and James McCormick, Jr., were chosen unanimously. On the 23d of May divine service was held in the German Reformed Church. After the sermon, which was preached by Rev. I. N. Hayes from Exodus xiv. 15, the Rev. Thomas Creigh conducted the service for ordination of elders. The constitutional questions were proposed to the elders-elect and the members of the church, after which the former were set apart to the office of ruling elder by prayer and the imposition of hands. An address was then made by Mr. Creigh to the elders and to the church. Two weeks after the organization of the church the Sabbath-school was formed, on June 6, 1858. It began with eleven teachers and forty scholars.

On Feb. 1, 1859, the church was incorporated by act of the Legislature under the name of "The Presbyterian Church of Harrisburg." The charter then granted provides for the election of seven trustees. The original trustees, named in the charter, were Messrs. James McCormick, A. B. Warford, Charles C. Rawn, E. M. Pollock, A. Boyd Hamilton, Joseph Casey, and J. Donald Cameron.

The congregation had occupied for its various meetings four different places,—the lecture-room of the German Reformed Church, the lecture-room of the Baptist Church, the hall of the Senate, and the hall of the House of Representatives. The erection of a church for their own use was of the first importance, and within a year after the organization this work was auspiciously begun. The corner-stone of the church edifice was laid with appropriate ceremonies May 12, 1859. Addresses were delivered by the Rev. R. Watts, of Philadelphia (now of Belfast, Ireland), and Rev. S. T. Lowrie, of Alexandria. Mr. H. M. Graydon read an interesting statement of the steps which led to the formation of the church. Rev. A. D. Mitchell, of Paxtang, and Rev. George Morris, of Silver Spring, conducted the devotional exercises. The stone was adjusted in its place by the Rev. A. Green Simonton. The building committee consisted of Messrs. A. B. Warford, E. M. Pollock, Henry McCormick, John Haldeman, and C. C. Rawn. The architect was Mr. Luther M. Simon.

The lecture-room adjoining the church was finished on the 30th of January previous, and on the occasion of its first occupancy addresses were delivered by Dr. Davidson, of Philadelphia, and the Revs. Messrs. Simonton and Rawlson. The Sunday-school-room was not completed until Jan. 5, 1860. At the time the Sabbath-school took possession of their new abode addresses were delivered by Rev. Dr. Edwards, of Philadelphia, and the Hon. Mr. Francis, Speaker of the Senate.

In September, 1859, a call was presented to Rev. Dr. Joseph T. Smith, of Baltimore, which, to the disappointment of the congregation, was declined. The church again assembled in the lecture-room March 3, 1860, when Rev. William C. Cattell, D.D., was unanimously elected pastor of the church. His first sermon after accepting the call was preached March 31, 1860. On the 22d of July, 1860, just two years and two months after the organization, the congregation had the great joy of dedicating their church edifice to the worship of the living God. It was an occasion of public interest. Several of the other churches in the city closed their houses of worship so that their members could participate in the services. The Rev. P. D. Gurley, D.D., of Washington City, preached in the morning and afternoon, and Rev. N. C. Burt, D.D., of Baltimore, in the evening. On Aug. 14, 1860, the call to Dr. Cattell was presented to him by the Presbytery of Carlisle, and by him accepted. On the 2d of September of this year he was installed as pastor, the installation services being held in the new church. The Rev. A. D. Mitchell, of Paxtang, presided and gave the charge to the people; Rev. Dr. McPhail, president of Lafayette College, preached the sermon, and the Rev. Henry Reeves, of Chambersburg, gave the charge to the pastor.

On July 19, 1863, Mr. Jacob F. Seiler was ordained to the eldership, and on November 12th the pastoral relation with Dr. Cattell was dissolved by the Presbytery, to the great regret of the entire church. He had accepted the presidency of Lafayette College, but has never abated his deep interest in this his first and only pastoral charge. He preached his farewell sermon Nov. 29, 1863, after a pastorate of three years and two months. The congregation was without a minister for about a year.

The Rev. Samuel S. Mitchell was received under the care of Presbytery as a licentiate from the Presbytery of New Brunswick on Oct. 4, 1864, and accepted a call from the church, which had been made at a congregational meeting held on the 3d of the preceding May. He was ordained and installed on Nov. 15, 1864. He remained pastor of the church four years and three months, when he accepted a call to the New York Avenue Church of Washington City. The pastoral relation with this church was dissolved Feb. 23, 1869.

PINE STREET PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

The third pastor of the church was the Rev. Addison K. Strong, D.D., who was called at a meeting held Feb. 3, 1870. The call was presented at a meeting of Presbytery held April 13, 1870. He was installed on the 14th of June. His pastorate continued three years and eight months, when he accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church in Kalamazoo, Mich., and on Feb. 12, 1874, the pastoral relation to this church was dissolved by Presbytery.

The Sunday-school celebrated its fifteenth anniversary on the evening of Feb. 1, 1874. This celebration was of more than a passing interest. The crowded rooms that night gave occasion for thankfulness and regret,—thankfulness at the remarkable growth of the school, which then numbered over eight hundred members, and regret that its accommodations were not more ample. The superintendent made an announcement which intensified the one feeling and dispelled the other when he stated that Messrs. J. Donald Cameron, James McCormick, and Henry McCormick would purchase ground adjoining the church, and that Mrs. Eliza McCormick and Mrs. Mary Cameron would erect a building thereupon, not to cost more than thirty thousand dollars. Ground was broken for the erection of the new Sunday-school building April 15, 1874.

On Dec. 3, 1874, Rev. John R. Paxton, of Churchville, Md., was called to the pastorate. The call was accepted by him at a meeting of Presbytery held Feb. 2, 1875. He was installed as pastor Sabbath evening, Feb. 28, 1875, the Rev. Dr. D. C. Marquis, of Baltimore, preaching the sermon; Dr. Robinson, of this city, giving the charge to the pastor, and Dr. Cattell the charge to the people.

On the 7th of April, 1875 (Wednesday evening), the new Sunday-school building was dedicated. Addresses were made by Rev. S. A. Mutchmore, D.D., of Philadelphia, and Dr. Cattell. The school occupied it on the following Sabbath, when addresses were made by Dr. Cattell and the pastor, Mr. Paxton.

The church edifice was remodeled this year, and alterations made which largely added to the comfort of the congregation. These improvements were made under the supervision of a committee consisting of Messrs. A. Boyd Hamilton, Henry McCormick, J. Donald Cameron, J. J. Dull, T. T. Weirman, Thomas L. Wallace, and G. W. Buehler. The church worshipped in the building as it now stands for the first time June 11, 1876.

On the 18th of June the congregation with great reluctance acquiesced in the request of the pastor that the pastoral relation be dissolved. He had received and accepted a call from the New York Avenue Church of Washington, and frankly stated his reasons for going to that new field. The request was acted upon by the Presbytery of Carlisle on the 20th of June, 1878, and the congregation was once more without a minister. The present pastor, Rev. Mr. George Stuart Chambers, was called in September, 1879, accepted the call at a meeting of the Presbytery held October, and installed Tuesday evening, Nov. 11, 1879.

In a sermon preached on the twenty-fifth anniversary of the gathering of the congregation Rev. Mr. Chambers said, "The review of the past would be very incomplete without summing up the work of the church during the quarter of a century, and contrasting the beginnings of our history with the condition of things to-day. This summary and contrast is very suggestive of our duty both to God and to the world about us. It stimulates the inquiry whether all has been done that it was possible to do, and whether in view of what God has made us and given us we are doing for His kingdom all that we might do. The first statistical report and our last statistical report furnish us the following contrasts:

"In April, 1859, total number of communicants was 83; in April, 1883, 507; increase, 424. In April, 1859, contributions to home missions, $99.93; in April, 1883, $2102.00. In April, 1859, total Sunday-school members, 140; in April, 1883, 1602; increase, 1462. In April, 1859, contributions for home missions, $21.93; in April, 1883, $1627. In April, 1859, the total benevlent contributions of the church, $267.31; in April, 1883, $5727.

"During the twenty-five years of our history the money contributed for all purposes by the church is as follows: Home missions, $29,070; foreign missions, $24,880; education, $6408; publication, $2483; church erection, $7833; relief fund, $3775; freedmen, $2510; sustentation, $2364; General Assembly's fund, $428; congregational purposes, $142,173; memorial fund in 1871, $12,380; miscellaneous charities, $91,495; total for twenty-five years, $325,799. During this period baptisms, 119 adults, 289 infants. The first child baptized was Naudain, son of Mr. and Mrs. A. Boyd Hamilton.

"The accessions to the church during these twenty-five years have been on certificate 494, and by examination 514, a total of 1008. The present membership is 507. It thus appears that 501 persons have severed their connection with the church. Of these we find that 105 have died, 380 have been dismissed to other churches, and there are 16 who have left the church in regard to whom there is no knowledge. It is a striking fact that an entire congregation about equal in size to that we have at present has passed away from us, the most of them to other parts of God's kingdom on earth, many of them to the kingdom of glory."

This congregation is now numerically the strongest on the roll of Carlisle Presbytery.

SEVENTH STREET CHURCH was organized Sept. 6, 1868. It is located on Seventh Street, near Maclay Street. The first pastor installed was Rev. S. W. Pomeroy; the second, Rev. W. A. McAleer; the third and present, Rev. Charles A. Wyeth, who was stated supply from 1868 to 1870, when he was installed as regular pastor. The congregation numbers nearly a hundred, and the Sunday-school has one hundred and seventy-five scholars.

WESTMINSTER CHURCH was established June 19, 1873, with Rev. William A. West as the first pastor, who has continued to the present time. The chapel is situated on the corner of Reily and Two-and-a-half Streets, is eighty by one hundred and forty feet in size, and cost over twelve thousand dollars. It has a Sabbath-school of over three hundred scholars.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

GRACE CHURCH.—Harrisburg was visited in circuit steadily as early as 1802 by the Rev. Jacob Gruber, but the first Methodist society in this vicinity was not organized until 1810. The first effort of the Methodist society to own a church building was on the 19th of January, 1816, when Richard McAllister (who afterwards was appointed as circuit preacher), William Burton, Alexander Glasgow, Ludwig Kelly, Jacob Allen, and William Musgrave, as trustees of the Methodist society of Harrisburg, entered into articles of agreement with Joseph Mitchell for the purchase of a lot on Pine Street marked 90 and 91 in the borough plan, thirty-eight feet front on Pine Street, and running back a depth of one hundred and five feet, for the sum of two thousand dollars. This lot is part of that now occupied by the Pine Street Presbyterian Church building. These trustees paid in cash the sum of $450.75, and agreed to convey to Mitchell lot No. 207, bounded by Third Street, Mulberry and Cherry Alleys, which they had, prior to that time, bought for the use of the Methodist society, as part of the consideration for the Pine Street lot. The Methodist society entered upon this lot under their article of agreement, and altered and arranged a two-story brick house erected thereon for use as a meeting-house, and there held their stated and devotional services for several years. This lot after various proceedings in the law was finally sold by the sheriff to satisfy a claim of Frederick Kelker, assignee of Samuel Gehrman, vs. Joseph Finley, who had owned the ground, and encumbered it before it was sold to Joseph Mitchell. It was sold in December term, 1818, for the sum of seven hundred and two dollars, to George Pearson and Jacob M. Halde-man, and the deed made to them Feb. 3, 1819.

After vacating this building the congregation worshipped in a small one-story log house, on the south-east side of Locust Street, between Second Street and River Alley, and afterwards in the school-house of Mr. Maginnis, a one-story frame building which formerly stood in Raspberry Alley, east of Chestnut Street, on the lot subsequently owned by Jacob Miley. In October, 1818, the following persons composed the church: John Funk, Joseph Mitchell, Jane Mitchell, John Bond, Rebecca Bond, Harriet Henry, Amelia Henry, William Musgrave, B. Barret, John Hosler, Alexander Buffington, John Rigg, Jaue Wood, E. Wood, Louisa Power, Jacob M. Awl, Aurora Callender, Mary McMichael, George Linketter, John Burkett.

In 1820 the society erected the brick building on the eastern corner of South and Second Streets, at a cost of fifteen hundred dollars. The trustees were then John Funk, John Bond, and James Gallagher. It was dedicated in December, 1820; the preachers on the circuit being Rev. J. Gruber and Rev. H. G. King. It continued to be a circuit church until 1834, when it became a station, with Rev. Francis Hodgson as pastor. The congregation then numbered one hundred and seventy-five. A few years subsequent to the erection of this building some unknown person or persons entered it at night and, with an auger, bored holes in the sills of the church. These they filled with powder, which they ignited by slow matches, and the explosion that resulted shattered the pulpit. The Governor of the State and the town Council each offered a reward of one hundred dollars, but the perpetrators of the deed were never discovered. The outrage excited such sympathy that by means of the liberal donations of money which flowed in the congregation was not only enabled to construct a new pulpit, but also to pay an onerous debt on the church edifice itself.

On the 16th of June, 1836, the society was incorporated by the Supreme Court, under the corporate name of the "Methodist Episcopal Church of Harrisburg, Maclaysburg, and vicinity." The property owned and built by the Unitarians. The trustees at this time were Jacob M. Awl, John Davies, John A. Bigler, Joseph Black, Henry Antes, James Canning, Alexander Buffington, and Jacob Ettla. On this lot a church building was erected at a cost of eight thousand five hundred and twelve dollars and sixteen cents. It was dedicated in August, 1839. The society numbered two hundred and pine members. The old consisted of the church building and the burying-ground on North Street, which was afterwards taken by the borough authorities, and now forms part of the site of the old reservoir grounds.

In 1837 they purchased a lot on Locust Street from Dr. Luther Reily, seventy-five by seventy-eight feet nine inches, for the sum of sixteen hundred dollars. It had erected thereon a church building, originally church on Second Street was sold to the United Brethren, who, after occupying it for several years, conveyed it to the "Sons of Temperance," who greatly enlarged and improved it, subsequently passing into the possession of the Jewish congregation, who now occupy it.

Locust Street Church was remodeled in 1852. The edifice becoming too small, it was decided to erect a more commodious one. Ground was secured on West State Street, corner of Myrtle Avenue, and the present Grace Church building commenced, and the corner-stone laid in 1871. On the 28th of December, 1873, the chapel was dedicated by Bishop Simpson, while the main building was consecrated on the 10th of March, 1878. The lot on which the church was erected cost nineteen thousand six hundred dollars, and the structure one hundred and five thousand dollars.

When the present edifice was commenced the trustees were John J. Clyde, Augustus Sayford, Daniel T. Wilson, J. Wesley Awi, John W. Glover, R. R. Chrisman, Col. George F. McFarland, and William Calder. The building committee were John J. Clyde, Augustus Sayford, William Calder, and John W. Glover. The church membership is six hundred.

Since it was made a station, in 1834, its pastors have been: 1834, Francis Hodgson; 1835-37, R. Geary; 1837-39, Thomas J. Thompson; 1839-41, William Barnes; 1841-43, Joseph Lybrand; 1843-45, Anthony Atwood; 1845-47, Joseph Castle; 1847-49, William Cooper; 1849-51, Francis Hodgson (second term); 1851-53, William Urie; 1853-55, Alfred Cookman; 1855-57, John D. Curtis; 1857-59, David W. Bartine; 1859-60, William Bishop, T. W. Martin; 1860-61, William Bishop; 1861-63, Franklin Moore; 1863-66, John Walker Jackson; 1866-68, J. F. Chaplin; 1868-71, C. J. Thompson; 1871-74, W. J. Stevenson; 1874-77, C. A. Holmes; 1877-79, Richard Hinkle; 1879-82, Charles W. Bnoy; 1882, W. J. Stevenson, present pastor.

ST. PAUL'S CHURCH, Vine Street near Paxton, was organized in 1860, and was under the pastoral charge of Rev. Robert J. Carson for the first two years of its existence. Its first place of worship was on Second Street (James property). Its pastors have been: 1860-62, Robert J. Carson; 1863-64, J. E. Kessler; 1864-66, J. Owen Sypherd; 1866-68, C. W. Bickley; 1868-71, G. G. Rakestraw; 1871-72, Reuben Owen; 1872-74, John O'Neil; 1874-77, J. A. Melick; 1877-80, M. L. Ganoe; 1880-81, Thomas M. Reese; 1881-82, N. S. Buckingham; 1882, J. B. Mann, the present pastor. The church building is a neat frame structure.

RIDGE AVENUE CHURCH, on Sixth Street, corner of Herr, was erected in 1863. The congregation was organized in 1861, and its first pastor was Rev. Joseph Gregg, who officiated for two years. The church was at first known as the Front Street charge.

Its pastors have been: 1861-63, Joseph Gregg; 1863-65, George G. Rakestraw; 1865-68, William M. Ridgway; 1868-71, Thomas M. Griffith; 1871-72, J. Lindemuth; 1872-75, William Rink; 1875-78, James B. Clarke; 1878-81, G. D. Pennypacker; 1881, B. B. Hamlin, the present pastor.

The church edifice is a beautiful building located on a commanding position.

MOUNT PLEASANT CHURCH is located on Thirteenth Street, corner of Vernon. The congregation was organized in 1869, under Rev. John Stringer, and worshipped in the school-house until the erection of its frame edifice, in 1873.

Its pastors have been: 1869-71, John Stringer; 1871-72, W. C. Johnson; 1872-73, Francis E. Church; 1873-75, T. S. Wilcox; 1875-77, H. N. Minnigh; 1877-78, John Stine; 1879-81, Daniel Hartman; 1881, George M. Hoke, the present incumbent.

The church membership numbers ninety persons, and that of the Sunday-school one hundred and sixty.

FIFTH STREET CHURCH is located on Fifth Street, corner of Granite Avenue. The congregation was organized in 1871, under Revs. Thomas M. Griffith and F. A. Rikken, the former pastor of Ridge Avenue Church.

Its pastors have been: 1871-72, Thomas M. Griffith; 1872-73, S. H. Hoover; 1873-75, W. H. Keith; 1875-76, G. T. Gray; 1876-78, P. F. Eyer; 1878-80, W. V. Ganoe; 1880-83, J. H. Black; 1883, John A. De Moyer, the present pastor.

The church building was erected in 1870-71. The congregation belonged to the Philadelphia Conference until 1873, since which time it has been connected with the Central Pennsylvania Conference.

PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCHES.

ST. STEPHEN'S.—The earliest reference to the work of the Protestant Episcopal Church in Dauphin County is made in the report of the church missionary at Lancaster, Rev. Thomas Barton, who was sent to this portion of the country by the "Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts." The headquarters of the society were at London, England, and the date of Mr. Barton's report is Nov. 10, 1766. In this report Mr. Barton says, "Mr. John Cox, a merchant of Philadelphia, by a deed granted to the society, gave a lot for church purposes in Estherton, lying northwest of Lancaster about forty miles, on the river Susquehanna, where there are several families belonging to the church, who are at too great a distance from any stated mission to attend divine service. This gentleman has also promised to give twenty pounds himself, and to collect one hundred pounds more among his friends in Philadelphia, towards building a church upon said lot, and his lady engages to furnish it with a bell. . . ." There is no record that this church was ever built, but the society above referred to appointed an itinerant missionary, to travel about from one vacant church to another, and Estherton was included in this charge. Although Estherton was older than Harris' Ferry, the latter place took the lead; but there must have been at one time established services there, as it is stated that Bishop White preached there on several occasions.

The first Episcopal services enjoyed by the people of Harrisburg were rendered by the Rev. William A. Muhlenberg, D.D., then rector of St. James', Lancaster, who, from December, 1823, to June, 1824, officiated here once each month in the old log church, situated on the corner of Third Street and Cherry Alley, which was given by the Reformed Church. At that time Dr. Muhlenberg's efforts to form a congregation and organize a parish failed. The next services in Harrisburg were rendered by the Rev. Charles S. Williams, then rector of St. John's, York. He officiated once in each three weeks, from October, 1824, to March, 1825, a period of six months. The third clergyman who performed services here was Rev. James Depui, then in deacon's orders. He labored from September, 1825, to January, 1826, a period of six months.

The vestry seems to have been organized in 1825, as the parish was admitted to the Convention at Reading in 1826, but the first record bears the date of March 25, 1826, on which day a meeting of the vestry was held. This vestry was composed of John B. Cox, William Mileham, John Depui, James Peacock, George Fisher, William Putnam, James Buchanan, Alexander C. Wilson, James Woodman, Samuel Bryan, John E. Forster, and Joseph Curzen. At this meeting the Rev. John B. Clemson was elected rector of the parish. The organization of the parish was largely due to his zeal and energy. At that time but six families could be found avowing themselves Episcopalians.

Plans were agreed upon, 20th April, 1826, for a neat brick building sixty-five feet front by sixty feet deep, and a contract entered into with Messrs. Bryan and Dowding, the cost being limited to four thousand dollars. The corner-stone was laid with Masonic ceremonies on St. John's day, 24th June, 1826. On the 9th of May, 1827, the church, which is situated on Front Street, a short distance below Pine, was consecrated by the Rt. Rev. William White, D.D., bishop of the then diocese of Pennsylvania. Fifty pews were rented at that time, and twenty-five persons were confirmed. A lofty, square, brick tower surmounts the front of the edifice, in which is a fine-tuned bell. The edifice has been enlarged and remodeled internally, yet presents the same front. The rectory is situated on Front Street above Pine.

The consecration of St. Stephen's was attended with the additional interest of the presence of the Diocesan Convention, which met here at that time; and the further interest attaches in the fact that there and within those walls the election of the Rev. Henry Ustick Onderdonk took place as assistant bishop of Pennsylvania. Bishop Onderdonk was consecrated in Christ Church, Philadelphia, Oct. 25, 1827, and made his first visitation to Harrisburg on the 27th of December, 1827.

Under date of Nov. 17, 1835, the following entry appears on the records:

"Resolved, That the thanks of the vestry and congregation be tendered to Mrs. Wharton for her kindness in presenting St. Stephen's Church with a set of communion plates, and that the secretary transmit her a copy of this resolution."

It is fair to presume that this gift embraced the whole communion set, but this is not stated.

The Diocesan Convention of Pennsylvania met in St. Stephen's in May, 1841, and on the 9th of November, 1871, the primary Convention of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania assembled in that edifice, at which the Rt. Rev. M. A. DeWolf Howe was chosen bishop, making the second bishop elected within its walls.

The rectors of St. Stephen's have been: 1826-28, Rev. John B. Clemson; 1828-29, Rev. John W. Curtis; 1829-31, Rev. John Reynolds; 1832-38, Rev. Nathan Stern; 1838-42, Rev. Charles V. Kelly; 1842-44, Rev. Henry Major; 1844-52, Rev. Joseph H. Coit, D.D.; 1852-56, Rev. Henry H. Bean; 1857-60, Rev. Robert Allen Castleman; 1860-67, Rev. B. B. Leacock, D.D.; 1867, Rev. Robert J. Keeling, D.D.

ST. PAUL'S, located at the corner of Sixth and Forster Streets, is the outgrowth of a mission Sunday-school, established under the auspices of St. Stephen's Church, in November, 1857. In the summer of 1858 a frame building was erected at a cost of one thousand dollars, at the north side of the reservoir, on ground donated for the purpose by several of the members of St. Stephen's, and was consecrated by Rt. Rev. Dr. Bowman, assistant bishop of the State, Jan. 13, 1859. St. Paul's congregation was organized Jan. 5, 1859, with the following vestrymen: William P. Beatty, William Buehler, Daniel D. Boas, Benjamin Park, Robert A. Lamberton, Thomas L. Wilson, William T. Hildrup, William Garret, J. R. Jones, John Cruikshank, Charles H. Coates, and Charles Conner. Delegates were elected May 5, 1859, to the Episcopal Convention, which received the congregation into full union. The new church edifice, due chiefly to the legacy of Mr. Charles Conner, was opened June 30, 1873, and consecrated Feb. 23, 1879. The pastors have been: May 13, 1860, to October, 1861, William V. Feltwell; July 1, 1864, to Nov. 18, 1865, Alfred J. Barrow; Dec. 10, 1865, to Dec. 7, 1867, J. H. Hobart Millett; Sept. 13, 1868, to Sept. 13, 1869, Joseph S. Colton; Nov. 13, 1871, to Nov. 30, 1875, W. T. Bowen; Oct. 1, 1876, to 1879, B. F. Brown; July, 1879, Leroy F. Baker, present pastor. During the interregnum, between 1861 and 1864, Rev. B. B. Leacock, of St. Stephen's, frequently officiated, and between 1869 and 1871, occasional services were had by Revs. R. J. Keeling, D.D., and V. H. Berg-haus, and by H. C. Pastorius, then a lay reader.

ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCHES.

ST. PATRICK'S CATHEDRAL.—The first Catholic congregation organized in Dauphin County was located within the present limits of Harrisburg. As early, however, as 1810, the grounds now owned by them on Allison's Hill were in their possession, and the Jesuit Fathers from Conewago visited the place at stated intervals and held services. There also was their first graveyard. At a later date the property came into the possession of William Allison, but in subsequent years was reacquired by the church, and is now held by it. The construction of St. Patrick's was commenced in 1826, by Rev. Michael Curran, the first regular pastor, and consecrated Oct. 2, 1827, by Rt. Rev. Henry Conwell, then bishop of the diocese of Philadelphia. It was a neat building, with a tower and large bell, situated on the north side of State Street, between Second and Third. Its original size was about fifty by seventy-five feet, and its cost from six thousand to seven thousand dollars. The bell belonging to the church was presented by the king of France in acknowledgment of the compliment paid his family in the naming of the county Dauphin. In the course of time, as the congregation increased, the edifice was enlarged some twenty-five feet and otherwise improved. On Father Curran's death, which happened in Astoria, L. I., the Rev. John Foley was appointed to minister. After a few months he was succeeded by Rev. Pierce Maher in 1835. This Father officiated as pastor for many years, endearing himself to his flock by his kind and charitable disposition. Upon the erection of the diocese of Harrisburg, in 1868, he was transferred to Norristown, where he died in December, 1873. St. Patrick's Church became the pro-cathedral of the new diocese. July 12, 1868, the Rt. Rev. J. F. Shanahan was installed the first bishop of Harrisburg in presence of a large concourse of bishops, priests, and laity of this and neighboring dioceses. For some years the Right Reverend Bishop was assisted at the new cathedral by the well-known and much-respected Fathers Barry and Bastible, who, unfortunately for the diocese, died young in their zealous labors. The present pastor is the Rev. Michael J. McBride, a gentleman of learning and well qualified for the priestly office. In December, 1873, the church was enlarged again and remodeled, and its exterior and interior modernized, so that now it is one of the finest churches in the city. It was reopened and consecrated in 1874, by the Rt. Rev. Bishop Lynch, of Charleston, S. C.

ST. LAURENCE'S (GERMAN) CHURCH is located on Walnut Street, near Fifth. Its congregation was organized by Father Dryer, of York, in April, 1859, after whose death Rev. M. J. Meurer took charge. From Jan. 1, 1860, it was attended regularly twice a month by Rev. J. Vollmeyer and Rev. M. J. Meurer. Up to this time the congregation had worshipped in a hall, but in November, 1860, it purchased an old church on Front Street, between Walnut and Locust. From Jan. 26, 1862, the church was attended by Rev. C. Schafroth, from the Columbia Church. His successor, Rev. William Pieper, attended twice a month from Dec. 6, 1863, to April, 1868, and was succeeded by Rev. J. B. Frisch, the first resident priest of the congregation. In January, 1869, it was placed in charge of the present pastor, Rev. Clemens A. Koppnagel. The old church edifice was found inadequate for the growing congregation, and in the spring of 1874 the site on which the present large and beautiful church stands, on Walnut near Fifth Street, was secured, and the work of construction immediately commenced. In September, 1878, the building was dedicated. It is a brick structure, and its erection is largely due to the untiring labors of the zealous pastor, Father Koppnagel. Its interior finish is mainly the work of its pastor, who executed all the elaborate carving, decorations, window staining, making of the pulpits, altars, etc. The interior, which will not be finished for several years, is pure Gothic in style. Under the ministrations of the present pastor the congregation has largely increased, and now aggregates over five hundred souls. Adjoining the church, on Short Street, is the parish residence, a fine brick structure, connected with which is the building for the parochial school. Immediately in the rear of the latter is the work-shop, in which the pastor has labored with his own hands in preparing the decorations for the interior of the church.

BAPTIST CHURCHES.

FIRST CHURCH.—On the 19th of February, 1830, Rev. Dyer A. Nichols came to Harrisburg under the auspices of the Pennsylvania Baptist Board of Missions, and proceeded to establish regular services. Sunday meetings were held at private houses, and on the 22d of March, 1830, it was agreed in Council to hold a meeting in the Unitarian Church, then on Locust Street, to organize a church. On April 2, 1830, the meeting was held, with the following persons present, viz.: Rev. Dyer A. Nichols, Griffith E. Roberts, Mary Berry, Abigail Rittenhouse, Ann Wilkinson, Thomas Corbitt, Julia Thompson, and Fanny Phillips, who then constituted themselves the "First Baptist Mission Church of Harrisburg." The first baptism took place July 4, 1830, when Levi L. Tate and Linn Banks were baptized. By September 19th following their number had increased to twenty-one. In the fall the congregation began the erection of a church on Front Street, between Walnut and Locust Streets, which was finished in August, 1831. It was a brick structure, forty by fifty feet, with a school-room in the basement. The original founders were William Griffith, Rev. Dyer A. Nichols, Griffith E. Roberts, and Jeremiah Reese, and the cost of the lot and erection of building was six thousand seven hundred dollars, a large portion of which was contributed by a member of the church. The new edifice was dedicated Aug. 18, 1831, and on September 30th following, Rev. George J. Miles, of Centre County, became pastor, and remained until Feb. 24, 1833. About 1854 the congregation vacated the church building on Front Street, and commenced the erection of a large brick edifice at the east corner of Second and Pine Streets. This was put under roof in 1858, but not completed until 1865. The pastors have been: April 2 to Sept. 30, 1831, Dyer A. Nichols; Sept. 30, 1831, to Feb. 24, 1835, George J. Miles; May 21, 1835, to Nov. 22, 1835, Samuel Wilson; 1836, Thomas G. Keene; Nov. 27, 1837, to Dec. 31, 1839, Edward Kingsford; Sept. 7, 1841, to April, 1846, Matthew T. Semple; July 11, 1844, to March 19, 1845, Edward Conover; Dec. 7, 1845, to June 24, 1846, W. A. Roy; March 3, 1847, to Jan. 1, 1849, Jonas A. Davis; Oct. 11, 1852, to July 15, 1857, David Williams; Aug. 1, 1858, to Aug. 1, 1860, J. Green Miles; April 18, 1861, to May 1, 1863, W. S. Wood; Feb. 1, 1866, to Oct. 1, 1868, E. L. Bailey; April 1, 1869, to April 1, 1873, George Pierce; Oct. 1, 1873, to March 1, 1875, J. A. Kirkpatrick; Sept. 2, 1875, J. T. Judd, present pastor.

BETH EDEN REGULAR BAPTIST CHAPEL is situated on Fourth Street below Hamilton. It is a frame structure, erected in 1871 for mission and Sunday-school purposes, and is under the control of the First Baptist Church.

FIRST FREE BAPTIST CHURCH.—The origin of this church was a division in the congregation of the "Church of God" worshiping on Fourth Street. The organization of the seceding members was effected July 10, 1862. In a few months thereafter the organization secured a lot of ground on the corner of Fourth and East State Streets, on which they subsequently erected a church building at a cost of about fifteen thousand dollars, and the edifice was dedicated Feb. 5, 1865, the Rev. G. T. Day, D.D., of Providence, R. I., preaching the sermon. The pastors of the First Free Baptist Church have been: 1862-69, Rev. James Calder, D.D. (during the years 1865 to 1868, Rev. J. S. Burgess was assistant to Rev. Dr. Calder); 1869-71, S. H. Chase; 1872-77, A. F. Bryant; 1877-78, Thomas Burkholder; 1879-81, Thomas H. Drake; 1882, William Fuller.

SECOND FREE BAPTIST CHURCH.—The origin of this church was in a committee appointed by the "First Free Baptist Church of Harrisburg, Pa.," in the spring of 1866, to start a missionary Sunday-school on Allison's Hill. The organization of the Second Church took place on Jan. 11, 1873. The pastors in charge of the work from the commencement of the Sunday-school mission, in 1866, up to Jan. 11, 1873, when the workers in the mission enterprise organized themselves into an independent body, were those of the First Free Baptist Church at that time, with the Revs. Silas M. Clark, S. M. Mathews, and others as assistant preachers in charge. In January, 1873, after the church was organized and incorporated as an independent body, the Rev. A. C. Hills was elected pastor, and held the office for one year. In April, 1874, the Rev. John Swank was called to the office, and was the last pastor of the church. The first place of worship was a government army building purchased and re-erected on east side of Hummel Street, and was dedicated Aug. 5, 1866. After worshiping some four years on Hummel Street the congregation repaired to their frame structure, known as "Calder Chapel," on the south side of Derry Street, costing, with the ground on which it stands, three thousand seven hundred dollars. On April 17, 1880, the church was disbanded.

THIRD FREE BAPTIST CHURCH.—This church was organized on July 10, 1864, the Rev. Dr. James Calder and Mr. J. T. Bender constituting the council. The first pastor, Rev. C. J. Carter, was elected a few days after its organization, on July 27, 1864. A Rev. Mr. Cooper followed Mr. Carter as pastor, but how long these gentlemen respectively had charge of the church the records do not state. On July 15, 1874, the Rev. Edward Bennett, a member of the church, was elected pastor, and continued in office one year till July, 1875. On July 15, 1875, the Rev. B. F. Fox, a graduate of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., accepted the pastorate, which he retained for two years till Oct. 30, 1877. Then the Rev. William Lewis became pastor, though his term of office is not stated. On June 6, 1880, the Rev. J. W. Dungee, another graduate of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., was ordained pastor of this church. The present incumbent, Rev. E. J. Burrell, another graduate of Harper's Ferry, W. Va., accepted the pastorate June 20, 1881. The house of worship, on corner of William and Calder Streets, is the old Lutheran mission building purchased by the First Free Baptist Church of this city, and in which they used to worship while their present house was building.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.

MEMORIAL (U. B.) CHURCH.—Several efforts were made by the denomination to plant the society in Harrisburg, and the records show that as far back as 1850 the United Brethren occupied a small church on Front Street, which was regularly supplied by ministers from the Conference within whose bounds it was situated. From 1850 to 1853, Rev. D. O. Farrell was pastor; from 1853 to 1854, Rev. J. S. Kessler; from 1854 to 1856, Rev. J. L. Holmes; from 1856 to 1857, Rev. D. Strickler; from 1857 to 1858, Rev. J. P. Bishop; and from 1858 to 1859, Rev. I. Carpenter.

The church property was finally sold, and the organization ceased to exist. In 1864 another effort was made to establish a church, but it was soon relinquished. Three years later, at a session of the East Pennsylvania Conference, held in Columbia, it was resolved to renew the effort. A mission was formed, called the Harrisburg Mission Station, and Rev. W. S. H. Keys appointed pastor. Little was done during the first year, but at the next session of Conference Rev. J. Erb was appointed to the work, and the organization of the present society was effected. It proceeded at once to devise ways and means to build a house of worship, and through the persistent efforts of the pastor and board of trustees the lot on which Memorial Church now stands, at the corner of Boas Street and Myrtle Avenue, was purchased, and a neat frame building erected and dedicated.

The pastors of the church have been: 1868-69, Rev. J. Erb; 1870-71, Rev. G. W. M. Rigor; 1872-74, Rev. W. B. Evers; 1875, Rev. G. W. M. Rigor; 1876-77, Rev. J. W. Geiger; 1878-79, Rev. L. Peters; 1880-83, Rev. I. Baltzell; 1883, Rev. David W. Proffitt.

Early in 1879 a number of the members, having become dissatisfied with the advance movements of the church, withdrew and were organized by the East German Conference of the United Brethren in Christ. In 1880 the congregation of Memorial Church determined to build a more commodious house of worship for the accommodation of the rapidly-increasing congregation. By their united and untiring efforts they have completed a large two-story brick church, complete in all its departments, at a cost of about thirteen thousand dollars. The membership numbers two hundred and seventy-five.

PLYMOUTH CHAPEL, corner of Eleventh and Herr Streets, is owned and controlled by the First United Brethren Church, and is used for mission and Sunday-school purposes.

OTTERBEIN CHURCH is a neat edifice, located on Reily Street, corner of Margaret. It was built in 1880 by former members of Memorial Church. The pastors have been: A. H. Graul, from 1880-82, and A. H. Rice, who came in the latter year.

CALVARY CHURCH was situated on Regina Street near Fifteenth, but is no longer in existence. Its last pastor was Rev. Thomas Garland, in 1880-81.

HEBREW.

OHAF SHALEM (HEBREW) CONGREGATION.—The Ohaf Shalem (Never-ending Peace) congregation was organized prior to 1858, when L. Bernhard was rabbi; A. Rapp, president; and Joseph Newman, treasurer. Its synagogue was then in the second story of the building on Third Street near Walnut Street. Its present synagogue, a substantial two-story structure, built as the first Methodist Church, is situated on Second Street, between South Street and Barbara Avenue. The last rabbi was Rev. L. Loewenberg.

EVANGELICAL CHURCHES.

SALEM CHURCH, located on North Street near Elder, is a one-story brick structure, erected in 1862. Before its construction the Evangelical Association had services by various preachers, among whom were Rev. Mr. Guhl and Rev. G. Marquart. The congregation was organized about 1853, and for some years worshipped in the lower story of the Sons of Temperance Hall, corner of Second and South Streets. The church edifice was built under the auspices of Rev. Mr. Stetzell, whose successors were Revs. Deisher, Gingerich, B. F. Bohner, and Wieant. Since 1871 the pastors have been: 1871-73, Rev. Mr. Fehr; 1873-75, Rev. Mr. Lehr; 1875-76, Rev. Mr. Leibold; 1876-77, Rev. C. A. Miller; 1877-79, Rev. T. A. Blattenberger; 1879, Rev. Jacob Keller.

TRINITY CHURCH was organized March 14, 1874, with fifty-six members, and grew out of Salem Church, whose services were conducted in the German language, whereas the services at Trinity are held in English.

Its pastors have been: 1874-77, J. C. Hornberger; 1877-80, J. A. Fegar; 1880-81, A. W. Warfel; 1881, William H. Rinek, the present incumbent.

The church belongs to the East Pennsylvania Conference. The presiding elder in 1882 was J. K. Fehr. The church building, a frame structure, is located on Broad Street, corner of Fulton.

UNION UNITED CHURCH (WELSH), located on Race Street, near the Lochiel Iron-Works, was erected in 1865. Its congregation is large and steadily increasing.

CHURCH OF GOD.

UNION BETHEL.—The religious organization known as the Church of God was established in 1826-27, by Rev. John Winebrenner, formerly pastor of the First Reformed Church. In 1827 his followers in Harrisburg, having formed a congregation, erected a neat brick edifice on Mulberry Street, between Front and Second Streets. The building was forty by fifty-five feet with a basement story, and remained standing until the summer of 1858. In 1854 the congregation erected a church edifice of brick at the corner of Fourth Street and Strawberry Alley, which it at present occupies. The lot on which the first edifice stood was afterwards occupied by the South Ward public school. The pastors of this church have been :

FIRST BETHEL CHURCH ERECTED AT HARRISBURG.

1827-33, John Winebrenner; 1833-34, Daniel Winters; 1834-35, David Crall; 1836-38, Edward West; 1838-39, David Kyle, J. Dobson; 1839, William Miller; 1840-41, John Winebrenner; 1841-43, E. H. Thomas; 1843-45, George McCartney; 1845-46, Joseph H. Bamberger; 1846-48, William McFadden; 1848-49, Jacob Flake; 1849-50, George U. Harn; 1850-51, William Mooney; 1851-52, J. H. Hurley; 1852-54, William McFadden; 1854-55, James Mackey; 1855-58, James Calder; 1858-59, William Mooney; 1859-64, A. X. Shoemaker; 1864-66, D. A. L. Lavery; 1866-68, C. H. Forney, J. C. Owens; 1867-67, C. H. Forney; 1868-70, J. C. Owens; 1870-71, W. O. Owen; 1871-74, D. A. L. Lavery, A. H. Long; 1874-76, C. Price; 1876-78, B. F. Beck; 1878-81, George Sigler; 1881, C. Price.

ALL WORKERS' BETHEL.—In 1869 a mission and Sunday-school were established by the Union Bethel at the corner of Broad and Second Streets. Henry C. Demming was superintendent of the school. In the spring of 1861, George Yousling secured ground and erected the church edifice on the Two-and-a-half Street corner of Calder.

The three principal founders of this church were George Yousling, Henry C. Demming, and Michael Forney, who each gave seven hundred dollars or more to erect the church building. Mrs. Barbara McFadden was the principal lady engaged in the mission-work which led to the organization of the congregation on March 16, 1874, with twelve persons, increased in a week to twenty-six. The church, for three years called a chapel, was dedicated May 21, 1871. It was erected under the auspices of Rev. D. A. L. Lavery, then pastor of Union Bethel, who preached in it in 1871 and 1872, and in connection with Rev. A. H. Long in 1873.

Its pastors since the formal organization in 1874 have been: 1874-77, Jeremiah Cooper; 1877-78, J. Haifleigh; 1878-81, G. W. Seilhamer; 1881-83, D. A. L. Lavery; 1883, Thomas Neal, Jr.

NAGLE STREET BETHEL is located on Hanna, near Race Street. The congregation is an outgrowth of Union Bethel and All Workers' Church. It had its origin in the Sunday-school held by Henry C. Demming, as superintendent, in the house of B. F. Bear, No. 231 Paxtang Street, which was opened Aug. 20, 1871. A lot forty by sixty feet was secured by Isaac Frazer and Henry C. Demming, on which the church building, thirty-four by fifty-seven feet, was erected. The church was dedicated Feb. 7, 1875. The congregation was organized by Rev. D. A. L. Lavery in March, 1875.

Its pastors have been: 1875-77, J. C. Seabrooks; 1877-79, J. Esterline; 1879-81, J. M. Speese; 1881-83, J. T. Fliegel; 1883, William Sanborn. Both this and All Workers' Church were organized mainly through the zealous labors of Rev. D. A. L. Lavery and Henry C. Demming.

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL ZION CHURCH.

The title was chosen in 1816 by Rev. Richard Allen and his associates in Philadelphia, when what is known as the "Bethel" connection was first formed, and in order to make the proper distinction and to avoid controversy the word "Zion" (from the first church established) was subsequently made a part of the title of the first-named connection. From this time every year the African Methodist Episcopal Zion held its two Annual Conferences in New York and Philadelphia. In the mean time, Rev. Christopher Rush, born in North Carolina, but a resident of New York City from 1798, had been elected a superintendent, and the connection in Pennsylvania had grown to extensive proportions, so that in 1830, when the Philadelphia Conference met in Philadelphia, the churches represented were Philadelphia, membership, 382; Attleborough, 27; New Market, 15; Shippensburg, 17; Chambersburg, 72; York, 40; Swatara or Middletown, 40; Reed's Gap, 9; Lewistown, 35;

Bellefonte, 27; Jersey Shore, 17; Williamsport, 14; Huntingdon, 31; and (for the first time) Harrisburg, 115; making in Pennsylvania 841 members.

The Wesley Union Church, containing then one-seventh of the whole State membership, was organized on the 20th of August, 1829, by Elder Jacob D. Richardson, Deacon David Stevens, and a brother named Dorsey. Rev. Richardson's home was York, Pa., but he removed to Harrisburg. The organization took place in a log building at the corner of Third and Mulberry Streets.

At this Conference in 1830, Rev. David Stevens, of Harrisburg, who lately deceased, was ordained an elder and appointed to the charge of what was then styled the Harrisburg Circuit, composed of New Market, Chambersburg, Shippensburg, York, Swatara or Middletown, and Harrisburg. Under Elder Stevens were Deacon David H. Crosby, Deacon Samuel Johnson, and Preacher George Galbraith, who, though he afterwards became superintendent of the connection, was that year admitted only as a preacher on trial. His widow is still living in Harrisburg, an honored representative of the good man who so long and so faithfully served the church.

The ministers in charge of Wesley Union Church, following Rev. David Stevens in the log building, were Jacob D. Richardson, George Galbraith, Thomas Jones, and others whose names we have not been able to secure. In the mean time the old log church was enlarged, being lengthened sixteen feet, under the immediate direction of Rev. Jacob D. Richardson and Rev. David Stevens. In order to eke out his salary and at the same time afford opportunity to the colored children to secure the blessings of education, Rev. Jacob D. Richardson opened in the old log church (Third Street) a day-school, the compensation for which was paid by the commissioners of Dauphin County, Messrs. Archibald Orme, John Imshoffstall, and Abraham Bombaugh; but in November, 1832, they informed the teacher that "in future the colored children under his tuition shall be taught in the Lancasterian school [Walnut opposite Short Street], as the law directs, and that the commissioners will hereafter allow him no compensation for teaching said children." It is an interesting fact that the colored children were removed to the Lancasterian school. One of "the boys," Joseph B. Popel, one of the sanitary officers of the city, is yet living. This was evidently subsequent to the time when the Wesley Union Church had been made a "station" or entitled to the services of a resident pastor. This congregation increased in members, and realized that they must remove their church property farther up in the city, more readily to meet the convenience of the membership. After considerable delay a lot was purchased from the Forster estate at the corner of Short and South Streets, and including Tanner's Alley, and a small, plain brick edifice was erected at the junction of Tanner's Alley and South Street, facing on Tanner's Alley. This building was a great improvement upon the old log church, which had outlived its day. Into the new building the congregation removed on Sunday, Nov. 24, 1839. The pastor in charge at this time was Rev. David Stevens, the first and last in the old church and the first in the new, and there were present to take part in the interesting dedicatory services the first elder set apart in Pennsylvania and one of the founders of the African Methodist Episcopal Zion connection in this State, Rev. Edward Johnson, of Philadelphia, Rev. Jacob D. Richardson, and others. Here, with varying success, this congregation worshiped until 1860. The needs of the increasing population and their better circumstances forced upon them at this time the propriety of enlarging the house of worship or of entirely rebuilding. This latter was determined upon in view of the fact that the church lot was capacious enough for any needed church improvement. The war of the Rebellion breaking out in 1861, it was impossible then to carry out the idea; but in 1862 the present brick edifice was completed, facing, not as formerly, on the alley, but on South Street. In the interval of building, the congregation worshiped in the hall, Tanner's Alley. The first pastor in "the little church around the corner" was Rev. David Stevens; the first in the new edifice, Rev. Abram Cole.

CHAPTER XI.

The Newspaper Press of Harrisburg, and of the County.

FOR the greater portion of the following we are indebted to our friend, A. Boyd Hamilton, Esq. The story of the newspaper press of this locality is very interesting. There are no files of the first newspaper, and our entire knowledge consists in the fact that it is stated in the Oracle of Dauphin in 1807, when noting the death of Maj. Lewis, and in the Chronicle, in 1827, when referring to the authorship of the ballad on "St. Clair's Defeat," that the first newspaper venture at Harrisburg was by Eli Lewis. This was probably named The Harrisburg Advertiser, as that seems to have been the second title of the paper which succeeded it, which was The Oracle of Dauphin and Harrisburg Advertiser, the first number being issued Oct. 20, 1792, by John W. Allen and John Wyeth, continued by Wyeth and by John, Jr., then by Francis Wyeth for about forty years, up to the days of anti-Masonry. It is a valuable reference for most local events, but in many of its earliest years its notices of current or rather domestic news are far between. Partial files of it exist in bound form in the family of Mr. Wyeth; some have been destroyed in a fire which consumed the father's house and store at the corner of Market Square and Street many years ago. Early volumes are in the State Library collection.

The first issue of the paper was made from a house "adjoining the register's office, Harrisburg." That office was then at the northwest corner of Second and Walnut Streets, "near Bombach's tavern." The printers soon removed to "Mulberry Steet, opposite the residence of Adam Boyd, Esq., near the bank," where the post-office was also kept; then to the northeast corner of the Market Square and Market Street, where it was published as long as it survived. When this paper was commenced the territory of Dauphin County included all of the present Lebanon, up to the year 1813. It was edited with great prudence, and without any attempt at brilliancy.

Messrs. Allen & Wyeth had a well-furnished printing-office of English and German type, and printed and published before 1803, neatly bound, price three shillings, "Reflections on Courtship and Marriage, in Two Letters to a Friend." This work is in clean print, on dark paper, from excellent type, with the additional recommendation to a biblioplist of careful proof-reading and ink of a character far superior to that of the present day. Binney & Ronaldson cast the type.

Die Unparteiische Harrisburgh (Morgenrothe) Zeitung was the imposing title of the first German newspaper published in Dauphin County. Its initial issue was March 1, 1794, its printers Benjamin Mayer and Conrad Fahnestock, its politics Democratic, and for a number of years its proprietors were the leading politicians of the county; the subscription price one dollar a year, single copies "ein cent," perhaps the very first penny paper in the United States. It was continued by Benjamin Mayer as Die Morgenrothe until 1811. Mr. Mayer resided in a house on the southeast corner of Chestnut Street and Dewberry Alley, where the paper was printed. It afforded a handsome living to its owners for several years, but, as tradition has it, they, like all politicians of that day, expended the income a shade more rapidly than they made it, and so came to grief in a pecuniary way. The senior partner died a poor man. Mr. Fahnestock removed from Harrisburg to Middletown, where he engaged in merchandising and there died. In 1811, John S. Wiestling, who had been taught his trade in the office, purchased the establishment. Soon after he had associated with him Christian Gleim, "a young man from Lebanontown." They carried on the business several years. Mr. Gleim was afterwards sheriff of this county, while Mr. Wiestling ended his career as an iron manufacturer. Files of the earlier years of this paper are in the possession of the State Library and Dr. Egle, subsequent years John L. Lingle, and Gen. Cameron. It is probable the later volumes are in the possession of some of the descendants of the various editors. The regular publication ended about 1838, making its age quite forty years.

The Farmers' Instructor and Harrisburg Courant, published by Benjamin Mayer, was issued Jan. 2, 1800, first a folio, then in quarto, and, so far as we have been able to discover, copies of it treated every other subject at large except agriculture. Its original effusions were very brief and do not exhibit shining ability. Mr. John L. Lingle has a complete file of this paper in excellent preservation. There are a few numbers of it in the collection of the Dauphin County Historical Society.

The Dauphin Guardian, "from the press of Jacob Elder, in Second Street, next door to the sign of the Seven Stars," commenced in June, 1805, and continued for five or six years. Mr. Elder was one of the numerous grandsons of the Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang. The files, so far as preserved, give greater attention to local occurrences than its cotemporaries, at present a most important and interesting department of editorial labor. Several volumes of the Guardian are in the State Library, and also in the possession of Dr. Egle. Mr. Elder died at a comparatively early age about 1816. His paper was merged in the Republican in 1811.

The Times, "printed by David Wright," issued Sept. 21, 1807. Perfect copies of it to the time of its discontinuance, in 1810, are in the State Library. It was soon after removed to and issued at Lancaster, the then seat of government. Its editor was Hugh Hamilton, then a young lawyer just admitted to the bar of Dauphin County, and he continued his editorial labors for nearly thirty years after this time.

The Harrisburg Republican was issued by James Peacock in 1811, and published by him for ten or twelve years, when Mr. Peacock was appointed postmaster. The paper then passed into other hands, subsequently merged into the Intelligencer. If a complete file of it exists, it is in the collection of Gibson Peacock, of Philadelphia. The senior Peacock published his paper when the politics of Pennsylvania partook of whatever element of savageness was necessary to make it exciting and an editor's life uncomfortable. He survived it all, and to a good old age, departing this life in the esteem of his fellow-citizens, regretted by the very large circle who had partaken of his liberal hospitality and enjoyed the pleasure of his conversation. The Republican was a continuance of the Guardian, Mr. Peacock having purchased that paper and its good will, by the aid of John Downey and Jacob Boas, both men of importance in the then village. As it came out in subsequent political squabbles, Downey and Boas became irreconcilable enemies on account of a personal quarrel of the latter with Gloninger, of Lebanon, a standard friend of Downey. Governor Snyder having married the sister of Mr. Peacock's wife, was always ready to sustain his friend and relative, and the Republican was soon looked upon as the organ of Snyder and his cabinet. Yet the editor, practical printer as he was, at last became quite as important a factor in the political and social life of Pennsylvania as those who "patronized" him in his early years. He deserved to be, for he was a courteous and upright gentleman.

The Chronicle or Harrisburg Visitor, first issued May 8, 1813, "by William Gillmor, next door to Dr. Agnew's, and one door from the post-office, on Walnut Street." In 1815, Hugh Hamilton came in as partner and its editor. In 1820, Mr. Gillmor retired, and Hugh McIlwaine took his place. Soon the whole establishment came into the hands of Mr. Hamilton, and it was continued under his control and that of his son, A. Boyd Hamilton, until 1836, when it passed by purchase to Jesse R. Burden, Charles B. Penrose, and Nicholas Biddle, and Mr. Guyer became the editor. It was continued with varying success until 1842, when its publication ceased. Capt. McIlwaine was a pupil of William Duane, a carefully-trained workman and rigid instructor, as the late Chief Justice James Thompson would testify if he were alive. The technical lessons he received under McIlwaine on the Chronicle, after his imperfect training in a Western printing-office, he always said, "were the making of him," greatly assisting him in that system of detail which made him a "figure in the State." McIlwaine was a sergeant in Walker's company in its march to Baltimore, and was noted for the manner and care with which he performed his duties. It was the first paper to report "legislative proceedings" with fullness at the seat of government, and to give to its readers semi-weekly editions during the sessions of the General Assembly. A complete file of it is in the State Library. It was the organ of Governor Hiester and his cabinet as much as the Republican had been that of Snyder and his friends. Much of the correspondence respecting the course proper to be pursued by Governor Hiester is preserved. It shows how much anxiety was felt about it, and also that the political history of 1819-20 resembles that of to-day, reticence being the distinguishing feature. Decisions were not announced then before they were published.

The Commonwealth, by John McFarland and William Greer, commenced in 1818, printed at Third and State Streets, and continued without success for four or five years. No file of it is known to be in existence.

The Pennsylvania Intelligencer, Dec. 5, 1820, by Charles Mowry. In 1822, Simon Cameron came in as partner; in a few years Cameron and David Krause, then John S. Wiestling, then McCurdy, Elliott, and many others until about 1838. The family of Mr. Mowry should have a set of the paper, Mr. Cameron also up to the time he ceased to be connected with it. There are several volumes in the State Library. This newspaper had its existence in a lively political season. Its original editor and some of his successors were masters of trenchant pens, of which they made warlike use, and many a man about Harrisburg will detail the lively expectation with which the weekly issues of this and its antagonist, the Chronicle, were looked for by their subscribers. When the political complications arose respecting a successor to Mr. Monroe, that portion of political opinion which had been led by the Intelligencer refused to follow. Then Gen. Cameron with happy fortune sold to Judge Krause, who carried on a stout contest with the Jacksonians until 1828. Samuel C. Stambaugh, printing the Free Press at Lancaster, which he had commenced in 1818, then came upon the exciting scene. The Press had shown his ability, notwithstanding its careless make-up, and soon took rank as one of the brightest, most reckless and successful of newspapers. Stambaugh was an energetic, hard-headed, positive sort of man. He issued proposals for a new paper, to be called The Pennsylvania Reporter, at the same time offering to buy out the Intelligencer. It was accepted, and its career ceased, but only for a short time, for as soon as Governor Shulze and the men about him could prepare it was reissued by John S. Wiestling. He thus became the owner of the two leading newspapers, English and German. He had a "gay and festive" following, a liberal support, was on the road to fortune, when he was tempted to "sell out to David Krause and George P. Wiestling." Mr. Wiestling was an enterprising gentleman and respected citizen. For a long while he had his office in Second Street above Locust, now Dr. DeWitt's; then in Market Street, north side, near River Alley; then opposite the courthouse, now Mr. Gilbert's. The career of the Intelligencer finished under the management of Mr. Colin McCurdy.

Der Unabh ngige Beobachter, a German weekly, commenced by William White & Co., May 22, 1822. It was continued for eight or ten years with varying success, under several able editors, among others the Rev. Dr. E. W. Hutter. Of all its numerous editors Capt. Jacob Babb alone survives. It was commenced as the German organ of Governor Hiester's friends, and was a trusted organ in Jacksonian days.

The American Patriot was issued in 1812 and 1813, with Alexander Hamilton as editor. We have never met with but one copy of this venture. Its life was nearly two years.

The Ladies' Souvenir, by George E. Ludwig, issued July 21, 1827. It was published for about six months, a pleasant and cheerful quarto, but politics was then the absorbing theme, and its proprietor was wise enough to retire in time. A complete file of this paper is in the collection of A. Boyd Hamilton.

The Farmers' and Mechanics' Journal, by John S. Wiestling, issued Aug. 12, 1827, and continued to Dec. 15, 1827, when it merged in the Intelligencer, with the title Pennsylvania Intelligencer and Farmers' and Mechanics' Journal.

The Pennsylvanian, by Christian Gleim, in 1824. This paper had a short life. No file of it is known to exist.

The Christian Monitor, a weekly religious paper, by John M. Keagy, M.D., in January, 1826. Only one or two numbers were issued, so far as can be ascertained.

The Harrisburg Argus, of 1827, was published by Francis Wyeth. Some fifteen years after this another Argus was published by Valentine Best, senator from Columbia County in the State Legislature. A file of this paper nearly perfect is known. Its career was brief.

Pennsylvania Statesman, by John McCord, in May, 1828. This paper had entered upon its fourth year when, as narrated subsequently, it was merged into the Telegraph. A file is in the possession of Dr. Egle. Mr. McCord had formerly edited the Elkton, Md., Press.

The Pennsylvania Telegraph was started by Theophilus Fenn in September, 1831. The following extracts from a letter of the founder will be of interest, and inform the curious how the paper came to be issued by Mr. Fenn fifty years ago:

"In the winter of 1831, when I was living at Lancaster and publishing the Herald, which I had established in 1828, I received numerous letters from gentlemen of influence in many parts of the State urging me to establish a paper at Harrisburg, saying that without an organ at the seat of government, to advocate the principles that I supported, the party could not become organized over the State. I was opposed to the undertaking, as I had succeeded in securing a large circulation for my paper and a large jobbing patronage, with my party also largely in the majority. My business being prosperous and promising, I peremptorily declined and urged that some one else be selected. . . . I sold my establishment in April, 1831. I soon after issued my prospectus for the Pennsylvania Telegraph, which I purposed to commence in the following fall, before the meeting of the Legislature in December. I also visited Harrisburg about the close of the session of the Legislature, and while there was called upon by John McCord, who proposed to sell me the Statesman, a newspaper which he had started there a year or two before; but I declined to purchase. . . . I closed with Mr. McCord by paying him three thousand dollars down for the Statesman and seven hundred dollars to continue its publication under his own name and editorship until I should take possession of the office in September following, thus giving me time to settle up my business at Lancaster. As arranged, I came to Harrisburg in September and took possession of the office of the Statesman. . . . I issued the first number of the Telegraph in September, 1831. Neither Mr. McCord nor any other person but myself wrote one line of that number, nor did he ever write a line for the paper while I conducted it, which was until November, 1853, when it was sold to John J. Patterson. . . . I found less than three hundred regular subscribers to the Statesman. But being encouraged by the large receipt of subscribers over the State and the letters from political friends, I pocketed the disappointment and tossed the loss behind me and went ahead, well knowing the unrelenting hostility and desperate encounter that was before me. I spent twenty-two years of unpaid toil, the prime of my life, in conducting the Telegraph, and made every sacrifice in my power to build up the party, without receiving the benefit of office or even the acknowledgment of those who obtained the 'loaves and fishes' that were due for my services."

As stated, Mr. Fenn sold to John J. Patterson, who had a short time previous purchased the Whig State Journal of John J. Clyde, the Telegraph of course absorbing the latter newspaper. A few months after Mr. Patterson sold one-third of the establishment to Stephen Miller and another one-third to John J. Clyde. The year following Patterson sold the remaining interest to Mr. Miller and retired from the editorial arena. In 1856, prior to the opening of the Presidential campaign, Messrs. Miller and Clyde sold the establishment to Alexander K. McClure and James M. Sellers. The former had just retired from the Juniata Sentinel, the Telegraph affording a wider political field for his trenchant pen. In 1857 the paper passed into the hands of the late George Bergner, and became a financial success. From the death of Mr. Bergner until the present year his son, Charles H. Bergner, has had complete control of the establishment. It is now owned and managed by the Harrisburg Telegraph Company. Many of the sets of its files were destroyed in a fire some years ago. The State Library has as nearly a perfect file as can be found; indeed, it is very nearly complete.

Vaterlands Waechter, commenced in 1829 by Joseph Miller, was purchased by Samuel Kling in 1832, and at his death, June 5, 1836, passed into the hands of Joseph Ehrenfried, of Lancaster, with whom Mr. Kling had learned the art of printing, and subsequently to the control of the late George Bergner, who continued its publication until his death. Under the same name it was continued by Frederick C. A. Scheffer, who in 1876 changed it to the Dauphin County Journal. Since Mr. Scheffer's death the newspaper has been published by Dr. J. R. Hayes.

The Gospel Publisher, the organ of the "Church of God," was issued under the auspices of this religious body June 5, 1835, edited by the Rev. John Winebrenner. Afterwards it had many editors,—Messrs. Weishampel, McCartney, Mackey, etc. According to the history of this paper, by the late Dr. George Ross, of Lebanon, the money loss to the church in the first decade of its existence was nearly five thousand dollars. It was discontinued for some years, but subsequently revived, and under its change of name, The Church Advocate, has been a financial success. We believe a complete file is in possession of the family of Dr. Ross, in Lebanon.

The Republican and Anti-Masonic Inquirer was commenced in 1833 by Francis Wyeth, former editor of the Oracle. It was continued to a fourth volume, when its publication ceased. It had a considerable circulation in Dauphin, Lebanon, and Cumberland Counties. I do not know of any complete set of its issues. Its editors, private and public, were Samuel Shoeh, George W. Harris, and Francis Wyeth, assisted by a knot of young lawyers with more brains than business. They made a bright paper of it; but no amount of capacity could render permanent a publication founded upon so narrow a plank as opposition to secret societies; in particular that of Masonry, embracing as it did then and now nearly the whole body of public men and professional politicians.

Iron Grey, by John H. Cox, in 1838. A file exists.

The Plough Boy, by — Rutter, in 1838. No file known.

Pennsylvania Bulletin, in 1839, by Shunk & Weidler. This was a short-lived publication, a partial file of which is known.

Der Stats Bothe, by Edwin W. Hutter and Samuel S. Bigler, in 1839. It is presumed that full files of this paper exist.

The Magician, by E. W. Hutter and J. J. Cantine, in 1839, a file of which has probably not been preserved.

Log Cabin Rifle, by Henry Montgomery, a campaign paper, 1840, in favor of "Tippecanoe and Tyler too."

The Yeoman, by E. W. Hutter and S. S. Bigler, in 1841. A file of this paper is known.

The Watchman, by James S. Wallace, in 1841. No file known.

The Signal, John S. Steck, in 1841. No file known.

The Commonwealth, by William Lewis, in 1843. No file.

The Penny Advocate, by Cherrick Westbrook, in 1843. The first number was issued July 15, 1843, from "No. 68 Market Street, basement story." It was a small quarto and published every Wednesday and Saturday evening, at one dollar and fifty cents a year. The terms of advertising was "a penny a line for each insertion." The Advertiser reached twenty-two numbers, a file of which is in the possession of Mr. Westbrook.

The year 1843 was prolific of new enterprises, as the Oracle and all its successors, save one or two, had ceased to be published.

The Champion, a campaign paper of 1844, published by Augustus Sprigman. It was conducted with remarkable vigor in favor of Shunk as against Muhlenberg.

Whig Bugle, by Colin McCurdy, a campaign paper in favor of Gen. Taylor for President, 1848.

Crystal Fountain, in 1856, by John J. Clyde. The organ of the then great temperance movement in the State. It was continued for several years.

The American was established by John J. Clyde in 1856 in connection with his daily newspaper,—The Herald.

The rise and progress, the generation and succession of the Pennsylvania Reporter embraces so much that an endeavor to combine its history from 1827 to the present has been made. It was issued in a time of great political excitement, November, 1827, by Samuel C. Stambaugh, and in its history is the story of many other ventures. It has been continued by a crowd of able editors. The whole is now merged in the Patriot, published by a company, and of necessity without a "fighting editor," as was always the case before 1856. About that period editors began to be impersonal. In the good old times courageous personality, not ability, often made a popular newspaper editor.

Mr. William D. Boas gives us the following memoranda:

"November, 1827. The Pennsylvania Intelligencer was purchased and suspended. Samuel C. Stambaugh then established the Pennsylvania Reporter and Democratic Herald.

"March, 1829. Mr. Simon Cameron, who was a silent partner of Mr. Stambaugh up to that time, withdrew from the paper, and Stambaugh formed a connection with Mr. Henry Welsh, at that time one of the editors of the York Gazette, and Hon. Jesse Miller, of the State Senate. The paper was afterwards published under the firm of Stambaugh, Welsh & Co.

"In 1829, Mr. Stambaugh withdrew from the paper, which was afterwards published by Henry Welsh and Jesse Miller, under the firm of Welsh & Miller.

"December, 1830. Jesse Miller withdrew from the paper, leaving Mr. Welsh sole proprietor and editor.

"May, 1834. Henry Welsh formed a partnership with Samuel D. Patterson, who afterwards published the paper under the firm of Welsh & Patterson, and added to the title Democratic Herald."

The Reporter was greatly enlarged and improved in December of this year, and continued to be edited with vigor and success. In the following spring Mr. Welsh disposed of his interest to his brother-in-law, Mr. David Small. It is unnecessary to write that both retired in comfortable circumstances.

The Democratic State Journal was started March 28, 1832, by Geo. W. Crabb & O. Barrett,—"office near the south end of the court-house." It had a brief but stormy existence, and in the number for Jan. 12, 1836, Crabb bows himself out, and the paper was consolidated with the Pennsylvania Reporter, David Small of the latter also retiring. As The Reporter and State Journal it was published by Patterson & Barrett. On the 1st of June following, in a three-line paragraph, Mr. Barrett informs the patrons of his paper that his connection with it terminated. Mr. Patterson remained sole publisher until Sept. 1, 1837, when William D. Boas purchased an interest in the establishment, and a month later the whole concern passed into his hands. Thomas L. Wilson, of Philadelphia, was editor. In April, 1838, William F. Coplin, senator from Fayette County, entered into partnership with Boas, the firm retaining the editorial services of Wilson. March 6, 1840, Coplin retired. For over a year Boas battled alone; but, as the editorial of May 4, 1841, expresses it, "Samuel D. Patterson has returned to the arduous task of helping to conduct it as an independent, faithful, and zealous exponent of Democracy." April 29, 1842, Mr. Boas takes his leave of the Reporter and retires from the editorial field, Patterson remaining until October following, when John H. Dimock, of Susquehanna County, now of Chicago, purchased the establishment, who, in a whole column leader, takes occasion to advocate the claims of Mr. Buchanan for the Presidency. The last number issued was June 2, 1843. It was merged in the new arrangement. Two years after the name was assumed by Isaac R. Diller, to which we shall again refer. Almost a complete file is possessed by the State Library.

The Keystone, started in August, 1836, by William F. Packer, afterwards Governor of the State, O. Barrett, and Benjamin Parke. The senior member remained until February, 1840, when he disposed of his interest to Barrett & Parke, "the arduous duties appertaining to the office of canal commissioner" compelling him to relinquish it. Ovid F. Johnson edited this paper with great vigor. In April, 1841, James Peacock and Isaac G. McKinley purchased the establishment. Mr. Peacock, in October following, sold his interest to Joseph M. G. Lescure, of Philadelphia. Messrs. McKinley and Lescure continued its publication until the union of the three Democratic papers on June 7, 1843.

In 1848, Mr. Barrett commenced a newspaper with the old title of Keystone, which continued for several years. The complete files of this, with other of Mr. Barrett's newspaper ventures, were destroyed in the burning of a frame building corner of Fourth Street and Cherry Alley, where they had been stored, with the exception of some volumes which are in the possession of the State Library.

The Home Journal and Citizen Soldier is the title of the paper printed by Isaac R. Diller in 1843. In August, 1845, the name was changed to The Pennsylvania Reporter and Home Journal. It was published a short time. It caused quite a sensation by printing in its columns a local story founded on the Parthemore murder, by that strange erratic genius George Lippard. It was entitled, "Posy, or the Pilgrimage of St. George."

State Capital Gazette, by William Henlock and John B. Bratton, now of Carlisle, commenced July, 1839, and continued until June, 1843, when it ceased for the purpose of uniting with the Pennsylvania Reporter and Keystone, under the title of the Democratic Union. A file is in the State Library. It was undoubtedly in the front ranks of the so-called country newspapers. It was ably edited, neat in typographical appearance and make-up. This was succeeded by the Union and Patriot, in the hands of George M. Lauman, then came Richard J. Haldeman, Christopher L. Ward, William H. Miller, John W. Brown, Thomas C. Macdowell, O. Barrett, Benjamin F. Meyers, and other prominent editors, politicians or men of fortune.

That the present Patriot might "shed its beams upon a darkened world," it was necessary to swallow some fifteen ventures, a manifest proof of the enterprise of the printers and young lawyers of Pennsylvania, who supposed the newspaper route was the exact and rapid way to fame and station.

Harrisburg Star, by William J. Sloan, about 1830. It was not a very creditable sheet in its typography, as the editor was a mere lad, not much of a printer, but with so much ability in another direction that came to be an able departmental surgeon in the United States army. One or two of its issues have been preserved, but no complete file, except perhaps among the effects of its "responsible editor."

Whig State Journal, issued in 1850 by John J. Clyde. Sold to John J. Patterson, who subsequently purchased the Telegraph, into which this paper was merged.

For many years one or two of the weekly papers issued semi-weekly, and one, a daily, during the sessions of the Legislature; but no venture was made for the permanent establishment thereof until late in 1850.

The Harrisburg Daily American was commenced Dec. 26, 1850, by George Bergner & Co. Subsequently it became a part of the Harrisburg Telegraph. It was established as a Whig organ. In the course of time its opposition to the Know-Nothing organization was very decided. A file for several years is in the collection of the State Library.

The Daily Times, 1853, was a venture of William H. Egle and Theodore F. Scheffer, at the suggestion of a number of prominent citizens. The Morning Herald, by John J. Clyde & Co., was issued the same year. The borough not being able to support three daily papers, the Times was merged into the Herald. The latter paper was shortly after absorbed, or rather continued by the Daily Telegraph. It may be remarked that the Telegraph has absorbed almost as many newspaper ventures as its contemporary, the Patriot, and its editors were of the picked men of their political party.

The Daily Borough Item, by George P. Crap & Louis Blanche. It commenced in 1852, a small penny paper, not very prepossessing in appearance, but gave a good résumé of local events, and a file of it would be useful for reference. We do not think there is one in existence. On account of its frequent personalities, it failed to receive the general support of the community.

Daily Herald, by Stephen Miller & Co., commenced Dec. 23, 1853, and after and up to 1858 in the hands of Royal, McReynolds & Whitman, was at last merged in the Harrisburg Telegraph. Mr. Miller was at the time the paper commenced prothonotary of Dauphin County, afterwards Governor of Minnesota. A file of this paper is in the State Library.

The Platform, in 1854, a campaign paper of large circulation, by A. Boyd Hamilton, edited by a full dozen of the friends of Governor Bigler. We do not know where a copy of this publication is to be found. It was the first newspaper that thoroughly carried out the plan of payment in advance. Very many thousands of copies were ordered, but as the cash did not cover the order, the paper was not forwarded, and its circulation was limited to those who did pay, about fifteen thousand.

The Harrisburg Daily Record was issued by Henry Omit & Co., Jan. 3, 1854, edited by George F. Emerson. We have not been able to learn whether any file of this paper exists, although some of the company who established it are yet alive.

The Pennsylvania Statesman, established as a campaign paper in 1860, by J. M. Cooper. It advocated the election of John C. Breckinridge for President. It was a lively sheet.

The State Guard, a daily, published by Forney & Kauffman, commenced about 1866, and continued for several years. Some of its issues contain facts of permanent value, and it is to be hoped a full set of this paper has been preserved.

The State Journal, a daily, published by the State Journal Company, was begun in October, 1870, and continued until November, 1873, when the office was destroyed. Its chief editor was Wein Forney, and was just being established on a paying basis when it met its fate by the burning of Mr. Singerly's printing-office.

The Visitor, a religious paper, in 1824, by Michael W. McKinley. One or two numbers of its issue satisfied its editor and publisher.

The Mercury was a daily paper of 1875, by the Mercury Company.

The Dawn, a weekly of the same year, by J. Trainor King.

The Temperance Vindicator, by Geo. F. McFarland.

The Scroll-Keeper.

The National Progress.

The Harrisburg Chronicle, by Thomas C. MacDowell. These three newspapers were unsuccessful ventures, and had a very brief existence.

The Stars and Stripes, Buchanan and Breckinridge campaign paper, 1856, by George F. Weaver, Sr.

The newspapers published in Dauphin County at present (1883) are:

DAILY.—Harrisburg Telegraph, by the Harrisburg Publishing Company. Twenty-sixth year.

The Harrisburg Patriot, by Patriot Publishing Company. Twenty-fourth year.

The Daily Independent, by E. Z. Wallower. Sixth year.

WEEKLY.—The Item, Steelton, by J. A. Work. Eighth year.

The Middletown Journal, by J. W. Stofer. Twenty-eighth year.

The Middletown Press, by I. O. Nissley. Second year.

The Hummelstown Sun, by W. R. Hendricks. Ninth year.

The Millersburg Herald, by J. B. Seal. Eighth year.

Lykens Register, by Samuel M. Fenn. Seventeenth year.

Dauphin County Journal (German), Harrisburg, by Dr. J. R. Hayes. Sixth year.

Harrisburg Saturday Night, by Dr. J. R. Hayes. Fourth year.

Pennsylvania Staats Zeitung, Harrisburg, by the executrix of John G. Ripper, deceased, W. Strobel, editor. Sixteenth year.

Church Advocate, Harrisburg, edited by Rev. C. H. Forney, D.D.

Steelton Reporter, by W. H. H. Sieg. First year.

The Sunday Morning Telegram, published every Sunday morning by the Telegram Company, Harrisburg, in its first year, thus far has been a successful enterprise. John Moore, editor.

In addition to the foregoing are the following periodicals, issued monthly or semi-monthly:

The Conference News, organ of the Central Pennsylvania Methodist Conference, by Rev. W. M. Fry-singer.

The Lutheran Chimes, published by Zion Lutheran (Fourth Street) Church.

Church and Home, published by Market Square Presbyterian Church.

Odd-Fellows' Gazette, by T. Morris Chester.

People's Friend, organ of the local temperance movement.

Bulletin, organ of the Y. M. C. Association.

The Itinerant, by A. L. Groff, organ of the U. B. Church. Seventh year.

CHAPTER XII.

The Industries of Harrisburg—The Location of the City and its Great Natural and Acquired Advantages.

WITH its many advantages, its close proximity to the iron and coal fields, its water supply, its transportation facilities, its markets unexcelled in the variety and abundance of fruit, vegetables, meats, fowl, fish, and butter and eggs, Harrisburg should be a notable manufacturing centre. At present it lies across the pathway of one of the great transportation lines which binds the East to the West, while the future promises to give it another great trunk line, binding the North, South, East and West. This is no idle prophecy, for as we look at this country and its capabilities we see that latitudinally there is a sameness of products, differing only in degree, whilst longitudinally the difference is in kind. This being a fact it naturally follows that as the country fills up with population the interchange of commodities will increase in like proportion. The North will always need the products of the South, while the South, under the operation of climatic influences, cannot advance in manufacturing, and will always need the manufactures of the North. The day is not far distant when the great trunk lines of transportation will traverse the land in all directions, and when it arrives Harrisburg, lying right across the pathway of the national route from Boston and New York in the North to New Orleans and the Gulf in the South, will be as important a centre in that direction as it is now with the inter-commerce of the country traversing the land from east to west.

This locality is well off for furnace sites, and as the demand increases they will fill up. Coke is gradually supplanting coal in the manufacture of iron, as coal has supplanted charcoal, and the probabilities are that the furnaces of the future will all be built to accommodate them to the use of coke. Our furnace sites are on the direct line of the coke's transit from the ovens to the seaboard.

No city in the United States is better supplied with water, and that water of the purest. The very nature of the Susquehanna preserves this to us. No stream in the land is freer from impurities. The health, too, of the city, notwithstanding the bad name it received at the hands of its neighbor Lancaster during the "removal of the seat of government question" on account of the "mill-dam" troubles, and which it retains owing to the keeping up of the same issue, is as good if not better than any river town in the State or Union. Statistics go to prove that the annual death-rate is far less than any city in the United States. With all these advantages it is not surprising that it has been so greatly prosperous. There is no location equal to it in all the essentials for the establishment of manufacturing industries.

THE HARRISBURG CAR MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—Among the numerous extensive industrial establishments whose works have assumed such vast proportions as to exert a powerful interest upon the prosperity of the city, the Harrisburg Car Manufacturing Company's works occupy the leading position. The plant of this company, consisting of two departments, car-works and foundry and machine-works, occupying separate locations, aside from its prominence as the leading industrial establishment of the city, ranks as the equal of any similar industry in the United States in point of capacity and annual output of product, and is one of the largest and most important industries in our State. The car-works was put in operation in 1853, with a paid-up capital of two thousand five hundred dollars and a productive capacity of nine eight-wheeled cars a week. The original stockholders were Messrs. William Calder, David Fleming, Jacob Haldeman, Sr., Elias E. Kinzer, Thomas H. Wilson, A. O. Heister, W. F. Murray, Isaac G. McKinley, all of this city, and William T. Hildrup, a practical car-builder from Worcester, Mass. The company then owned two and one-half acres of ground west of Herr Street, where its present extensive works are located, which had formerly been used as a truck-garden, and the surroundings gave very little promise of the busy population now inhabiting that portion of our city. In 1863, after being in operation ten years, the capital stock of the company was increased to $300,000, which has since been still further increased to $500,000. As early as 1871 the manufacturing capacity of the plant was greater in daily product than the weekly output named at the beginning; the annual product that year amounted to $1,250,000. April 25, 1872, the works were entirely consumed by fire, entailing a loss of several hundred thousand dollars, yet such was the energy of the parties that in the short space of ninety days the works were rebuilt with increased size and capacity. The following August another fire broke out, entirely destroying the machine-shops, which department was rebuilt and put in operation in the almost incredible short space of thirteen and one-half working days; and notwithstanding the loss of means and time by fire, the production for the year was carried to the enormous sum of two million dollars. The panic of 1873 affected the car-building business probably more than any other branch of business in the country, yet such was the demand for the products of this company that the business for the year amounted to over two million dollars. This in brief is the early history of the car-works department, and before attempting to review the present extensive works now owned and operated by the company it is necessary to briefly sketch the origin and history of the foundry and machine-works, located on Allison's Hill and operated by the company, inasmuch as from this point to the end of our sketch the two industries will be incorporated in summing up the aggregate total of output, number of employés, and wages paid.

The Harrisburg Foundry and Machine-Works owes its existence to Mr. Hildrup's mechanical attainments and executive ability. This gentleman, who has been the general superintendent and business manager of the car-works industry since its foundation, in order to keep their vast number of men employed during a season of depression in the car-building business which occurred about 1865, began the manufacture of agricultural implements and machinists' tools. This industry was carried on for a few years in the car-works plant, but it was not long until a boom in the car-building business required all the space in the works for that purpose. Consequently the company were obliged to either give up the manufacture of the articles mentioned above or erect suitable buildings to carry on the industry. They decided to continue the industry, and about 1867 erected the large works now in operation on Allison's Hill. The buildings comprising this plant were used for car-building during the time required to build the car-works destroyed by fire. In place of the original two and a half acres of ground, the company now own fifty-eight acres of valuable city land, located as follows: Thirty-three acres north of the Pennsylvania Railroad, from Broad to State Streets, upon which the car-works are erected; twenty-two acres on Allison's Hill, where the foundry and machine-works are located; and three acres opposite the Wister Furnace, where the company's large saw-mill is located. The principal buildings comprising the car-works plant are imposing in their dimensions and architectural appearance, consisting of three construction-shops,—one sixty by two hundred and eighty-two feet, one sixty by two hundred feet, and one forty by two hundred and eleven feet in dimensions; foundry, sixty-two by two hundred and twenty feet; machine-shop, sixty-one by one hundred and twenty feet, two stories; blacksmith-shop, forty-five by two hundred and sixty-one feet, containing forty-six forges, five steam-hammers, and an immense drop-hammer of two thousand five hundred pounds power; repair-shop, thirty-eight by one hundred feet; frame-shop, sixty by two hundred feet, two stories; planing-mill, eighty by one hundred and ten feet; engine- and boiler-house, forty by eighty feet; office, forty by forty-one feet, two stories; warehouse, twenty-six by forty feet, two stories, used for storing car-springs and fine brass castings; together with a host of other buildings, which, with a few exceptions, are brick structures, and are all roofed either with slate or tin. The foundry and machine-works on Allison's Hill are comprised in a series of buildings, five of which are sixty by two hundred feet, and one fifty by two hundred, all two stories. These contain foundry, machine-, boiler-, tank-, and finishing- or setting-up-shops, and the warehouse and counting-rooms of the concern. The remaining buildings are one-story structures, adapted for forging, storage of raw material, and other departments. All the buildings are connected with each other by railways which form a junction with the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. As might be expected, the works are thoroughly equipped with all the latest improved mechanical devices and appliances that will tend to facilitate speed and perfection of product. The machinery is of the most powerful and accurate character, embracing every improvement that ingenuity and skill has been able to devise, the larger portion of which was manufactured in the machine-shop of the company, both from private and standard patterns and specifications. Twelve stationary engines are necessary to propel the acres of machinery throughout the works, ranging in power from small fifteen-horse to monster one hundred and twenty horse-power affairs.

Sixteen thirty-four-feet eight-wheeled box-cars is the present daily productive capacity of the car-works plant, two of which are known as refrigerator cars, Wickes' patent, for the Merchants' Dispatch Transportation Company, elaborate affairs, that require as much time to construct as six ordinary box-cars. To produce the enormous daily output requires the labor of six hundred and fifty men and boys. The daily consumption of material foots up fifty-five thousand feet of lumber, most of which is Southern pine, thirty tons of wheel-, twenty-three tons of bar-, eleven tons of axle-, and seventeen tons of pig-iron. The company do not forge their own axles, but make all their own wheels, casting one hundred and twenty a day from the best charcoal chilling iron. From year to year improvements have been made in the material used in manufacturing cars and the machinery necessary to its preparation, so that the work now produced by the company is so near perfection that it seems almost impossible that a further improvement can be effected in car manufacture. The products of the machine and foundry department on Allison's Hill consists of a line of heavy castings and machines for rolling-mills and blast-furnaces, compound pumping-engines of any capacity for supplying towns and cities with water, steam-engines and steam-boilers, blast-pipes, gas-flues, air-pipes, oil-tanks, tank-cars, wrought-iron draft-stacks, and stand-pipes. A specialty of this industry is a line of agricultural machinery, the chief production being the well-known Paxton portable steam-engine for farm use, furnishing the propelling power for threshers, shellers, etc., in a shape that has long been the aim of inventors to consummate. The company manufacture these engines at the rate of one hundred and fifty a year. Another specialty is the Paxton grain and fertilizing drill, one of the finest achievements of American ingenuity as an instrument for the cheapening and greater production of land crops. This plant furnishes employment to one hundred men and boys, swelling the total number of employes of the company to eight hundred, whose combined wages aggregate eight thousand dollars a week, and who produce by their labor a class of work that represents in round numbers nearly three million dollars annually. The company have gone to great expense to improve their property, and they have left nothing undone to protect themselves from loss by fire, for besides providing their own hose-carriages and fire apparatus, they have at their own expense put down through their lumber-yard seventeen hundred feet of water-pipe, connecting with the city's water-main at State Street. Seven fire-plugs are distributed throughout the lumber-yard, and alongside of each plug is arranged a hose-box containing a supply of fire-hose. Numerous other interesting features might be mentioned in this connection, but want of space will not permit.

In conclusion, personal mention must be made of some of the more prominent parties who have been instrumental in making this the most prominent industrial establishment in the city, and which conduces in a large degree to the general welfare of the community. The almost unprecedented success of this vast enterprise is largely due to Mr. William T. Hildrup, the general superintendent and business manager. The president of the company is Mr. David Fleming, one of the original stockholders, who succeeded the late William Calder. Mr. John Murphy, the general agent of the company, with headquarters at New York, is well and favorably known in railroad circles. The principal office assistants are Messrs. George G. Boyer, chief clerk, and J. Hervey Patton, assistant, with Mr. M. S. Shotwell, inventor of a valuable car-replacer bearing his name, as an inspector and draughtsman.

THE CHESAPEAKE NAIL-WORKS.—These extensive works, located near the canal, along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad, in the First Ward of the city, were built in 1866 by Charles L. Bailey & Brother. Of the twelve acres of land owned by the company, seven are covered by tenement-houses and the nail-works. The shops comprise a puddle-mill, nail-plate mill and nail-factory, and a variety of other buildings necessary in connection with works of this kind. The puddle-mill has fourteen puddling-furnaces, squeezer, and one train of rolls. The nail-plate mill has three heating-furnaces, one train of rolls, and shears for cutting nail-plate. In the nail-factory are sixty-six nail-machines, and the machinery throughout is of the latest and most approved pattern, and has a producing capacity of two hundred and sixty thousand kegs of nails per year, and employs about three hundred men. The present officers are Charles L. Bailey, president; A. S. Patterson, secretary; G. M. McCauley, treasurer.

CENTRAL IRON-WORKS.—The old mill was built in 1853 by Charles L. Bailey & Brother, and changed and enlarged in 1879. The new mill was built in 1877-78 and enlarged in 1881, and contains one single and six double puddle-furnaces, one squeezer, five heating-furnaces, and five train-rolls (one muck, one thirty-one-inch and one twenty-five-inch roughing, one Lauth 3-high thirty-one-inch and one Lauth 3-high twenty-five-inch chilled finishing), with shears, cranes, etc. The product of the works are boiler-plate and tank-iron. The annual capacity of the works is about thirteen thousand net tons, and employ one hundred and fifty men. The officers are: President, Charles L. Bailey; Secretary, Abraham S. Patterson; Treasurer, G. M. McCauley.

THE PAXTON FURNACES.—Paxton Furnace, No. 1, was built in 1853 by Messrs. Bryan and Longenecker, of Lancaster, and located in the southern suburb of what was then the borough of Harrisburg. This firm conducted the business for a few years, when they sold their interest to the late James McCormick and Robert J. Ross, who placed the business in charge of Henry McCormick, and proceeded at once to a vigorous prosecution of the manufacture of pig metal. Mr. Ross subsequently died, when the entire property was purchased by Mr. McCormick, and after a few years the McCormicks added another furnace to their fast-increasing business, located near the site of the old one, put it in blast in 1872, and named it Paxton Furnace No. 2.

Paxton Furnace, No. 1, has a forty-three-foot stack, a fourteen-foot bosh, and a capacity of six hundred tons pig-iron per month, while No. 2 has a sixty-foot stack, a fourteen-foot bosh, and capacity the same as No. 1.

EAGLE WORKS.—This establishment was built in 1854, by W. O. Hickok, present owner and operator, on the corner of Canal and North Streets, and in 1869 was enlarged to its present dimensions, and is operated by steam power. A specialty is made in machine castings, cider-mills, mechanics' tools, ruling machinery, etc. Ninety men are given constant employment, while the products of the works find sale in most every country on the globe.

JACKSON MANUFACTURING COMPANY.—This company was organized in August, 1881, with a cash capital of fifty thousand dollars, and chartered September 19th of the same year. The incorporators were John T. Chambers, James Jenkins, Henry C. Jenkins, James I. Chamberlain, Sarah H. Jackson, and Charles H. Jackson. The works of the company are located on the corner of new Fourth Street and Boyd Alley, and were purchased and enlarged in 1881, and provided with machinery for the manufacture of steel wheelbarrows, pressed with patent dies, for which the present capacity is sixty steel barrows per day. They also manufacture coke wagons, mining wagons, mine cars, pig-metal barrows, charging barrows for furnaces and foundries, also farm wheelbarrows, all of which are pressed from sheet steel. Twenty-five men are employed. The following are the present directors and officers of the company: James I. Chamberlain, president; James Jenkins, secretary and treasurer; Col. W. W. Jennings, Charles H. Jackson, John T. Chambers.

THE HARRISBURG COTTON-MILL was erected about 1852 by a stock company. Like similar enterprises, it has had its periods of prosperity and adversity. It is located on North Street, between Front and Second, is built of brick, four stories high, two hundred feet long and sixty feet wide, with end wings of one story, sixty-four feet long and twenty-four feet wide. It has eight thousand spindles and two hundred and eighty looms, with a capacity of two thousand seven hundred hales cotton, producing chevits, drilling, four-shafts twills, duck, warps, yarns, etc. The number of hands employed is two hundred and sixty, and the monthly pay-roll amounts to forty-five hundred dollars. The mill produces four million yards of heavy sheeting annually. The present proprietors of the mill are George Calder, Jr., & Co., of Lancaster.

THE FOUNDRY AND MACHINE-WORKS of Willson Brothers & Co. are located on the corner of State and Filbert Streets. They are largely engaged in the manufacture of agricultural implements, of some which inventions they are the proprietors. These works are among the most successful industries of the city.

HARRISBURG CHAIN-WORKS.—Joshua W. Jones, of Harrisburg, the inventor of the new process for removing indentation made on paper after being printed thereon, and hydraulic dry-pressing machines, and patent releasable clip-chain bale-tires, finding great difficulty in procuring the proper chains for his machines, established this business for his own benefit. It has grown to an extensive establishment, and the demand for the manufacture, apart from his own, has been greater than the supply. At present only four furnaces are in operation, but eight others will soon be erected. The principal product will be chain bale-tires, and the capacity of the works is estimated at three thousand per month. A small Baxter engine is employed to drive a fan for fires, and an oven (eight feet by two feet by six feet) is used for japanning the chains. Twelve men are employed.

THE STEAM-FITTING WORKS AND FOUNDRY of J. D. Marshbank & Son are located on corner of Short and South Streets, occupying the Jennings Franklin Foundry and Machine-shops. These works manufacture steam and hot-water fittings; also various descriptions of heavy and light castings. The annual value of their product is thirty thousand dollars, and they give employment to thirty-five hands.

THE HARRISBURG FOUNDRY, so long under the management of the Bay Brothers, is now operated by Messrs. John W. Brown and Augustus Reel, who carry on a general foundry business, with a probable annual capacity of one thousand tons. The works are located on State Street and the Pennsylvania Railroad.

THE HARRISBURG FIRE-BRICK WORKS, located on Second Street near Paxtang, were established in 1869, and have been in continuous operation since that date. They manufacture fire-brick for blast-furnaces, steel-works, and rolling-mill use, and have a capacity of two million bricks per annum, which amount could be readily increased. The clays used are from the several well-known deposits in New Jersey, and from Clearfield, Clinton, Dauphin, and Lebanon Counties, in Pennsylvania. All the fire-bricks are made of these several clays combined in various proportions as best suits the intended use. A forty horse-power engine is employed in grinding and mixing the clays. The works give employment to ninety hands.

WISTAR FURNACE.—This furnace was built in 1867, originally fourteen by forty-five feet, but recently altered to fourteen by sixty feet. It is blown by a thirty by forty-eight-inch horizontal engine, geared to drive two blowing cylinders seventy-two by seventy-two inches. This engine blows two hundred and sixty cubic feet of air per stroke, and is capable of running thirty to thirty-five revolutions per minute, at a pressure of six to seven pounds of blast. There are three batteries of boilers, two of which give ample steam-power. Two Kent eight-inch pipe ovens heat the blast to 1000° or 1100° F. Only one oven is blown through, leaving one in reserve. Fuel, three-fourths anthracite, one-fourth coke; ores, Dillsburg, Seizholtzville, Cornwall, and for two years past about one-third from Spain and other foreign countries. Capacity, forty-five tons per day. This is a very complete furnace, and one of the most successful in the Susquehanna region.

HYDRAULIC CEMENT PIPE WORKS.—These works, located on Herr Street and the Pennsylvania Canal, have been in successful operation during the past three years, manufacturing cement drain-pipes and cement ware or artificial stone. The product is sold throughout the whole of Central Pennsylvania. The capacity of the works is twenty-five thousand feet of drain-pipe per annum. The capital invested is fifteen thousand dollars, and the works give employment to twelve men. Henry J. Beatty, proprietor.

HARRISBURG STEEL- AND IRON-WORKS.—Messrs. Hummel, Fendrick & Co., since 1881, have occupied the old "Novelty Works," on the Pennsylvania Railroad foot of Third Street, where they are engaged in the manufacture of bar-iron and tires, and promises to be one of the most successful industries of the capital.

THE HARRISBURG STEAM-BOILER AND TANK-WORKS were erected in 1863 by Robert Tippet, who successfully carried on the business until his decease. They are now owned and operated by his sons, Charles E., David, and William P., under the firm-name of Robert Tippet's Sons. Their principal business is the manufacture of steam-boilers, furnace work, stacks, etc. They ship punched and shaped iron to Ohio, Alabama, and Tennessee. The works employ sixty hands, and have a capacity of thirty tons per week. They are located at the foot of Race Street, on the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad.

CHAPTER XLII.

The Fire Department—How they formerly extinguished Fires in Harrisburg—The First Fire Company—Friendship—Hope—Citizen—Washington—Mount Vernon—Paxton—Good Will—Mount Pleasant.

One of the early ordinances of the borough required every householder to have one fire-bucket for each story of the house. These buckets were made of heavy leather, long and narrow in size, and were painted different colors as the owner chose, with his or her name on them, and were kept hanging in some convenient place, frequently in the hall or entry, and it was the occupant's duty, in case of an alarm, to carry or send them to the fire. Double lines were formed to the nearest pumps, and sometimes to the river; men, women, and children joined in these lines, the latter being in the empty-bucket line. The buckets were passed from one to another filled with water and emptied into the side of the engines, which were worked by hand; the empty buckets then passed back by those on the opposite line. Often the buckets were not more than half full when reaching the engines, the water being spilled by passing them along the line. There were separate lines for each engine. Balthaser Sees, who built the old "Union," the first fire-engine in the town, also made about fifty feet of leather-sewed hose, which was intended to have water conveyed from the pumps through them. As sewed hose was not water-tight, they never could be used. It was a difficult matter to maintain the lines at a distance from and out of sight of the fire, as every one wished to see it. It was hard, laborious work to pump water for the buckets and to work the engines. When the pumps failed, as they often did, lines were then formed to the river.

This primitive means of putting out fires was continued until 1836, when, to the great relief and joy of the people, the "Citizen" suction-engine was purchased. Hose enough was bought to reach from either the river or canal to the centre of the town, and by that means the engines at the fires were supplied, but not in sufficient quantity without the bucket-lines. This continued until the water-works were completed, in 1840.

The hard work of the firemen at a conflagration at the engine-brakes continued until the present steam-engines were adopted, the "Friendship" being the first. All the hand-engines were gradually replaced by steam until the whole five companies were supplied. The first mode of giving the alarm of fire was by the ringing of the old court-house bell, followed by the different church bells, as the engine-houses then were small frame buildings without bells. Subsequently the direction was struck by the bells on the different engine-houses. The old Philadelphia system was then adopted, viz.: one stroke for north, two for south, three for east, and four for west; the other divisions of the compass were also struck. This alarm continued until the fire-alarm was erected in 1874.

The first fire company was organized June 17, 1791, and John Kean was the first president thereof. The following is a copy of the original subscription paper:

"We, the subscribers, considering the necessity of having an engine for extinguishing fires, do agree to pay to Adam Boyd the sums to our names affixed on demand, for the purpose of purchasing an engine for the use of the Borough of Harrisburg.

"June 17, 1791."

On Friday, Nov. 25, 1791, the residence of Mr. James Sawyer, on Locust Street, was destroyed by fire. After the fire was over Mr. Sawyer returned his thanks to the men and women of the borough for the aid they had rendered him. As late as March 8, 1797, there was no apparatus in the city designed for putting out fires. This is shown by an extract from the minutes of the Harrisburg Free Debating Society. Among other questions discussed (March 8, 1797) was one for procuring a fire-engine. At the fire in the building used by William Porter as a cold-nail factory, on the 19th of February, 1798, no reference is made to any service by an engine, but Mr. Porter did thank the ladies for what they had done, and declared his willingness to contribute to a fund towards procuring another engine. The inference from this is that an engine was then owned by the borough. Tradition names the "Union" as being the first engine in use, which is the one remotely referred to by Mr. Porter. The Union Company was dissolved some time between 1830 and 1838. Robert Sloan and Frederick Heisely were directors of the company, and George Capp secretary in 1824. An ordinance was passed by the Town Council, July 13, 1813, impressing on all property-owners and tenants, whether male or female, to have within convenient reach on their premises at least one leather bucket for use at fires. By the terms of the same ordinance the borough was divided into two fire districts, called respectively northern and southern, with Market Street as the dividing line, each district containing a company. These companies were the "Union" and the "Friendship."

FRIENDSHIP COMPANY, No. 1.—This company may be termed the patriarch of the present fire department of Harrisburg, having been instituted prior to 1803, although its oldest constitution only dates as far back as Aug. 11, 1812. The oldest official document among the records of the company is what purports to be a list of "sundry members of the Friendship Fire Company who are indebted to the sums annexed to their names respectively, the account being down to the yearly meeting, Nov. 7, 1809, including said meeting." This list is attested by James Maginnis, secretary. The first debtor on the list is Thomas Ridge, and the amount of his indebtedness was as follows:

1803, August 1st,	to sundry fines.....	10 shillings
1804, August 7th,	" " " " " " " " " "	11 "
1808, February 2d,	" " " " " " " " " "	3 "

Messrs. Samuel Pool, Michael Krehl, Albright Weaver, John Kapp, Isaiah McFarland, and Patrick Burk were also debtors to the company at this period. The indebtedness arose from tax and fines. "Messrs. Sawyer, Glass, Brua, Norton, Dorsheimer, managers of the company, and the secretary met at the house of John Norton, Feb. 9, 1808, for the purpose of holding an appeal, whereat B. Kurtz appealed ten shillings, Mr. George five shillings, Mr. Laverty five shillings, Mr. Glass five shillings, Mr. Dorsheimer one shilling, whereupon it was agreed that Mr. Goodman should give every one that is indebted to the company a call for the pay, and them that don't pay shall be sued."—Manuscript Minutes of Managers, Feb. 9, 1808.

Among the names of the members of the company in 1808 are recognized many whose descendants still reside in Harrisburg. These are Messrs. John Zinn, Samuel Pool, Abraham Rupley, Andrew Berryhill, Moses Gillmor, John Mytinger, Joseph Young, Samuel Bryan, Christian Stahl, John Forster, James Brown, Samuel Black, Dr. Hall, Dr. Cleaveland, Peter Keller, Joseph Doll, James Sawyer, Frederick Felty, George Boyer, Jacob Boas, John Wyeth, John Wingert, Jacob Ziegler, George Roberts, and Benjamin Bowman, secretary.

Obed Fahnestock was president of the company in 1812, and Christian Gleim secretary and treasurer in 1813. In 1818, Abraham Bombaugh was the treasurer, who was succeeded in 1819 by Obed Fahnestock. Jacob Seiler was secretary of the company in 1827. From this period we can find no records of the company until 1848, when it adopted a new constitution, and in many respects increased its efficiency. The first hose-carriage of the company was purchased a short time after the introduction of water into Harrisburg. The old engine being too limited in its capacity, and its wood-work partially rotted, the company applied for and obtained the old "Harrisburg" engine, which belonged to a company of that name formerly existing in Harrisburg. This was used by the company for several years, when it was found defective, and then abandoned. The company was then granted the use of the "United States," a powerful second-class engine, formerly used by a company of that name in Middletown, but owned by Judge W. F. Murray, who had it brought here for sale. The Town Council, however, refused to buy it, and in lieu thereof purchased in Philadelphia an efficient second-hand engine, which the company continued to use until 1860, when they purchased their present steamer, a second-class Amoskeag make.

The fine building of the company on Third Street below Chestnut Street was erected in 1850, the company having previously occupied a two-story frame structure on the river-bank, a short distance north of the toll-house of the Harrisburg bridge.

THE HOPE FIRE COMPANY, No. 2.—This association was instituted on the 6th day of January, 1814, and was the third of its kind organized after Harrisburg was laid out. Its cotemporaries were the "Union" and "Friendship." The following "list of members of the Hope Fire Company who have been furnished with badges" is from an old memorandum-book. Those marked with a (*) were members in 1814, the others in 1816. Only one on the roll survives, the genial and scholarly gentleman that he is, Col. Samuel Shoch, of Columbia:

Capt. Thomas Walker was the first vice-president of the company, and Hon. John C. Bucher held that office in 1819. In 1823, Mr. Bucher was president, and in the year following Henry Buehler was secretary of the company. Mr. Bucher was succeeded by Charles F. Muench, Dr. Luther Reily, Hamilton Alricks, A. Boyd Hamilton, etc. Joseph Wallace, Henry Antes, Dr. Heisely, Dr. Orth, and other prominent citizens were at one time members of the company. The long time which has elapsed since its first organization, and the number of changes in the affairs of the company, render it extremely difficult to obtain any considerable knowledge of its early history. We know, however, that the first engine of the company was manufactured in Philadelphia by the celebrated Pat Lyon—him of bank prosecution memory—at a cost of twelve hundred dollars, and that it was capable of throwing two hogsheds of water per minute!

After the erection of the water-works the company added to their apparatus a beautiful hose-carriage. Shortly after this period the affairs of the company seem to have been in a depressed condition until January, 1853, when a number of public-spirited citizens residing in the upper part of the borough joined together and effected its complete reorganization under the auspices of the Town Council. A beautiful second-class engine, capable of throwing two side and a gallery stream, manufactured by J. Agnew, of Philadelphia, was purchased at a cost of thirteen hundred and fifty dollars. In March, 1858, the company also replaced their hose-carriage by a neat "spider" or "crab," at a cost of one hundred dollars, and in September, 1858, further increased its efficiency by obtaining a hook-and-ladder apparatus.

The house of the company up to 1855 was a small frame structure which stood on the site of the present building. In that year the municipal authorities removed the structure, and erected in its place a two-story brick building thirty-four by twenty-four feet. The company subsequently extended this building forty feet in length and added another story, and as a highly creditable fact we might add that the bricklayers, carpenters, plasterers, and painters belonging to the company performed the work gratis by the light of their fire-lanterns. The hand-engine was finally sold to a Lewistown fire company, and its place supplied by the company's present steam-engine, which arrived here Feb. 28, 1865. It was manufactured by L. Button, Waterford, N. Y., and at the first test in this city threw a stream from a one and three-eighth inch nozzle on a level two hundred and twenty-five feet, and through a one and one-eighth inch nozzle a vertical stream of two hundred and seven feet. The building of the company having become unsafe, it was torn down in the spring of 1870, and the present structure erected in its place.

THE CITIZEN FIRE COMPANY, No. 3.—This efficient fire company was organized in the year 1836. Its first officers were William Bostick, Sr., president; Henry Lyne, vice-president; George S. Kemble, treasurer; and William Parkhill, secretary. The company, shortly after its organization, purchased a beautiful and powerful engine at a cost of nine hundred and fifty dollars. It was of second-class capacity, throwing a gallery and two side streams, and was manufactured at the celebrated establishment of Joel Bates, in Philadelphia. The power and effectiveness of this engine was fully tested at the disastrous fires which occurred in the summer and fall of 1838 at the opposite corners of Fourth and Market Streets. At these fires it rendered the most important services in consequence of being provided with a suction apparatus, which forced water from the canal, thus in a great measure dispensing with the then prevailing system of "bucket-lines."

The introduction of water and hydrants into the borough created a material change in the operations of the fire department. The "bucket-lines" already referred to gave way to hose, and it was necessary that the several fire companies should be provided with this article. The Citizen Company was the first to respond to this necessity, and accordingly purchased in Philadelphia a beautiful hose-carriage and sixteen hundred feet of hose, the former at a cost of two hundred and eighty-five dollars.

With this useful addition the company required the privileges and powers of an incorporation, and accordingly an application for a charter was made and granted by the Court of Common Pleas in 1841. It was discovered, however, by time and experience, that this charter was defective; accordingly, at a meeting of the company held May 12, 1858, a new constitution and by-laws were proposed and a committee appointed to petition the court for their approval. This committee petitioned the court on the 13th of May, 1858, and on the 23d of August following the court granted the prayer of the petitioners by directing that the said constitution and by-laws shall "thereafter be deemed and taken to be the instrument on which said association shall be governed as firemen."

The first hose-carriage having become dilapidated by time and service, the company, in the fall of 1856, purchased in Philadelphia a new one, handsomely mounted with silver and other embellishments, at a cost of about one thousand dollars. In addition to this, they shortly afterwards procured a handsome "spider," manufactured to order by R. J. Fleming, of Harrisburg, and costing about two hundred dollars.

The company, in October, 1858, increased its efficiency by procuring a "Button engine," a lately patented fire apparatus, manufactured at Waterford, N. Y., a trial of which, in front of Brant's Hall, was thus noticed in the Daily Telegraph: "She did nobly, and more than realized the expectations of the most sanguine members of the Citizen Company. In our opinion the engine is fully equal to three ordinary machines of the old style, and ranks next to the steam fire-engines lately adopted in the various cities. On the first trial she threw a stream of water through a 1½-inch nozzle a distance of two hundred and one feet. On the second trial she threw two streams at once through 1½-inch nozzles a distance of one hundred and sixty-five feet each. On the third trial she threw five streams at once through ¾-inch nozzles from one hundred and five to one hundred and twenty-one feet. When this feat was accomplished the members of the Citizen Company, pleased with the success of their new machine, made the welkin ring with repeated and enthusiastic cheers for the engine and its manufacturer. On the fourth trial the largest nozzle—1½-inch—was used, and this powerful volume of water was thrown a distance of one hundred and sixty-seven feet. The machine gave entire satisfaction in every respect." This at the time was the largest engine of the kind in the State. It weighed three thousand five hundred pounds, required fifty men to work it, and cost two thousand and fifty dollars delivered in Harrisburg.

THE WASHINGTON HOSE COMPANY, No. 4.—The example of the Citizen Fire Company in procuring hose to meet the requirements of the change in the fire department caused by the introduction of water into the borough was followed by the organization of a company whose apparatus consists exclusively of hose and its carriage.

Being convinced of the utility of such an organization, a number of young men met in the dining-room of the United States Hotel, on the corner of Second and Mulberry Streets, on Wednesday evening, Jan. 27, 1841, for the purpose of organization and to raise funds to purchase a hose-carriage. A committee was appointed to solicit money by subscription to purchase a carriage, and on the 5th of February, 1841, that committee reported that sufficient amount had been subscribed by the citizens, when John L. Martin was deputed to purchase the carriage of the Washington Hose Company, of Philadelphia, at a cost of one hundred and eighty dollars. The carriage was received on the 20th of March, 1841, and at the same time the Town Council furnished the company with six hundred feet of hose. On Friday evening, April 2, 1841, the company was regularly organized, and denominated the Washington Hose Company, of Harrisburg, Pa., a constitution and by-laws adopted, and the following officers were elected: President, Levi Wolfinger; Vice-President, John L. Martin; Secretary, E. S. German; Treasurer, David Lingle. From this period the company has been one of the most active and efficient in the borough.

On the 3d day of May, 1843, application was made to the court of Dauphin County for an act of incorporation, which was granted on the 2d of September, 1843, and recorded on the 8th day of September, 1843, in Deed-Book P, vol ii. page 432.

The want of a suitable building for the carriage and a room for the meetings of the company was a great inconvenience, and prompted by the generosity previously manifested by the citizens, it was proposed and a committee appointed on the 5th of January, 1844, to devise ways and means to raise funds to erect a suitable house. On the 2d of February, 1844, a lot of ground was purchased, on the corner of Second Street and Meadow Lane, from C. L. Berghans, Esq., for the sum of ninety dollars.

The building was commenced on the 4th of March, 1844, and on the 23d of March, 1844, the corner stone was laid with appropriate ceremonies. The building was completed on the 3d of August, 1844. It was one of the most perfect of the kind in the State, being provided with all the most approved accommodations suitable to the character of the uses to which it was applied. The structure cost eight hundred dollars.

The carriage of the company being old and ill suited, another was proposed and urged of more modern construction, for which object members were chosen to raise money by subscription, and on the 22d day of May, 1850, a contract was made with George Ruhl, of Philadelphia, to build a "crab" or hose-carriage for the sum of three hundred and fifty dollars, which was completed and given into the charge of the company on the 5th of October, 1850. The first occasion that called the company into service was the burning of a stable and bark-house at Mr. Greenawalt's tannery, in River Alley above Locust, on the 28th of April, 1841. The company were in possession of the fire-plug at the corner of Front and Walnut Streets.

On April 29, 1858, the company desiring a more eligible location, purchased from C. O. Zimmerman for the sum of one thousand dollars the lot on Chestnut Street at present occupied by the company. The old hose-house and lot was sold to a Mr. Erb for six hundred and fifty dollars. The company at once proceeded to erect their present building from plans furnished by L. M. Simon. The entire cost of the structure was three thousand one hundred and twenty dollars and one cent. The company has been keenly alive to the importance of increasing the efficiency of the fire department of Harrisburg, and on Nov. 26, 1867, cheerfully responded to the call for the election of delegates to meet in convention for the purpose of forming a fire insurance association, the creation of which led on Oct. 6, 1868, to the passage of an ordinance by the Common Council for the election of a chief and two assistant engineers.

The introduction of steam fire-engines into the city created a new era in the fire department of Harrisburg, and although the Washington Company still maintained their distinctive character as a hose company, they determined, nevertheless, to keep abreast with the step of progress. Accordingly, on March 7, 1876, the trustees were instructed to inquire into the cost of a modernly-constructed hose-cart to be drawn by horses, and subsequently secured the one now used by the company. It cost six hundred dollars, and first went into service on the 27th of June, 1876, while the old carriage was taken apart and placed in the hall as a relic of the past.

MOUNT VERNON HOOK-AND-LADDER COMPANY, No. 5.—This company was first organized on the 5th of April, 1858, under the name of the "Independent Hook-and-Ladder company," which was changed in August or September following to the "Mount Vernon Hook-and-Ladder Company." The following is a list of the first officers of the company: President, William C. A. Lawrence; Vice-President, Richard M. Birkman; Secretary, William B. Wilson; Treasurer, J. A. Carman; Board of Directors, David G. May, Thomas W. Anderson, Frank A. Murray, and Robert G. Denning; Elective Board, David G. May, T. Rockhill Smith, and Thomas W. Anderson. The apparatus of the company was manufactured by Mr. R. J. Fleming, of Harrisburg, and cost eight hundred dollars. It consists of a carriage, hooks and ladders, etc., and has been thus described:

"The total length of the apparatus is forty-eight feet, the length of coupling twenty-seven feet, and the length of the largest ladder forty feet. The iron-work is polished, the springs of steel, and the axles of turned iron. The wheels and body are elegantly varnished and decorated with gilt and carved work, the knobs being tipped with brass. The wood-work is painted of a dark claret color and durably constructed. Axes, picks, and lanterns are provided and secured in proper positions about the carriage, and a beautiful signal-lamp surmounts the whole."

The company, in 1858, occupied the two-story frame building on the east corner of Locust Street and Raspberry Alley, which was altered and arranged for its accommodation, where it remained until the spring of 1866, when it took possession of their present structure on Fourth Street near North. In the fall of 1875 the company secured a patent tiller to their truck and began the use of horses to draw their apparatus. The first service of the company was at the fire which destroyed Mr. German's brewery on Chestnut Street.

PAXTON (PAXTANG) FIRE COMPANY, No. 6.—The removal of the Washington Hose Company from the corner of Second Street and Meadow Lane left that portion of Harrisburg in a comparatively unprotected condition to meet the contingency of fire. Fully appreciating this situation of affairs, a number of public-spirited citizens held a meeting on Nov. 22, 1859, and the result was the organization of the Paxton Fire Company. The company at once went into service, having secured the powerful hand-engine with side brakes formerly owned by the Friendship Fire Company. This they stored in a small frame building that formerly stood on Second Street, north of the company's present building. This was used very effectively by the company until Feb. 1, 1867, when they purchased their present steam-engine, which was christened the "John Harris." The apparatus is one of the largest in the city, having first-class pumps, but ranking only as a second-class engine. The company subsequently bought a lot from Lewis Metzgar on Second Street, a short distance south of their original location, upon which they erected, at a cost of three thousand six hundred dollars, their present fine building. Like the other steam fire companies, the Paxton is provided with hose-carts and an ample supply of hose to meet almost any emergency.

GOOD WILL FIRE COMPANY, No. 7.—This company was organized in 1860, and first used a hand-engine with side brakes. The first house of the company stood on Ridge Road a short distance above Cumberland. It was a frame building, and erected by the day-labor of the individual members of the company themselves. The hand-engine was used until July, 1869, when the company purchased their present steam-engine, named "Marion Verbeke," in honor of the wife of William K. Verbeke, Esq., both of whom were large contributors and took much interest in promoting the interests of the organization. The company vacated their original premises and moved into their present elegant building in 1873.

MOUNT PLEASANT HOSE COMPANY, No. 8.—That portion of the city lying on the ridge east of Paxtang Creek is locally known as East Harrisburg, which now forms one of the most important and thriving sections of the city. Its long distance from the heart of the city and its otherwise somewhat isolated condition gave it little or no protection in case of fire. Appreciating this situation of affairs, a number of the property-holders met together in February, 1877, and the result was the organization of the Mount Pleasant Hose Company; with the following officers: President, William C. Kibby; Vice-President, H. M. Kelley; Secretary, A. C. McKee; Financial Secretary, S. H. Kautz; Treasurer, Jacob Zarker, Sr. The company in 1879 purchased a hose-carriage with the necessary quantity of hose, and at once went into active service. During September or October next the company expect to move into the fine and capacious brick building which the city is erecting for them at the corner of Thirteenth and Howard Streets.

THE FIRE DEPARTMENT.—The creation of a chief and two assistant engineers of the Harrisburg fire department grew out of the organization of a fire insurance company formed by the several fire companies of the city, and subsequently known as the Harrisburg Fire Association. In September, 1868, the Fire Association transmitted a circular letter to each of the fire companies, requesting them to elect delegates to meet in convention to elect a chief and two assistant engineers for the fire department of the city. The convention was held Sept. 4, 1868, and resulted in the election of Henry C. Schaffer as chief engineer, Joseph Montgomery as first assistant, and Samuel Ebersole as second assistant engineer. We append a list of the chief and assistant engineers of the fire department of the city since the passage of the ordinance in 1868 down to date:

CHAPTER XIV.

Early Educational Efforts—The Harrisburg Academy—The Lancasterian System—The Public Schools.

As early as 1786, just one year after the erection of the county, the inhabitants of Harrisburg in order to assist in bringing into effect the intentions of John Harris, who had granted the reuts, issues, and profits of his ferry across the river for the endowment of an English and German academy in that town, entered the following agreement:

We, the subscribers, do each of us for ourselves promise to pay, or cause to be paid, to John Hoge, Moses Gilmor, Conrad Bombaugh, and John Brooks, or their order upon demand, the sums annexed to each of our names respectively, to be applied by them in purchasing materials for and in building a school-house in one corner of the public ground in the town of Harrisburg.

To witness whereof we have hereunto set our hands, with the sums annexed, this 20th day of April, 1786:

The first trustees of the academy were John A. Hanna, John Hamilton, and John Kean. The trustees for 1791 were John A. Hanna, John Kean, John Dentzel, Stacy Potts, and Adam Boyd. The following is the preamble of the constitution adopted by the subscribers to the academy fund:

“WHEREAS, The prosperity and happiness of the free and independent citizens of the United States in a great measure depends on the proper cultivation and improvement of the minds of the young and rising generations, whereby they may be qualified to perform their respective duties in civil society as well as the more important obligations of religion; wherefore, we, the citizens of Harrisburg, in the State of Pennsylvania, in order to establish a seminary of usefal learning, have by voluntary contributions built a school-house, hoping through the favor of Divine Providence, with the benevolent aid of the honorable Legislature of this Commonwealth, and the charitable donations of the well disposed, together with the diligent care and attention of the governors and teachers, it may become a respectable institution, renowned for the pious education of future generations; for which purpose we do ordain and establish the following rules for the constitution and government thereof.”

Section 8 of the rules directed that the teachers shall from time to time be obliged to teach such number of charity scholars as shall be recommended by the trustees (not exceeding four) gratis, which the trustees and teachers shall keep secret.

Oct. 4, 1791. Samuel Barnes Davis was appointed teacher of the academy for three months; and at a meeting of the trustees on Jan. 3, 1792, it was resolved “that Mr. Davis, the teacher, shall submit for the approbation of the trustees copies of all such extracts or speeches as he intends the children under his care shall speak or deliver at public exhibition.”

Oct. 22, 1795. Mr. William Moderwell was appointed teacher of the Latin and Greek department of the academy, to commence this day.

Nov. 21, 1795. The trustees determined that the following books should be taught in the Latin and Greek department in the order in which they succeed each other:

Latin—Grammar, Vocabulary, Corderii, etc., Fables, Erasmus Delectæ, e Veteri, Selectæ e Profanis. Greek—Greek Grammar, Testament, Lucian, Xenophon, Homer, Cæsar’s Commentaries, Ovid, Virgil, Sallust, Horace, Cicero.

The early minutes of the academy, the original of which are in the possession of A. Boyd Hamilton, Esq., show that, like all new and deserving enterprises, the institution had its trials and difficulties, but by persevering energy these were finally overcome, and the academy to-day ranks as one of the best select educational establishments in the State.

On the 4th of April, 1809, Governor Snyder approved of the act incorporating the Harrisburg Academy. By the act of incorporation there was included a grant from the State of one thousand dollars to purchase a lot of ground whereon “to erect a suitable building, and to procure a pair of globes and such other astronomical and mathematical apparatus as may be necessary.” The incorporators and original members of the board of trustees were William Graydon, Christian Kunkel, George Hoyer, Robert Harris, Samuel Laird, Henry Beader, John Wyeth, Joshua Elder, and Dr. John Luther. In November following a lot of ground was secured on Market Street, now Nos. 314, 316, 318. In 1814, by permission of the State, a building was erected on the public ground on the corner of Fifth and Walnut Streets. This, however, was found to be in direct violation of the trust by the State as expressed in the original deed of conveyance by John Harris to the commonwealth. For many years annual appropriations were received from the State, but financial embarrassments seem to have been its lot for many years. Notwithstanding these struggles and discouragements, by disposing of its Market Street property, by subscriptions, etc., the trustees finally secured the Maclay mansion, on the corner of Front and South Streets. This fine old stone building was erected by Senator William Maclay about the year 1791. Here, at last, the old academy found a resting-place, and prosperity has dawned upon it. Many of our best citizens have been educated in the Harrisburg Academy, and many of those who were pupils "have won honor and been greatly esteemed both in public and private life." The principals of the school, as far as we have been able to glean, were: 1810, Joseph Findley; 1813-14, Samuel Guernsey; 1815-16, Joshua Holt; 1816, S. G. Strong; 1817, —; 1818, Nicholas B. Wood; 1819-21, Rev. William T. Hamilton; 1822, Samuel Davies; 1823, Rev. Nathaniel Todd; 1825-28, Dr. John Keagy; 1828-29, — Porter; 1829-30, Rev. John MacBeth; 1830-31, Rev. A. O. Hubbard; 1831-46, Alfred Armstrong. Assistants—Benjamin Creaver (1838), John McKinney, Augustus Wyeth, Thomas J. Bigham; 1846, Rev. William S. Graham; 1847-50, Rev. Mahlon Long; 1850-52, Rev. — Chapman; 1852-54, Rev. John T. Demarest, D.D.; 1854-60, A. A. Kemble; 1860, Professor Jacob F. Seiler, A.M.

Other educational institutions flourished during all these years, but of them the Harrisburg Academy is the only survivor.

From the adoption of the State Constitution of 1790 until 1809 no legislative provision of a general nature was made in reference to public schools. An act was then passed "for the gratuitous education of the poor." It required a report to be made by the assessors of the townships, wards, and boroughs to the commissioners of the respective counties of all children between the age of five and twelve years whose parents were unable to provide for their education; and that when the lists had been approved by the commissioners, that such parents should be notified thereof, and be permitted to send their children to the most convenient schools at the expense of the county. Notwithstanding the many defects of this law, it continued in force until it was repealed by that of 29th of March, 1824, which provided that every township should elect three "schoolmen," who should superintend the education of poor children within their respective townships, and "cause them to be instructed as other children are treated, the expense of tuition to be paid by the county." But each county might authorize the "schoolmen" to divide the township into school districts, and to establish schools at the expense of the township, to which all children belonging to the districts might be sent for three years, at any time between the ages of six and fourteen years. This law was applicable to the whole State, with the exception of certain school districts in the city and county of Philadelphia and city of Lancaster. It was repealed in 1826 and the act of 1809 revived.

Besides the general provisions of the early acts relating to education throughout the State there were special ones enacted for certain localities. Thus in 1818 the city and county of Philadelphia were erected into a district called the "First School District of Pennsylvania." By the act of April 1, 1822, the city and county of Lancaster were erected into the "Second School District," with privileges and duties similar to the first. By the act of 11th April, 1827, the same system was established at Harrisburg, and by act of 19th February, 1828, at Pittsburgh.

The act establishing a public school in Harrisburg authorized the commissioners of Dauphin County to make use of any part of the court-house of said county which may be unoccupied, build or procure a suitable building for the purpose of educating the children directed to be taught at the public expense, to engage a suitable teacher or teachers, and they were required to direct that all children educated at the public expense, who shall reside in the borough of Harrisburg, or within one mile thereof, should attend the school, which was to be taught and conducted on the principle of Lancaster's system of education in its most approved state. The commissioners were further empowered to admit children whose parents or guardians were in circumstances to pay for their tuition, and were at liberty to charge in each individual case any sum which may be agreed upon between the parties, which should be applied in all cases to the support of the school.

Under the provisions of the act of April 11, 1827, the commissioners of the county established a school on Lancaster's plan in Harrisburg in the latter part of that year, and erected the capacious building now owned by the school board, on Walnut Street, opposite Short, in the city of Harrisburg, for its accommodation. The Lancasterian system was based upon monitorial or mutual instruction. Thus, a school would be divided into several sections, according to the acquirements of the scholars, over each one of which was appointed by the master a "monitor,"—generally the most intelligent and advanced scholar, whose duty it was to superintend the instruction of his companions in the section to which he belonged. Of course, all the sections were under the general superintendence of the master.

According to the report of the county commissioners in April, 1828, we learn that the whole number of children taught in the school was three hundred and fifty. The number of children taught in the school whose parents, guardians, or friends defrayed, or agreed to defray, any part of the whole of the expense of their tuition, was one hundred and fifty-four. The amount received for the tuition of children whose parents, guardians, or friends defrayed the whole or any part of their education, was fifty-five dollars and eight cents. The amount due for the tuition of children whose parents, guardians, or friends agreed to pay the whole or any part of their education, was two hundred and fifty-one dollars and twenty cents.

Prior to 1832 aid was given to the minister of the colored church, who had established a school for that race in the old log church corner of Third and Mulberry Streets. On the 7th of November, that year, the commissioners direct "the clerk to inform Jacob Richardson, teacher of colored children in Harrisburg, that in future the colored children under his tuition shall be taught in the Lancasterian school, as the law directs; and that the commissioners will hereafter allow him no compensation for teaching said children."

By the act of the General Assembly of 9th of April, 1833, this school was discontinued on the 20th of May, 1834. It was not a financial success to the county, and the influence of the rural districts was such as to secure its abolishment, although educationally it accomplished much good. The present common school system was established Dec. 5, 1835, and from the report of the State school superintendent for the year ending Dec. 31, 1837, the following statistics show the progress of the system in the county of Dauphin in two years' time:

Number of schools, 48; number of teachers,—males, 45, females, 13; number of scholars,—males, 1541, females, 1320; number of months kept open, four months and twenty days; moneys received,—State appropriation, $2037.34; from the county, $1430.17; from the districts, $4731.89; average salary of teachers,—males, $20.80½, females, $19.16; cost of school-house repairs, $1575.29; other expenses, $530.53.

Small as are these figures, the result at the time was considered very favorable, and exceeded many counties with a much larger population than Dauphin. Through Superintendent Foose we are furnished the following educational statistics of the city of Harrisburg, which will convey at a glance the rapid growth which that magnificent system has made:

YEARS.	Number of Schools.	Number of Teachers.	Number of Pupils.	Salaries of Teachers.
				Male Teachers.	Female Teachers.
1836.....	11	21	957	$22	$19
1841.....	19	19	986	28	19
1857.....	24	24	976	40	25
1867.....	47	47	3421	57	35
1877.....	78	96	5053	67	45
1880.....	90	107	3259	59	41
1883.....	97	113	6124	59.65	43.17

There are eighteen buildings owned by the board of control used for school purposes, valued at $307,250. Three rented rooms are used for school purposes. Seating capacity of all buildings is 5900, and value of furniture $21073.30.

HIGH SCHOOLS.—The city was originally divided into two school districts, each with its own board, and each board sustained two high schools, one for each sex, from the establishment of the system until 1869, when the two districts were consolidated into one, and the original four high schools into two schools, one for each sex, substantially as they are at the present time, so far as their organization is concerned. The boys' high school, of which J. Howard Wert, A.M., is principal, enrolled seventy-six pupils during the past year. Two assistant teachers were employed to carry on the work of this school. The girls' high school, of which Miss Jennie F. Givler is principal, assisted by six additional teachers, enrolled one hundred and sixty pupils during the year.

Course of Studies.—First year,—Arithmetic reviewed, Algebra, English Grammar and Composition, English History, Physiology, Physical Geography or Latin, Etymology. Second year,—English History completed, Algebra completed, Latin or Natural History, Natural Philosophy, Elementary Geometry (girls), Double Entry Book-keeping (boys). Third or junior year,—Rhetoric and Composition, Geometry, Latin, or Special History, Natural Philosophy, Arithmetic and Algebra reviewed with application of principles. Senior or fourth year,—Latin or English Literature, or General History, Rhetoric and Composition, Civil Government, Surveying and Navigation (boys), Trigonometry and theory of teaching (girls), Greek (optional with advanced classes); Drawing,—boys, Mechanical; girls, Industrial and Perspective. General attention to Reading, Elocution, Writing, Spelling, Declamation, Composition, Manners and Morals throughout the course. There is a teachers' library owned and controlled by the City Teachers' Institute, consisting of about five hundred volumes. This institute meets the first and third Saturdays of each calendar month, while schools are in session.

CITY SUPERINTENDENTS.—Daniel S. Burns, A.M., was elected first city superintendent in 1869; was re-elected in 1872, 1875, 1878, and resigned 1879. L. O. Foose, A.M., was elected to fill the unexpired term of Mr. Burns, 1879, re-elected in 1881, and still holds the office.

Banks and Banking Institutions—Public Buildings of the State—Charitable Institutions—Post-Offices and Postmasters—Census Returns, etc.

BANKS AND BANKING INSTITUTIONS.

HARRISBURG NATIONAL BANK.—This institution was chartered by the Legislature on the 9th of May, 1814, with a capital of $300,000, and was regularly organized in the month of June of the same year by the election of the following board of directors:

on the second story. The bank remained there, however, only a few months, when it was removed into the brick building at present No. 21 South Second Street, where it remained until 1817, when it purchased from the Philadelphia Bank the brick building which that company had used as a branch, situated at the southwest corner of Market Square and Blackberry Alley, in which it continued until the summer of 1854, when the building was torn down to give place to the present elegant structure, the bank in the mean time carrying on its business in the house adjoining, No. 14 South Market Square. One of the earliest notes of this institution is a "shinplaster" of 1816, a fac-simile of which is given below.

We append a list of the presidents and cashiers of the bank from its first organization to the present day: Presidents, William Wallace, elected June, 1814; Thomas Elder, elected June 19, 1816; Jacob M. Haldeman, elected May 3, 1853; William M. Kerr, elected Dec. 31, 1856 (died Dec. 17, 1864); Jacob S. Haldeman, elected Dec. 28, 1864; Valentine Hummel, elected Jan. 20, 1869 (died Sept. 4, 1870); Dr. George W. Reily, elected Sept. 28, 1870; Cashiers, John Downey, elected June, 1814; John Forster, elected April 19, 1815; Henry Walters, elected Nov. 25, 1833; James W. Weir, elected Oct. 30, 1844, serving until his death in April, 1878; Jeremiah Uhler, elected April 17, 1878. The institution has a national bank charter of the date of November, 1864, numbered 580, and the name

John McCleery, Isaac Hershey, Henry Bader, Robert Harris, Christian Kunkel, John Howard, David Ferguson, William Wallace, Jacob M. Haldeman, Thomas Brown, John Shoch, Abraham Oves, and Peter Keller. William Wallace, Esq., was elected president, and John Downey cashier. The bank first went into operation at the then residence of its cashier, John Downey, in the building No. 118 South Second Street, a few doors northwest of Cherry Alley. The banking room was in the front part of the building, and the board of directors usually met in the front room

Harrisburg Bank changed to Harrisburg National Bank.

THE MECHANICS' BANK was chartered by the State Feb. 8, 1853, with a capital of $50,000. At its organization Philip Dougherty was chosen president, and J. C. Bomberger cashier. Mr. Dougherty died in 1865, when the institution passed into the possession of Mr. Bomberger as sole owner, by whom it has ever since been conducted as an individual bank. The Mechanics' Bank has always sustained the best of credit, and during the financial panic of ten years ago it passed safely through the crisis unimpaired, and has enjoyed a reputation not excelled by any banking-house in the State. It is located on the southeast corner of Market and Third Streets.

FIRST NATIONAL BANK OF HARRISBURG.—Prior to the war the banking-house of Cameron, Calder, Eby & Co. had been established at the corner of Second and Walnut Streets. In July, 1863, the institution received a national bank charter numbered 201; capital stock $100,000. On the 12th of December, 1863, the stockholders organized, and on the 1st of January, 1864, commenced business. The bank charter was extended twenty years from the 24th of February, 1883. Dec. 12, 1863, John H. Briggs was elected president; Jan. 14, 1871, Jacob R. Eby, and on Jan. 17, 1874, William Calder. Mr. Calder died July 19, 1880, and on the 26th of the same month William W. Jennings was elected president. George H. Small is and has been cashier of the bank from the date of organization.

THE FARMERS' BANK OF HARRISBURG was organized May 6, 1872, as an individual bank, with Daniel Eppley as president, and Frederick C. Fink as cashier. It was chartered under the State laws on the 3d of May, 1873, with a paid-up capital of $100,000, the same officers continuing. The banking-house is located on the northeast corner of Market and Third Streets. It has been a successful institution, and maintained the credit of a substantial bank.

THE COMMONWEALTH GUARANTEE TRUST AND SAFE DEPOSIT COMPANY.—This institution was organized on the 16th of August, 1881, with a capital of $250,000. The same year the company secured the building formerly known as Brant's Hall, adjoining the court-house. The main portion of this structure was remodeled from ground-floor to roof. One-half of the first floor is to be occupied by the institution. The room is twenty-eight feet by one hundred and twenty feet. There are two large vaults capable of containing about two thousand two hundred safe-boxes for renters. The vaults are equal to any in the United States in construction for security against burglary or fire. The company have the power and will act as trustee for any purpose whatever, as receiver, assignee, guardian, administrator, and receive money on deposit and loan money. The safe-box system has been a want long felt in this community for the deposit of valuables, many in adjoining counties having been compelled to go to Philadelphia for similar purposes. The officers are: President, William W. Jennings; Vice-President, William T. Hildrup; Secretary and Treasurer, William B. Hart; Directors, Simon Cameron, Charles L. Bailey, David Fleming, James Boyd, Lane S. Hart, D. L. Jauss, Charles H. Mullin, David Mayer, Theodore D. Greenawalt, James Young, A. S. Patterson, Isaac Frazer, Spencer C. Gilbert.

THE PUBLIC BUILDINGS OF THE STATE.—In the centre of the city, and in the centre of a beautiful park of ten acres, stands prominently the capitol of the Keystone State. It is a plain, substantial brick edifice, erected sixty years ago, at a cost of two hundred thousand dollars,—an unexpensive building, it is true, but just as comfortable and just as commodious as if it was built of marble at a cost of three or four million dollars. The site is a commanding one, and the park surrounding one of the prettiest in the country. The library of the State is located in the west wing of the capitol building. It contains a law library unsurpassed in the Union. Considering the immense advantages and facilities of the State, the miscellaneous portion of the library is not as great as it ought to be, but through the strenuous efforts of several of the librarians, who have been gentlemen of culture, it contains many books of great value. There being no public library in the city, that of the State is much resorted to by the citizens. Adjoining the legislative halls are the buildings for the different departments of the State, plain, substantial brick structures.

The Executive mansion is on Front Street, north of Pine Street. It is a plain, three-story brick dwelling-house. The interior is handsomely furnished. The building was the gift of the city of Harrisburg.

In the northeastern part of the city is located the Pennsylvania Lunatic Hospital, the first institution erected by the State. The commonwealth has reason to be proud of its many charitable institutions for the care of the insane poor, and that at Harrisburg still retains its status for efficient and skillful management under Dr. J. Z. Gerhardt, who has been connected with the hospital for several years.

CHARITABLE INSTITUTIONS.

HARRISBURG HOSPITAL.—On the evening of Dec. 3, 1872, the following gentlemen met in the parlor of the Harrisburg Bank: William Calder, Rudolph F. Kelker, James McCornick, Jr., A. Boyd Hamilton, J. Donald Cameron, James Fleming, William O. Hickok, Herman Alricks, Henry McCormick, Wayne MacVeagh, David Fleming, James W. Weir, and Henry Gilbert, who passed the following resolution: That "William Calder, Rudolph F. Kelker, James McCornick, A. Boyd Hamilton, and J. Donald Cameron take into consideration the subject of a dispensary and hospital, and report to a future meeting." From this action, much subsequent conference, great industry, with the cheerful aid of the benevolent citizens of Harrisburg, came this hospital.

In March, 1873, thirty-nine persons were reported to have contributed $4335. It was determined to apply for a charter, which was granted in May, a part of the present property purchased, and immediate measures taken to prepare it for hospital purposes. It was opened Aug. 4, 1873. The first managers were James McCormick, president; A. Boyd Hamilton, secretary; J. Donald Cameron, David C. Kolp, William Calder, Henry McCormick, Jones Wistar, Rudolph F. Kelker, Robert A. Lamberton, John Curwen, Daniel W. Gross, George W. Reily, with James W. Weir, treasurer. The first patients were received on August 7th; since to April 1, 1883, there has been treated in the wards 1788; in the dispensary 26,455; and prescriptions filled from 1879, when that service commenced, 89,919. The total cost of maintenance has been upwards of $60,000, and of real estate, alterations and new buildings, nearly $65,000, or $125,000 as the actual money cost in ten years. No salaries are paid except to those who are in charge of the hospital, its property and housekeeping. It is able to accommodate comfortably from 50 to 75 patients, for whom every comfort has been provided. Its staff consists of eight physicians, surgeons, and an apothecary, a steward, matron, and nurses as required. Its buildings are on Front and Mulberry Streets, in the Third Ward, and are an ornament to the city.

POST-OFFICE AND POSTMASTERS.

From 1789 to 1791 the mails for Harrisburg were served from Lancaster, and possibly those from the West at Carlisle. During the latter year an office was established at Harrisburg, and John Montgomery, son of the Rev. Joseph Montgomery, of Paxtang, appointed postmaster. Mr. Montgomery continued in office until the spring of 1793, when he resigned, and John W. Allen, one of the proprietors of the Oracle of Dauphin, was either appointed or held the office ad interim until superseded by John Wyeth. Originally, says Mr. Hamilton, the post-office was "next opposite" the register's office, which then was in Mulberry Street. When Mr. Wyeth was appointed the office was in the building now owned by Frederick Gohl, No. 219 South Second Street. In 1799 the Oracle notices the removal of the office to the residence of Mr. Wyeth, "adjoining the Rev. Mr. Snowden, being nearly opposite to where it has been kept for several years." As the Rev. Mr. Snowden then occupied the brick house southwest corner of Mulberry and Second Streets, the "building adjoining" is easily recognized.

Mr. Wyeth's successor was John Wright, who was appointed by President John Adams about the year 1798, and resided and kept the office in a two-story frame house located on South Second Street below Chestnut Street, now No. 112, owned by Jacob F. Haehnel. The salary of the postmaster then was only fifty dollars per annum. Mr. Wright taught a school in connection with the office. He only resided there one year, and then removed to South Front Street below Chestnut, in the house now J. Brishen Boyd's, and is No. 111. For some reason he changed his residence the next year to Mulberry Street near Second, upper side, where he resided eleven years, continuing his school, and where some of our older citizens now living received their preliminary education. This property was purchased by William Root about the year 1840, who removed the original house, and erected a three-story brick building on the street and a large tinware and stove manufactory on the rear of the lot.

At this time the stage stables were located on the corner of River and Cherry Alleys, the site being occupied by the bakery and spice-mill of Mr. Haehnel at the present time. These stables were subsequently removed, probably to the east corner of Fifth and Walnut Streets, as they were there many years, and the river was mainly crossed by them at the Upper or Maclay's ferry. These changes may have induced Mr. Wright again to move, for in 1812 his residence and office were at the corner of Front and Walnut Streets, where he resided but one year. James McCormick's residence occupies the ground at present. The next location was on Walnut Street near Raspberry Alley, in the house now occupied by Robert Bryson, No. 215. The post-office was kept here eleven years, and it was probably here, that Mr. Wright died.

As the State Legislature and the public offices were now located here, the business of the office greatly increased, and of course more laborious, the salary was made five hundred dollars per annum. During the year 1822, or in 1823, Mrs. Wright, who was continued in office, removed from Walnut Street to the southeast corner of Market Square, next door to the George Ziegler's tavern. The salary was then raised to nine hundred dollars. Mrs. Wright died here during the year.

Mrs. Wright was succeeded by James Peacock, who printed a newspaper called the Pennsylvania Republican. He was appointed by President Monroe, about 1823. The Zollinger Brothers now own and occupy the place. Mr. Peacock did not remain in that location long, but removed the office to the house of Mr. Stine, north corner of Locust and Third Streets, and the year following his office and residence to Front Street above Market, now Mrs. John Haldeman's. It was here that the late James W. Weir served as Mr. Peacock's clerk. Subsequently the office was transferred to the two-story brick house next to Mrs. Mary Hanna's, where Mr. Peacock lived many years.

The first time the post-office was separated from the residence of the postmaster was in 1832 or 1833, when Mr. Peacock removed the office from his residence to a room in Mr. Keller's house on Second Street, near Walnut, where it remained several years, when he purchased from the heirs of Henry Miller the three-story brick house now No. 7 North Market Square.

Mr. Peacock was superseded by Isaac G. McKinley, who was appointed by President Polk in 1845. The office remained there until the appointment of Andrew J. Jones by President Taylor, in 1849, who changed it to the old Pennsylvania Bank, on the south corner of Market Square, now the site of the First Presbyterian Church. Here the office remained during Mr. Jones' term, and also during the four years John H. Brant was postmaster. The latter was appointed in 1852 by President Pierce. In 1856, Dr. George W. Porter was appointed Mr. Brant's successor by President Buchanan. He removed the office to his residence, on Market Street near Fourth Street, now No. 336, where it was continued until the appointment of George Bergner by President Lincoln in 1860, who removed the office to his residence, on Market Street near Third, and next door to the Lochiel Hotel, now 225, where it remained several years, when it was taken to No. 314 Market Street.

During the incumbency of President Johnson, Gen. Joseph F. Knipe was honored with the appointment. On the accession, however, of Gen. Grant to the Presidency, Mr. Bergner was reinstated in his old position, which he filled until his death, which occurred on the 5th of August, 1874, having held the office about eleven years. M. W. McAlarney was shortly after appointed his successor by President Grant, and retains the place at this date.

To repeat, the following have been the postmasters at Harrisburg from the establishment of the post-office there:

1. John Montgomery, appointed in 1792.
2. John W. Allen, appointed August, 1793.
3. John Wyeth, appointed October, 1793.
4. John Wright, appointed 1802.
5. Mrs. Wright took the office at his death, in 1814, who held it until 1822, when James Peacock was appointed.
6. James Peacock, who was succeeded in office by the following gentlemen:
7. Isaac G. McKinley.
8. Andrew J. Jones.
9. John H. Brant.
10. Dr. George W. Porter.
11. George Bergner.
12. Gen. Joseph F. Knipe.
13. George Bergner, died in office.
14. Henry Gilbert, ad interim.
15. M. W. McAlarney, the present incumbent.

The New Post-Office Building.—On the 9th of February, 1875, a bill was introduced in the United States Senate appropriating "one hundred and sixty thousand dollars, or so much thereof as may be necessary," for the purchase of a suitable tract of ground for the erection thereon of a post-office and other government offices, which passed Congress and was approved by the President March 4th in the same year, and at subsequent sessions other appropriations were made to complete the work as money was needed. A commission to select a site was appointed, consisting of George Bergner, John J. Pearson, Daniel Eppley, A. Boyd Hamilton, and Henry Gilbert, but their recommendation of a site was not accepted. On the 14th of June, 1875, the Secretary of the Treasury appointed M. W. McAlarney, postmaster, Charles J.

Bruner, collector, and additional law judge Hon. Robert M. Henderson a second commission to receive proposals for a site and make recommendations. The commission failed to receive any proposal which came within their instructions, but reported that a great many pieces of ground were offered. Upon the receipt of their report Supervising Architect Potter came to Harrisburg and selected the site at Third and Walnut, after which negotiations with the several owners were continued for eighteen months before the title was secured, and in two cases proceedings in condemnation were had. On the 10th of March, 1873, an act was passed by the Pennsylvania Legislature ceding jurisdiction, etc., of land in Harrisburg for a post-office. Jehu DeHaven, of Harrisburg, was appointed superintendent, James G. Hill, of Washington, architect, and Postmaster McAlarney disbursing agent. The superintendent began work in December, 1877, and completed it in December, 1882. On the 10th of May, 1882, the post-office was removed into it from No. 314 Market Street. The building is sixty by one hundred and twenty feet, of three stories with a basement. The foundation of Conewago granite is laid in concrete; from the foundation to the water-table the stone is of Richmond granite, and the superstructure is of Maine granite. The first story is occupied by the post-office, the second by collector's offices and offices of the railway mail service, and the third story contains a court-room and rooms for the officers of the court. The wood-work is of oak, the court-room is wainscoted eight feet high with Tennessee marble, and all the offices and rooms contain mantles of marble or wood of elegant design. It is heated with hot water. The cost of the site for the post-office was one hundred and ten thousand seven hundred dollars, that of construction two hundred and ninety thousand dollars, making a total of a little over four hundred thousand dollars. The edifice, plain in its massiveness, is one of the most substantial structures in the country, and a credit to all concerned in its erection.

DAUPHIN COUNTY HISTORICAL SOCIETY.—A preliminary meeting to take measures to organize a historical society was held on the evening of May 10, 1869. At a subsequent meeting, held in the lecture-room of the Market Square Presbyterian Church, a constitution and by-laws were adopted and signed, and an election for officers held. Upon application to the commissioners of the county a room in the court-house was secured for their use, subsequently fitted up, and where the society has ever since held its meetings and preserved its already valuable library. Files of all the newspapers of the county are kept and properly bound, and its collection of newspapers is a special feature. The society was incorporated in January, 1870, and measures have been adopted to the end that whatever may be donated to the society will be permanently preserved. What is needed is a fire-proof building for its valuable collection of manuscripts, books, and papers. Its officers are A. Boyd Hamilton, president; Hamilton Alricks and Daniel Eppley, vice-presidents; Rev. Thomas H. Robinson, D.D., corresponding secretary; George Wolf Buehler, recording secretary; John B. Cox, treasurer, and William H. Egle, M.D., librarian.

PENNSYLVANIA STATE AGRICULTURAL SOCIETY.
 —On the 21st of January, 1851, there were called together delegates to the number of over three hundred, representing nearly every county in the State, by an address signed by James Gowen, A. L. Elwyn, Samuel G. Ford, Algernon S. Roberts, and John Price Wetherill, all leading agriculturists. This convention of farmers met in the court-house, Gen. James Irwin, of Centre County, being temporary chairman, and Hon. George W. Woodward permanent president. A constitution was adopted, which has not been substantially amended or changed since its original adoption, and the society was incorporated by an act of the Legislature approved 29th of March, 1851. The following gentlemen have filled the office of president: 1851-54, Frederick Watts; 1855-56, James Gowen; 1857-59, David Taggart; 1860-61, Jacob S. Haldeman; 1862-64, Thomas P. Knox; 1865-68, A. Boyd Hamilton; 1869, Amos E. Kapp; 1870-71, John C. Morris; 1872-74, Jacob R. Eby; 1875, George Scott; 1877, John W. Hammond; 1879-80, William S. Bissell; 1881, John C. Morris; 1882-83, James Miles.

The other officers of the society, who have filled the positions for a long period, have been: Corresponding Secretary, Elbridge McConkey; Recording Secretary, D. W. Seiler; Treasurer, John B. Rutherford; Chemist and Geologist, Professor A. L. Kennedy; Librarian, William H. Egle, M.D.

Exhibitions have been held by the society at Harrisburg, 1851, 1855, 1868, 1869; Lancaster, 1852, 1875; Pittsburgh, 1853, 1856, 1858, 1867, 1881, 1882; Philadelphia, 1854, 1857, 1859, 1879, 1880; Wyoming, 1860; Norristown, 1863; Easton, 1864, 1866, 1874; Williamsport, 1875; Scranton, 1870, 1871; Erie, 1872, 1873, 1877, 1878.

This society is second to none other in the United States, offering premiums during the past four years averaging over $50,000.

THE DAUPHIN DEPOSIT BANK was chartered in 1838, and for many years was successfully managed by James McCormick as president and Robert J. Ross as cashier. Upon Mr. Ross' death, J. Monroe Kreiter was elected cashier, and in 1869, James McCormick, Jr. Henry McCormick succeeded his father as president in 1870. Upon the expiration of the charter, in 1874, it was continued by the McCormick estate as a private bank. It is one of the most reliable institutions in the State.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION was organized Dec. 12, 1854. The first rooms of the association were on the second story of then Kelker's building, northeast corner of Market Street and River Alley; from thence they removed to Fleming's building (College Block), and finally into their own building, purchased from the McCormick estate, on the corner of Second and Locust Streets. The building contains a large public hall, a gymnasium, library-room, rooms for committees, etc. The presidents of the association have been: John W. Simon-ton, 1855-56; R. F. Kelker, 1856-57; Charles A. Hay, D.D., 1857-58; H. Mundy Graydon, 1858-59; Robert A. Lamberton, LL.D., 1859-60; George Cunkle, 1860-61; James Calder, D.D., 1861-62; W. C. Cattell, D.D., 1862-64; R. A. Martin, M.D., 1864-65; T. H. Robinson, D.D., 1865-66; James McCormick, 1866-67; Rev. Martin Stutzman, 1867; S. S. Shultz, M.D., 1867-68; Jacob F. Seiler, 1868-71; S. K. Dietrich, 1871-72; John E. Patterson, 1872-74; David C. Kolp, 1874-76; S. J. M. McCarrell, 1876-78; G. M. McCauley, 1878-81; H. Pitcairn, M.D., 1881-82; John C. Harvey, 1882-84.

THE HOME FOR THE FRIENDLESS is one of the city's noble charities. The building, an extensive one, is situate on the corner of Fifth and Muench Streets. Old and young are alike cared for, the latter properly educated. The institution is dependent upon the charity especially of the different evangelical denominations of Christians, although all creeds are alike admitted. It is deserving of the hearty and earnest support of the community. Mrs. Ellen R. Rutherford is president, and Mrs. David Fleming secretary.

MIDDLETOWN BOROUGH.

MIDDLETOWN, so called from its being located midway between Lancaster and Carlisle, is a post-town and borough. It is the oldest town in the county, having been laid out thirty years before Harrisburg, and seven years before Hummelstown. It is located nine miles by the turnpike southeast of Harrisburg, near the confluence of the Susquehanna and Swatara, at which point the Pennsylvania and Union Canals unite. Its site was that of an ancient Indian village founded by the Susquehanna nation. There must have been settlements of importance in this locality earlier than 1720, as preparations had been made by the Presbyterians to erect places of worship about that period. The population was so numerous that a demand for a provincial road was made in 1731. One was finally located in 1736 from Lancaster to Shippensburg, connecting with the one between Philadelphia and Lancaster. That portion of it from the Swatara to Harris' Ferry is still in use, clear of modern improvements,—of turnpike, canal, or railway.

In 1723 the family of Conrad Weiser, with about twenty other families, from the Province of New York, leaving Schoharie wended their way in a southwestern direction, traveling through the forest, till they reached the Susquehanna River, where they made canoes, freighted them with their families, and floated down the river to the mouth of Swatara Creek, and thence worked their way up till they reached a fertile spot on Tulpehocken Creek, in Berks County, where they settled.

In 1732 the provincial land-office was opened for the sale of patents. Previously, several pioneers, the ancestors of a cultivated and patriotic race, "rough Irish," as Logan, Penn's man of all work, wrote of them, made "claim of settlement," at or near the mouth of the Swatara; principally along the southern part of its valley. When the land-office was prepared for business, four hundred and twenty-three acres, at the mouth of the Swatara, was in the possession of Jacob Job, acquired from a previous owner, "one Anderson." Job was a merchant of Philadelphia, who had acquired his right in adjusting a mercantile venture with a trader of the border.

On the 14th day of May, 1743, Edward Smout, deputy surveyor under Blunston, surveyor for Lancaster County, surveyed for John Fisher, of Philadelphia, "in right of Jacob Job, a tract of land situate in the township of Paxtang, in the county of Lancaster, beginning at a W. O. a corner of Sa Kearkpatrick; thence S. 21 degrees W. 270 pchs. to a W. O. standing on the side of Swaterah creek; thence by the courses of ye said creek 169 pchs. to Susquehannah; thence up Susquehannah river by the courses of ye s'd river 184 ps. to W. H. a corner of Sa Means land; thence N. 20 degrees E. 349 pchs. to a B. O.; thence E. 96 ph. to a H. in Will. Kearkpatrick's line; thence S. 20 deg. E. 50 pchs. to a B. O. s'd Will. Kearkpatrick's corner; thence along s'd Kearkpatrick's line N. 70 deg. E. 122 pchs. to a W. O. the place of beginning, containing 423 A. 50 pchs., and the allowance of 6 p. c. for roads and highways."

On the draft by Smout, it is noted that this tract was "claimed by what I can find settled about fourteen years ago by one Anderson (who before I know not), from whence this wright proceeds." Now, fourteen years before 1742 would show "claim" as early as 1728. As has been stated, the locality began to assume importance as a frontier settlement before that.

Smout's survey states that Samuel Means was a land-owner on the west line and up the river; that Samuel and William Kirkpatrick owned on the north; east was "Cooper's land by wright of Stewart." These names are found on the assessments of 1750, by which time the Coopers had established themselves on the east bank of the Swatara. The Cooper tract comprised 268 acres.

The south line of the survey is carried four thousand five hundred and five feet, or nearly a mile, when it intersects the Swatara; following its west or right bank, two thousand seven hundred and eighty-nine feet, to its confluence with the Susquehanna River; thence up the Susquehanna three thousand and thirty-six feet, to nearly the north point of the present South Ward of the borough of Middletown. This survey is a copy of the original, indorsed "Lancaster, No. 98, May 22, 1782, Jno. Lukens, Sy. G."

The claim of Job came into possession of John Fisher in 1742. Its history has been preserved by no less an individual than Dr. Benjamin Franklin. Some years after Fisher became possessed of his "right," a dispute arose between the Proprietary land-office and the settlers on the Susquehanna and Swatara, mostly Scotch-Irish, respecting the charges for fees and interest in that important department. It brought the present site of Middletown into the controversy of 1756. It was used as an illustration of the grasping and despotic tendency of the heirs of Penn, who then claimed to own the fee of all the land in Pennsylvania.

In the appendix to his "Historical Review," Franklin states "that John Fisher in right of Jacob Job purchased 423 acres and 53 perches of land in Paxtang township, Lancaster County," under a warrant dated March 19, 1742, issued to said Job. Fisher was called upon to pay at the land-office "for the land, with ten years' interest, and other charges to Feb. 20, 1747," £141 4s. 6d. Fisher having also "purchased of Thomas Cooper 268 acres, adjoining on the east," was also called upon to pay for that £78 18s. 11d., a gross sum of £212 13s. 7d., about $593.

Franklin then says, "The purchaser not being skill'd in Accounts, but amazed at the Sum, apply'd to a Friend to examine this account."

The friend thus "rendering willing aid," showed by his computation that the Proprietaries, through the land department, had overcharged Fisher on Job's tract £67 8s. 11d.; on Cooper's £24 3s. 3½d., in all above the rates fixed by the rule of the office, £91 11s. 4½d. Dr. Franklin proceeds to argue, that "the fortunes of the heirs of William Penn will in a few years be beyond computation." His estimate of value in 1756 was nearly £2,000,000 sterling (10,000,000 dollars), and increasing at the rate of 15 per cent. a year. This astonishing assertion made a great sensation, but it seems to have been entirely correct.

The "Anderson Job tract" is the one upon which Middletown stands. The "Cooper tract," or part of it, is in the borough also. John Fisher, a Philadelphia Quaker, appears to have given it to his son, George Fisher, about 1754. Samuel Means and William Kirkpatrick, adjoining owners, are on the tax-list for 1749-50. Fisher is not, until 1755-56. The land was heavily timbered, as was the whole Swatara region, with "fine oak, hickory, walnut, chestnut, locust, poplar, and laurel trees." It continued to be so until about the beginning of the present century, when George Frey had "clearing done on the McClenaghan farm," formerly Kirkpatrick's, the tract north of Middletown.

As early as 1750, certainly, and for some years previously, population grew apace in the immediate vicinity of the mouth of the Swatara Creek. The locality was known to the provincial rulers as the "South End of Paxtang township, Lancaster County."

On Feb. 24, 1747, John, Thomas, and Richard Penn, Proprietaries of the Province, by patent granted to John Fisher, merchant of Philadelphia, six hundred and ninety-one acres and fifty-three perches of land and the usual allowance. The said John Fisher and Grace, his wife, on Jan. 27, 1759, granted unto George Fisher, their youngest son, the above land. Upon this tract the said George Fisher laid out the town of Middletown. The date of its laying out is in doubt. Some fix the time at 1755, others, 1756, and Hon. R. J. Fisher, of York, a descendant of the original proprietor, puts it in 1766. If George Fisher laid it out in 1755 or 1756, he must have entered upon the lands of his father for that purpose, as the title did not vest in him till 1759. On the other hand, there is evidence that the town was in existence before 1766, for the first deed on record for property in its limits was given by Fisher and his wife to Peter Spangler, March 1, 1761, for lot No. 18. The consideration was "seven shillings and sixpence and one English copper farthing, to be paid annually on the first day of May. The grantee was to build on the lot a good "substantial dwelling-house of the breadth of twenty feet, and of the depth of twenty feet, with a good substantial chimney, within the space of twelve months." No deeds refer to any point indicating its laying out prior to 1760, and that, no doubt, was the year in which the land was divided into lots, for George Fisher, as we have seen, did not come into possession of the land before 1759, and it probably required some time to perfect his plans for the town and place the lots in the market. The parties engaged in laying it out did not use a surveyor's chain, but a marked rope, which in dragging over the wet grass and then drying made a variation as it alternately stretched or contracted, thus causing a difference in the size of the lots. The location of the town—all the territory lying near the mouth of the Swatara being known as Middletown—held out so many advantages to the pioneers that the place grew rapidly. From the head of the river to this point navigation was comparatively safe, but in consequence of the numerous and dangerous falls, it was supposed the Susquehanna could not be navigated below the Swatara. This being the southern limit of navigation, all the marketable produce of the Susquehanna and its tributaries was brought here for sale and distributed, and a brisk trade sprang up, which extended not only to the surrounding country but even to Maryland and Virginia. The Germans, who succeeded the Scotch-Irish settlers, lacked the spirit and enterprise of their predecessors, and Harrisburg, though some years the junior of Middletown, and with fewer natural advantages, outstripped it in growth and population. The trade of Middletown, however, exceeded that of any other point on the river. This town was a depot for Hessian prisoners during the Revolution, and a commissary department was established here.

After the Revolution trade greatly revived, and flourished extensively until 1796, when it gradually declined. Until then the mouth of the Swatara was considered the termination of the Susquehanna and its tributary streams. So far down it was considered safe, below this it was believed to be impracticable, on account of the numerous and dangerous cataracts impeding its bed. In 1796 an enterprising German miller named Kreider, from the neighborhood of Huntingdon, on the Juniata, arrived in the Swatara in an ark, fully freighted with flour, with which he safely descended to Baltimore, where he was amply compensated for his adventure. His success becoming known throughout the interior, many arks were built, and the next year this mode of transportation became established. This trade increasing, a number of enterprising young men were induced to examine critically the river from the Swatara to tide-water, by which they became excellent pilots. The enterprise of John Kreider thus diverted the trade of this place to Baltimore, where it principally centred until the Union Canal was completed in 1827, when it was again generally arrested at its old post. It would probably have so continued if the Pennsylvania Canal had not been continued to Columbia, by which the principal obstruction in the river, the Conewago Falls, was completely obviated. A large trade, however, in lumber and other articles of produce is still intercepted here, supplying the valleys of the Swatara, Quitapahilla, Tulpehocken, and the Schuylkill.

For a long period it was the great timber and lumber mart of the Susquehanna River. Every spring and fall the mouth of the Swatara was crowded with rafts and arks loaded with boards, shingles, grain, whiskey, plaster, and other marketable products of the up-river country, and not only was the mouth filled, but the shores of the river some distance below and for two miles above the "point," were lined with every kind of river craft. During the rafting season all was bustle and activity, and the handling, counting, and measuring of the lumber, grain, etc., gave employment to large numbers of men, some of whom came from great distances to work, returning to their homes when the busy season was over. The spring and fall freshets were harvest times for the merchants and tavern-keepers. Laborers were in demand and received good wages, and most of them were liberal patrons of the stores and inns. The "Yankees," as all the up-river men were styled, were generally a boisterous class, and when released from the restraint of their homes usually took a spree, spending their hard earnings freely, but before returning to their families laid in a supply of the necessaries for home consumption sufficient to last until they could make another trip. A row of store-houses lined the road facing the Swatara (some of which have been converted into dwelling-houses and are still standing, but so changed in appearance as not to be recognized), and these were frequently filled from cellar to garret with grain, whiskey, etc. These articles, with lumber of all kinds, were transported in wagons from this point in every direction, teams coming from Delaware, Maryland, and Virginia. After Kreider had succeeded in running the falls with boats, Thomas Burbridge, a merchant of Wyoming, in the following year (1797) freighted and ran in one season ninety-nine arks loaded with coal, a few of which failed to reach their destination for want of skillful pilots. Much of the trade with this place was carried on in keel-boats (or Durham boats, as they were sometimes called after their first projector), and they were the only ones that ascended and descended the Susquehanna. These boats were fifty or sixty feet in length and about nine in width, and required a crew of eight expert polemen and a steersman to each boat. Considerable trading was done by these boats during their trips. Their approach to the villages along their route was signalled by the blowing of a horn, and those who were desirous of making purchases or of disposing of any surplus products were offered an opportunity. In order to avoid the rapids known as the "Conewago Falls," a short canal was made, reaching from the head of the falls to York Haven, on the York County side of the river. This enabled these small boats to pass up and down in safety, but on the completion of the Pennsylvania Canal that channel was abandoned, and York Haven, which at one time promised to be a place of note, was "finished." The Scotch-Irish settled here first, but they were unable to succeed in farming as against the German immigrants, who soon got "forehanded" where the former could not make a living. Then again, there began to be intermarrying between the young people of the two nationalities, which displeased the Scotch-Irish Presbyterians, who gradually sold out their possessions and moved away.

The first tax-list of the town is that of the Revolutionary period, probably 1778:

The highest valuation is that of George Frey, eight hundred dollars. He returned five horses and nine cows.

George Fisher lived until his death near the town, on a well-cultivated farm which has been in the family since 1750, in the centre of a large tract of land bounded by the Susquehanna and Swatara, conveyed to him by his father, John Fisher, a noted merchant of Philadelphia. The proprietor being a Friend, several Quakers from Philadelphia and the lower counties followed him, and these, with several Scotch-Irish merchants, formed the first inhabitants of the village, who enjoyed up to the period of the Revolution a very extensive and lucrative trade with the Indians and others settled on the upper Susquehanna and Juniata, and also with the Western traders. The Scotch-Irish merchants mostly followed the emigration southward.

Jeremiah Job was the first actual settler on the lands composing what is now the town. In 1805 and 1806 two of his daughters, aged maiden ladies, Polly and Sally, taught school here. John Benner is the oldest male person living here born in the town, and Mrs. Critson and the mother of Dr. John Ringland the oldest female residents born here. John Benner was born Oct. 1, 1797, in a house on the Lancaster turnpike, near the bridge, where the widow of Edward Fisher lives. He is the son of John and Mary (Seabauch) Benner, and the former was born at Warwick Furnace, in Chester County, and was the son of an emigrant who came from Germany about 1751. John Benner, Sr., used to keep the Chambers ferry between Middletown and Harrisburg, and afterwards the ferry on Swatara Creek. He died in 1802. John Benner, the venerable octogenarian of eighty-five years, learned the cooper's trade with Conrad Seabauch, his uncle. The first cooper here was William Wandlass, a Scotchman, who opened a shop in 1769, and with whom Conrad Seabauch learned his trade. Wandlass was succeeded in his shop by Elisha Green. When Emanuel Bollinger, a Revolutionary soldier, came here there were but four persons buried in the old (first) Lutheran graveyard. Christian Seabauch, the maternal grandfather of John Benner, was the first hatter in town, and Jacob Shertz the first blacksmith. Prior to the Misses Job, Jacob Peeler, a nail-maker, taught school in 1808 and 1809. The first tavern was kept where Rife's Corner is, and long after it was built a Mr. Crabb was its landlord. About 1800, Charles Wade kept an inn at the east end of town, and about the same time George Shuler kept one. The Washington House was built before 1836, when Peter Young, who had previously kept tavern on Swatara Hill, became its landlord. In 1807 the only store was kept by John Landis, on Main Street, where Eminger's grocery is, and to show the amount of his business, it is related that Conrad Seabauch, the cooper, made for Mr. Landis in one year nine hundred (fifty pound) firkins in which to pack the butter taken in at the store. The first store kept in town was that of George Frey, whose clerk, Christoph Frederick Oberlander, afterwards became his partner. Oberlander was born Jan. 15, 1748, and died Oct. 21, 1795. The first regular lumber-yard was kept by Enoch Skeer, whose lumber was piled under and around a tree to keep the high waters from carrying it off. The next to embark in this trade was John Snyder. John Smith about 1809 dealt largely in plaster, and also kept a hotel. Sometimes as high as forty teams were here at one time to get plaster, then the sine qua non for enriching lauds. Jacob Rife, Sr., purchased what is known as the Keystone Tannery in 1830, and it has been carried on by him or his sons for nearly fifty years. Between 1810 and 1825, John Snyder had a pottery on the corner of the square where Ringland's drug-store was.

Among the earliest physicians here were Dr. Romer, who located before 1770, and Dr. Charles Fisher, who was born Sept. 8, 1766, and died May 8, 1808. Dr. James McCammon began practicing at the beginning of the century, having been born in 1778, and died Nov. 7, 1813. Contemporaneous with him was Dr. Abraham Price. He was born April 27, 1787, and died April 3, 1821. A little later was Dr. Abraham McClelland, who died Oct. 20, 1828, aged thirty-seven years. Dr. Mercer Brown, long in practice, was born Feb. 22, 1795, and died Feb. 9, 1871. Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling is the oldest living practitioner here now, having been over forty years in continuous practice. Dr. Meyrick practiced from about 1795 to 1815, and Dr. Simonton read medicine with him.

On May 25, 1811, the yearly market at Middletown was first advertised to commence June 11th following, at which time and place a great number of valuable horses, cows, sheep, lambs, calves, and hogs, with many other articles, such as pickled oysters, roast beef, punch, and wine, were to be offered for sale. These "old-time fairs" were noted days in the town and vicinity. The whole place would ring with drums, banjos, bagpipes, trumpets, fiddlers, and fifes, besides many other noises. The "Square" was the grand centre of attraction for the multitude of strangers and citizens. In one place might be seen the juggler performing all manner of tricks; in another rope-dancers were pirouetting; in still another anacondas, tame elephants, learned dogs, and a host of other rare and curious animals were exhibited. These, however, were only accessories and adjuncts to the fair, which, in truth, was a great commercial mart, where goods and chattels of almost every kind were sold, from a hank of yarn to a mammoth bull. In several parts of the Square booths of entertainment were erected, where revelry, mirth, and feasting were indulged in with a degree of license unknown at other times and seasons. In other booths again the more staid farmers and the large households that they brought with them could provide themselves with food at a reasonable price and in a decent manner. Through the streets and alleys in the neighborhood of the Square would float a mixed multitude of all sorts,—buyers, sellers, minstrels, musicians, old women, beautiful girls, young children, "Yankees," wagoners, all jostling, bustling, talking, laughing, singing, and joking in the utmost good humor. So demoralizing, however, did these fairs become that they were expressly forbidden by law.

The following persons "took out licenses to keep houses of public entertainment" in Middletown from 1793 to 1803, and some of them continued to do so many years after: Henry Moore, Ludwick Wolfley; Peter Kipe, John McCann, George McCormick, Frederick Rothfong, John Blattenberger, Christian Rodfong, Michael Hemperly, John McCammon, William Crabb, Benjamin McKinley, John Benner, John Smith, George Toot.

PORT ROYAL.—On the 29th of January, 1774, a patent was issued to William Breden for eighty-seven acres and one-half of an acre, which he located at the mouth of the Swatara. On the 10th of May, 1774, Breden sold this land to Henry Wearer, "miller," of Caernarvon township, Lancaster Co., Elijah Wickersham, merchant, and Joseph Leacock, of Philadelphia, as tenants in common. They laid out a town, naming it Port Royal, into four hundred and sixteen lots. On June 15, 1774, Leacock sold his interest to Wearer and Wickersham, and upon the same day Wearer and Wickersham made an equitable division of the lots between them. Each took alternate lots. Wearer got two hundred and eleven lots and Wickersham two hundred and five, with a large lot on Salmon Street.

There is no record as to when the property passed out of the hands of Wearer and Wickersham, but it is presumed that they did not sell fast enough to reimburse them for their outlay, and that they were sold out by the sheriff. After the river became a highway for the transportation of merchandise in arks and keel-boats to the mouth of the Swatara, thence overland to Philadelphia and Baltimore, Port Royal was an important point, and was likely to grow very rapidly. The construction of a canal around Conewago Falls, through which keel-boats passed down the river, destroyed its business prospects. Middletown, being a short distance up the Swatara, and much more free from the bad effects of miasma, held its own, and kept Port Royal in the background. A large portion of the lots in Port Royal came into the possession of a Miss Loraine, of Clearfield County, who held them until a few years ago. The records of title will probably show how she became possessed of them, and trace back to Wearer and Wickersham.

HARBORTON.—In 1809, George Fisher, son of the founder of Middletown, laid out a town at the mouth of the Swatara, naming it Harborton. It embraced only a narrow strip of land along the creek. His advertisement reads,—

"HARBORTON.

"The subscriber having laid out a new town at the confluence of the Swatara with the Susquehanna, in the county of Dauphin, proposes to dispose of the lots at sixty dollars each, when deeds in fee-simple are delivered for them. As the object of the proprietor is to promote immediate improvement and not present emolument, and as many of the lots will now sell for from one hundred to three hundred dollars, and none of less value than forty dollars, the preference will be determined by drawing the several numbers from a wheel.

"The navigation of the Susquehanna thus far down is perfectly safe; but from this to Columbia, a distance of twenty-one miles, it is obstructed by the Swatara and Conewago Falls and many other rapids, so as to render it precarious and hazardous, and sometimes impracticable.

"The well-known harbor formed by the mouth of Swatara is not only the most capacious, but the only safe one on the river, and as produce to more than a million of dollars annually floats down the Susquehanna, a great proportion of which, it is presumed, will be transported from here to the Philadelphia market on the turnpike road now making and nearly completed to Lancaster, a distance of twenty-four miles, and the contemplated canal from the Susquehanna to the Schuylkill, which will enter the harbor through this town. The extensive command of water here for the turning of mill machinery and other water-works, and its vicinity to the great iron-works owned by Messrs. Coleman & Grubb, added to the facility with which an abundant supply of coal of the Susquehanna and Juniata may be had, when all combined, will fully justify the assertion that no town on the Susquehanna offers more advantages, nor some more certain prospects of gain to the enterprising merchant and mechanic than this.

"The site is an inclined plain, gradually rising from the margin of a bank from ten to fifteen feet above low water to a summit of fifty feet, commanding many beautiful prospects, as well land as water, and is as healthy as any on the river.

"Tickets may be had of the subscriber, and at other places, where places of the town may be seen.

"GEORGE FISHER.

"Feb. 16, 1809."

On the 17th of March, 1814, George Fisher and wife conveyed to John Swar, of Lancaster County, that portion of "a certain tract of two hundred and twenty-five acres on which the town of Portsmouth is laid off." John Swar and Anna, his wife, conveyed the lots to different parties at different times. Portsmouth lay between Middletown and the Susquehanna, and in it the Union Canal, the Pennsylvania, the Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroads all intersected. On March 9, 1857, Portsmouth, then having a population of seven hundred and fifty, was consolidated with Middletown.

"FREY'S MILL."—This mill was begun and partially constructed by John Hollingsworth and John Fisher. On Dec. 21, 1784, Hollingsworth and Frey entered into articles of agreement to build a mill (probably the one partially begun by Fisher), and to carry on a general milling business in manufacturing "flour, middlins, shorts, stuffs, etc." They had bought of John Fisher four acres and twenty-five perches, including some improvements, for five hundred pounds. Hollingsworth agreed to furnish all the casks, do all the buying of grain, and perform certain other stipulations, while Frey contracted not to retail any flour, shorts, etc., from his store, so the mill could have all such purchasers. Matters progressed awhile favorably, but in 1787 there was some difficulty between the partners, and Hollingsworth, by his attorney, Thomas Hartley, brought suit for a partition of the premises in the Dauphin Common Pleas Court. The latter referred the case to the Supreme Court without deciding it, the judges being Timothy Green, John Gloninger, and Jonathan McClure. The suit was docketed in the Supreme Court of the Eastern District of Pennsylvania at the September term, 1787, wherein "Hon. Thomas McKean, Esq., Doctor of Laws, chief justice, and his associate justices of the commonwealth of Pennsylvania" were the court. The case was not finally decided until the Nisi Prius term held at Louisburgh in 1790, when Frey gained the case, and a partition was refused. Hollingsworth had many creditors clamorous for pay, and not having probably complied with all the stipulations of his contract with Frey, the latter had counter-claims, and assigned claims of Hollingsworth's creditors to eat up his (Hollingsworth's) part. Thus Frey became the sole owner. He had great trouble in building the race, a mile and a half in length. The mill was built first. When the race and dam were completed the race was found not to be deep enough to carry the water, so Frey had again to go to the Legislature for another permit to make it larger. This was given on the condition that he secured the assent in writing (as in the first instance) of all the owners of lands or lots through which it passed. This he did, and at last success crowned his efforts.

THE KING'S HIGHWAY.—This old road from Philadelphia to the Ohio River passed through Middletown and formed what is now Main Street. The line is now occupied by the Lancaster and Middletown Turnpike Company, which has its western terminus about the "run" at the west end of the town, where it connects with the Middletown and Harrisburg Turnpike. "The King's Highway" was laid out about 1730. Over this thoroughfare nearly all the travel between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh passed. After the above-named turnpike companies were incorporated they adopted a large portion of the old road as their line. The macadamizing of the road enabled much greater loads to be taken than before. Dry-goods, groceries, etc., were loaded at Philadelphia in large wagons, called "Pitt" or "Conestoga" wagons, hauled by teams of six horses, and delivered at Pittsburgh or intermediate points, and returned laden with Western produce, such as flour, bacon, feathers, and whiskey. The time occupied by the wagons for the round trip between these two cities was usually from six to eight weeks, according to the condition of the roads. Passengers and mails were drawn in stages by four horses, relays of which were provided at regular stations some miles apart. They were generally driven at a rapid rate, and the distance between here and Philadelphia was made in two days. The coaches held nine passengers inside, with room for one on the outside with the driver. The mailbags occupied a recess beneath the driver's seat, and the baggage was stored in the "boot" at the back of the stage.

MIDDLETOWN IN 1807.—Cuming, in his "Sketches of a Tour to the Western Country," in 1807, made on foot from Philadelphia to the Mississippi frontier, printed at Pittsburgh, 1810, has something to say of Middletown and the King's Highway:

"Jan. 30, 1807, I proceeded for Middletown, eight miles farther (from Elizabethtown), first loading one barrel of my gun with a running ball, as I had to pass near where one Eshelton was robbed and murdered last fall (1806). The road over the Conewago Hills was bad. It was dark before I arrived at Swatara Creek. The boat was on the other side of the creek, and the German family at the ferry-house let me kick my heels at the door until I was quite chilled before they invited me in, which old Mrs. Smith did at last with a very bad grace, and she almost scolded me for risking the dropping on her very dry floor the spirits of turpentine, with which I was wetting the feet of my stockings to prevent my catching cold, a phial of which I carried in my pocket for that purpose.

"In about half an hour, which to me appeared an age, the boat returned, and I left the dirty, boorish, inhospitable mansion, crossed the creek in a canoe, hauled over by a rope, extended from bank to bank, about seventy yards, and in a few minutes after I found myself in Mrs. Wentz's excellent inn, the sign of Gen. Washington, in Middletown." (Mrs. Wentz kept tavern on the southeast corner of the square. Cuming had a sore foot, but had a "good supper and an excellent bed," and notwithstanding his loss of rest enjoyed his breakfast with Mrs. Wentz, "an agreeable and well-bred woman.")

"The view down the Susquehanna from Mrs. Wentz's back piazza is very fine. The town contains about one hundred houses, and is well and handsomely situated about half a mile above the confluence of Swatara Creek with the Susquehanna River, the former of which forms a good harbor for boats, which it is in contemplation to join to the Schuylkill by a canal, in order to give Philadelphia the benefit of the navigation of the Susquehanna through its long course above Middletown."

He remarks that the river is a "noble stream, with fine wooded banks and abounds with fish," among which he names the "white salmon from seven to fifteen pounds weight," and proceeds to say that for all the abundance of fish "Mrs. Wentz assured me that she was seldom gratified with a dish of fish." The lady told him that the fishermen "were a lazy set and will not do anything more than will procure them some whiskey. The road to Harrisburg leads parallel with the Susquehanna, in some places close to the river, along a very pleasant level," and so located as to protect the orchards "which are so numerous and so fine in this tract. I have rarely seen in any country a road more pleasant than this, either from its own goodness or the richness and variety of prospect. The mountains rising abruptly from the margin of the river, in which they are charmingly reflected, altogether form a scenery truly delightful," and this brings the tourist to Harrisburg. It is almost unnecessary to say that the route of the traveler was over the "King's Highway."

THE MUD PIKE commenced a short distance west of the town, where the Harrisburg Turnpike crosses the canal, and followed the bank of the canal to Columbia. It was kept in good condition until the branch road of the Harrisburg and Lancaster Railroad was made, when, as the latter occupied much of the line of the pike, it was abandoned, and what was left of it was placed in charge of the supervisors of the townships through which it passed.

THE UNION CANAL, completed in 1827, connects the Susquehanna River at Middletown with the Schuylkill at Reading, and affords water communication thence to Philadelphia by the Schuylkill Navigation Company's improvement. An outlet from the basin of the canal to the Swatara was made to allow the boats, rafts, and arks access to and from the river. This lock was situated between the railroad, near where it crosses the Swatara Creek, and the old collector's office. A vast amount of lumber and other articles were carried by the canal-boats. In 1850 and 1851 the canal was enlarged by widening and deepening, and new locks were built so as to allow boats of larger carrying capacity to be used.

THE PENNSYLVANIA CANAL extends from Columbia, in Lancaster County, to Hollidaysburg, in Blair County. It was an important link in the chain of public improvements inaugurated by the State, connecting, by means of the Philadelphia and Columbia Railroad on the east and the Portage Railroad on the west, Philadelphia with Pittsburgh. Goods could be shipped in Philadelphia in sections of boats, which were transported to Columbia on railroad trucks prepared for the purpose; at Columbia they were placed in the canal, and connected together, forming a complete boat, and towed to Hollidaysburg, where they were again placed upon railroad trucks, and thence to Pittsburgh. The Allegheny Mountains were crossed by means of inclined planes, of which there were several. A large basin for the reception of boats, arks, and other water craft, was made here, and an outlet lock of great capacity constructed to the Swatara. Upon the completion of this lock that of the Union Canal was abandoned and suffered to go to decay, and there is now little left to show that there was ever one there. The ground was broken for this canal at Harrisburg July 4, 1826, with great ceremony, and the water was let into this division in 1825.

When the main line of the Pennsylvania Public Works was sold to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, this canal was included in the purchase, and it has since passed into the hands of the Pennsylvania Canal Company, who have greatly improved it, and still operate it.

THE BREAKWATER.—Several attempts have been made to construct a dam or breakwater across the Susquehanna a short distance below the Swatara, as a harbor for lumber and timber, where it would be safe at all seasons. The project, however, never succeeded.

THE HARRISBURG, PORTSMOUTH, MOUNT JOY AND LANCASTER RAILROAD was laid out about 1832, and was completed and in use from Harrisburg to Elizabethtown long before the tunnel was finished. The first locomotive used on this part of the road was the "John Bull." It was brought to Middletown from Columbia on a flat-boat, and landed at the wharf where Mr. Rambler's large building now stands on the canal basin. It was drawn thence to the railroad by the employes and citizens, who had been attracted there by curiosity. It was a serviceable but small engine, scarcely more than a toy when compared with the powerful "Mooocs" of the present day. Instead of the heavy T-rail now used, the rails were simply flat bars of iron, about two and one-half inches in width and three-quarters of an inch in thickness, and were spiked to timbers running lengthwise with the line of the railroad. The first cars were about the size of an ordinary omnibus, with the entrance at the side, and would accommodate from twelve to eighteen passengers. Three or four cars constituted a train. A high seat on the outside of the car was provided for the conductor or brakeman.

On the completion of this part of the road there was great rejoicing. On Sept. 16, 1836, the track was opened for travel. A locomotive with a train of cars brought to Middletown from Harrisburg a large company, principally invited guests, who were handsomely entertained at Peter Young's hotel. The distance, ten miles, was run in twenty minutes. The tunnel was not completed until Aug. 18, 1838, when the trip between Harrisburg and Philadelphia could be made in seven hours. Gen. Simon Cameron, Dr. Mercer Brown, Henry Smith, Martin Kendig, and many other citizens of Middletown took great interest in the enterprise.

THE STUBBS' FURNACES.—In 1796, two brothers, Daniel and Thomas Stubbs, from England, erected a furnace near the mouth of Swatara Creek, on what is still known as the "Steel Furnace Lot," for the purpose of manufacturing "blister" steel. The making of steel was continued by them several years, and a ready sale was found at remunerative prices.

This is said to have been the first steel manufactured in America. Several years after the Stubbs brothers had built their furnace, a second one was erected by one of their sons and John Elder, and was for a time carried on successfully. This was located about a fourth of a mile above the other furnace and near "Frey's mill." Its retorts or chambers were standing there a year or two ago. They far more resembled an overgrown bake-oven than the furnaces of the present day.

DEATH OF GEN. WASHINGTON.—On Jan. 9, 1800, the citizens of Middletown and surrounding country testified their sorrow at the death of Washington by meeting at the farm-house of George Fisher, and moving therefrom in the following order to the Lutheran meeting-house:

- Trumpeter.
- Cavalry on foot, swords drawn.
- Infantry, arms reversed, by platoons inverted.
- Rifle company, arms reversed.
- Militia officers in uniform.
- Music.
- Standard.
- Surgeons.
- Clergy.
- Pall-bearers.
- Young ladies in white.
- Ancient citizens first.
- Citizens in general by twos.
- Boys by pairs.

Having arrived at the meeting-house, the troops formed lines right and left, when the clergy, pall-bearers, and citizens entered, followed by the troops, while the Dead March from Saul was performed by the organist. The exercises were opened by a short prayer and singing part of the Ninetieth Psalm. Rev. Mr. Snowden and Rev. Mr. Moeller then delivered addresses. Most of the military who joined in the procession were from Harrisburg.

INCORPORATION OF THE BOROUGH—BOUNDARIES, OFFICERS, ETC.

The borough was incorporated Feb. 19, 1828, with the following boundaries: "Beginning at a stone at the east end of the town on the south side of Main Street, thence south six degrees east forty-one perches to a stone; thence south eighty-six degrees west sixty perches to an apple-tree; thence south sixty-six degrees west eighty-two perches to a stone; thence south twenty-two degrees east two perches and five-tenths to a stone; thence south sixty-seven and a half degrees west thirty-two perches to a stone; thence north twenty-four degrees west across Main Street sixty-one perches to a stone; thence north thirty-four degrees east six perches to a stone; thence north thirty-two degrees west twenty-one perches to a stone; thence north seventy degrees east thirty-two perches to a stone; thence north thirty-two degrees west two perches to a stone; thence north sixty-five degrees east one hundred and eight perches and five-tenths to a stone; thence north eighty-six degrees east sixty-one perches and five-tenths to a stone; thence south eight degrees west forty-six perches to a stone; and thence along the south side of the said Main Street south eighty-nine degrees east seven perches and five-tenths to the place of beginning."

The first election was held on the second Tuesday of April following, at the tavern of David Kissecker. By legislative act of March 9, 1857, the limits and boundaries were so extended as to include the town of Portsmouth and lands contiguous and adjacent to the said borough and town. Thus the borough boundaries were then made to comprise the following limits: "Beginning at a point on the river Susquehanna, and at low-water mark thereof, opposite to the termination of a certain lane between the lands of George Crist and company, and land now or lately the property of A. Welch; thence by lands of same and J. Rife, John J. Walborn, and Stephen Wilson, north eighteen and one-quarter degrees east two hundred and seven perches to the centre of the Middletown and Harrisburg Turnpike road; thence by said turnpike road south seventy-eight degrees east forty-six perches to a stone; thence north sixty-four degrees east twelve perches; thence north sixty-one and one-quarter degrees east sixty perches to George Crist's lane; by lands of Crist, Brown, Croll, and others, north twenty-seven and one-quarter degrees west one hundred and seventy-two and one-half perches to lane at side of Red Hill; thence by said lane north sixty-nine degrees east one hundred and one perches to the Great road leading from Middletown to Hummelstown; thence south one-half degree east three hundred and twenty-one perches to centre of Swatara Creek; thence down the said creek or river, the several courses thereof, to the junction of the said creek and the Susquehanna River at the low-water mark thereof seven hundred and thirty-eight perches; thence up the said Susquehanna River the several courses thereof to the place of beginning." The same act divided the borough into three wards, viz., All that part of the said borough lying north of a line commencing at a point on the Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike, and running directly through Water Street to a point on the Swatara Creek, to be called the North Ward; and all that part lying south of said line and north of a line commencing in the lane forming the western boundary of the borough opposite the extension of Ann Street, directly through said extension and through Ann Street to a point on Swatara Creek, to be called the Middle Ward; and all that part lying south of the said Ann Street line to be called the South Ward. The first election under the extended new wards and borough occurred on the third Friday in March, 1857, when three councilmen were elected from each ward, and were by lot divided into three classes to serve one, two, and three years respectively. Thereafter one was annually elected from each ward for a term of three years. The first elections were held as follows: In North Ward, at the brick school-house on Pine Street; in the Middle Ward, at Union Hall on Elizabeth Street; and in the South Ward, at the town school-house, corner of Spring and Ann Streets. The fourteenth section of this act, extending the limits of the borough and giving Council power to survey, lay out, enact and ordain streets, roads, lanes, alleys, courts, and sewers, was specially exempted from applying to the tract of land included within the borough limits (as created by this act) late the estate of George Fisher, deceased, called and known by the name of "Pine Ford." A legislative act of April 13, 1858, empowered the Council to erect a lock-up. An ordinance of March 30, 1857, prohibited the running at large of dogs in the borough; and that of June 24th, changed the name of Spring Street, in the plan of Portsmonth, to Wood Street.

The first record-book of the borough and other papers were destroyed by fire in 1855, when the residence of Henry Stehman, who was then burgess, was burned. Since that period the records are somewhat imperfect, and we are unable to give a complete list of the burgesses.

CHURCHES.

ST. PETER'S LUTHERAN CHURCH is the oldest Lutheran Church in the county. The lot numbered 135 upon which the old (the first) church edifice stands, including the graveyard in the rear, was purchased from George Fisher, and Hannah, his wife, as appears from a deed bearing date Sept. 18, 1764, to Peter Woltz, George Frey, and Deterick Schob, all of Lower Paxtang (now Swatara) township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) County, Province of Pennsylvania. The purchase-money was seven shillings and sixpence, with the additional rent of one grain of wheat every year, to be delivered annually on the 1st day of May. The deed was acknowledged before Justice John Allison, and attested by Joseph Greenwood and Henry Renick. It is written on parchment, and is yet in a good state of preservation. It is recorded in Lancaster County, in Deed-Book M, page 395, by Edward Shippen, recorder. It bears the old Provincial seal of Lancaster County. In the same year a petition was sent to John Penn, then Lieutenant-Governor of the Province, praying for the privilege of erecting a church, and also for the privilege of collecting funds for the same purpose. Whereupon privilege was granted by license dated Sept. 28, 1764, to Christian Roth and David Ettley¹ to raise by subscription twelve hundred pounds in the space of three years. This document bears the autograph of John Penn, and is countersigned by Joseph Shippen, his secretary. There are no papers to show how much of this money was raised. It appears from the terms of the license, dated Sept. 28, 1764, granting the above privilege, that the members were then very poor, and that many were driven from their homes by the hostile Indians. Middletown then contained but a few houses, and a great part of Dauphin and Lancaster Counties was then a wilderness. The forests were peopled by Indians, and the settlers could not go outside their homes unarmed with any degree of safety. Whenever the people went to the store, mill, or even the church, they armed themselves. They would stack their arms inside the church, and station one person at the door as sentinel to warn the others of approaching danger.

The church edifice was built in 1767. The cornerstone was laid by Justice (Col.) James Burd, in presence of Revs. Theophilus Engeland, N. Harnell, Conrad Bucher, and the church wardens and elders, John Christ. Roth, John Metzgar, George Philip Shaage, Gottlieb David Ettley, and Jacob King, together with the building committee, which consisted of George Frey, Frederick Zeppernick, and Conrad Wolfley. There was placed in the corner-stone a German Bible, printed at Halle in 1763; the shorter Catechism of Martin Luther, printed in Philadelphia in 1764; three wafers; a half-pint bottle of wine; and some money in Pennsylvania currency. The lot upon which the lecture-room stood was transferred by the executors of George Frey and Jacob King, by a deed bearing date Oct. 7, 1807, to the trustees of the church, viz., John Metzgar, Philip Ettele, John Blattenberger, Jacob Wolfley, Christian Esenhaner, and Marks Snyder. On March 10, 1807, application was made by the congregation for a charter of incorporation. On the 21st of the same month, Governor Thomas McKean authorized Timothy Matlack, master of the rolls, to issue the charter prayed for by the petitioners, who were Ludwick Wolfley, Valentine Weyrick, Martin Hemperley, Nicholas Shuler, George Shalkey, Frederick —, George Schneegas, Christian Spayd, George Lauman, James Metzgar, Jacob Snyder, John Smuller, John Croll, John Heppich, John Blattenberger, Jr., Christian Laurentz, David Ettele, George Schuler, Matthias Wolf. In 1813 the steeple was built. For this purpose twelve hundred and eleven dollars and thirty-five cents was subscribed by one hundred and ninety-three different persons, whose names are all on record, and among whom are the ancestors of many of the prominent families of the town. The first floor of the church was of brick, and in 1830 the present floor was laid. In 1835 the lecture-room was built, and in 1861 an addition was made to accommodate the increasing number of Sunday-school scholars. In 1844 the second roof was put on the church, and in 1850 its interior was remodeled. At this time the pulpit was erected on the north side, between the two large windows, and about midway between the floor and the ceiling, and was reached by a narrow flight of steps. There were two entrances, one on the south side, which on the remodeling of the edifice was closed. The building was remodeled while Rev. Dr. Baum had charge of the congregation, and the work was done by Maj. Rehner. In 1855 and 1856 the parsonage was built. This old stone church is now used only at stated times, mostly at funerals of aged persons who wish the funeral services to be held in its sacred walls, an elegant new church edifice having been completed on another lot, and dedicated in 1879. Its pastors have been: 1767-73, Rev. Theophilus Engeland; 1773-88, Rev. T. F. Illing; 1788-93, Rev. J. Kurtz; 1793-95, Rev. P. Pentz; 1795-1803, Rev. H. Miller; 1803-12, Rev. F. C. Sheaff; 1812-15, Rev. George Lochman, D.D.; 1815- , Rev. A. H. Lochman, D.D.; 1830-34, Rev. J. Van Hoff; 1834-37, Rev. P. Saline; 1837-44, Rev. S. D. Finckel, D.D.; 1844-47, Rev. J. Voghbanagh; 1847-48, Rev. L. Gerhart; 1848-53, Rev. W. M. Baum, D.D.; 1853-56, Rev. Benjamin Sadtler; 1856-65, Rev. C. J. Ehhart; 1865-72, Rev. Peter Raby; 1873 (April 1), Rev. John W. Finkbiner, the present incumbent.

On Sept. 4, 1867, the church celebrated its centennial anniversary, at which were present many distinguished clergymen of the Lutheran and other denominations and persons prominent in the State. At this centennial anniversary, George Smuller sent one hundred grains of choice selected wheat to Hon. Robert J. Fisher, of York, the oldest of the legal heirs and representatives of George Fisher, who laid out the town, and of whom the church lot was purchased, as full satisfaction of one clause in the original deed requiring a rental of one grain of wheat to be paid annually. The wheat was contained in a silk bag worked by Miss Carrie Smuller.

The old church lot is two hundred by fifty feet. When "St. Peter's Kirche" (as it was denominated by a lettered stone still in its front over the door) was dedicated in 1767 the members consisted of sixty-six old and sixty-three young persons. It was built of red sandstone, was two stories in height, and had a gallery on the east, south, and west sides, the pulpit occupying the north side. There was a second entrance fronting on High Street, which was reached through the yard in front and staircase leading from each door to the gallery, meeting at the southeast corner. The windows were small, with quite small panes of glass. The bricks in the floor were nine inches square. The pews were narrow, with high, straight backs. When the house was finally warmed, it was done by two large stoves capable of taking in a vast amount of fuel, consisting of ordinary cordwood four feet in length. The pulpit was small and supported by a post eight or ten feet high, and reached by a narrow stairway. Over it was a sounding-board. A pipe-organ at one time occupied a portion of one side of the gallery. In August, 1793, the congregation secured the adjoining lot, No. 134, of Jacob Gross and wife, who made a conveyance thereof to George Frey and Jacob King for the consideration of three pounds in hand and a yearly rent of one grain of wheat to be paid annually on May 1st. By mistake the deed was made to Frey and King individually, but when they died their trustees and executors—John Landis, Charles Fisher, William Crabb, and John Cassel for Frey's estate, and Jacob Snyder and Daniel Erisman for King's—conveyed it to the trustees of the church. In 1826, Jane Hannegan (Flannagan) sold lot No. 133 to the congregation, so that the old church and cemetery now comprises three lots,—Nos. 133, 134, and 135. When the brick floor was replaced by a wooden one, in 1830, the straight-back pews gave way to others of a more comfortable character, and a new pulpit was erected, beneath which was an alcove or recess, into which the pastor could retire and leave his wrappings before entering the sanctuary. It had steps at either side, and a semicircular railing hung with velvet inclosed it. The reading-desk was also covered with velvet. The alterations were superintended by Jacob Hepich. In the remodeling of 1850 the whole inside wood-work—pews, gallery, and all—was removed. The windows, which were formerly in two tiers, were made into one, and the door-way facing High Street was converted into a window. The pulpit was erected at the west end, and the galleries extended around the other three sides. A vestibule was made, from which inclosed stairways led to the gallery and shut off the cold from the auditorium. A parsonage was erected on High Street, near the old church, in 1855. In 1872 the congregation purchased the lots on Union Street, on which its second and beautiful edifice was built, and dedicated in 1879.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Middletown Station was formed out of Dauphin Circuit in 1856. Since then the pastors have been: 1856-58, George G. Rakestraw; 1858-60, S. W. Kurtz; 1860, William B. Gregg; 1861-63, J. S. Lame; 1863-65, J. M. Wheeler; 1865-67, S. T. Kemble; 1867-69, Allen John; 1869, L. B. Hughes; 1870-72, J. Montgomery; 1872-74, T. B. Miller; 1874-77, S. G. Grove; 1877-79, J. T. Swindells; 1879-82, W. H. Fries; 1882-84, L. B. Brown, the present pastor. The Ebenezer Methodist Episcopal Church edifice, now a dwelling-house occupied by Mrs. Lauman, was a frame building, built about 1820 at the upper or north end of Main cross street. It was used by the Methodist preachers on the circuits, and at intervals missionaries of other denominations held services therein. In it was held the first Sunday-school in the town, opened about 1832. This building was erected and the congregation organized in 1830. The cornerstone of the present church was laid in 1851, and May 10, 1853, it was dedicated, Rev. Dr. Bartine officiating. It was built under the pastorship of Rev. Sanders. The parsonage, on the same street (Ann) as the church, was built in 1867. The valuation of the church property is over eight thousand dollars. The Methodists were second to the Lutherans in point of time in holding services in the town, and the first Methodist preaching in the county, antedating by twenty-one years that at Halifax, is said to have occurred here. As early as 1780 circuit-riders of "York Circuit," embracing a large area of country and parts now of several counties, came every four weeks to Middletown to meet their appointments. The place of holding the services was at the dwelling of Dr. Romer, on High above Duck Street, where Eli May lived. One of the original congregation and first Methodists here was Jacob Shertz, who carried on a blacksmith-shop. The place was for many years one of the large number of preaching-places of "York Circuit," but sometimes two and three months would elapse ere the itinerant made his appearance. In good weather, however, and with no sickness on the part of the circuit-riders, preaching was had every four weeks. From 1856, when made a station, its progress has been uninterrupted, and its growth has been largely due to such members as Seymour Raymond, who by his zeal, energy, and liberality succeeded in putting the church on a good financial basis and building up its prosperous Sunday-school.

PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.—The Scotch-Irish were among the first settlers in this vicinity, and were generally Presbyterians. Lebanon Valley, however, was the principal point of attraction to these pioneers, who, bringing with them a large amount of energy and religious fervor, erected the very ancient church at Derry, and soon after the ones at Paxtang and Hanover. It does not appear that any attempt was made in early times to establish a church at Middletown, but a house was built near Gainsburg, four miles from Middletown, known as the "Conewago Presbyterian Church," long since fallen to decay. The builder was killed by falling from its roof, and was buried in 1745 in the graveyard attached. These churches, being within what was then considered reasonable distance for church attendance, were deemed sufficient for the wants of the members at Middletown. Services, however, were frequently held in the German Lutheran Church by Presbyterian preachers, among whom were Revs. N. R. Snowden and James R. Sharon. There must have been some organization among the members of the church, as the records show that on June 7, 1802, James Russell and wife conveyed lot No. 94, in Middletown, to William Crabb, John McCammon, and Edward Crouch, as "trustees of the English Presbyterian Congregation of Middletown," to be used as a burying-ground. The lot adjoining it on the east was used as a burial-ground by the Presbyterians before that period. Col. James Burd and his wife were buried there, the latter in 1784 and the former in 1793, but their remains were a few years ago removed to the Middletown cemetery. The Burds, McClures, Kirkpatrick's, and McClanegans were among the first Presbyterian families who settled about here and held large tracts of land.

In the early part of the present century the Crabbs, McCammons, Crouches, Jordans, and Elders took their places, and later the McKibbens, McNairs, and Kendigs. There was no movement to reorganize the congregation until 1850. On April 10th of that year the Presbytery in session at Carlisle appointed a committee to visit Middletown and confer with the Presbyterians there as to the practicability of establishing a church. At a meeting in June following of the Presbytery at Gettysburg the committee reported favorably. On October 29th the Presbytery met here, when a petition signed by Daniel Kendig, Sarah Kendig, Robert F. Snoddy, Edward Burgett, Dr. B. J. Wiestling, Matilda E. Wiestling, Mary E. Wilt, and Davis Thompson was presented, asking for the organization of a church here. The elders then elected were Dr. B. J. Wiestling, Daniel Kendig, and Edward Burgett. Thus was organized the first regular congregation since the original one had expired half a century before. Supply preaching was had in the brick church on Water Street.

April 8, 1851, Rev. John Cross was authorized to solicit funds for erecting a church edifice, on June 10th was called as pastor, and installed June 26th. Mr. Cross died suddenly Aug. 22, 1851, at Dickinson, Cumberland Co., while raising funds to build the church, and his remains were brought to Dr. B. J. Wiestling's house, from which the burial took place. The church building was erected on Union Street in 1852, in which year Rev. O. O. McClean became pastor, and continued to April, 1854. In October, 1855, Rev. John W. White was called and remained until the spring of 1858. His successor was Rev. T. K. Davis, from March, 1858, until May 4, 1863, when Rev. William C. Ferriday became pastor (during whose absence, from ill health, Rev. H. T. Lee, of Philadelphia, preached). Mr. Ferriday's continued sickness compelled him to resign, and Jan. 25, 1865, Rev. H. L. Rex was called, who was installed June 6, 1865, and remained until May, 1874. In January, 1865, Rev. Daniel Macfie became pastor, and resigned in January, 1876. For some time Rev. A. D. Mitchell supplied the pulpit, but being appointed post chaplain in the United States army, Rev. Robert P. Gibson supplied the pulpit until April 14, 1878, when Rev. D. C. Meeker was called as pastor, who declined the call, and on May 20th, Rev. Malachi C. Bailey became pastor. He resigned in 1880, and his successor was Rev. William G. McDannold, who took charge on Nov. 1, 1881, and is the present incumbent.

On March 31, 1852, C. W. King conveyed to Daniel Kendig lots 63 and 64, at the corner of Union and Water Streets, upon which to erect the church. On Aug. 24, 1854, Mr. Kendig conveyed the same to Dr. B. J. Wiestling, Davis Thompson, Dr. J. C. Whitehill, C. H. Roe, George Crist, Jeremiah Rehrer, and D. E. Martin, in trust for the church and congregation. The church is a neat brick edifice, with a basement for Sunday-school and lecture-room. Its builders were Messrs. Leedom and Fisher. In 1858 (August 28th) the congregation was incorporated. In March, 1864, the trustees purchased of Dr. Mercer Brown a piece of ground in Lower Swatara township, adjoining Middletown, of 77 $\frac{1}{2}$ perches, on which they erected a parsonage.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHEL).—About 1825, Rev. John Winebrenner, a minister of the German Reformed Church, but who had withdrawn therefrom, entertained and preached views on experimental religion which differed somewhat from those held by the church, resided at Harrisburg. At the request of the friends of a Mrs. Black, who had been at one time a member of his congregation, and who had died on the farm of the late George Fisher, Mr. Winebrenner came to Middletown to preach the funeral sermon. The feeling against him was so strong that some of the older citizens refused to have anything to do with him, on the ground that he was not a minister in good standing in any church. John McCammon, however, on being asked whether he would walk with Mr. Winebrenner on the occasion, cheerfully consented, and they were afterwards warm friends. The funeral services were held in the Lutheran Church, and some of the young men of the town were so favorably impressed with Mr. Winebrenner that they invited him to preach. The doors of the Lutheran Church were, however, closed against him, but Mrs. Flannagan, who had charge of the Ebenezer Methodist meeting-house, opened that building to him, and under his ministrations a great revival commenced. He continued preaching alternately with the Methodist circuit preachers for several years until about 1832, when his friends deemed it advisable to have an edifice of their own. In the mean time, however, some friends of Mr. Winebrenner residing in Harrisburg, Middletown, and vicinity met at Linglestown and organized a new church or sect, adopting the doctrines taught by Mr. Winebrenner, and styled themselves the "Church of God," but for many years they were generally known as "Winebrennarians." Mr. Winebrenner always disapproved of this term, and all his followers are now known as members of the "Church of God." The first members of this congregation, in 1827, were Susanna Smuller, — Bare, Elizabeth King, Jacob Rife, Joshua Heppich, Jacob Benner, John Benner (still living), Henry Siple, Joseph Ross, George Smuller, George Etter, Conrad Seabauch, George Baker, John McFarland, Eliza Longhead, and Eve Crist. The first elders (1827) were Joshua Heppich and John McFarland. The first church edifice of this new denomination ever built was erected in Middletown in 1832, on lot No. 23, on the east side of Main cross street (now Union), about midway between Water Street and Centre Square. It was a frame structure, lathed and plastered on the outside. There were two entrances at the front, reached by high stairs or steps. The pulpit was placed between the doors at the end of the building towards the street, and those entering faced the audience. The floor of the church from the first pew back was raised one step instead of being level, and many falls were received by persons going in and out who did not know of or failed to remember the step. The building had a basement in which the Sunday-school was held, and at one time a week-day school was taught therein by Samuel Dennis.

In 1843, by a change of grade in the street, so much filling was done in front of the church that the high steps were no longer necessary, and the entrance to the building was made much easier. At the time of the dedication an accident occurred that but for the presence of mind of Mr. Winebrenner, who was conducting the services, might have been fatal in its results. A large post had been put up in the basement to support the main girder. This girder rested upon a large stone. The great weight upon the post crushed the stone, and the effect was heard and felt by the audience, who became alarmed, fearing the building was about to fall, and rushed towards the doors, but were stopped by Mr. Winebrenner, who assured them there was less danger in remaining than in rushing out, as many might be injured in going down the steep steps on the outside. This quieted them, and one of the builders, making an examination, reported immediately that there was no danger, and the exercises were continued without further interruption.

In 1852 the building was enlarged by extending the front to the line of the street, casing the whole outside with brick and making a vestibule and gallery. The latter was constructed so as to be shut off entirely from the auditorium, if desired, and was of sufficient capacity for Sabbath-school and prayer-meetings. The internal arrangements were so changed that the pulpit was at the end opposite the entrance. On account of the gradual giving way of the walls the church council, in June, 1873, appointed a committee to ascertain the cost of repairing the building, and at the meeting of council, in July following, it reported that it was inexpedient to spend any money on repairs. Shortly afterwards it was decided to erect a new church edifice, at a cost not exceeding ten thousand dollars, and to begin its erection when eight thousand dollars was subscribed. The lot selected was on the northeast corner of Spring and Water Streets, which was purchased for twelve hundred dollars. In November, 1873, eight thousand and thirty-eight dollars had been subscribed. Ground was broken June 9, 1874, and the corner-stone laid July 8. During the following winter the regular services, prayer-meetings, and Sunday-schools were held in the basement, and in the winter of 1875 and 1876 the auditorium was thrown open for the use of the great concourse of people attending the Union meetings. It is a brick structure, and the steeple is one hundred and sixty feet high, surmounted by a ball and vane. The roof is of slate, both on main building and steeple. The walls are frescoed, and the windows of stained glass. The seats of the basement are of iron and walnut and chestnut-wood, with movable backs. Those of the audience-room are of the same material, but fixed. The pulpit and reading-desk are made of walnut and chestnut.

Among its pastors have been Elders John Winebrenner, Smitmer, Kyle, Edward West, McCartney, Croll, Mackey, William Miller, Joseph Adams, Jacob Flake, William Mooney, A. Swartz, Edward H. Thomas, William Mullineux, A. Snyder, D. A. L. Laverty, and B. F. Beck. Since 1867 the pastors have been: 1867, J. Stamm; 1867-70, J. Keller; 1870-72, J. Haifleigh; 1872-75, George Sigler; 1875-77, W. L. Jones; 1877-79, J. Miller; 1879-80, W. P. Winbigler; 1880-83, D. C. Shoop; 1883, W. L. Lockwood, the present pastor.

CHRIST CHURCH.—In 1835 a schism occurred in St. Peter's Lutheran Church, under its pastor, Rev. Peter Sahn. A great religious revival was in progress in the town, and meetings were nightly held in the lecture-room, which was always well filled. Many members of the church made a profession of a change of heart. This was an innovation, and some of the more conservative members looked upon the movement as heretical. Finally the opposition to the meetings became so great that many of the members left the church and started a new congregation, called Christ Church. They erected their church edifice in 1838, at the corner of Duck and Water Streets, and continued to worship there for many years. The membership gradually declined owing to deaths and removals, until it was no longer able to support a pastor, and finally those remaining connected themselves with other churches. The church edifice was sold to the United Brethren denomination.

AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL (ZION'S) CHURCH was erected many years ago, but exactly when there are no records to show.

ST. MARY'S CATHOLIC CHURCH.—There being no Catholic Church in Middletown, the members of this denomination here and in the vicinity were compelled to go to Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., to worship, that being in the parish in which they resided. But in 1857 a lot was secured on which to erect a mission church. Through the untiring efforts of Rev. John McCosker, who then had charge of the parish, and to whom, in great measure, the congregation is indebted for its beautiful house of worship, the project was successfully carried through. The church of "Saint Mary of the Seven Dolors" is beautifully located on high ground at the western end of Ann Street, above Lawrence, in what was known as West Portsmouth. The corner-stone was laid Sept. 20, 1857, by Rt. Rev. John Newman, bishop of the diocese of Philadelphia, assisted by Dr. O'Hara, Rev. John McCosker, and several other priests. Dr. O'Hara, now Bishop of Scranton, preached the sermon at the laying of the corner-stone, and also at the consecration of the church. Edwin Hodnett built the edifice for nine thousand dollars. It is a brick structure of Gothic style, with an organ gallery. It has a seating capacity on the first floor of over two hundred, and is the best-ventilated public building in town. The congregation in 1881 purchased grounds and laid out a cemetery. The first mission was held in the church Nov. 10, 1874, by Rev. Father Wendelin, a Benedictine monk, under the auspices of Bishop Shanahan, of Harrisburg, when a large number were confirmed. Rev. John McCosker, the first pastor, continued until he was appointed chaplain of the Fifty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, which was assigned to duty in South Carolina, where he contracted disease from which he died. He was succeeded by Rev. Fathers McGarrin (who died at Elizabethtown), Walsh, J. J. McIlvain, Macmogle, McIlvain (second time), and F. C. Foni, the present incumbent. In commemoration of the first mission, held Nov. 10, 1874, a large cross has been erected in the wall of the church, bearing the date of the mission and the text, "Abide in my love" (John v. 10).

UNITED BRETHERN CHURCH.—This congregation in 1852 erected a frame church edifice on Duck below Water Street, on a lot belonging to John Shoop. It has been gradually increasing in membership, and a few years ago purchased "Christ Church," on Water Street. For many years only a circuit, it is now a prosperous station. The first stationed pastor was Rev. H. C. Phillips, who was succeeded by Revs. J. R. Reitzel, J. G. Fritz, and A. H. Kauffman, the present pastor, who also holds service at the United Brethren Chapel, Furnace Hill.

NEW MENNONITE CHURCH.—The congregation of New Mennonites purchased years ago the frame edifice on Duck below Water Street, belonging to the United Brethren. Its membership is small, and it has services once a month.

FINANCIAL INSTITUTIONS.

BANK OF SWATARA.—The following is a contemporaneous account of the organization of the Bank of Swatara:

"At a large and respectable meeting of the inhabitants of Middletown and the adjoining neighborhood, in the county of Dauphin, the 19th day of November, 1813, convened to take into consideration the propriety of establishing a bank in said town, James Hamilton was appointed chairman, and Elisha Green appointed secretary.

"The meeting, fully sensible of the result of a disposable capital, combined with the many advantages afforded by the excellent harbor formed by the junction of the Swatara with the Susquehanna, at the now contemplated town of Portsmouth, where a large proportion of the immense produce of the country up the Susquehanna is offered for sale, confidently believe that the establishment of a bank here will not only greatly promote the commercial prosperity of Pennsylvania, and industrious and enterprising farmers, mechanics, and manufacturers, but will contribute much to the improvement of the navigation of the river and to the advancement of the canal and lock navigation of the State.

"Therefore Resolved, That a bank be established at Middletown aforesaid, with a capital of $250,000, with permission at any time hereafter to increase the sum to $500,000, divided into shares of $50 each, to be conducted by the president and twelve directors, and to be styled the Bank of Swatara.

"Resolved, That the books be opened at Middletown on Tuesday, the 14th day of December next, by Jacob Snyder and Elisha Green, at the house of John McCammon, for the subscription of fifteen hundred shares; at Hommelstown, on the same day, by Christian Spayd and Thomas Fox, at John Fox's for five hundred shares; at Lebanon, in the county of Lebanon, on the same day, by William Allison and Abraham Debler, at the house of Abraham Debler, for five hundred shares; at Lancaster, the same day, by James Hamilton and James Humes, at the house of John Duchman, for one thousand shares; at Elizabethtown, the same day, by John McCammon and Jacob Gish, for five hundred shares; at Mauchem, the same day, by Ephraim Heller and Wendle Shelley, at the house of _____, for five hundred shares; at Millerstown, in the county of Lebanon, the same day, by William Lowman and Joseph Wallace, at the house of Christian Cassel, for five hundred shares.

"Resolved, That five dollars be paid to the commission-ers for each and every share of stock at the time of subscription.

"Resolved, That James Hamilton, William Allison, E. Heller, and E. Green be a committee to draft a constitution for the said bank, which shall be printed and submitted to the stockholders at the time of subscribing.

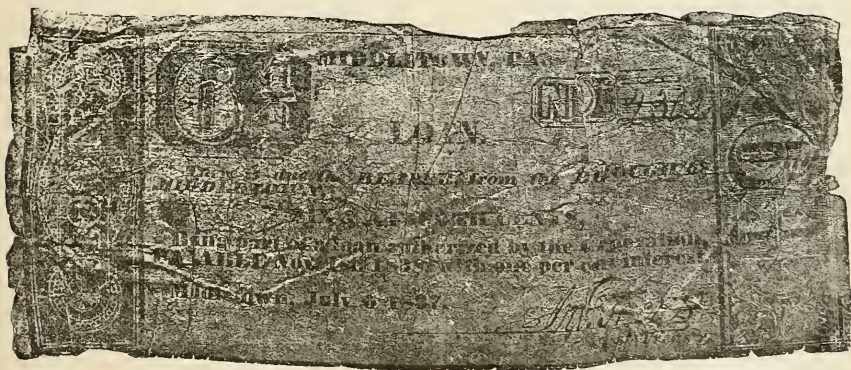

"Resolved, That these resolutions be signed by the chairman and secretary and be published in the English and German newspapers in the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Lancaster."

The mania for creating banks seized upon the Legislature in 1814, just when all the avenues of industry were deranged by war with Great Britain. The Governor protested against, and at last vetoed, an act dividing the State into banking districts; the Legislature, however, passed it by the constitutional two-thirds. Under its provisions Dauphin County got two banks,—the Harrisburg, with $600,000 capital, and the Swatara, at Middletown, with 8000 shares at $50 each, or $400,000 capital, $100,000 was paid up. The gentlemen appointed to receive subscriptions to prudence and a reasonable degree of success. As it had never declared large dividends, great was the astonishment among its stockholders when it closed its doors, as was the case in a few years. Its business was continued and wound up at Harrisburg by Mr. Neilson, who in the course of his residence here was made cashier of the State treasury.

The banking house of the Swatara Bank was the house opposite the National Bank of Middletown, now occupied by Robert T. Landis. The bank shortly after it commenced business was robbed of forty thousand dollars in unsigned notes. Entrance to the bank was effected by boring through the door and cutting out a panel. The robber was arrested in Myerstown, in Lebanon County, and the money recovered. He proved to be a man named Rennock, who had once been a merchant in Philadelphia, but who had failed. He was tried, convicted, and sentenced to the penitentiary for a term of years.

NATIONAL BANK OF MIDDLETOWN.—This old financial institution was first organized May 12, 1832, as a bank under the banking laws of the State, and was called the "Bank of Middletown." In 1864 it was changed into a National Bank. Its first president was Benjamin Jordan, who continued from 1832 to 1841, and was succeeded by Dr. Mercer Brown, who in turn was succeeded in 1854 by George Smuller, who died in 1882, when J. Donald Cameron was chosen president, Seymour Raymond, vice-president, and D. W. Stebman, cashier. Gen. Simon Cameron the stock of the one at Middletown were Thomas R. Buchanan, George Bower, Isaac W. VanLeer, Henry Berry, George Fisher (Harrisburg), John Shelly (Londonderry), James Wilson (Derry), Jacob Hershey (Derry), James Hamilton, Christian Spayd, Elisha Green, Ephraim Heller, William Lauman. The necessary amount was subscribed and the bank set agoing, with John Neilson, a careful accountant, as its cashier. James Hamilton was president of the institution. For several years it was carried on with was cashier from 1832 to 1850, when his son, J. Donald Cameron (United States senator), succeeded him. The first teller of the bank was John Croll, whose successor was John Monaghan in 1856. He died in 1869, since which time the tellership had been filled by Daniel W. Stebman, who was recently elected cashier. Since its establishment, in 1832, the bank has been kept in the same building, and for half a century has been the best known financial institution of the county. J. C. Bomberger was several years ago assistant teller, succeeded by John Monohan, subsequently the teller. The present assistant teller is H. C. Stehman.

FARMERS' BANK OF MIDDLETOWN.—A new State Bank has been recently chartered by James Young and others, and opened in Mr. Young's building adjoining his residence, and is known as the "Farmers' Bank of Middletown." Benjamin S. Peters is president; V. C. Coolbaugh, vice-president; Lee H. Nissley, cashier; and A. H. Reider, teller.

EMAUS INSTITUTE, SCHOOLS, ETC.

At Middletown, in 1837, there was erected the Emaus Institute, founded by a bequest of George Frey, of Middletown, who died in 1806. In 1874 it was removed to its present site. The life of Mr. Frey (his real name was Everhart) was marked with romance. When Mr. Fisher, the founder of the town, first came to this place, he used to hire George Everhart, who was then a penniless German lad, to assist in plowing the fields and clearing up his new land. George lived with Mr. Fisher some years, until he had saved a little fund, but his ambition looked beyond the plow, and investing his money in a stock of trinkets, finery, and other articles for Indian traffic, he mounted his pack and started up the Susquehanna. Passing the mountains he encountered a party of soldiers from the garrison at Fort Hunter, who arrested him as a runaway redemptioner (a servant who had been sold for a time to pay his passage from Europe), a character common in those days, and far more consistent with George's appearance and language than that of a peddler; for what peddler, said they, would risk his life and property thus alone and on foot on this dangerous frontier? "Ich bin frei! ich bin frei!" (I am free), repeated George earnestly in German, in reply to their charge. He succeeded in convincing them of his independence, and went with them to the garrison, where he became quite a favorite, the soldiers knowing him by no other name than that of "Frey," which they had caught from his first reply to them. He sold out his stock and pack at a fine profit, and continued to repeat his adventures, still passing as George Frey, until he was able to start a store in Middletown, where he afterwards erected a mill.

Near the close of the Revolution, when the old Continental money was gradually depreciating, George, who always kept both eyes open, contrived to be on the right side of the account, so that instead of losing he gained immensely by the depreciation; and, in short, by dint of untiring industry, close economy, sharp bargains, and lucky financiering, he at length became the capitalist of the village, and owned much of the real estate in and around the town. Although married, he was never blessed with children; hence he made the bequest to found an institution to cheer and educate the fatherless children of a succeeding age, and Emaus Institute is a splendid monument to George Frey's benevolence. It was the first institution of the kind projected in this country. The bequest for its endowment was signed May 12, 1806.

A notice of the death of Frey, the most prominent individual of the locality, appears in the Morgenrotte, a German newspaper of Harrisburg, published by Benjamin Mayer, May 17, 1806. There is no obituary further than that he died "at Middletown, on Tuesday last, at a great age, and was a citizen of wealth and renown." At his demise he could not have been less than eighty years of age. We find him trading in 1762-64 at Forts Hunter and Augusta (Sunbury). In 1768 he kept tavern in Middletown; and it is stated that he was employed about Middletown years before, certainly as early as George Fisher. Frey appears as the owner of the mill and whatever rights then attached in 1766. He was a very successful man for forty years after. He was buried on the Middletown farm in 1806, removed in a few years to "the Emaus," and now rests at the new orphan house, covered by a proper and deserved monument.¹

In the chapter devoted to the "early courts," etc., a full account is given of the litigation which ensued upon Frey's death. Some years prior to 1806, Mr. Frey had determined to found the institution which was afterwards established, and commenced its erec-

Of the men composing the coroner's jury eleven were Scotch-Irish and three German. All wrote their names, Buchenoste only being German. They were prominent men in the Swatara region, three or four of them officers in the Pennsylvania Line of the Revolution.

tion prior to his death. The building, however, was never completed. It was built of logs, thirty by forty feet, two stories, and was roofed, but not inclosed. In this state it remained until decay worked its ruin.

The present school is managed by six persons, viz., four trustees, one principal, and one tutor. After many years of expensive litigation, the house was built between Middletown and Portsmouth in 1837, and moved to its present site in 1874. The institution is devoted to the education of poor orphan children, who are carefully trained in the doctrines of the Lutheran Church. Instruction is given in both English and German. The charter has been so altered by the Legislature as to permit the establishment of a literary and scientific department. Since its removal to the present site, it has been under the charge of William A. Croll, principal, and George A. Lauman, tutor.

The early elementary schools were all of a private character. The first English school was taught by Mrs. Ward. Jacob Peeler, the first male teacher, was a nail-maker, and taught school during the winter months. The teacher had the whole management of the school, teaching eight hours per day. Later, Rev. John F. Hay taught in an old log house, where the Pine Street school-house now stands. He was afterwards the founder of Cottage Hill Seminary, at York, Pa. When the school law of 1834 was passed, Middletown was among the first to adopt it. The first directors were Dr. Mercer Brown, president; John Croll, secretary; Christian Spayd, treasurer; John Bomberger, E. J. Ramsey, and Peter Kob. Joseph Ross was appointed a delegate to represent the district in the joint meeting of the commissioners at the court-house in Harrisburg, on the first Tuesday of November of that year. He was instructed to vote for the laying of a tax for the support of the common schools. There was very little opposition to this school law. Among the most active in its favor were Gen. Simon Cameron, Henry Smith, George Smuller, John Bomberger, and Martin Kendig, the latter representing the county in the Legislature during the "Buckshot War." In 1835, Michael Lazarus was elected to represent the district in convention at the county commissioners' office in Harrisburg, with instructions to vote for levying a tax and such other measures as might be necessary for carrying into effect a general system of education. Before this the schools were all independent. The teachers received from the parents and guardians a certain amount per quarter for each scholar, and for those who were too poor to pay for their education the county commissioners provided, and also supplied them with the necessary books.

POST-OFFICE AND POSTMASTERS.—The Middletown post-office was established in the fall of 1800, with William Crabb as postmaster, who made his first returns to the department Jan. 1, 1801. His successor was Peter Shuster, who made his first returns October 1st of the same year. John McCammon was appointed in 1803, and made his first returns April 1, 1803. He continued in office until Dec. 24, 1829, a period of nearly twenty-seven years, and was succeeded by William Lanman. After the latter's death, his widow, Elizabeth Lanman, was appointed, Dec. 29, 1832. She was succeeded, June 30, 1834, by Elizabeth Crabb. Her successor was Christian Spayd, appointed April 12, 1836. He was succeeded by Edward S. Kendig March 25, 1840. His successors were appointed as follows: John Hicks, June 21, 1841; Edward S. Kendig, Jan. 1845; Catharine A. Stouch, Feb. 17, 1849; Maria L. Lauman, May 15, 1857; W. H. Kendig, April 8, 1861; John J. Walborn, April 10, 1863; Mary A. E. Walborn, April 17, 1863; Jackson H. Kirlin, April 18, 1866; Clarence Monaghan, March 27, 1867 (did not qualify); Rachel McKibben, April 5, 1867. In April, 1883, Mrs. R. McKibben resigned as postmaster, and Miss Eveline R. Wiestling was appointed, and has entered upon the duties of the office. The office became a Presidential one March 27, 1867. In the summer of 1850 the citizens of Portsmouth petitioned the department for the establishment of a post-office at that place, setting forth that Middletown and Portsmouth were two distinct places; that the location of the Middletown office was inconvenient for them, it being then on Main Street, opposite the Middletown National Bank; that the largest portion of the mail matter not connected with the bank was for the lumber merchants, furnaces, etc., who would be more easily accommodated at Portsmouth than at Middletown, especially as the railroad station was in Portsmouth. The department granted the petition, and the Portsmouth post-office was established, with Dr. John Ringland as postmaster. He opened the post-office in August, 1850. In October, 1851, he resigned and S. H. Ninian was appointed, who was succeeded by his sister, S. E. Ninian, who held the office until April, 1857, when the extension of the borough limits having included Portsmouth the latter office was abolished.

NEWSPAPERS.

THE MIDDLETOWN ARGUS was the first newspaper printed in the town, and was established in 1834 by a Mr. Wilson. It was an independent and family journal. Mr. Wilson did the editorial work, and his wife helped to set the type. The office was located on Main Street, opposite S. L. Yetter's residence. It was discontinued in 1835.

THE MIDDLETOWN EMPORIUM was established in 1850, by William Henlock, formerly of Henlock & Bratton, State printers at Harrisburg. It was printed at the corner of Pine and Main Streets, and after being published for a year and a half was discontinued.

MIDDLETOWN JOURNAL.—The Central Engine was published in Middletown in 1851 and 1852 by H. S. Fisher, but the material was purchased, and the paper merged into the Swatara Gem in July, 1853, by J. W. Stofer. This was a neat sheet of four pages, and five columns to the page. In August, 1854, Mr. Stofer enlarged it to six columns, and printed it on a sheet twenty-two by thirty-three inches. In August, 1856, he sold the paper and office to Benjamin Whitman, who, retaining its size, changed its name to the Dauphin Journal. In September, 1856, a copartnership was formed between Messrs. Whitman and Stofer, and they continued to publish the Journal jointly, enlarging the paper and changing it to a quarto form. In January, 1857, Mr. Whitman retired, and J. W. Stofer became the sole proprietor again. He resumed the old size and style, retaining the name Dauphin Journal as before. In November, 1870, the paper was enlarged to a seven-column paper and printed on a sheet twenty-four by thirty-eight inches, the title being changed to the Middletown Journal, its present name. Since then it has been enlarged to eight columns. It has been published from the first as an independent family newspaper, giving large space and attention to local news, and published in the interest of home affairs. It is a good advertising medium, enjoying a healthy circulation, is well edited, and in every way is a first-class country newspaper.

The Middletown Press, an eight-column journal of four pages, was established July 16, 1881, by J. R. Hoffer as proprietor. Its editor is J. E. Hoffer, and its business manager A. E. Hoffer. It is published every Saturday, is an independent sheet, and as a local paper is hardly surpassed in the State. It has a well-equipped job office, which, together with the publication office, is located opposite the Washington House.

FIRE DEPARTMENT.

Soon after the incorporation of the borough, Feb. 19, 1828, an engine was procured, and a fire company organized under the name of the "Union." The engine was small but very effective for its class, and was built in Philadelphia in 1787 by Philip Mason. It remained in use until about 1868. The Borough Council, in order to make the engine available in case of fire, required the owner of each house to provide leather fire-buckets, one for each story of the house. These were kept at some point in the house where they could be readily obtained, and it was no uncommon thing to see a pair of fire-buckets suspended in the hall near the front door. Each bucket was marked with the owner's name and that of the "Union Fire Company." Some of these buckets are still in existence.

UNITED STATES ENGINE COMPANY.—In 1851 a meeting of citizens of Portsmouth was held, at which steps were taken to provide better facilities for extinguishing fires. Those present subscribed liberally, and a committee appointed to solicit subscriptions were so successful that in a short time a contract was made with Mr. Agnew, of Philadelphia, to build a suction-engine. The engine, built after the pattern of the "United States" of Philadelphia, was built and delivered, and then turned over to a company for service. The engine company purchased a quantity of hose and truck, and failing to pay for them the property was seized and sold by the sheriff, and the engine was purchased by the late Judge Murray, taken to Harrisburg, and was burned with the building in which it was stored.

On Nov. 16, 1866, on the petition of one hundred and eighty-three freeholders of the borough, an appropriation of two thousand dollars was made to purchase a fire-engine and erect an engine-house. For four hundred and fifty dollars an engine was purchased of George Smuller, with hose-carriage, etc. Christian Fisher for nine hundred and eighty dollars contracted for and erected the engine-house. It was operated a short time by the "Good Will" Company.

LIBERTY STEAM FIRE-ENGINE COMPANY, No. 1, was organized Nov. 7, 1874, and incorporated by a decree of the court in January, 1875. The presidents have been: 1874-75, D. R. Ettla; 1876, H. C. Raymond; 1877-78, W. G. Kennard; 1879, Rufus Frunks; 1880-81, W. G. Kinnard. The other officers for 1881 were: Vice-President, Stephen Curtis; Treasurer, D. H. Bucher; Secretary, Harry Rakestraw; Trustees, David A. Detwiler, J. Porter Campbell, Robert Martin, John Stipe; Foreman, Henry Hipple, Jr.; First Assistant, William Davis; Second Assistant, David Brant. The company has eighty equipped men. The engine-house is located on Catherine Street, above Emaus, in the Middle Ward.

INDUSTRIES.

THE SUSQUEHANNA IRON-WORKS.—About the year 1848 Samuel Jenkins (and afterwards Dr. Andrew Patterson) established a foundry here, at which stoves and other castings were made, and was the nucleus of the Susquehanna Iron-Works. In 1856, Nisley, Bro. & Co. (the latter being Seymour Raymond) opened their foundry here with ten hands on the same site where the above iron-works are now located. In the same year James Campbell & Son (Joseph Campbell) established their machine-works. In 1864 these two establishments were united under the firm of Raymond (Seymour) & Campbell (James), and have been in successful operation ever since. The firm transacts a general foundry and machine business, the latter being the most extensive branch up to the panic of 1873, since which time the former has taken the lead. This is the pioneer establishment of the town, and the first manufacturing house organized here outside of the lumber business save the furnaces. It has been the nucleus around which other large establishments have since been built up. In its first year it employed but few hands, and its business did not exceed ten thousand dollars, but it now employs one hundred and twenty-five men, and its sales aggregate two hundred and fifty thousand dollars. It weathered the great financial storms of 1857 and 1873, and did not suspend operations or succumb to the pressure. Its warehouse is sixty-six by ninety feet, and has five floors besides the cellar. The foundry is one hundred and forty-four by seventy feet, with a wing eighty-five by forty feet, in which there is room for forty-five moulders. Its brick pattern-shop is eighty by thirty feet, and is fire-proof. There are two frame buildings, one hundred by thirty feet and eighty-five by thirty, for storing castings, patterns, etc. The machine-shop is three stories high and ninety-five by forty-two feet. The blacksmith-shop is eighty by fifty feet. The building for storing plates is ninety by forty-five feet, and two stories high. Railroad tracks connect all the buildings, making shipping most convenient.

THE CAMERON FURNACES, at first called the Christiann Furnace, were established prior to 1840 by John Gamber, who named them for his daughter. It was originally a charcoal furnace; the Round Top and much other woodland was cleared to furnish the charcoal. It was afterwards converted into an anthracite furnace. These furnaces have largely contributed to the growth and prosperity of the town. The proprietors are J. Donald Cameron, Joseph H. Landis, and James Young.

THE AMERICAN TUBE- AND IRON-WORKS was originally the Middletown Pipe-Mill, and was operated by a company, the largest stockholders being Philadelphians, and manufactured pipe of two inch and less. The operations were suspended during the panic of 1873, and remained idle until 1879, when George Matheson, James Young, and others took hold of them and have extended them, so that the works are now among the largest in the country. They are now manufacturing pipe of eight-inch diameter down to half-inch, and are constantly increasing their facilities for manufacturing. It is now owned by a company, of which James Young is president, George Matheson treasury, and Adam Matheson superintendent, and are compelled to run day and night to keep up with orders.

THE MIDDLETOWN CAR-WORKS were started by an incorporated company in 1869, and in 1881 were purchased by the present proprietors, Michael Shad and Arthur King, the latter being the superintendent. It is now one of the prosperous industries of that thriving town.

THE MIDDLETOWN FURNITURE COMPANY'S FACTORY is one of the leading establishments of the borough. Its work is becoming well known, and its success has been steady and assured.

There are a number of planing-mills, which have been established for years. The lumber trade, as previously stated, has for over a century been the great business of the town. The paint manufactory of Cobaugh Brothers is located on Railroad Street.

LOWER SWATARA TOWNSHIP.

LOWER SWATARA TOWNSHIP was erected by an act of Assembly passed March 18, 1840, which directed,—

“That part of Swatara township, in the county of Dauphin, south of straight lines forthwith to be run by the supervisor of said township, commencing at the west end of the bridge over Swatara Creek at Nissley's mill; thence to the residence of Daniel Smith; thence to Christian Roop's; thence to Samuel Neidig's; thence to the River Susquehanna at the line dividing the farms of Christian Mumma and John Heagy; and thence immediately by the lower end of Shreiner's Island to the York County line, shall hereafter form a separate election district and township to be called Lower Swatara.”

And by the twenty-seventh section of an act of Assembly passed on the 13th of June, 1840, it is further provided that,—

“That part of Lower Swatara township, in the county of Dauphin, north of straight lines to be run by the supervisors of the townships of Swatara and Lower Swatara, commencing at the residence of Daniel Smith; thence to Peter Roop's; thence to Christian Good's fulling-mill; and thence to the residence of Samuel Neidig, shall hereafter form part of Swatara township, etc., and that so much of the resolution passed 18th of March, 1840, as is hereby altered is repealed.”

As thus constituted the township of Lower Swatara is bounded on the east by Derry and Londonderry townships, from which it is separated by the Swatara, on the south by the Susquehanna River to the York County line, and on the west and north by the township of Swatara.

HIGHSPIRE is a post-town, situated between the Susquehanna River and the Pennsylvania Canal, on the turnpike from Harrisburg to Middletown, six miles from the former and three from the latter. It is on the main line of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The town was laid out prior to the war of 1812-14, but how and why designated Highspire we have yet to learn, the statement that it was named for Spires in Germany not being correct. By an act of the Assembly passed Feb. 7, 1867, it was incorporated into a borough, but the act was annulled on April 8, 1868. The village did not begin to grow much until 1842; when the following were the freeholders in its limits:

Conrad Alleman.
George Boyer.
Jacob Baker.
John Carr.
Henry Cook (colored).
Widow Carr.
Jacob Erisman.
Henry Fleisher.
John A. Fisher.
Henry Fogle.

Jacob Waggoner.
Matthias Winagle.
Robert Wilson.

Two additions have been made to the town, the first by Maj. David Mumma, of Harrisburg, and the second by Judge Isaac Mumma. The oldest houses in the place are those of Jacob Bender, Michael Stoner, Samuel Mumma, Alfred Cannon (the old "Cross-Keys" tavern), and Jacob Roop. These were all built before the laying out of the town in 1814. The first store was kept by a Mr. Liverick, who was succeeded by Conrad Alleman, who kept for thirty-five years, and the store building of the latter is still owned by his estate. John Sener came from Lancaster and kept the first tavern. The next inn was that of Mrs. Early, the "Cross-Keys." Afterwards Conrad Alleman kept a tavern in connection with Matthias Winagle.

John Sener, about 1800 and later, made edge-tools for this whole region. The first blacksmith was Benjamin Ebersole, whose successor was Jacob Roop, who carried on the shop for forty years. During part of this time Jacob Wolf also had a shop at the other end of town. John Roop succeeded Wolf, and Daniel Loug followed Jacob Roop. The first cooper was Benjamin Roop, whose successor was the late Abraham Funk.

In 1775, John Hollingsworth erected a large stone grist-mill, which stood in constant operation until destroyed by fire, March 3, 1860, when owned by the Demmys. In 1863 it was rebuilt of wood by John and Elizabeth Buser, who have since operated it. It is one of the oldest mills in this part of the county, being ten years older than Frey's mill at Middletown.

SCHOOLS.—Lower Swatara being connected with Swatara township until 1840, was by a majority opposed to the establishment of free schools, and year after year voted against it. But the town of Portsmouth, having a population of seven hundred and fifty, was nearly unanimous in favor of the common-school system. It was not until 1843 that the township accepted the law, and then only through the efforts of Martin Kendig, William F. Murray, and others, who took advantage of the almost impassable roads, gathered up every voter in Portsmouth and vicinity that could be got out, and carried them to the place of holding the election, rightly supposing that the farmers, who were generally opposed to the law, would not make their appearance. Enough votes were obtained, not only to accept the provisions of the law, but to elect directors who were in favor of carrying out its provisions. The adoption of the law was mainly owing to Martin Kendig, Robert Wilson, John Balsbaugh, and Michael Alleman. At this time the township has eight good schools, with good and new houses well arranged for the scholars.

In 1875 the present commodious two-story brick school building was erected by the Board of Education, consisting of George W. Parthamore, A. Ebersole, J. Bingaman, J. Yingst, Isaac Mumma, J. J. Lehman. The architect was G. Fisher.

UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH.—The United Brethren denomination had preaching by local preachers as early as 1830 in the old school-house, but the congregation was not organized until 1843. On January 6th of this year the first subscription paper was started to erect a church, which was headed by Jacob Roop with one hundred dollars, followed by Conrad Alleman with fifty dollars, and Samuel Neidig with fifty dollars. The second subscription paper, dated January 17th, was started with Michael Frantz's name for seventy-five dollars, John Balsbaugh's for eighteen dollars, and Christian Good's for ten dollars. Several other subscription papers were circulated, the money raised, and the church edifice completed the same year. The following have been its regular pastors: 1846, Simon Dreisbach; 1847-49, Daniel Funkhouser; 1849, Samuel Siders; 1850, George Miller; 1851, Samuel Siders, Jacob Roop, Simon Dreisbach; 1852, Abraham Noll; 1853-55, Joseph Young; 1855-57, Samuel Zimmerman; 1857, Samuel Roop; 1858, Jacob Kessler, L. W. Cromer; 1860, J. B. Daugherty, L. Fleisher; 1861, J. B. Daugherty; 1862-65, J. P. Smith; 1865, John G. Clair, G. W. Hoffman; 1866, G. W. Hoffman; 1867, J. O. Brewer; 1868, J. P. Smith, H. Hackman, A. Miller; 1869-71, Israel Carpenter; 1870-72, W. B. Evers; 1872, David O. Farrell, P. Bowman; 1873, W. D. Mower, P. Bowman, Isaiah Baltzell, H. C. Phillips; 1874, Isaiah Baltzell, H. C. Phillips, Hiram Neaffer; 1875, Hiram Neaffer; 1876-79, Thomas Garland; 1879, G. W. M. Rigor; 1880-82, Abraham H. Kaufman.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHIEL).—This denomination have had for years prior to 1843 preaching by missionary ministers in the old school-house, and in that year its church edifice was built. Among the earliest pastors were Revs. Thomas Strohm, Abraham Snyder, Simon Fleisher, Israel Brady, Stern, and Deshong. Since 1867 they have been: 1867-69, J. W. Miller; 1869-72, Rev. Carvell; 1872-75, Rev. Arnold; 1875-

77, D. S. Shock; 1877-79, James Speese; 1879-81, J. B. Lockwood; 1881-82, S. B. Howard.

TINIAN.—Just back of the village of Highspire, on the bluff overlooking the broad expanse of the Susquehanna, is "Tinian," the residence of Col. James Burd. At present it possibly presents the same appearance as when Col. Burd passed from off this stage of life. It is a stone structure, thirty by forty feet, two and a half stories high. It was erected by Col. Burd prior to the Bouquet expedition of 1763, and, unless the residence of Peter Allen, at the foot of Peter's Mountain, is in existence, is probably the most ancient edifice within the limits of the county of Dauphin. The place was named "Tinian" by Col. Burd, and is certainly one of the historic mansions of our State. The most notable men of the French and Indian and Revolutionary wars were entertained at "Tinian" right hospitably, and the associations which cluster around that famous building, whose owner was a man of mark in Provincial days, claim its preservation in this volume. The old iron knocker of Col. Burd remains on the front door, while the interior presents little change. It has never been remodeled.

One-half a mile to the east of "Tinian" is "Walnut Hill," the home of the Crouchs and Jordans. In some particulars the progressive spirit of the age has changed it. It, too, was erected a century ago, and, as the residence of Capt. James Crouch, of the Revolution, Edward Crouch, a representative in Congress, and Benjamin Jordan, a State senator, all representative men, has an historic interest.

"TINIAN," RESIDENCE OF COL. JAMES BURD, 1764.

SWATARA TOWNSHIP.

THE court at their September sessions in the year 1799 issued an order to commissioners to view Lower Paxtang township and report to the next sessions a line dividing said township as nearly as might be for the convenience of the people into two equal parts; to which the commissioners made return that they had made a division of the said township by a line.

"Beginning at the Paxtang Creek, where the breast of Landis' mill-dam formerly stood; thence south 85 degrees east 192 perches to a hickory in the land of John Neisley; thence south 76 degrees east 375 perches to a black-oak in the land of Joshua Elder, Esq.; thence south 80 degrees east 135½ perches to the fence of the glebe land belonging to the Paxtang meeting-house; thence south 85 degrees east 667 perches to a chestnut-tree in Christian Page's field; thence 340 perches to Michael Cassel's bake-oven; thence 200 perches to the house of George Reese; thence 262 perches to a marked hickory on the bank of Beaver Creek, on land of Jacob Siders."

This report was confirmed by the court, and it was ordered that it be entered of record, and that the southern division be designated upon the records of the court by the name of Swatara township. The foregoing shows the division line between Lower Paxtang and Swatara townships in the year 1799; subsequently Lower Paxtang township was again divided and Susquehanna township taken from it by a line from the mountain to somewhere near the centre of the line of Swatara, giving the southern section of the division to Susquehanna, thus making the before-described Swatara line in part the dividing line between Susquehanna and Swatara townships. In the year 1842 the court issued an order to commissioners to view, ascertain, and establish and lay out a line of division between Susquehanna and Swatara townships, from the bridge over Paxtang Creek at the junction of Market and Chestnut Streets, in the line of the then borough of Harrisburg, to the corner between the townships of Swatara, Susquehanna, and Lower Paxtang. The commissioners reported the following line, to wit:

"Beginning at the corner between the said townships of Swatara, Susquehanna, and Lower Paxtang, where the eastern branch of Kimbortz's mill-dam crosses the same, and where a public road from said mill crosses said branch; thence down said branch and mill-dam, along the west side thereof by the several courses, $39\frac{4}{5}$ perches to the forks of said dam; thence by the western fork of said dam and branch, and along the north side thereof by their several courses, 68 perches to a point where said branch is crossed by a road leading to Kimbortz's mill, and opposite the mouth of a run entering said branch from the south-west; thence crossing said branch and up said run and ravine, along which it flows by their several courses, $94\frac{7}{10}$ perches to a hickory in or near the line of lands of F. Rudy; thence by said line north $88\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 93 perches to the forks of a stream rising near a stone corner between lands of the heirs of Joshua Elder and Jacob Pancake, deceased, in said Rudy's line; thence down said stream, by the several courses thereof, 88 perches to its junction with Rutherford's Run; thence down Rutherford's Run two perches to the mouth of Hileman's Run; thence up Hileman's Run, by the several courses page 272, the second in Road Doc. A, page 273, and by reference to what follows it may be seen how Lower Swatara was separated. As now organized the township of Swatara is bounded on the north by the townships of Susquehanna and Lower Paxtang, on the east by Derry and Lower Swatara, on the south by Lower Swatara, and on the west by the Susquehanna River and the limits of the city of Harrisburg.

Many of the incidents narrated in the general history as occurring in Paxtang township proper transpired within the limits of the township of Swatara. The township is located in one of the finest valleys in Pennsylvania, and most of the land is highly cultivated. There is little or no poor land within its limits.

PAXTANG CHURCH.

Three miles east of Harrisburg, on the ridge which forms the northern boundary of Paxtang Valley, stands the Paxtang Presbyterian Church, one of the oldest landmarks in Dauphin County. While it is true that thereof, 119 perches to the line of James Herrington, where a road crosses said run; thence by the line of Herrington's land, south $67\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 109 perches, to where said line strikes the head-waters of a run which leads across the Downingtown and Ephrata turnpike road; thence down said run, by the several courses thereof, 153 perches to the middle of said turnpike and a bridge across said run; thence along the middle of said turnpike road to the middle of the bridge over Paxtang Creek aforesaid, by the following courses and distances: north 74 degrees west 68 perches to an angle; north $74\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 213 perches to an angle on Allison's Hill; north 66 degrees west $51\frac{2}{10}$ perches to the junction of said turnpike with the Jonestown road, and south $78\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 8 perches to the middle of said bridge."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 18th of January, 1843. The line thus run, so far as it goes, varies materially from the line of 1799, before mentioned. The first division line of Swatara township may be found recorded in Ses. Doc., 1795-1801, nothing in the New World can be called old, it is also true that the origin of this place as a place of worship is lost in antiquity. In 1732, when the Presbytery of Donegal was organized, there was standing on the spot a log house of worship with some of the marks of age upon it, and near by were the green graves of the pioneers, most of which were never marked, and their existence to-day is only discovered by the grave-digger when he strikes his spade into the soil to add one more to the already populous city of the dead. Sixty years ago there was at the head of one of these graves a rough limestone, upon which was chiseled in rude letters an inscription which stated that the inhabitant below had departed this life in 1716. This establishes the fact of the existence of the burying-ground at that date, and we are naturally led to the conclusion that the log church was also then in existence. Rev. James Anderson and others preached here as supplies, under the care of the Presbytery of New Castle, prior to 1732. On the 11th of October of that year the Presbytery of Donegal was constituted out of a portion of the Presbytery of New Castle. The meeting was held at the Donegal Church; ministers present, Messrs. Anderson, Thomson, Boyd, Orr, and Bertram. Mr. Thomson was elected moderator, and Mr. Bertram clerk. The first item of business brought before the new Presbytery of Donegal was in relation to Paxtang and Derry. These churches having united in a call to the Rev. William Bertram, which had been placed in his hands at the last meeting of the old New Castle Presbytery, George Renick and others of Paxtang and Derry appeared and required an answer thereto. Mr. Bertram accepted, and was installed Nov. 15, 1732, at Swatara, which Webster says was the original name of Derry Church. Thomas Forster, George Renick, William Cunningham, and Thomas Mayes were appointed for the Paxtang side, and Rowland Chambers, Hugh Black, Robert Campbell, John Wilson, William Wilson, James Quigley, William McCord, and John Sloan for the Derry side of the creek, to assist Mr. Bertram in congregational affairs until the erection of a formal session.

At the meeting of Presbytery at Upper Octorara, Sept. 6, 1733, "Mr. Bertram presented a list of men nominated by the congregations of Paxtang and Derry to be set apart for ruling elders. Presbytery ordered that they be again published, and intimation given that if any objection be made against any of them, said objection be given in due time."

The amount of the subscriptions to Mr. Bertram's salary does not appear, but the congregation, in addition thereto, made over to him and his heirs their "right and title to the plantation commonly called 'The Indian Town,' purchased from the Indians." Hitherto, and until 1736, Paxtang and Derry were considered simply as two branches of the same congregation; this arrangement was unwieldy, and gave rise to various disputes and misunderstandings about financial matters. They had fallen into arrears with Mr. Anderson, and were ordered no less than five times at as many different meetings of Presbytery to pay up; difficulty was experienced in getting all parts of the congregation to contribute their just dues towards the repairs of Mr. Bertram's house, and to defray the expenses of a lawsuit about certain boards. These and other troubles of a like nature were a source of annoyance to both societies as well as to Mr. Bertram, so much so that at Nottingham, Oct. 9, 1735, Mr. Bertram and his elder united in asking Presbytery to appoint a committee "to go into and reason with the people of said congregation and inquire into their circumstances, as to their ability to be separated into two distinct congregations and support themselves, in order that Mr. Bertram, being eased of part of his burden, may be able to go on with more comfort in the discharge of his duty to whichever part of said people he shall be determined to continue with."

A committee was appointed and reported to Presbytery Nov. 20, 1735. Accompanying their report they presented a supplication from the session asking for a separation, and that their bounds might be fixed. At the same time Lazarus Stewart prosecuted a supplication from Manada Creek (Hanover) for a new erection. The subject of the separation between Paxtang and Derry was postponed from one Presbytery to another, until finally on the 2d of September, 1736, it was agreed to. So popular was Mr. Bertram with his people that both parties were anxious to secure his services,—Paxtang engaging to pay for his yearly support sixty pounds, "one-half in money, the other half in bay, flax, linen, yarn, or linen cloth at market price." Derry promised fifty-five pounds, to be paid in like manner. Mr. Bertram was perplexed, and asked for time to consider; Presbytery gave him until the next meeting of Synod, which took place on the 16th of September. He chose Derry, and Paxtang was declared vacant. From this date until Dec. 22, 1738, the congregation was supplied by Messrs. Sankey, Alexander, Craven, and Elder.

On Dec. 22, 1738, John Elder, a graduate of the University of Edinburgh, was ordained and installed pastor of Paxtang, at a salary of sixty pounds in money. Mr. Elder was a strong man, and filled a large space not only in the church but in the State. In addition to the sacred office he held a commission as civil magistrate, was captain of the celebrated body of men known as the "Paxtang Rangers," and held a colonel's commission under the Proprietary government. It is unnecessary to give more of his personal history in this connection, as a full biographical sketch of him will be found in another part of this volume. Soon after Mr. Elder began his labors in Paxtang it was found that the old log church was insufficient, and steps were taken towards the erection of the present building. It stands about twenty feet back from the site of the old house, and was begun about the year 1740, but owing to the poverty of the congregation and their aversion to going into debt (a characteristic which they still retain) it seems to have been some years in course of erection, and according to a tradition which is doubtless correct, was used for a long time as a house of worship with neither floor nor pews; seats made of logs hewn on one side were used by all the people excepting the family of the pastor, who occupied a settee. In the division of Mr. Elder's effects after his death, the old settee fell to his son Thomas.

The building is an unpretending stone structure, thirty-six by sixty-six feet, without ornament of any kind, and has stood without change in its outward appearance for more than one hundred and forty years. The stones used in the construction of the walls are rough limestone, and so irregular in size and shape that a modern mason would pronounce them utterly unfit for building purposes, and yet no firmer or better walls can be found anywhere. Their strength seems to lie in the mortar used, which is now as hard as the stone itself, and the storms of almost a century and a half have had so little effect upon it that the marks of the mason's trowel are as distinct to-day as when he finished the work.

Ground had scarcely been broken for the new house when the dissensions between Old and New Sideism arose in the church, which resulted in the division of the congregation. Mr. Elder and a portion of the people adopting Old Side views, remained in possession of the property. The New Side people secured two acres of land about two miles farther east, and immediately erected thereon a rival church, and in 1745, Rev. John Roan became their pastor, and continued his labors among them until his death in 1775. Mr. Roan was at the same time pastor of the New Side Churches of Derry and Mount Joy.

This movement seriously crippled the congregation, and was the main cause for the delay in finishing and furnishing the building. Mr. Elder's salary was also greatly reduced, but was supplemented by the Old Side people of Derry, who at this time united with Paxtang under his ministrations. The minutes of Donegal Presbytery from Sept. 28, 1745, to June, 1747, and from Oct. 9, 1750, to June 5, 1759, having been lost, Mr. Elder's private papers, many of them, being also lost or inaccessible, it is somewhat difficult to trace the history of Paxtang during this period, probably the most trying one in its existence. The French war was in progress and the Indians very troublesome. "Many a family mourned for some of their number shot by the secret foe or carried away captive. Their rifles were carried with them to their work in the field and to the sanctuary. Elder placed his trusty piece beside him in the pulpit. Death often overtook his flock as they returned to their scattered plantations. In 1756 the meeting-house was surrounded while he was preaching, but their spies having counted the rifles, the Indians retired from their ambuscade without making an attack." On another occasion, in the same year, they came for the purpose of attacking the worshippers in church, but by mistake they arrived on Monday instead of Sunday, and after waiting several days, finding they were discovered, left the settlement by way of Indian-town Gap, murdering a number of persons on the Swatara and carrying off several prisoners.

Notwithstanding all these difficulties, Mr. Elder and his congregation prospered. They finished their church and furnished it, not very neatly, but very substantially. The building had three doors of entrance, and the pulpit was built against the north wall, high above the heads of the congregation and directly opposite the southern entrance. An aisle ran through from east to west, and another north and south from the southern door to the pulpit.

The congregation seems to have acquired no legal title to their property until 1754, as we find that on the 8th of June, 1754, Henry Forster and Ann, his wife, gave their deed for twenty acres strict measure, consideration ten pounds.

The following curious document also bears the date 1754. When the disorganization and separation caused by Old and New Sideism took place in Paxtang and Derry, some ten or twelve years before this, no regular call seems to have been made out to Mr. Elder, he just took charge of the Old Side people of both congregations, and this paper may have been drawn up simply to place matters in proper shape. There is no tradition of any misunderstanding occurring at this time between Mr. Elder and his people:

"To the Reverend Mr. Jno. Elder.

"Sirs,—We, the Inhabitants in the Township & Congregation of Paxtang & Derry, Being now Destitute of a settled Gospel minister amongst us; Being also Deeply Sensible of the great loss & Disadvantage we & ours may sustain, in regard of our souls & spiritual Concerns by our living in such a Condition in this Wilderness; & having had Sufficient Proof of, & being well pleased & satisfied with the ministerial abilities & qualifications of y^e, the Revd. Jno. Elder, Do unanimously Invite & Call y^e to take the Pastoral Care & oversight of us, Promising all due subjection, submission & obedience to the Doctrine, Discipline & Government & Ordinances Exercised & administered By y^e as our Pastor in the Lord. And that y^e may be the Better Enabled to attend upon y^r Pastoral & ministerial work amongst us, without Anxious & Distracting Cares about y^r worldly Concerns, WE Do hereby Cheerfully Promise & Engage to take Care of y^r Support and maintenance for an Honourable & Creditable manner Suitable to & befitting y^r Honourable Function & office as a Minister of the Gospel of Jesus Christ amongst us; Knowing that the Lord hath ordained that they who Preach the Gospel should live by the Gospel. In testimony of all w^h we have hereunto subscribed our Names This 26th of September, 1754."

Mr. Snowden was installed Oct. 2, 1793, but soon found the labor of attending to three congregations too great for his bodily strength. His efforts to curtail his labors called forth the following papers, the result being that he was relieved of both Paxtang and Derry and retained only by Harrisburg :

LETTER SENT TO PRESBYTERY IN 1795.

"PAXTANG, Oct. 5, 1795.

"To the Revd. Presbytery of Carlisle about to convene at Marsh Creek in the County of York :

"WHEREAS, Mr. Snowden has signified to his congregation in Derry Township that he is no longer able to officiate in his Ministerial capacity to them on acct. of Inability of body, & that he purposes to apply to Presbytery for a Discharge from said congregation which we conceive, if he might be indulged in his Request, would leave the congregation of Paxtang in a very distressing & Perilous Situation; that the two congregations have lived for many years past in perfect peace, friendship and unanimity, and that we do not wish for a schism between us now; that if the union is once broke there will be no probability of us being united again; that if Mr. Snowden is rendered incapable of undergoing the fatigue of the three congregations in less than three years in the prime of life, by all probability he will not be able in a short time to attend to two congregations, and of consequence we shall be left without a pastor and the means of giving a call to another. We, therefore, pray to be considered as united with Derry, and that if Mr. Snowden should insist on being dismissed from that, that Presbytery will appoint a committee of their body to enquire into the matter before anything decisive may take place; and that the majority of this congregation, how much sorer they may be attached to Mr. Snowden, would rather he should leave us as he found us, than submit to a dissolution of the union subsisting between us.

"By order of a meeting of Paxtang congregation.

"JOHN RUTHERFORD,
"JOSHUA ELDER."

SUPPLICATION SENT TO PRESBYTERY, 1796.

"PAXTANG, Jan'y, 1796.

"To the Moderator of Carlisle Presbytery about to meet at Big Spring :

"By order of the Committee of Presbytery which sat at Paxtang the 3d of Nov'r last, the Congregation of Paxtang was notified the last Sunday but one which we had meeting that the sense of the Congregation would be taken on the next Sabbath whether we would adhere to Harrisburg & break the Union with Derry, or whether we would continue the Union with Derry & break off with Harrisburg. Accordingly after sermon last Sunday the heads of families were desired to attend,

On June 22, 1764, at a meeting of Presbytery held at Derry, Mr. Elder and four other ministers declared their intention to cease from active membership in the judicatory. This decision was not acted upon by Synod until May 19, 1768, when they were joined to the Second Presbytery of Philadelphia, so that for a period of about four years Paxtang was not represented in any of the church courts. The trouble arose out of the old party feeling of the Old and New Sides, which, notwithstanding the union, was still rampant in the Presbyteries. Upon the formation of Carlisle Presbytery, 1786, Paxtang was joined thereto, and has remained in that connection ever since. After the death of Mr. Roan, Oct. 2, 1775, Paxtang and Derry were again united solely under the charge of Mr. Elder. The congregation at Harrisburg was formed April 12, 1787, and added to Mr. Elder's charge, as was also the New Side branch of Paxtang.

In 1789 some repairing was done at Paxtang, as the following papers will show :

We, whose names are underwritten, do promise to pay to James Johnston & William Smith the several sums annexed to our names, on demand, for Laying the Allies in Paxtang Meeting House. Witness our hands at Paxtang, the 10th Day of August, 1789.

The pastorate of Rev. John Elder, after a duration of more than half a century, closed on the 13th of April, 1791. The congregation, after hearing various candidates, finally united with Derry and Harrisburg in a call to Rev. Nathaniel R. Snowden, of Philadelphia, each congregation agreeing to pay him fifty pounds per annum. The following subscription is probably not a full list of the Paxtang people who contributed to the support of Mr. Snowden, but and after the business was explained to them, we proceeded to take the votes of the People, & it appeared that a Majority of the Congregation was for continuing the Union with Derry and relinquishing Harrisburg; they likewise chose the bearer Capt'n John Rutherford as their Commissioner to wait on Presbytery with this Remonstrance, praying that Presbytery would grant us Supplies & dissolve the Congregation of Paxtang from their Obligations to Mr. Snowden & that he might discontinue his labors to them unless ordered to supply them as any other Gentleman.

DUPLICATION SENT TO THE PRESBYTERY OF CARLISLE, 1796.

"PAXTANG, Sept. 3, 1796.

"The Reverend Presbytery of Carlisle:

"GENTLEMEN,—Whereas we are now destitute of the Gospel Ordinances being regularly administered to us, and what few supplies were allotted for us at the last Presbytery we fell short even of these on account of the age and inability of one of the members appointed to supply us; We, the subscribers, in behalf of this Congregation who met for that purpose do most earnestly beg and entreat that Presbytery would be pleased to grant as many Supplies as they can with convenience; we likewise wish that if there be any young or unsettled members belonging to Presbytery these might be sent to us that we might have an opportunity of the Gospel once more regularly established and administered in all the forms thereto belonging; and your Supplicants as in duty bound shall ever pray."

APPEAL OF THE PAXTANG CONGREGATION TO THE MODERATOR.

"PAXTANG, Oct. 1, 1797.

"To the Moderator of the Reverend Presbytery of Carlisle:

"SIR,—We again acknowledge our dependence and renew our request in praying Presbytery to give us such as many supplies during the winter season as they can with convenience. The bearer, Mr. James Rutherford, is appointed our Commissioner to present this remonstrance to Presbytery and to answer such interrogatories as may be required of him.

"Signed in behalf of Paxtang congregation by
"JOSHUA ELDER."

LETTER TO THE MODERATOR OF CARLISLE PRESBYTERY, 1798.

"PAXTANG, Sept. 25, 1798.

"To the Moderator of Carlisle Presbytery:

"SIR,—The bearer, Edward Crouch, is our commissioner, appointed by the congregation of Paxtang to wait on the Reverend Presbytery of Carlisle with a call for union with Derry, whom we expect will apply for his labors in union with Derry, whom we expect will apply for the remaining two-thirds; likewise to solicit the Presbytery to grant us Supplies in the meantime. Signed in behalf and with the approbation of the congregation by
"JOSHUA ELDER."

Mr. Williams accepted the call, and was ordained and installed Oct. 2, 1799, Derry to receive two-thirds of his time and pay one hundred and twenty pounds, and Paxtang one-third and pay sixty pounds. This pastorate only lasted one year and eight months, ending on the 30th of June, 1801. Mr. Williams seems to have had trouble collecting his salary, for we find him complaining to Presbytery in 1803 about his salary arrears. The moderator was directed to write to these churches and say "that if these arrears are not discharged before the next meeting of Presbytery, that body would be under the disagreeable necessity of withholding from them that attention and regard which they pay to churches under their care." This did not have much effect, for we find them still unpaid in September, 1805.

May 29, 1807, Mr. James R. Sharon was installed, both congregations agreeing to pay the same salary as that promised to Mr. Williams.

In 1808 the "meeting-house" and "retiring-house" were put in thorough repair. As a matter of interest to their descendants, now widely scattered, we give the names of those contributing thereto:

The "retiring-house" was a small log building near the church, used for meetings of session, and as a study by the pastor during the interval between the morning and afternoon service, and on week-days as a school-house.

The "repairs" at this time consisted partly in the running up of two board partitions, thereby creating a vestibule at each end, with the audience-room in the centre. The partitions were of yellow pine, as was also the ceiling, which was placed in position at this time. The pews were left standing in the western vestibule, and were still in position within the memory of many of the present congregation. There was little uniformity in the Paxtang pews of that day, as each had been built by the family occupying it, and by their own architect. Two huge ten-plate stoves were placed in the long aisle, the smoke from which ascended through pipes to the loft, and made its escape as best it could through a small hole in the comb of the roof.

Mr. Sharon was a man of eminent piety, and was greatly beloved by his people. His pastorate covered a period of almost thirty-six years, and ended only with his life, April 18, 1843. During these years the gospel of peace reigned, and little is left for the historian but to record the fact.

Oct. 1, 1844, the Presbytery of Carlisle met at Paxtang. A call was placed in the hands of Rev. John M. Boggs, a licentiate of the Presbytery of Donegal. Mr. Boggs accepted, but asked that his ordination be postponed until the spring meeting, in order that he might attend the Theological Seminary at Princeton during the winter. His request was granted, and he was ordained April 9, 1845, and installed soon after as pastor of Paxtang and Derry.

His pastorate was uneventful, and was dissolved Oct. 6, 1847. The field was now vacant for a period of more than two years, during which time extensive alterations and repairs were made. The whole inside of the building was removed, the western door and the small window back of the pulpit walled up, new shingles placed upon the roof, and a floor laid throughout the entire building, the halls and ceiling plastered, the pulpit taken down from its perch on the north wall, and a new one placed at a much lower elevation against the western wall. New pews of modern style and uniform character were built, and the old pulpit, pews, and furniture, which had been in use since Mr. Elder's time, sold at public auction.

Sept. 28, 1849, a call from Paxtang and Derry was placed in the hands of Rev. Andrew D. Mitchell, Paxtang promising three hundred dollars and Derry two hundred per annum. Mr. Mitchell accepted, and was ordained and installed April 10, 1850. Mr. Mitchell was a single man when he accepted these charges, but married a few years afterwards.

Hitherto Paxtang had never needed a parsonage. Bertram lived at Derry; Elder and Sharon, who had occupied the field for a century, were both practical farmers and lived on their farms; Boggs was unmarried. It now, however, became necessary to provide a house for Mr. Mitchell, and the present parsonage was erected, and was occupied by him during the remainder of his pastorate, which ended Feb. 12, 1874. Near the close of Mr. Mitchell's pastorate the inside was again remodeled and arranged as it now stands.

In November of the same year a call was made out for Rev. William W. Downey by Paxtang, Derry having died out. Mr. Downey accepted, and was installed April 29, 1875. In 1878 this pastorate was dissolved, and the congregation has ever since been supplied by Rev. W. A. West, of Harrisburg.

Intimately connected with Paxtang Church was a school which flourished from the earliest times down to the establishment of free schools in Dauphin County. The school was never under the control of the church as an ecclesiastical body, but the same men who composed the congregation were the patrons of the school, and the building itself was the property of the congregation. It may therefore fairly be considered as an appendage of the church, and the old masters stood next in rank and dignity to the clergyman. Here flourished such men as Francis Kerr, Joseph Allen, Benjamin White, James Couples, Francis D. Cummings, and others celebrated in their day and generation as educators, and from whose instructions went forth many young men afterwards distinguished in every walk of life.

Originally the congregation owned a tract of twenty acres in the shape of a parallelogram, whose length was about three times its width. Nearly forty years ago a portion of this tract was sold, leaving a square of six or eight acres, covered largely with forest-trees, among which are several giant oaks that were doubtless trees when Columbus landed on the shores of America. Near the centre of the tract stands the church, the parsonage occupies the south-east corner, and between the two lies the graveyard. In early times no distinct limits were set to the burying-ground, and the people buried their dead anywhere, according to their fancy, in the clearing to the south and southeast of the church. Graves were seldom marked, and a few years obliterated all trace of them. As families became permanent and the number of these graves increased more care was taken, tombstones began to be erected and lots fenced in. The want of uniformity, however, in these fences and of regularity in the selection of lots rendered the grounds very unsightly, as well as very difficult to keep clear of weeds and briars. This state of affairs existed until 1791-92, when the ground was inclosed by a stone wall, the greater portion of which is still standing. This wall does not by any means include all the graves of Paxtang. It did, however, surround all that were marked by tombstones or protected by fences. The only one of these fences still standing is that around the graves of the Simpsons; it is built of iron, and is in a good condition to-day as when first erected. In 1819 a new roof was placed upon the wall; the contractor was Matthew Humes. The ground inclosed had very nearly all been buried over once, and some of it twice before the wall was erected. In course of time, therefore, it became impossible to dig a grave without disturbing the remains of several of the unknown and forgotten dead. In November, 1851, the following paper was drawn up and signed. It is in the handwriting of Joseph Gray:

"At a meeting of the congregation of Paxtang Church, on the 27th of November, 1851, it was decided by a majority of the meeting, that the graveyard ought to be enlarged about ninety feet, on the south side, and that the yard wall requires a new cover, either of wood, iron, or stone. We, the subscribers, whose names are hereto annexed, do promise to pay for said purpose the sums by us subscribed according to the materials which may be used for covering, the contract to be given by public bidding to the lowest bidder or bidders."

The old south wall was taken down, and during the summer of 1852 the grounds were extended ninety feet, and the whole covered with wood, and so it stood until the summer of 1882, when the wall was again repaired, and a new roof of wood placed thereon.

STEELETON BOROUGH.

IN 1866, within the territory now comprising the boundaries of the flourishing town of Steelton there were only six families residing. The Pennsylvania Steel Company were organizing and prospecting for a site for their contemplated works. The board of directors came by a special train and quietly examined the land now occupied by them. The object of their visit was not surmised. A few weeks afterwards Rudolph F. Kelker and Henry A. Kelker were approached and solicited to make sale of the land. This, at first, they hesitated to do. It was a heritage from their father, Frederick Kelker, and they desired to transmit it to their children, for which reason, and the associations connected with it, they had always refused offers to purchase it. The land was covered by a warrant to Thomas Renick, bearing date of March 27, 1738, and by a patent to Richard Peters, bearing date of March 19, 1747, "a tract of land in Paxtang township, Lancaster County." Frederick Kelker purchased the first tract of land of the heirs of John Snavelly, April 1, 1830, at thirty-seven dollars per acre, and another tract of the heirs of Felix Landis in 1843. When Dr. Lamborn, for the Pennsylvania Steel Company, observed what was to be the character of the works they intended to construct, Mr. Kelker consented to transfer the land to them. The matter was noised abroad, public interest was awakened, and different places desired the works to be located near them. There were gratuitous offers of land, and competition was strong. At Harrisburg subscriptions were invited, and a mass-meeting of its citizens held in the court-house, where impromptu speeches were made. The majority were in favor of locating the works below Harrisburg. The amount of land purchased by these contributions was as follows: From Rudolph F. Kelker thirty-eight acres and one hundred and thirty-four perches at three hundred dollars per acre, and from Henry A. Kelker forty-three acres and one hundred and fourteen perches at three hundred dollars per acre. The line extends from the centre of the canal to the river at low-water mark. The deed was given Jan. 8, 1866. The entire amount was estimated at $24,577.50. Subsequently the company bought with their own means fifteen acres and fifty-two perches from Rudolph F. Kelker at $300 per acre, equal to $4597.50. So the total cost of the land was $29,175. This does not include the recent purchase of land from Henry Gilbert and others. The subscribers to purchase the land of the Messrs. Kelker, and which was presented to the Pennsylvania Steel Company, were J. D. Cameron, $4000; Henry A. Kelker, $3778.75; Rudolph F. Kelker, $2358.25; William Calder, $1000; Simon Cameron, $1000; First National Bank, $1000; Harrisburg National Bank, $1000; David Mumma, $1000; Alexander Koser, $1000; Walter L. Shrenk, $5; H. Huntsberger, $5; Dickel & Treida, $5; C. Forney, $5. Total $24,577.50.

Having disposed of this quantity of their land for the Pennsylvania Steel-Works, R. F. Kelker bought forty-five acres from Abraham Wolf, and twenty-two acres from Jacob Bender, and also fifty acres for Henry A. Kelker. Completing their purchases, Mr. Kelker commenced to lay out building lots, and offering them for sale. They were only sold to purchasers intending to build, and not with a purpose to advance the plans of land speculators. This land was the first laid out, and was done by R. F. Kelker in person. The lots were in what was formerly known as Lower Baldwin. The surveying was done in April, 1866, by John W. Cowden. Arrangements were made to have streets fifty feet in width, and alleys twenty feet, and each lot to front on a street, and also on an alley. The prices received for the lots varied from one hundred to two hundred and fifty dollars each, according to location. Henry A. Kelker immediately afterwards began to lay out his lots in what was afterwards called Central Baldwin. Adjoining the latter was the farm of Walter L. Trewick. A part of this was sold to the Steel Company, the remainder to Charles L. Bailey, of Harrisburg, who subsequently sold to Josiah Dunkle.

After the location of the steel-works, the officers of the company conferred with Rudolph F. Kelker as to the name of the prospective town. They suggested the name of Matthew Baldwin, a distinguished philanthropist, and the founder of the Baldwin Locomotive-Works at Philadelphia. The name, however, presented difficulties which perhaps were unforeseen. There was a town in Allegheny County called Baldwin, and also a post-office in Butler County of the same name. When the need of a post-office arose, the name chosen was "Steel-works." The post-office was established in 1871, and Joseph B. Meredith appointed postmaster. In October, 1880, the post-office name was changed from Steel-works to Steelton, and the town, including the surrounding villages, subsequently incorporated as Steelton.

The steel works are situated between the river and the canal, on a level tract of bottom land. Steelton until its absorption of Ewington was located mainly on the turnpike running from Middletown to Harrisburg, and extends nearly a mile. The old turnpike runs parallel with the canal. There are streets which are laid out running back upon the adjoining lands.

In 1875, Messrs. Purdy and Ewing laid out a town on the river directly above the steel-works, which was called Ewington. After the incorporation of the borough of Steelton application was made to the court to include within its limits the town of Ewington, which was directed. The latter had as remarkable a growth and prosperity as the old town of Baldwin. Comprised in one municipality, Steelton is the second town in population in the county, containing possibly five thousand inhabitants.

PENNSYLVANIA STEEL-WORKS.

The Pennsylvania Steel-Works are the most prominent establishment of the kind in the United States. The importance of the improvements in the manufacture of steel as developed by Bessemer, Kelly, and others, and the bearing of those improvements on the interests of railways, was early recognized by prominent men in Pennsylvania, and, after due investigation of the subject, at a meeting held June 26, 1865, they became associated, and organized the company known as the Pennsylvania Steel Company, and finally secured a charter with liberal provisions. The capital stock first subscribed was two hundred thousand dollars, which was subsequently increased as the progress of the undertaking required, and the business expanded, until two million dollars have been invested. When the company first organized Mr. Sannel M. Felton was chosen president, and he has ever since continued to preside over the affairs of the company.

The Susquehanna Valley having been early selected as the district in which the works should be located, an eligible site was secured about three miles from the city of Harrisburg, and, after the grounds had been surveyed and graded, the excavations were made and the masonry commenced on the 12th day of May, 1866.

The Bessemer or pneumatic process was adopted, and the construction and arrangement of the steel plant, with two converters of the nominal capacity of five tons each, was according to plans prepared principally under the direction of Mr. Alexander L. Holley, who became the company's superintendent January, 1867. The work of erection was pushed as rapidly as possible, and in May, 1867, was sufficiently advanced to commence the manufacture of steel ingots, the first blow being made May 25, 1867. The ingots were forwarded to Johnstown, Pa., to be rolled in the iron rail-mills of Cambria Iron Company (as the rail-mill of this company was not completed), and the rails were then delivered to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company and put into service, being the first steel rails ever produced in this country on an order in regular course of business.

At that date the great superiority of steel rails over iron rails for railway purposes had already been demonstrated on several of our most important railways, and railway managers were generally beginning to have some conception of the decrease in cost of maintaining their tracks, which could be effected by the use of steel rails, but as they had been previous to that time supplied only by foreign manufacturers, the cost was heavy, and precluded the idea of their adoption, except for places where traffic was very great, with trains so frequent that repairs to track were difficult to make. The importance, therefore, to the railway interest, of the successful commencement at these works of the manufacture of steel, and the demonstration that in due time the railways of this country would be no longer dependent on foreign manufacturers for a supply of this most important auxiliary to their progress, can scarcely be over-estimated.

In May, 1868, the rail-mill was completed and went into operation, making rails directly from small ingots. The improvement of the quality secured by making large ingots, and hammering the steel before rolling into rails, had already been discovered, and in 1869 the company completed a forge department, where the largest steam hammer then in the country was employed in preparing the steel blooms for the rail-mill. The practice of hammering was continued without interruption until December, 1876, when a blooming-mill, with a powerful train of blooming- or cogging-rolls, was completed, by which the capacity of the works was greatly increased; and since then, except when rail orders have specially required hammered blooms, the forge department has been devoted to the production of billets and forgings.

This company increased its capacity for the production of steel by erecting, in 1876, an open-hearth plant, with two five-ton Siemens' melting furnaces, for producing steel on the open hearth. This plant was operated with success for several years, and, although the product was principally required for rails, a high reputation was secured for the special qualities of "S. M. Steel," of which quantities were made from time to time. To provide room for extending the blooming-mill, the first plant was removed, and has been replaced by a new and improved plant, with two twenty-ton furnaces, on original plans, embodying many important improvements affecting the convenience of operating and repairing, and the cost of manufacture. The building is brick, with iron roof, and is constructed in the most substantial manner, provided with abundant tracks, elevators, cranes, etc., for the handling of materials and products.

The capacity of the original Bessemer plant having proved insufficient to meet the demand for the company's products, although the output had been many times greater than was contemplated when it was erected, the company decided upon the erection of an additional Bessemer plant, which was completed and commenced operations in 1881.

The new plant has three eight-ton converters, with two pits, and has been arranged and constructed on original plans, which secure great facility for the handling of the materials and products, with a capacity which has already reached an output of over eight hundred tons of steel in one day of twenty-four hours. All the engines, boilers, and machinery of the new plant were constructed in the shops of the company, and are all of the most substantial construction. The buildings are of stone, with iron roofs, and are reached from all sides by tracks conveniently arranged.

The No. 1 Bessemer plant has recently been adapted to the "Thomas Gilchrist" or "basic" process of converting and dephosphorizing, by which material formerly not available for steel purposes may be used. The first charge was converted May 7, 1883, being the first produced in this country by the "basic" process. The company commenced the erection of blast-furnaces in 1872 to produce pig-iron for their own purposes, and completed No. 1 furnace in 1873, and No. 2 furnace in 1875. These furnaces were of highly-approved designs and large capacity, since increased very much by the use of the Whitwell patent hot-blast stoves, and have produced outputs of iron comparing favorably with any blast-furnaces in the country. Two additional furnaces, No. 3 and No. 4, of the largest class are in progress, nearly completed, and will soon enable the company to produce most of the iron they require. A very large rolling-mill has been erected, and is now being equipped with the latest improved machinery for rolling steel billets and all shapes of merchant bars. This mill is expected to require for its supply of steel a large portion of the steel from the open-hearth furnaces and from the "basic" converters of the No. 1 Bessemer plant.

The company commenced the manufacture of railroad switches, frogs, etc., in 1872, and have enjoyed the patronage of railroads in every part of the country to an extent that has frequently required enlargement of their facilities. For this department a substantial brick building nearly five hundred feet long has lately been erected, and is still receiving additional machinery. The company have also commenced the manufacture of interlocking switches and signals, and have acquired valuable patents covering important improvements in this branch of railway safety appliances.

The repair departments, consisting of pattern-shop and foundry, machine- and smith-shops, and boiler-shop, are all of large capacity, with substantial brick buildings, and thoroughly equipped for the re-production of any portion of the machinery and appliances used in the works, also to produce the heavy steam-engines and other machinery that the new plants, mills, and furnaces may require.

No labor strike has ever occurred at the works, and in view of the liberality of the company toward its labor, and the intelligence of the thrifty and industrious employes, it is hoped that none may ever occur.

The company has steadily preferred to make quality of product the great object. At the same time the production has increased with a healthy growth, as may be noted in the following memoranda:

the common practice to melt the iron in the converting department, as in this way a better commingling of the various qualities is obtained, but the iron is sometimes brought in the melted state directly from the blast-furnaces in which it has been made in large ladles, mounted on trucks running on elevated tracks, into the converting department. The ladle must in either case stand at a considerable height from the general level that the melted metal may flow through suitable troughs into the "converting vessels," and the cupolas are placed still higher, so that the iron may run from the cupolas into the large ladle.

The "converters" or "vessels" are large egg-shaped affairs, made principally of heavy plate iron, with trunnions, on which they turn up or down, and they are connected with powerful hydraulic machinery, by which they may be made to turn as desired. The converters are lined very thickly with fire-bricks and other refractory materials adapted to resist the intense heat. The bottom or lower part of the lining is made of perforated fire-bricks (called tuyeres), through which the air is blown into the converter, and this part is made to be readily removed and replaced when necessary. The air is conveyed by passages extending through the trunnions of the converter, connecting with pipes leading from the engine.

To receive a charge the converter is turned down, so that the mouth is opposite the end of the troughs or "runners," through which the iron flows down and pours into the converter, the iron giving off quantities of sparks and making a brilliant spectacle, which is, however, surpassed by that presented when the air is let on and the converter turned back to the upright position, as the powerful blast of air (twenty to twenty-five pounds pressure per square inch) when it first bursts through the metal forces out showers of bright sparks, which for a moment appear to fill the air.

As pig-iron contains about two per cent. of silicon and four per cent. of carbon, and as the steel must be practically free from silicon, and have only about four-tenths of one per cent. of carbon, to convert the iron into steel the silicon and carbon must be entirely removed. By forcing through the molten pig-iron such immense quantities of atmospheric air the carbon in the iron combines with the oxygen of the air, and, being consumed, passes off in the form of gas; the silicon being also oxidized is removed from the iron; and when all of these elements are thus expelled the material arrives at the condition (chemically) of pure iron, and is then ready for the addition of the recarbonizing material, which returns to the charge enough carbon to give the steel the required carbonization.

To convert a charge requires from fifteen to twenty minutes. At first there is comparatively little flame passing out of the converter, but it rapidly increases, passing with a dull roar into chimney-stacks above the mouth of the converter. As the blast continues, the flame increases more and more, and grows in brilliancy until it rivals the light of the sun and becomes too bright for unaccustomed eyes, passing out of the stacks high into the air, lighting up at night the vicinity, the noise having also increased to a roar, which may be heard at considerable distance. After the carbon has been expelled the flame loses brilliancy and drops very noticeably, the blast is shut off, and the converter is turned down. As the converter is turned down the blast again sends out a splendid shower of sparks. At this point the recarbonizing material is introduced. This is Spiegeleisen, a metallic combination of iron and manganese with carbon. It is melted same as the pig-iron, and a quantity proportionate to the weight of the charge is run into the converter. It instantly pervades the metal in the converter, throwing off flames of a very peculiar hue as the manganese and carbon combine with the metal, and the charge at once becomes steel and is discharged into the steel ladle.

In front of the converters are two semicircular pits several feet deep, and in the centre of each pit the powerful hydraulic crane which supports the steel ladle is placed. The steel ladle is swung around under the mouth of the converter and the steel is poured into the ladle, after which it is swung back over the cast-iron moulds that are ranged along the side of the pit, and the steel is discharged through the bottom of the ladle into the moulds, where it soon congeals and takes the form of "ingots," containing enough steel for several rails. After the steel is poured out of the converter another charge of iron is run into the same or another converter, and the above repeated. As there are three converters in the converting department of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, one is always ready to use, and the process goes on day and night. As soon as the ingot loosens itself from the mould by contraction the mould is stripped off, and the ingots are loaded soon as possible, while red-hot, on trucks for removal.

The ingots, ladles, moulds, and all heavy articles are handled by the aid of hydraulic cranes, whose power is derived from powerful pumps that furnish a pressure of two hundred and eighty pounds to the square inch, the pressure being applied by persons stationed where they can observe every operation and apply the pressure as it is needed.

When a charge of ingots has been loaded on the trucks, a small locomotive speedily moves it to the blooming-mill, where the ingots are reheated in furnaces, and are then passed through the blooming-rolls, which reduce the size to seven inches square. The ingot is then cut into pieces of length required to make a rail, which under the name of blooms are conveyed to the rail-mill, where the blooms are reheated and rolled into rails. After the rails have cooled they are inspected to find any defects, made straight and true, and drilled at the ends for the splices.

STELTON SCHOOL BUILDING.

When the borough of Steelton was incorporated, one of the most perplexing questions was how to provide school facilities for the rapidly-increasing population that would be in keeping with the enterprising character of its citizens and the affairs committed to their charge. It became evident the provisions of the statute laws regulating common schools would be entirely inadequate, and that for a number of years large sums would have to be expended for school sites and the erection of school buildings. By the usual experience the prospect was that upon undesirable locations ill-adapted and indifferent buildings would be erected for schools as necessity compelled, own expense of a first-class modern school building, to be incorporated into the common-school system of the borough. In doing this they would relieve the borough of an oppressive tax for school buildings for a term of years, and thus enable the school revenue to be devoted to the direct tuition of the children, making it practicable to secure high standards from the commencement.

Although the expenditure of a large sum of money for such a purpose may appear to some as unwarranted, and to be classed as extravagant on the part of the company, the management of the Pennsylvania Steel Company have abiding confidence that only a few years will be required to demonstrate the wisdom and that at the end of say ten years there would have been expended a large sum of money, resulting in a collection of buildings, that although meeting immediate needs at the period of erection, would be by that time entirely unsuitable for the requirements of the schools, many of them hemmed in on all sides by business-places or other association equally unsuitable; that sooner or later the whole matter would require revision, and with much expense abandon the makeshift policy and meet the necessity of providing proper accommodations. Holding such views of the future, the management of the Pennsylvania Steel Company, feeling they would be held largely responsible for such a condition of affairs, decided to provide for the needs in advance by the erection at its

of anticipating the share of expenses they would have to bear, and at the outset making it practicable for the children of their employés to enjoy school privileges of the highest type, both as regards buildings and tuition.

The site upon which this building stands is a prominent one, and embraces all of the actual requisites for a school building, especially in regard to sanitary conditions. It is high, therefore is surrounded with abundance of light and air, and affords perfect drainage. It is located sufficiently back from the main thoroughfares of the town to insure perfect quiet, and easily approached from a winding roadway which follows up a ravine. This ravine extends each side of the hill upon which the building stands, and is sufficiently steep to form a barrier against any encroachments or obstructions in the future which would interfere with its present excellence. Although this is an elevated site, it is yet protected from bleakness by higher lands back of it. From its elevated and commanding position a beautiful view is obtained of the surrounding country for miles away, the town forming the foreground, while the city of Harrisburg and the quiet Susquehanna mingle in the background. The building has an extreme length of one hundred and forty-eight feet four inches and width of seventy-nine feet eight inches, and in outline is a parallelogram. It is built of brick, trimmed with brownstone, in the modern Renaissance style, the chief characteristics of which are three distinct features, i. e., a central and two end pavilions. The central pavilion, being the highest, is a little more decided in character, one of the features being a graceful stone balcony projecting from the exhibition hall windows at the level of the second floor. The character of the end pavilions consists mainly in the treatment of the entrance-ways, with large double and circular-headed windows opening upon the staircase landings above them. The roofs are quite steep, and are slated, and each pavilion is surmounted with a liberal-sized ventilating tower; the hips and ridges are capped with copper mouldings, and at all the principal points rise ornamental finials.

The accommodations of the interior are arranged on two floors, consisting of ten school-rooms, an exhibition hall, and a principal's room. The school-rooms are of uniform size, thirty-three feet by twenty-six feet (intended for fifty-six single desks); six of them, with the master's room, are situated on the first floor, while four with the exhibition hall are on the second floor. Each school-room has its separate wardrobe for the pupils' clothing and teacher's closet. The rooms are abundantly lighted, the windows being arranged in all cases so that the greater portion of the light is received at the left of the pupils. Each window has its head near the ceiling, and is provided with a double run of sash. This system of sashes is made a means of ventilation without creating draughts by a simple appliance of dropping the inner upper half, at the same time raising the outer lower half, thus directing the volume of air between the two sashes towards the ceiling. To further assist in controlling the air as well as the light of the school-room, each window is fitted with inside folding-blinds with rolling slats.

The grouping of these school-rooms, which constitutes the general plan of the building, is upon the German principle, which consists in confining the width of the building as near as possible to the width of one room and corridor, thus gaining a better system of lighting and a freer circulation of air.

The basement is well elevated above the lot, and is devoted principally to play-rooms for the children, being thoroughly lighted and ventilated. Sufficient space is reserved for the boiler- and fuel-rooms. The mode of construction of this school-house differs from any known in this country. It is thoroughly fire-proof, the floor-beams being of iron with brick arches between, and the staircase also of iron. The interior finish is of pine, the walls are wainscoted throughout with narrow strips to the height of three and a half feet, the workmanship and all being of the most substantial character. The heating and ventilation is on the system of indirect steam, the fresh air being conducted from a reservoir through underground ducts, and admitted to the steam coils at the ceiling of the basement, or about five feet above the level of the lot, and from the coils conducted by tin pipes, two to each room, the size of each pipe being graduated to provide eight cubic feet to each occupant of the room. The fresh-heated air in each case is admitted against the window surface or cold side of the room, and on the opposite side two ventilating-pipes of equal capacity to exhaust the vitiated air. These pipes are conducted to the three ventilating-turrets at the highest points of the roof.

CHURCHES.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH, Steelton, was organized about 1868, and its first church edifice erected in 1869 on the grounds of the Steel Company, opposite the blast-furnace, on the road leading from Steelton to the depot. While the building was in course of construction there was preaching in the dining-room of the boarding-house,—the building afterwards occupied by the company's offices. This church was subsequently removed and rebuilt on its present site in 1877. It was originally a mission of Grace Church, Harrisburg, in connection with Lochiel. The pastors have been: 1869, John Stringer; 1870, Wesley C. Johnson; 1871-74, John W. Sayer; 1874, John A. Cooper; 1875-78, Thomas M. Jackson; 1878-80, John H. Wood; 1880-83, A. L. Urban; 1883, G. A. Wolfe. The parsonage is on Lincoln Street.

A UNITED BRETHERN (CENTENARY) Congregation was organized in 1867 by Rev. Jeremiah C. Smith, and religious worship held in the old school-house (also used by the Methodists and Episcopalians). The congregation afterwards purchased the old school-house for two hundred dollars and remodeled it. In 1868 it was made an appointment with Highspire, in 1873 made an appointment with Churchville, and in 1874 made a station. The pastors have been: 1868, Rev. J. C. Smith; 1869, J. L. Smith, J. Mumma; 1870, W. B. Evers; 1871, D. O. Farrell, G. A. Mack; 1872, D. O. Farrell; 1873, A. V. H. Gosweller; 1874, E. F. Light, L. Peters; 1875, S. Peters; 1876-80, H. C. Phillips; 1880-82, J. Mumma; 1883, J. R. Hutchison. The present church edifice, a two-story frame building, was erected in 1874 on Second Street.

TRINITY PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL MISSION, with the Rev. Jacob Miller as rector, was established in Steelton in 1882.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CONGREGATION was organized in 1875, and its church edifice in Steelton erected in same year. Its pastors have been Revs. Edward Daron, Samuel Yingling, and W. S. Parr. The present pastor is Rev. M. J. Hocker. The Sunday-school was established in 1874.

ST. JAMES' ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH building was erected in 1878, on land purchased of Hon. J. D. Cameron. Its pastor is Rev. M. J. McBride, who has officiated from the outset. It has a prosperous Sunday-school.

THE AFRICAN METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was built in 1874 in "Cooney Hollow," where most of the colored population resided. The Sunday-school was organized in 1873. Rev. John C. Brock was pastor in 1879, and largely built up the congregation in numbers and material strength. The minister at present in charge is Rev. G. R. Miller.

A PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION was organized in 1881, and hold their services in Reehling's Hall, Rev. William G. McDannold pastor.

The Token of Progress, a weekly newspaper, was established in April, 1875, by Frank McClure. It was at first a four-page sheet of four columns each, and thus continued until October, 1876, when Joseph A. Work became part proprietor. In May, 1877, the latter purchased the interests of the former publishers, subsequently associating with him his brother, James W. Work. The name of the paper was changed in May, 1878, to The Weekly Item, and enlarged it to a twenty-column journal. Upon the incorporation of the borough of Steelton the title of the newspaper was changed to The Steelton Item, and the publication continued under its former management.

In the spring of 1882, William H. H. Seig, of Harrisburg, an experienced printer and journalist, was induced to start a daily newspaper at Steelton, The Steelton Daily Reporter, which he continued to publish about six months, when it was discontinued for want of proper support. The publication of the weekly Steelton Reporter, however, has in some measure taken the place of the former enterprise.

CHURCHVILLE is a flourishing village about one mile and a fourth northeast of Steelton. It is a town of recent origin, and takes its name from the place having two large and well-supported churches, the Lutheran and United Brethren.

"CHAMBERS' FERRY."—This old landmark of Provincial days is located a short distance below Steelton. It was on the main route to Carlisle, as teams going west crossed here, saving several miles from that going by Harris' Ferry. In later years it went by the name of "Half-way House." Through many generations the ferry privileges were preserved, and in all subsequent transfers of property these have been specially noted and reserved. The Chambers' Ferry right is now vested in Rudolph F. Kelker, of Harrisburg.

LOWER PAXTANG TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was never actually authorized, but was what remained of the original township of Paxtang, from which had been carved towns and townships until the northeast section, now comprising Lower Paxtang, was left. It was never officially so named, but to distinguish it from that of Upper Paxtang was thus designated. As we find the township on the county maps, it is bounded on the north by Middle Paxtang township, the ridge of the First Mountain being the line, on the east by West Hanover township, on the south by Swatara township, and on the west by Susquehanna township. It contains many fine, fertile farms, and is well watered.

The township was first settled by the Scotch-Irish, all of whom have gone out from this section, and the descendants of the Pennsylvania Germans occupy the magnificent fields and farms.

The early schools of what now includes Lower Paxtang township were connected with Wenrich's and Shoop's Churches, and one in Linglestown. They were supported by the citizens and managed by the teachers, and date back as early as 1765.

LINGLESTOWN.

LINGLESTOWN is situated nine miles from Harrisburg, not far from the base of the First Mountain, and six miles from the Susquehanna River. It was laid out by Thomas Lingle in 1765, and called St. Thomas, but afterwards changed to Linglestown. In 1860, Dr. W. C. Smith laid out an addition south of the town, which is gradually becoming improved. The proposed Boston and South Mountain Railroad runs through the village. John Hoofnagle, born in 1800, is the oldest person living in the town. The oldest house is a log structure, built about 1771, and now owned by George Walmer, but has not been occupied for some years. There are no immediate descendants of Thomas Lingle, the founder of the town, living now in the place or its immediate vicinity. The old tannery of Samuel McIlhenny was built at the beginning of the century.

The schools of Linglestown date from the laying out of the town in 1765. They compared favorably with those already described, and continued until about the close of the last century, when another log house was built and maintained by subscriptions. Among the most prominent teachers was Amos Wickersham, a Quaker, who resided at Middletown, who was a master mathematician and grammarian, possessing all the characteristics of a perfect gentleman, as well as a scholar. John Focht, who taught seventeen years before the free schools were introduced and twelve years after, was also the founder of the Linglestown Institute. The results of his labors are seen and felt to this day in the community. He was succeeded in the same institution by John Strook. To the foregoing Lower Paxtang township owes its present educational enthusiasm. There is no town in the county that has produced more or better teachers and is better represented in the normal schools and colleges than Linglestown. The most active men in favor of adopting free schools, etc., were Dr. Houtz, Judge Cowden, Dr. David Umberger, and Andrew Miller, all men of influence and education. The present two-story brick school building was erected in 1876.

THE UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH is a neat one-story frame building, which was remodeled in 1881. Its pastor is Rev. Joseph F. Meredith, of Grantville.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHEL).—This congregation was organized in 1826-27 by Rev. John Winebrenner, and was among the first churches of this denomination in the county. Since 1866 the pastors have been: 1866, W. L. Jones; 1867, J. W. Deshong; 1868-70, Thomas Still; 1870-72, Simon Fleigle; 1872-76, Abraham Snyder; 1876-78, S. S. Richmond; 1878-80, S. C. Stonesifer; 1880-82, J. C. Seabrook.

THE LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CHURCH edifice was built and is occupied by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations jointly. It is an elegant two-story brick structure. The original meeting-house was a log building built about the year 1766. At this writing neither denomination has a resident pastor, and its old records are therefore inaccessible.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH have an organization here, of which the Rev. E. Potts was the first pastor, in 1873, but further facts we have not been able to secure.

THE LINGLESTOWN CEMETERY, tastefully laid out and beautifully ornamented, located south of the town, in which is erected a monument twenty-five feet high to the memory of the heroic dead who died during the late civil war of 1861-65. The base is granite from the Gettysburg battle-field, the other parts marble. Its design is artistic and the execution faultless. It was erected in 1863 by the loyal citizens, through the energy of Dr. W. C. Smith.

SHOOP'S CHURCH (LUTHERAN AND REFORMED).—As early as 1771 there was a sufficient settlement of Germans in what is now Lower Paxtang township to invite the attention of traveling missionaries of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches. Among the early baptisms performed by the Lutheran missionary preachers we find that the first was that of Johannes Schupp (Shoop), son of Christopher and Rosina Shoop, born May 5, 1771, and baptized June 5, 1771, following which occur baptisms in the same family for several successive years. In 1783 the Lutheran members of the Reformed Church organized two separate congregations and built a log meeting-house to be jointly used by them for worship. This house was at first called "Beckstein," but shortly afterwards changed to "Schupp's Kirche," in honor of Johannes Schnpp (now called Shoop), one of the earliest and most prominent settlers in this section. The first four baptisms after the organization of this church were:

1. Jonas, son of Johannes Heinrich Seiler and his wife Veronica; born May 10, 1780; baptized June 14, 1783.
2. Jacob, son of John Adam and Mary Level; born May 1, 1783; baptized June 18, 1783.
3. Christopher, son of Philip and Anna Barbara Parthemer; born June, 1783; baptized June 29, 1783.
4. Joban Adam, son of Frederick and Catharina Schweitzer; baptized June 29, 1783.

Among the earliest marriages were those of Philip Frederick Shoop to Elizabeth Nass, and Carl Welker to Catharina Nass, both on May 4, 1784.

We find that Rev. Philip Gloninger, pastor of the Reformed Church in Harrisburg, preached at Shoop's Church during his pastorate, July 17, 1808, to June 26, 1814. His successors, Rev. Frederick Rabauser, Rev. John Winebrenner, Rev. Alfred Helfenstein, Jr., and Rev. Daniel Zacharias, also ministered stately there. The congregation was a part of the Harrisburg charge during the pastorates of these ministers, and most likely for years previous.

For more than twenty years after the pastorate of Rev. Zacharias the Rev. David Bossler served the Reformed congregation at Shoop's Church, during which time he resided in Harrisburg.

For a number of years subsequently the Reformed congregations at Hummelstown, Shoop's, Wenrich's, and Union Deposit were served by one pastor, who resided at Hummelstown.

At present (1883) Hummelstown, Wenrich's, and Union Deposit Reformed Churches constitute the Hummelstown charge, and Shoop's Church and Shell's Church constitute the Hanover charge, supplied at present by Rev. A. S. Stauffer, pastor of the Hummelstown charge.

SUSQUEHANNA TOWNSHIP.

AN order was issued by the Court of Quarter Sessions on the 30th of January, 1815, returnable on the 1st of April succeeding, to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the prayer of inhabitants of Lower Paxtang township asking for a division of said township. The commissioners reported in favor of a division, and that they had run the dividing line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at the top of the first bench of the mountain, north of the plantation of Andrew Stephens, at a hickory-tree; thence south seventeen degrees east eighteen hundred and fifty-six perches to the intersection of the northern line of Swatara township near the head of Joshua Elder's mill-dam; in the course of which division line we passed about fifty perches west of John Beck's, about twenty perches east of Andrew Stephens's, close to the west end of Miller's mill on Paxtang Creek, about fifty yards west of George Hain's, about half-way between Shupp's and Parthemer's; thence about fifty yards east of Daniel Ferree's; thence about fifty perches west of Martin Mayer's; thence west of Christian Eby's about forty yards; thence east of John Carson's about twenty perches to the intersection of Swatara line about sixty perches farther on."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 1st of May, 1815, and it was ordered that the western division be called Susquehanna township. For a subsequent alteration of the south lines of this township, see Swatara township,—the mill-dam there called Kimbortz is the same which is called Elder's above. (See Road Docket, 1809-15, page 431.) The township of Susquehanna was and yet is bounded in part by the city of Harrisburg, the limits of which were extended to the northwest by the act of 16th April, 1838. In August, 1847, the court appointed commissioners to ascertain the new line of this township, dividing it from the then borough of Harrisburg, who reported the following, to wit:

"Beginning at a point at the river Susquehanna near the house of George Hammond; thence a straight line north sixty-four degrees east to a post at the Paxtang Creek near a willow-tree two hundred and fifty-nine perches."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 24th January, 1848. By the act of 1860, incorporating the city of Harrisburg, the boundaries of Susquehanna were further trenced upon. The township as now constituted is bounded on the north by Middle Paxtang township, east by Lower Paxtang township, south by Swatara township and the line of the city of Harrisburg, and on the west by the Susquehanna River to the western line of the county. It is named for the river. The lower portion of the township was included in the manor of Paxtang, to which reference has been made in the history of Harrisburg. The township comprises some of the richest farming lands in the county, especially that portion fronting the river.

ESTHERTON.—This place, known to the present generation as Coxestown, was laid out during the French and Indian war by Dr. John Cox, Jr., of Philadelphia, and named by him for his wife Esther. In point of time it was probably the second town laid out within the limits of the county of Dauphin, Middletown preceding it one or two years. The first notice we have of Estherton is on the 2d of October, 1767, when Dr. John Cox, Jr., and his wife Esther, of Philadelphia, by deed did grant and confirm to "The Incorporated Society for the Propagation of the Gospel in Foreign Parts" a lot of ground situate in the "New Town" on the east side of the Susquehanna, lately laid out by the said John Cox, and called Estherton, bounded by Third Street to the westward, by lot No. 65 to the northward, by a sixteen and one-half feet wide alley to the eastward, by lot No. 79 to the southward, in breadth north and south sixty-six feet and two hundred feet long, "for a site for a church and burial-ground for a religious society in communion with the Established Church of England for ever." During the Sullivan campaign of 1779 Estherton was an important point, being the depot of supplies for that army, from whence they were conveyed in bateaux built at Middletown up the Susquehanna. Maj. Cornelius Cox, deputy commissary of purchases during the Revolution, who resided at Esthertoo, was a son of the original proprietor, and it was under his management that the supplies were furnished to Sullivan's army, aiding in a great measure the successful accomplishment of that expedition. The village probably contained more houses fifty or a hundred years ago than it does to-day. There is nothing at present to aid its growth or prosperity. It contains a Methodist Episcopal Church connected with the Dauphin Circuit.

RESIDENCE OF W. T. HILDROP,
SUSQUEHANNA TOWNSHIP, DAUPHIN CO., PA.

ROCKVILLE is situated five miles from Harrisburg, on the Susquehanna River. It was first settled by a Mr. Roberts in 1774. The town was laid out by Mrs. Matilda Cox in 1834, to which additions were made by Miss McAllister in 1838. It was first called Brushy Rock, afterwards changed to Rockville. The post-office is called Susquehanna. The Pennsylvania Railroad bridge at this point is one of the finest structures in the State. It has eighteen piers and is one mile long. The locality is a beautiful one for a summer resort. It has two churches, the Methodist Episcopal, connected with the Dauphin Circuit, and a United Brethren. The village lies at the foot of the First Mountain between the canal and the Susquehanna River. In the days of river lumbering it was an important point, the landing being better here than at any other point on the lower Susquehanna.

PROGRESS is a growing rural village, situated in the southeast part of the township, and two miles east of Harrisburg. It is a post-town on the Harrisburg and Jonestown road. There is one church, belonging to the Church of God (Bethel).

DERRY TOWNSHIP.

IN the record of the Court of Quarter Sessions of the County of Lancaster, the 1st of August, A.D. 1729, we find the following boundary of the township of Derry, "as settled and agreed upon by the magistrates and inhabitants of the said county, on the 9th day of June, 1729, and confirmed by the court.

"The township of Derry, beginning at the mouth of Conewago, thence up Susquehanna to the mouth of the Suataaro, thence up Suataaro to the mouth of Quetopobello, thence south on a direct line to Conewago, and down the same to the place of beginning."

The eastern boundary of this township as originally adopted, seems to be involved in some uncertainty. To pursue the letter of the foregoing order, to run south on a direct line from the mouth of the Quitopahilla Creek to Conewago Creek, would strike the latter something like seven miles lower down than the point which, from everything which can now be discovered, seems to have been originally adopted as the southeast corner of Derry township,—that, instead of running the eastern line of the township south on a direct line, as the record calls for, the Quitopahilla Creek, Killinger's Run, and a line southeast from the head of that run to strike the Conewago Creek, seems most probable, if not entirely certain. This is inferred from the following facts: First, All the territory which lay between the Susquehanna River and eastern boundary of Lebanon township, and between the Conewago Creek and the mountain, was at the same time divided into three townships, viz., Peshtank, Derry, and Lebanon. To adhere to a line directly south from the mouth of the Quitopahilla would have left the territory of Derry township very limited as compared with that of the other two townships. By adopting the Quitopahilla, etc., as the eastern boundary of Derry, that township was still less than either of the other two, but of course bore a better proportion to them. Second, In the year 1768 the inhabitants of Derry township applied to the court for a division of the township, whereupon, at the February sessions that year, "the court, taking into consideration a petition preferred to them by the inhabitants of Derry township, setting forth that the bounds of the said township were very extensive and large, and the inhabitants thereof labored under several inconveniences by reason thereof, and praying the said court to divide the said township into two parts, according to a boundary line agreed upon by the said inhabitants, to wit:

"Along a certain road leading from Conewago Creek, by the Widow Hall's, thence to Felix Landis, Sr., at Swatara Creek, which said road is to fall into the east part of the said township, and that the said part be known by the name of Londonderry, and that the west part of said township retain the name of Derry. It is considered and ordered by the court that the said township be divided agreeable to the prayer of said petition, and that the said part to the east be known by the name of Londonderry, and the west end be known by the name of Derry, which said division line is hereby confirmed to be and remain firm and stable forever, and as such to be entered of record."

Now, if in the year 1768 a line directly south from the mouth of the Quitopahilla to the Conewago Creek was considered as the eastern boundary of Derry township, a division of it by the road before mentioned would have been most objectionable, as it would have left Londonderry township but a mere slip of territory, for some distance not a mile wide. And lastly, if the Quitopahilla Creek, etc., was not considered in 1768 as the originally-adopted eastern boundary of Derry township, how or when was the township of Londonderry brought up to that line? There is no record or authority found, creating the township of Londonderry other than by the division of Derry in 1768, before mentioned, nor any afterwards extending the limits of the former eastward, and yet it is certain that Londonderry extended eastward to the Quitopahilla and Killinger's Run line in 1799, when on the occasion of a division of Lebanon township, Londonderry was called for on that line, as may be seen on reference to Annville township. Upon these grounds the conclusion that the Quitopahilla Creek, Killinger's Run, and a line southeast from the head of that run to the Conewago Creek, was the originally-adopted eastern boundary of Derry township, seems to be warranted; notwithstanding it must be admitted that that line does not appear to be in strict accordance with the foregoing record.

While upon this subject, and to give our readers a better understanding of the subsequent division of Derry township, we give the explanation of the late Herman Alricks, who was, in his day, the best-informed lawyer on land titles at the Dauphin County bar: In the year 1815, when Thomas Smith projected his map of Dauphin and Lebanon Counties, which we have had reproduced from the original for this work, "what is now familiarly known as Derry Church was in Londonderry township. The grant of the lands was made by the Penns 'to the congregation of Derry,' but on the 28th March, 1787, an act of the Legislature was passed 'to incorporate the Presbyterian Church in the Township of Londonderry,' as the land, at that time, was in Londonderry (Bioren's Laws, iii. p. 201), and yet is now and was originally in Derry township.

"By an act of the General Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, the county of Lancaster was erected on the 10th of May, A.D. 1729, and contained all the territory now included in Lancaster, Dauphin, Lebanon, and a part of Berks County, etc. (Smith's Laws, i. p. 176).

"The Court of Quarter Sessions of Lancaster, at August term, 1729, confirmed the report of the magistrates and inhabitants of said county fixing the boundaries of the several townships in said county, and we find that Derry township was bounded by Conewago Creek, the Susquehanna River, the Swatara Creek, and 'thence up to the mouth of the Quitopahilla, and thence south in a direct line to Conewago' Creek, embracing within its limits all the territory south and east of the Swatara Creek in Dauphin County, and a part of Lebanon County.

"The Court of Quarter Sessions of Lancaster County at their February session, 1768, confirmed a report of viewers dividing the township of Derry 'by a line running directly south from the mouth of Quitopahilla to the Conewago Creek, along a certain road' leading from the Conewago Creek to the Swatara Creek, after which proceeding all the territory east of what is known as the old road to Elizabethtown was called Londonderry township, and all south and west of that road retained the name of Derry.

"The Legislature afterwards, by an act of the 4th of March, 1785, erected a part of Lancaster County into a separate county, called Dauphin (Smith, ii. p. 285), and on the 16th of February, 1813, the Legislature constructed Lebanon County out of the counties of Dauphin, Lancaster, and Berks. A considerable portion of the township of Londonderry, as it then existed, was within the bounds of Lebanon County.

"As the country became more densely settled, the inhabitants of Derry and Londonderry townships complained that those townships made inconvenient election districts, and, on the petition of a number of citizens, the Court of Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County, at December term, 1816, appointed Thomas Smith and two other persons as viewers, to make a survey and plot of the townships of Derry and Londonderry, and report the most proper place for a division line between said townships. (Sessions Docket, p. 81.)

"The viewers agreed in their report, that what is now known as the division line between said townships was the most convenient and proper place for the said line (Sessions Docket, p. 99); but on the 8th of May, 1817, the report was set aside, and no further action had on the premises until the 15th of April, 1825, when, on the petition of a number of the inhabitants of said townships, the court appointed John Roberts, Esq., of Harrisburg, and two other persons, as viewers, to resurvey and mark a division line between the said townships. (Sessions Docket, p. 10.) The reviewers made their report to November Sessions, 1825, and the report was, 21st January, 1826, confirmed absolutely, and the court denominated the northern section Derry and the southern section Londonderry. (Sessions Docket, p. 13.) The line thus adopted and marked by Col. John Roberts has ever since remained the division line between the townships of Derry and Londonderry, except as since modified by the erection of the township of Conewago; therefore Derry Church, as it is called, has ever since the year 1825 been in Derry township."

The following were the township officers from the year 1759 to 1785, when the county of Dauphin was erected. It will be seen that after the separation of Londonderry, in 1769, the officers were from what is now Londonderry, while the officers of the latter township, which are given under the head of Londonderry, were from now Derry township. The reference to the reformation of the townships explains this matter:

DERRY TOWNSHIP, 1826.

Derry township as now constituted is bounded on the north and west by the Swatara Creek, which separates it from the townships of Lower Swatara, Swatara, South Hanover, and East Hanover, on the east by the Lebanon County line, and on the south by the townships of Conewago and Londonderry. It is one of the richest townships in the county. The following is the only complete list of supervisors we have been able to obtain of any of the townships :

The fords of the Swatara were more or less noted in the history of this section.

Dixon's Ford was in the bend of the Swatara, not far from the Lebanon County line. It is now Lau-dermilmilch's Ford.

Hamilton's, or Derry Church, is between Manadaville and Union Deposit.

Logan's is farther down the Swatara than the foregoing.

Col. Rogers', now McElhenny's, is at Manadaville.

Earnest's and Sherer's Ford or Ferry was located for many years at the Swatara, one mile due west of Hummelstown, on the Reading pike. Before the year 1816 the Swatara could be forded easily at the point designated during the summer months, but ferry flats were used in stages of high water. When the fourteen-foot dam was erected across the Swatara, about a mile farther down the stream (at Nissley's and Brehm's mill), the back-water necessitated the building of a bridge at Sherer's and Earnest's Ferry. John Earnest, Sr., who lived on the east bank of the river, and Samuel Sherer, who resided on the west bank, built the first bridge, of two spans, across this ferry, owning it and collecting tolls jointly. Mr. Sherer died in 1821, and the interest in the bridge fell to his son, Joseph Sherer. By the breaking away of the big dam above the Union Water-works, located five miles north of Lebanon, in 1851, the bridges were swept from their piers from that point all along the Swatara (save the one at Lauder Milch's Ferry) to its mouth at Middletown. The bridge at Hummelstown was rebuilt in less than a year after its destruction by the original owners. Joseph Sherer died March, 1824, and his interest fell to his wife, who disposed of it to Mr. Hefflefinger prior to her removal to the West in 1838. John Earnest, Sr., also dead, his widow held the half-interest until the homestead was sold to Samuel Klopp. Mr. Klopp afterwards purchased Mr. Hefflefinger's interest, and held the entire control of the bridge until he disposed of it to the commissioners of Dauphin County in 1855, since which time it has been known as a "free bridge." The Swatara River at this point is from twelve to fourteen feet in depth the best portion of the year. The first bridge was built about the year 1818. The bridge built twenty-five or thirty years later at Hammaker's Mill Ferry by the county was always a free bridge. The old Red Bridge, leading from Centre Square through Water Street, Hummelstown, to the Hanover townships, was built by a stock company, but was also purchased by the county twenty-five years or more ago, and is free for travelers. Below Landis' Dam, one-eighth of a mile north of Hummelstown, and visible from the railroad depot, is another ferry or fording-place, which is still used by the farmers of Lower Paxtang and West Hanover, between their homes, the mill, and the railroad depot.

DERRY VILLAGE is situated thirteen and a half miles east of Harrisburg, and is named for Old Derry Church. It is a post-town, located in the midst of a beautiful and productive farming region. The United Brethren have a church here, a brick structure, rebuilt in 1881, of which Rev. David Longnecker is the pastor. One mile west of Derry is SWATARA STATION, and, like the former, situated on the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad. Mechanicsburg lies east of Derry, and is really an extension of Palmyra, Lebanon Co. Spring Creek was the name formerly given to the western part of the village of Derry, but it is now generally known by the latter name.

A Dunkard Meeting-house is located about half a mile south of Derry Station. It is a neat brick building, erected nearly half a century ago.

South of Hummelstown about two miles is the Hill Church of the Evangelical Lutheran congregation. It was the oldest German church in the township, the old log church having been built in the year 1756. It was rebuilt in 1875. The ministers are supplied by the Hummelstown charge. There are several other churches in the township, concerning which we endeavored to secure information, but failed to receive it.

MEMORIAL UNITED BRETHREN CHURCH.—This beautiful church, one and a half miles south of Hummelstown, was erected by Edward Stover as a memorial to his only son and child, and was dedicated on Aug. 4, 1872. The dedicatory services were conducted by Ex-Bishop Erb, Revs. J. F. Smith, Lewis Peters, Ezekiel Light, and G. W. Miles Rigor (presiding elder). The building is thirty by forty feet, and is neatly furnished. A cemetery adjoins the church, in which a monument twenty-two feet in height bears the following inscription in raised letters: "At Rest, Edward Stover, died July 31, 1870, aged 21 years, 10 months, and 3 days."

OLD DERRY CHURCH.

It is almost certainly established that what is known as Derry Presbyterian Church, in Dauphin County, held its first services near the head of a confluent of Spring Creek, in that portion of Chester County from which Lancaster was taken, and subsequently Dauphin, about one and a half miles from the site upon which its first church building (that of 1729) was erected. This building was nearly square, twenty-three by twenty-five feet, of logs and clapboards. The first services we have account of were held at the close of the month of April, in 1724. The small congregation must have been gathered from all the frontier within a radius of ten miles, and without exception was of the Scotch-Irish immigration. Its canopy was the primeval forest. It was addressed by the Revs. George Gillespie, David Evans, and Robert

Cross. Some names of those present have been preserved: Rowland Chambers, Thomas and William Clark, James Galbraith, Patrick and Robert Campbell, John Mitchell, William McBey, James Quigley, William Hay, Robert Moody, Malcolm Kar (Kerr), Thomas and Hugh Black, James Harris, William McCord, Morgan Jones, David McClure, James MacFarlane, Alexander Hutchison, John and Benjamin Boyd, James Hamilton, John McCosh and sister. These men were all engaged making themselves homes on the frontier, "over Conoy" and along the Susquehanna, much to the distraction of mind of those who managed land affairs for the Penn family. Every obstruction was thrown in their way to prevent permanent location. However, they were not to be deterred by the frowns of the governing powers at Philadelphia, but took what land they needed; as they felt settled, sought religious consolation from ministers of the Presbyterian faith, erected a church, and complied with the Provincial laws, in an uneasy, antagonistic fashion, "on the barrens of Derry." No one can speak with entire certainty of its exact location. A public road now occupies a part of the first graveyard used by the early settlers, on a farm owned by Mr. Samuel Wingert, on a commanding elevation, and by tradition, it is the place where the first service was held and the original church built. The confused relics of a building supposed to have when it was thoroughly repaired at a cost of five hundred dollars. It stood without further repair until May, 1883, when it came to be so much decayed that it was thought dangerous. It was taken down and a new one of stone is at present in course of construction of nearly the same dimensions. The early records of the congregation seem to be lost; most likely have been carried "West" in the luggage of the very great migrations that have so frequently almost depopulated this early settlement. We know, however, the following interesting particulars: The Rev. Adam Boyd "preached to the westward of Octorara and Donegal, over Conoy," in 1723. The Rev. James Anderson preached in Donegal in 1724, and became pastor there in 1726, giving one-fifth of his time "over Conewago," the present Derry. The Rev. William Bertram was called in 1732 "to Derry," upon the so-been the church were there sixty years ago. Therefore it is just possible that a small church was there, until one was erected on the present site, in 1732, the year the land-office was opened. One thing is known, that the remains of Patrick Campbell, who died in 1735, were removed from the abandoned burial-place at Wingert's to the present cemetery, and is the oldest date found there. Be all this as it may, it is certain that a congregation was formally gathered in 1730, and soon afterwards worshiped at the present Derry, now an historically prominent feature in early frontier occupation, and their descendants have held divine service there ever since.

So rapidly did the settlement increase that the first house was in a few years found to be too small. It underwent some enlargement, when in 1769 a new church of logs, thirty-eight by thirty-nine feet, was erected. It was used by the congregation up to 1831, licitation of Rowland Chambers, William Wilson, John Sloan, John Wilson, Hugh Black, Robert Campbell, James Quigley, William McCord. The congregation paid him sixty pounds a year in hemp, linen, corn, yarn, and cloth, and gave him the use of a farm. Mr. Bertram served Derry until his death, which occurred on the 2d of May, 1746.

In 1742 the exact record is missing; Rev. John Elder, then in charge of the Paxtang congregation, after some debate about salary and "the time" to be given to Derry, was installed pastor. The congregation was then a large one, perhaps the largest in the Presbytery, but was not increasing. Soon after the peace of 1763 it began to diminish; the tendency to go West was not to be resisted among these sons of the frontier, and its effect upon the church was especially disastrous. Mr. Elder was a most efficient shepherd of his extensive charges, and held this pastorate with the presidency of the board of trustees from 1742 to April, 1791, when he was succeeded in the latter by Col. Robert Clark. Mr. Elder died July, 1792.

Rev. Nathaniel R. Snowden was called March, 1793. He was pastor of Derry, Paxtang, and Harrisburg. In 1795 he resigned. Mr. Snowden died in 1850.

Rev. Joshua Williams was called August, 1798, with a salary of one hundred and eighty pounds in cash. In June, 1802, Mr. Williams resigned.

Up to this time it was the custom to elect the pastor president of the corporation consisting of thirteen trustees. After Mr. Williams' pastorate this ceased and laymen were chosen.

An inscription in the graveyard has the following: "In memory of James Adair, preacher of the Gospel, who departed this life September 20, 1803, aged 32 years." Mr. Adair came to Derry as a "supply" during the vacancy in the pastorate, preaching occasionally from Sept. 20, 1802, until April 7, 1803, when this appears on the books of the congregation: "Paid Reverend James Snodgrass for moderating a call for Mr. Adair, £1.10." He does not appear to have accepted this call. He, however, preached seven Sundays as a supply, when this appears: "By cash paid to Mr. Snodgrass for a funeral sermon at Mr. James Adair's Burial, £1.10.0."

June, 1805, the congregation came together to call a pastor; fifteen voted for Rev. James Snodgrass, and twenty-six for others. No choice was made. In September another meeting was held. Rev. John Hutchinson was called,—twenty-one for, nineteen against. Mr. Hutchinson declined the call. September, 1806, all the members of the congregation united in a call to Rev. James R. Sharon, who had previously been settled at Paxtang. He continued pastor of both congregations to the time of his death, in 1843. May 31, 1843, the following is recorded: "By cash paid Mrs. Sharon, a donation from Derry congregation for the purpose of erecting a tombstone over the remains of the Rev. J. R. Sharon, our late pastor, $100." Then, April 2, 1844, this entry: "By cash paid Mrs. Sharon, being a donation granted by the congregation to Mrs. Sharon, which will appear by reference to the minutes as entered April 24, 1843, $100."

Rev. J. M. Boggs was called March 9, 1844, until April 1, 1847, when a church dispute between Derry and her daughter "over Swatara, on lands of Dr. William Simonton," caused so much feeling that Mr. Boggs was refused compensation, and Presbytery dissolved his relation to Derry June 12, 1849.

Rev. Andrew D. Mitchell was chosen pastor by a unanimous vote Aug. 11, 1849, the congregation agreeing to pay him two hundred dollars a year for one-fourth of his time. He served as pastor until Aug. 19, 1874, the date of his last receipt for salary. The minutes are missing from 1857 to 1883. Mr. Mitchell died in 1882, at Middletown, Dauphin Co.

Thus this congregation has had in one hundred and fifty-four years the following pastors: Mr. Bertram, four years; Mr. Elder, fifty years; Mr. Snowden, two years; Mr. Williams, four years; Mr. Sharon, thirty-seven years; Mr. Boggs, five years; Mr. Mitchell, twenty-five years; vacancies, seventeen years.

Under the charter of March 28, 1787, an organization took place, with Rev. John Elder as president; Robert McCallen, treasurer; Thomas Laird, Jr., secretary; John Rodgers, William Laird, and Robert Clark, trustees. There is no earlier record than this, except a note "that William Laird, James Wilson, Jr., and Thomas McCallen were appointed to settle accounts with former trustees, John Rodgers, Robert Clark, and James Wilson, Sr.," who appears to have been the security for the treasurer of the previous organization.

In 1842 the graveyard was carefully and substantially inclosed, memorials of sorrow or affection to departed friends "set up and cleaned," iron gates provided, and every mark of respect paid to the remains of the fathers and mothers of a noted race. The wall and yard are to-day in excellent order. The cost to the congregation was six hundred and seventy-eight dollars, a very liberal expenditure for a congregation whose income was not five hundred dollars a year.

Aug. 1, 1845, it was agreed that a chapel "for the members beyond the Swatara Creek" should be erected on "land of Dr. William Simonton, on the line of Dr. Simonton and John Berst, facing the road from Swatara to Corbett's Mill," to be weatherboarded and plastered. "Capt. John B. Moorhead and Dr. William Simonton are to superintend, and Mr. Boggs is to give one-sixth of his time" after the building is ready. The chapel was soon finished, and cost four hundred and twenty-five dollars and twenty-nine cents. It was sold about 1860 for three hundred and ten dollars. As has been stated, this "daughter of Derry" was the cause of many disputes before the necessity of the mother church required it to be disposed of. It was not until about 1800 that the exact dimensions of the Penn gift of 1741 were determined. Since that time the glebe has dwindled to less than a dozen of acres.

HUMMELSTOWN BOROUGH.

In the year 1738 there was warranted to Valentine Gloninger one hundred and fifty acres of land on the Swatara. In 1761 this right was purchased by John Campbell, one of the earliest settlers in that region, who the year following sold to Frederick Hummel. The same year the latter laid out the tract into town lots, naming the place Fredericktown. The lots sold freely, and one of the earliest purchasers was Anthony Doebler, of Lebanon, who bought a lot on Market Street in January, 1763, within a month after the lots were for sale. That lot is described as being along "another lot taken up by Adam Hurshey." Doebler agreed to pay a yearly rent for the fee of ten shillings sterling (about two dollars and a half of our present money), "one shilling sterling of which sum was to be paid yearly forever for the use of a German Lutheran Church intended to be erected," the purchaser further binding himself to erect a substantial house eighteen by twenty feet "at least" on the premises. No time for the fulfillment of this condition is fixed. It may be here stated that it was not until after the founder's death that the name of the town was changed from Fredericktown to that which it now bears. From the assessment-list of Fredericktown, in 1771, and that of Hummelstown, in 1779, it will be seen that in the eight years supervening there was no increase in the number of inhabitants. Whether this was due to the war which was then going on, and which will account for the absence of either "freemen" or "single men," we cannot say. The absence of the name Hummel in the last list is in striking contrast with recent returns. The Hummels then resided on the adjoining farm to the town, and are included in the other portions of Derry tax-lists. In 1779 it is well known that there were a large number of gunsmiths at Hummelstown making arms for the Continental army. Their perchance are also included in the Derry assessment proper.

The oldest house in town is that owned by Christian Garver, on Swatara Creek. It is a log structure, weatherboarded, and originally stood on the square, and in it lived Frederick Hummel, son of the founder of the town. Before the latter's death he built another house on the same site. The white stone house on the square (partly of logs) was erected before Harrisburg was laid out. James Clunie lived in it and kept store, the first in the place. Mr. Clunie sold the building to John Barnard, he to Abraham Landis, and he to Frederick Hummel. Rahm & Baum kept store, in 1790, on Main Street in the house now owned by James Hays. Among the early physicians was Dr. Duncan King, who died in 1826. Frederick Hummel kept hotel on the northwest corner of the square, and Michael Rahm kept another at same time where Richard Hummel now lives, both about 1792. Afterwards John Fox had an inn (within the town limits) on the Harrisburg, Ephrata, and Downingtown road. The first schoolmaster of whom any recollection is preserved was David Eckstein, who was teaching here as early as 1792 in the Lutheran Church. He had served in the Revolutionary war as one of Washington's life-guards. Peter Fishburn was the first cooper in the village. In 1814, Philip Leebrick, Jacob Earnest, George Gish, and Thomas Fox kept stores here. Drs. William Henderson and Nice were physicians. Michael Spade, George Fox, Jacob Greenawalt, and Mr. Hill had taverns. Allison Piney taught school, his successors being John Phillips and David Eckstein (the latter having taught more or less since 1790). Thomas Ramsey and Daniel Seiler were blacksmiths, and Samuel Spidle and John Shadel had cabinet-shops. For a long time the town was a favorite militia training point for the old-time battalions.

On Thursday morning, Nov. 20, 1800, two shocks of earthquake were sensibly felt by the inhabitants of Hummelstown and vicinity. The first took place about fifteen minutes before five o'clock, and lasted about forty seconds. In some houses the effects were more visible than in others. The knockers on some of the doors rapped as though they were moved by hands, and in the dwelling of Philip Leebrick a set of china was shaken from a table and broken to pieces. The fright caused many of the people to rise from their beds. The second shock took place five minutes after five o'clock, and lasted about half a minute. It was not as severe as the former, but was sensibly felt in every house. In both instances a rumbling noise accompanied the trembling of the earth. Such was the fear of the people that a large number of them immediately repaired to the meeting-house, where prayers were offered for the preservation of the inhabitants.

The history, growth, and prosperity of the town is so intimately connected not only with that of the county but with its local institutions that reference to them will be found of value and interest. Hummelstown was incorporated as a borough Aug. 26, 1874, since which period the following have been the chief municipal officers:

BURGESSES.

1874-76. John Z. Grove.	1879-80. George F. Greenawalt.
1876-78. C. A. Nissley.	1880-81. Dr. J. B. Crist.
1878-79. W. R. Hendricks.	1881. Dr. H. B. Rupp.

TOWN CLERKS.

1874-81. Franklin Smith.	1881. John J. Bolton.

ZION'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—This congregation was organized in 1765, and the first church edifice, a log structure, was completed May 16, 1766. The church receipts for building the meeting-house and all other purposes from 1765 to 1768 were £140 18s. 6d., and the expenditures £127 2s. 4d. The original building stood some twenty or thirty feet from the present edifice, and was destroyed by fire in December, 1817. David Eckstein was the parochial schoolmaster from 1792 to 1805, and kept school in the old log church. The present stone church was erected in 1815 and 1816 and remodeled in 1855, making it now one of the most attractive church edifices in the county. All that can be learned from the few fragments left of its early history is that Maj. Frederick Hummel was the chief member of the building committee, and that Rev. Michael Enterline served the church as pastor until 1780, and during his administration baptized seventy-one children, confirmed eighteen catechumens, and administered the communion to one hundred and forty-eight persons. The pastors have been: 1771-81, Michael Enterline; 1781-95, William Kurtz; April 15, 1804, to April 5, 1807, John Frederick Ernst; April 5, 1807, to June 23, 1811, John Paul Ferdinand Kramer; June 23, 1811, to June, 1819, John Henry Vanhof; June, 1819, to Oct. 6, 1822, Charles Rudolph Denime; Oct. 6, 1822, to Dec. 5, 1830, Peter Scheurer; Dec. 5, 1830, to Oct. 27, 1854, Henry G. Stecher; Oct. 27, 1854, to Nov. 1, 1856, George Haines; Nov. 1, 1856, to Feb. 1, 1857, John F. Probst; 1857-61, A. S. Link; 1861-67, Eli Huber; 1867-73, P. Rizer; July 1, 1873, to 1877, P. S. Mack; July 1, 1877, J. H. Leeser, the present incumbent.

From 1795 to 1804 the congregation had no minister.

REFORMED CHURCH.—As heretofore stated, when the town was laid out in 1762 by Frederick Hummel, he set apart a lot to the Reformed congregation, on which its church is now erected. The first church edifice was a log structure, built by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations jointly, and which was burned in December, 1817. Before 1808 there are no records to show who the pastors or church officials were. Rev. Philip Gloninger, of Harrisburg, served the congregation from 1808 to 1824. Under his pastoral care the elders were Peter Heffelfinger, Sr., and Henry Seig; Deacons, Jacob Duey, Sr., and Samuel Brightbill. His successor was Rev. Joseph La Ross, who married here Miss Elizabeth Earnest, and after several years' faithful ministry removed to Bloomsburg, Columbia Co. He was followed by Rev. Samuel Seibert, who continued some years, and resigned in favor of Rev. Daniel Bossler, who preached for some seventeen years every four weeks in German. He was succeeded in 1853 by Rev. D. G. Heisler, who continued until 1856. The religious services up to 1853 were conducted in the German language only, but after that, under Rev. Mr. Heisler, were alternately in English and German. Up to 1855 the congregation worshiped in the Lutheran Church, first in the log edifice burned in 1817, and afterwards in the stone building erected in 1815-16. In 1855, the Lutherans having decided to remodel their church edifice, the Reformed congregation was compelled to vacate, and removed temporarily to what was then known as the Middle school-house. On the 8th of January, 1855, it resolved to erect a church edifice, the corner-stone of which was laid in the following May by Rev. Mr. Leinbach, Rev. Messrs. Gans, Kremer, and Huster participating in the ceremonies. The dedication occurred Dec. 23, 24, 25, 1855, the officiating ministers being Revs. H. Harbaugh, J. W. Nevin, Daniel Bossler, and others. The original cost of the church was five thousand two hundred and twenty-one dollars. Rev. D. G. Heisler continued until 1857. The next pastor, Rev. M. A. Smith, came in December, 1857, and continued until 1866. At this time the charge consisted of congregations known as Shoop's, Wenrich's, Union Deposit, and Hummelstown, with preaching here every two weeks.

The next pastor, Rev. Samuel Kuhn, came in the spring of 1847, and continued until 1877, when he resigned. No pastor for some time, preaching being supplied by the students of Franklin College. During this year the church was made a separate charge, and in May, 1877, Rev. A. R. Bartholomew was installed pastor, who remained until the fall of 1878, when he accepted a call to the Jonestown Church, in Lebanon County. The congregation was then supplied with preaching every two weeks by Rev. J. H. Pennypacker, of Elizabethtown charge, until Aug. 1, 1879. In 1882, Rev. A. S. Stauffer took charge.

UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH.—This denomination began to have preaching at Hummelstown as early as 1840, the services being held at the residences of different members. In 1842 a congregation was formed, Conrad Smith (now deceased) being one of the first and leading members. In 1843 a stone church edifice was erected on the site of the present one, which was built in 1857, the first not being large enough to accommodate the increased membership. Since 1865 the pastors have been: 1865, Rev. Miller (who died); 1865-67, J. M. Kephart; 1867-69, D. O. Farrell; 1869, Israel Carpenter; 1869-71, Rev. Stehrwalt; 1871-73, John F. Smith; 1873-74, Jacob F. Smith; 1874-77, C. C. Meily; 1877-79, G. A. Loose; 1879-81, E. Light; 1881-82, Thomas Garland.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Hummelstown Station was formed out of Dauphin Circuit in 1857. Since then the pastors have been: 1857, William B. Gregg; 1858, C. L. Stineman; 1859, Gideon J. Barr; 1860, John C. Gregg; 1861-63, Jacob Slichter; 1863, J. O. Spherd; 1864-66, M. Barnhill; 1866-69, F. M. Brady; 1869-72, L. Hubbs; 1872, E. Potts; 1873-76, J. M. Gable; 1876-79, Richard Kaines; 1879, J. T. Gray; 1880-82, Jonathan Dungan.

In 1852 the congregation was organized as the Dauphin and Hummelstown Mission. The church edifice was built in 1852 and 1853, and is a neat one-story frame structure.

CHURCH OF GOD (BETHEL).—This congregation was organized in 1874, and for nearly two years services were held at the Engine Hall. The church edifice, a brick structure, was erected in 1876 on South Railroad Street. The pastors have been: 1875-77, S. P. Stoneseifer; 1877-79, James McDonald; 1879-81, A. Snyder; 1881-82, F. L. Nicodemus. Mr. Nicodemus lives at Palmyra, and preaches there and at Hummelstown.

The first school-house of the town and vicinity was built on Hanover Street about 1764. The ground was donated by Frederick Hummel, the founder of the town, for school purposes. A one-story house was erected, and a school supported voluntarily by the citizens. The district composed an area of fifty square miles. The furniture consisted of desks, constructed of rough oak or pine boards, fastened to the walls around the room. Benches were made of rough logs hewn on the one side, and supported by blocks. The building was in use until 1790. It was then sold and converted into a dwelling-house. In the same year the Lutheran Church was selected for school purposes (the school being then taught by Allison Piney), and was occupied as such until it was destroyed by fire in 1819. A small house in which articles belonging to the church were kept was then used, and subsequently the school was moved from one private house to another until 1820, when a brick house on Front Street was built in a more modern style. At this period the schools were managed by a board of trustees appointed by the commissioners, and this plan was continued until the free schools were established in 1837.

The Hummelstown Weekly Press was the first newspaper established in the town, and its first number was issued July 14, 1870. It was a four-page sheet of twenty-four columns, and was published at one dollar per year. Its publisher, Mr. Kersey, was also a surveyor and engineer. Its publication was continued until March 30, 1871, when it was discontinued for want of support.

The Hummelstown Sun, a weekly paper, was established and its first number issued Dec. 1, 1871, by W. R. Hendricks and J. W. Stofer, the latter of the Middletown Journal. Mr. Stofer having the Journal to edit and publish, retired from the Sun, and Mr. Hendricks became its editor and publisher until April 1, 1875, when he purchased Mr. Stofer's interest, and has continued from that to the present time its sole editor, publisher, and proprietor. Its size was originally four pages and twenty-four columns, changed during the past year to twenty-eight columns.

THE HUMMELSTOWN BANK, a private institution, owned by individuals, was organized in 1868. George T. Hummel was president until 1875, when he was succeeded by the present incumbent, Abner Rutherford. John J. Nissley has been the cashier from its formation. The first board of directors was composed of George T. Hummel, Jacob Eberly, John M. Shenk, Abner Rutherford, John H. Balsbaugh, Joseph Farnsler, Dr. Jacob Shope, Christian Landis, Martin Early. The directors in 1882 were Abner Rutherford, Dr. Jacob Shope, John M. Shenk, John Balsbaugh, Joseph Hershey, Judge Isaac Mumma, John H. Balsbaugh, Joseph Louch. The teller was Levi H. Nissley.

CITIZENS' FIRE COMPANY, No. 1.—The Hummelstown Fire Company was organized Jan. 12, 1819, and remained as such until 1882, when the name was changed to Citizens' Fire Company, No. 1. In January, 1819, the company bought an old engine built in Philadelphia about forty years prior, and which it uses to this date.

NIOBE FIRE COMPANY, No. 2, was organized as early as 1837, but there are no records, save a bill found showing it to have been in existence that year. Its second engine was brought here in 1850. It was reorganized first in 1865 and again in 1872, when John M. Hummel was elected president. It was incorporated July 19, 1879.

VIGILANT FIRE COMPANY, No. 3, was organized as a stock company in the fall of 1881. It bought an engine of Rumsey & Co., of Seneca Falls, N. Y.

LONDONDERRY TOWNSHIP.

At the February sessions, 1768, the court taking into consideration a petition preferred to them by the inhabitants of Derry township setting forth that the bounds of the said township were very extensive and large, and the inhabitants thereof labored under several inconveniences by reason thereof, and praying the said court to divide the said township into two parts, according to a boundary line agreed upon by the said inhabitants, to wit:

“Along a certain road leading from Conewago creek, by the widow Hall’s; thence to Felix Landis, senior, at Swatara creek, which said road is to fall into the east part of the said township, and that the said part be known by the name of Londonderry, and that the west part of said township retain the name of Derry. It is considered and ordered by the court that the said township be divided agreeable to the prayer of said petition; and that the said part to the east be known by the name of Londonderry, and the west end be known by the name of Derry, which said division line is hereby confirmed to be and remain firm and stable forever, and as such to be entered of record.”

The reasons for adopting the Quitpahilla Creek, etc., as the eastern boundary are stated under the head of Derry township, and need not be repeated here.

As previously stated, between the year 1813, when the erection of Lebanon County cut off a large portion of Londonderry township, and the year 1825, some proceedings were had in the Quarter Sessions to remodel the townships of Derry and Londonderry, none of which, however, seemed to have received the final sanction of the court. At November term, 1825, the court appointed three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of a division, who made report in favor of a division by a line "Beginning at a black-oak-tree on the eastern bank of the Swatara Creek, at the mouth of Strickler's Run; thence a due east course seven miles and one hundred and twenty perches to the Lebanon County line, at the farm of Jacob Longnecker." The court confirmed this report on the 21st of January, 1826, and gave to the northern section the name of Derry, and to the southern division the name of Londonderry. (See Road Docket A, page 13.) Since that period the township has been limited in its dimensions by the erection of the township of Conewago. The township is bounded on the east by Conewago township; on the south by Conewago Creek, which separates it from Lancaster County; on the west by the Susquehanna River and the Swatara Creek, which separates it from Lower Swatara township; and on the north by Derry township. It covers an extensive area, but there are few villages of any importance,—Port Royal, noticed in the history of Middletown, being the most prominent.

About 1811 or 1812, Gainsburg, and also called Franklin, was laid out by Conrad Grim, John Fulweiler, and John C. Kramer. It was a venture of the speculative era in our State history, when there was a mania for building turnpikes and erecting towns every four or five miles along their route, the farmers selling their broad acres and investing their hard cash in town lots. This was well calculated to overdo the town business and hurry on a financial crash. Gainsburg did not survive its fledgeling, the only houses now in the locality having been erected by the present generation.

THE CONEWAGO PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH was located a little east of Gainsburg. It was one of the earliest churches of this Scotch-Irish neighborhood. A log building was erected prior to 1741, for in that year the Rev. Samuel Black was their regular minister. The land is contiguous or rather inclosed by a tract of two hundred and two and five-eighths acres, which James Clark held by a warrant from the land-office dated Aug. 1, 1743. Samuel Clark conveyed it by an indenture Feb. 23, 1775, to William Braden, of Derry township. The land was afterwards patented to Robert Spear by patent deed Nov. 8, 1785, and was called "Spear's Choice," and called for 202½ acres and the usual allowance. The patent was enrolled in rolls-office, in Patent Book No. 4, page 99, etc. The following memorandum, accompanying a draft, will explain itself;

"Resurveyed for Robert Spear, August 18, 1785, the above tract of land, containing two hundred and two acres and five-eighths and allowances, situate in Derry township, Dauphin County, late Lancaster, by warrant granted to James Clark 28th of July, 1743.

"Signed BERTHAM GALBRAITH.

"N. B. The above square piece of nineteen by twenty perches is a Presbyterian meeting-house and burying-grounds.

"TO JOHN LUKENS, S. G.
 "Returned into the Land-Office the third November, 1785, for John Lukens, Esq., S. G. EDWARD LYNCH."

Robert Spear assigned his patent to Robert Coleman; Sept. 21, 1784, William Braden conveyed it to Robert Spear; and John Spear, Nov. 5, 1804, transferred it to Robert Coleman, the assignee of Robert Spear of the patent. Robert Coleman sold it, June 15, 1818, to Robert Dempsey, whose administrator, Jacob Redsecker, on April 13, 1831, conveyed it to John Conrad. The latter's administrator, Henry Fisher, sold it, June 16, 1841, to John Fisher, who, March 11, 1842, conveyed it to George Hess. John B. Coleman, Feb. 24, 1836, conveyed his interest in it to Samuel Hoffer, who in turn transferred to George Hess April 8, 1842, making the latter the owner in fee. George Hess conveyed it, April 4, 1868, to Abraham Rutt, who in April, 1875, sold to John Olwine, the present owner. So, this old church lot is in the midst of a farm, repeatedly sold and transferred as land. The title, however, to the old graveyard is by law vested in the Presbytery of Carlisle, who should take charge of it and have it properly inclosed. What has been supposed to have been a church foundation is a dilapidated wall, inclosing the burial-place of some important families. There is no inscriptive stone to tell what it really was. It is about ten by twelve feet. Clearly there is no mark of a church at this spot. What is very remarkable, there is not a tombstone, or part of one, with any inscription in the mass of fragments of such memorials which surround the family inclosure spoken of. The stones are of the red sandstone of the neighboring hills,—many of them free from all evidence of manual adornment,—weatherbeaten as well as rough.

ISLANDS IN THE SUSQUEHANNA.—Several very important islands in the Susquehanna are included in Londonderry township. In the days when the shad fisheries of the Susquehanna were productive and valuable, these islands were considered the choicest fishing-rights on the river. The principal ones are Shelly's, nearest the York County shore; Elliott's, east of it; and Hill Island north, nearly opposite the mouth of the Swatara Creek. Hill Island is noted for being the place whence, during the Millerite excitement of 1844, a score of firm believers assembled, expecting from thence to be translated heavenward. After enduring the severe weather of that lonely night on Hill Island, the morning dawn not bringing the expected millennium, the converts wended their way home, wiser than before.

Shelly's and the adjoining island have recently become favorite tobacco ground, the richness and peculiarity of the soil admirably adapting them for tobacco culture.

CONEWAGO TOWNSHIP.

THIS township was organized by an act of Assembly approved April 2, 1850, which enacted "that from and after the passage of this act all that part of the townships of Derry and Londonderry lying within the following boundaries, to wit: Beginning at the Conewago Creek, the line of the counties of Dauphin and Lancaster, at the place where Brill's Run empties into said creek; and from thence by a straight line running parallel with the line dividing the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon to a point that by running a straight line from said point at a right angle with the aforesaid parallel said straight line will intersect the said line of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon at a point not more than one-half of a mile north of the Mennonite meeting-house at or near said county line; and from thence along the line of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon to the line of the county of Lancaster; and from thence down said line to place of beginning, shall hereafter form a separate election district and township, and shall be called Conewago," etc.

The township was so named for the creek which forms its entire southern boundary. It is four and one-fourth miles in length by three and one-half miles in width, and in population one of the smallest in the county. The southern portion along the Conewago Creek is a beautiful plain, which gradually slopes from its northern margin, the granite ridge, towards the creek. It has good pasture meadows and fine farms. There are sections of the township, however, much broken by rocky elevations, but even here and there between these are often rich fields and farms. In the northwestern part are the sand-hills, which culminate in a few prominent spurs belonging to that system of which the Round Top in Londonderry is the most striking. Beautiful springs gush out of these hillsides, and as the early settlers built near running water, some of the oldest farms are in this locality.

Indian implements are frequently found,—tomahawks, axes, and arrow-heads. Two hominy-stones, capable of holding a peck, are in existence, having been preserved,—one in the possession of Cyrus G. Shenk, who has it in use at his barn; another on the adjoining farm. A curious stone of this E shape has been found. In this locality traces are to be seen of a high fence surrounding a plot of ground, erected by the Indians for entrapping deer.

Among the early settlers in the neighborhood were Christopher Shoop, John Buchs, Leonard Wallers, Rev. John Roan, Robert Carothers, and David Johnson. The tract of land which Moses Potts had surveyed to him March 29, 1755, he sold to Michael Shenk in 1770. The Hoffers came about 1800. Other families about the same period, if not earlier, were in the locality,—the Longeneckers, Rissers, Grubbs, Lehmans, etc. In 1799, Goss' mill, which has also connected with it a saw-mill, was erected. On the farms of John Risser and Benjamin Longenecker were distilleries about the year 1780. Risser's mill was built in 1770, and Redecker's in 1776.

There are three churches within the township limits. The Mennonite meeting-house, near the Derry line, on the northeast, was built about 1780; the Brethren's Church in 1854, and the Union meeting-house in 1869.

The first schools were taught by the church minister under large trees during favorable weather and at such other places as opportunity afforded. In 1790 there were only five schools in that section, principally German. About 1795 an English school was organized where Henry Shenk now resides. It was taught by Stephen Templeton. The one-story log school-house, twelve by sixteen feet, in which Templeton taught comprised three rooms,—a bed-room, kitchen, and a school-room. On each side a portion of a log was left out for a row of window-panes, and it is presumed vagrants did not push up the sash for ingress to lodge, nor was the teacher troubled to close and open the shutters. Some sixty pupils were crowded in this small room. Shortly after Templeton came another school established by a Mr. McMullen. These things existed until about the year 1800, when the schools were generally kept at private houses. The names of Abraham Snyder and others of the earlier days, and those of Rev. Speck, Samuel Hofer, Joseph Clark, and the Techtmyers of later times are intimately connected with the schools of the neighborhood. For many years school was taught in the old Mennonite meeting-house, down to the adoption of the present system of education.

The township has two villages. BACHMANSVILLE, a post-town, is situated in the northeastern part, and was named for the Bachmans, who erected the first buildings of any importance. Its population is less than a hundred. MOUNT HARRISON, or FOLTZ'S STORE, near the centre of the township, is a hamlet of some six or eight houses. It was named Mount Harrison by the Kreiters, who kept store there during the Harrison campaign of 1840. It is beautifully situated on an eminence between Middletown and Colebrook.

There are three grist-mills in the township,—Redecker's, in the southwestern part, built in 1776; Goss', near the centre, in 1799; and Risser's, in the southeastern corner, erected in 1769. In early times they hauled all their grain to Philadelphia over poor roads, and little or no accommodation "for man or beast" by the way. The teams at night halted by some stream of water, the feeding-trough was fixed upon the wagon-tongue, and there the horses ate and slept, no matter how inclement the weather, the drivers stowing themselves snugly under the wagon-cover in the "fuhrmons bet." Four, five, and frequently six horses constituted the team.

HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

At February sessions, 1736-37, a petition was presented to the court of Lancaster County stating that many of the inhabitants of Derry township, living on the northwest side of the Swatara Creek, labored under inconveniences by reason of the largeness of the township, and asking to be divided from the other part thereof, and that their bounds might be as follows: "To be divided on the west from Peshtank by Beaver Creek, from its mouth to the mountain; from Lebanon on the east and Derry on the south, by Swatara Creek from Beaver Creek mouth to the forks, and thence by the north branch thereof to the mountain; which was allowed by the court and ordered to be recorded, and that the said township be called Hanover." The boundaries of this township (so named for the House of Hanover) as originally laid out are all natural, and therefore cannot easily be mistaken, but there is an evident mistake in stating the petitioners to be inhabitants of Derry township, residing northwest of the Swatara Creek, and that their prayer was for a division of Derry township. A glance at the boundaries of Derry will show that there was no part of that township on the northwest side of Swatara Creek, and the division lines asked for and granted did not touch upon the territory at all. The mistake is not of any practical importance, but seems evident that the petition was from inhabitants of Peshtank, and for a division of that township. Hanover, as thus laid off, embraced parts of what was before Peshtank and Lebanon townships.

During the years 1768 to 1775 frequent efforts were made for a division of the township of Hanover, those in the east end favoring a division, those in the west end in opposition. The war of the Revolution opening, the question was not mooted until the efforts were being made for the erection of the new county of Dauphin. The matter was brought to the attention of the court at Lancaster at the February sessions, 1785, from which we take the following record:

"The court, taking into consideration the limits of the township of Hanover and great difficulties of the several officers therein in discharging their respective duties, on due consideration and advisement, do direct a division thereof by a small stream of water running through the same, which is called the West Branch of Priest's Run, and rises on the lands of Philip Rank, and from thence by the said stream or run of water until it empties itself into Swatara Creek at Michael Brown's mill; and do further denominate that division which is next to Jonestown by the name of East Hanover, and the other division thereof by the name of West Hanover."

The stream of water called Priest's Run in the foregoing record is not found by that name on Thomas Smith's map, nor is any one now living in that section of the county who knows of a stream by that name; but from the best information which has been obtained, that marked on Smith's map, and now generally known as Raccoon Creek, was the dividing line between East and West Hanover townships down to the year 1813, when Lebanon County was taken from Dauphin, the northwest line of which runs in the neighborhood of Raccoon Creek, and, indeed, the head of that creek is made one of the points of that line, and the running of that line so near the dividing line of East and West Hanover townships made it of but little practical importance where the separating line of the two townships was; it may, however, be assumed with reasonable certainty that Raccoon Creek was the line.

There is another question which it seems proper and in place here to refer to, it is as to the true boundary on the north of East and West Hanover townships. In point of what may be called practice, it seems those townships were held to extend to the Second Mountain at least from an early day. If the records are consulted it by no means is certain that the practice was in accordance with them, or that there was any authority, until a later day, for supposing those townships extended beyond the First Mountain, other than long usage. When the township of Paxtang was erected, in 1729, it extended from Swatara Creek to Kohhtohtoning Hill, above Peter Allen's; where Peter Allen's was, or whether the First Mountain of the range was the only one known by the name of Kohhtohtoning, it is now impossible to know. The probability is that start from below and running up the river, if it had been intended to pass the First Mountain and adopt the Second, it would have been so stated; this, however, is but conjecture. The next matter of record bearing on the question occurs when Hanover township was erected in 1737. Beaver Creek, from its mouth to the mountain, was made the dividing line between Hanover and Peshtank. Beaver Creek had its source at the southern base of the First Mountain, and the division line was extended no farther. It should have been stated before, when referring to the boundaries of Peshtank, that when the Kohhtohtoning Hill was reached, the line ran eastward by the south side of said hill to the meridian of the mouth of Quitapahilla Creek. Again, in the year 1767, the court ordered the division line between Upper and Lower Paxtang townships to be made from "the mouth of Fishing Creek; thence along the top of Kittatina Mountain, next to Lower Paxtang, to Beaver Creek." Hanover township was divided into east and west in the year 1785; the dividing line was a run, having its source on the south side of the First Mountain. In this case, like that of the division of Peshtank and Hanover, the record provides no line extending beyond the First Mountain. The practice of treating the territory between the First and Second Mountains as within the Hanovers probably originated soon after the organization of Dauphin County, in the year 1785. The question whether East Hanover township extended beyond the First Mountain in the year 1796 occurred in the trial of the case of Gloninger vs. Goddard, in the Common Pleas of Lebanon County, and which is reported in 5th Watts, 221. The understanding and practice before mentioned was fully proved on that trial; in the Supreme Court, however, although it was not thought necessary to the question, the judge who delivered the opinion of the court clearly intimated that the records showed the First Mountain to be the true boundary. This question and these matters relating to it are here merely referred to as a part of the history of township boundaries, and not to be understood as suggesting any existing difficulty; incidentally the Second Mountain has become the record line of West Hanover, as may be seen on reference to the records establishing the township of Rush in 1820, and the division of West Hanover township in 1842, both in Dauphin County.

The assessment lists up to the formation of the county of Dauphin were designated as East and West End of Hanover. Those for the East End we have given with the history of Lebanon County, the whole of which probably fell into that county upon its erection in 1813.

Hanover township suffered severely in the French and Indian war, and many are the incidents of pioneer life which have come down to us. In the "Barnetts of Hanover" reference is made to Joseph Barnett and his son, William, giving the statement as it came to us from the late Samuel Barnett, of Springfield, Ohio. The following detail, however, differs somewhat from that there given.

The Barnetts and their immediate neighbors erected a block-house in proximity to Col. Green's mill, on the Manada, for the better safety of their wives and children, while they cultivated their farms in groups, one or two standing as sentinels. In the year 1757 there was at work on the farm of Mr. Barnett a small group, one of which was an estimable man named Mackey. News came with flying speed that their wives and children were all murdered at the block-house by the Indians. Preparation was made immediately to repair to the scene of horror. While Mr. Barnett with all possible haste was getting ready his horse, he requested Mackey to examine his rifle to see that it was in order. Everything right they all mounted their horses, the rifle in hand, and galloped off, taking a near way to the block-house. A party of Indians lying in ambush rose and fired at Mr. Barnett, who was foremost, and broke his right arm. His rifle dropped; an Indian snatched it up and shot Mr. Mackey through the heart. He fell dead at their feet, and one secured his scalp. Mr. Barnett's father, who was in the rear of his company, turned back, but was pursued by the Indians, and narrowly escaped with his life. In the mean time Mr. Barnett's noble and high-spirited horse, which the Indians greatly wished to possess, carried him swiftly out of the enemy's reach, but becoming weak and faint from the loss of blood, he fell to the ground and lay for a considerable time unable to rise. At length by a great effort he crept to a buckwheat-field, where he concealed himself until the Indians had retired from the immediate vicinity, and then raising a signal he was soon perceived by a neighbor, who, after hesitating for some time for fear of the Indians, came to his relief. Surgical aid was procured, and his broken arm was bound up, but the anxiety of his mind respecting his family was a heavy burden which agonized his soul, and not until the next day did he hear that they were safe, with the exception of his eldest son, then eight or nine years of age, whom the Indians had taken prisoner, together with a son of Mackey's about the same age. The savages on learning that one of their captives was a son of Mackey whom they had just killed, compelled him to stretch his father's scalp, and this heartrending, soul-sickening office he was obliged to perform in sight of the mangled body of his father.

The Indians escaped with the two boys westward, and for a time Mackey's son carried his father's scalp, which he would often stroke with his little hand and say, "My father's pretty hair."

Mr. Barnett lay languishing on a sick-bed, his case doubtful for a length of time, but having a strong constitution he at last, through the blessing of God, revived, losing about four inches of a bone near the elbow of his right arm.

But who can tell the intense feeling of bitterness which filled the mind and absorbed the thoughts of him and his tender, sensitive companion, their beloved child traversing the wilderness, a prisoner with a savage people, exposed to cold and hunger, and subject to their wanton cruelty? who can tell of their sleepless nights, the anxious days, prolonged through long, weary months and years? their fervent prayers, their bitter tears, and enfeebled health?

The prospect of a treaty with the Indians, with the return of prisoners, at length brought a gleam of joy to the stricken hearts of these parents. Accordingly, Mr. Barnett left his family behind and set off with Col. Croghan and a body of five hundred "regulars" who were destined to Fort Pitt for that purpose. Their baggage and provisions conveyed on pack-horses, they made their way over the mountains with the greatest difficulty. When they arrived at their place of destination, Col. Croghan made strict inquiry concerning the fate of the little captives. After much fruitless search, he was informed that a squaw who had lost a son had adopted the son of Mr. Barnett and was very unwilling to part with him, and he, believing his father had been killed by the Indians, had become reconciled to his fate, and was much attached to his Indian mother.

Mr. Barnett remained with the troops for some time without obtaining or even seeing his son. Fears began to be entertained at Fort Pitt of starvation. Surrounded by multitudes of savages, there seemed little prospect of relief, and to add to their despondency a scouting party returned with the distressing news that the expected provisions which were on the way to their relief was taken by the Indians. They almost despaired,—five hundred men in a picket fort on the wild banks of the Allegheny River without provisions! The thought was dreadful. They became reduced to one milch cow each day for five days killed and divided among the five hundred. The three following days they had nothing! To their great joy, on the evening of the third, provisions arrived; every sunken, pale, despairing countenance gathered brightness, but owing to its imprudent use, which the officers could not prevent, many died.

While the treaty was pending many were killed by the Indians, who were continually prowling around the fort. One day Mr. Barnett wished a drink of water from Grant's Spring (this spring is near Grant Street, in the city of Pittsburgh, known to most of the older inhabitants); he took his "camp-kettle" and proceeded a few steps, when he suddenly thought the adventure might cost him his life and turned back; immediately he heard the report of a rifle, and looking towards the spring he saw the smoke of the same,—the unerring aim of an Indian had deprived a soldier of life. They bore away his scalp, and his body was deposited on the bank of the Allegheny.

The treaty was concluded and ratified by the parties; nevertheless great caution was necessary on the part of the whites, knowing the treachery of many of their foes.

Mr. Barnett was most unhappy. His hopes concerning his child had not been realized, and he had been absent from his family already too long. Soon after the conclusion of the treaty a guard with the pack-horses started to cross the mountains, and he gladly embraced the opportunity of a safe return. After injunctions laid upon Col. Croghan to purchase, if possible, his son, he bade him and his associates in hardships farewell, and after a toilsome journey reached home and embraced once more his family, who were joyful at his return. But the vacancy occasioned by the absence of one of its members still remained. He told them that William was alive, soothed their grief, wiped away the tears from the cheeks of his wife, and expressed a prayerful hope that through the interposition of a kind Providence he would eventually be restored to them.

Faithful to his promise, Col. Croghan used every endeavor to obtain him. At length, through the instrumentality of traders, he was successful. He was brought to Fort Pitt, and for want of an opportunity to send him to his father was retained under strict guard, so great was his inclination to return to savage life. On one occasion he sprang down the bank of the Allegheny River, jumped into a canoe, and was midway in the stream before he was observed. He was quickly pursued, but reached the opposite shore, raised the Indian whoop, and hid himself among the bushes. After several hours' pursuit he was retaken and brought back to the fort. Soon after, an opportunity offering, he was sent to Carlisle. His father, having business at that place, arrived after dark on the same day, and without knowing took lodgings at the same public-house where his son was, and who had been some time in bed. As soon as he was aware of the fact he asked eagerly to see him. The landlord entreated him to let the boy rest until morning, as he was much wearied by traveling. To this the father could not assent, replying, "If a son of yours had been absent for three years could you rest under the same roof without seeing him?" The hardy host felt the appeal and led the way to the chamber. The sleeping boy was awakened and told that his father stood by his bed. He replied in broken English, "No my father." At this moment his father spoke, saying, "William, my son, look at me: I am your father." On hearing his voice and seeing his face he sprang from the bed, clasped him in his arms, and shouted, "My father! My father is still alive!" All the spectators shed tears, the father wept like a child, while from his lips flowed thankful expressions of gratitude to the Almighty disposer of all events that his long-lost child was again restored.

Early the next day the father and son were on the road homewards, where they arrived on the second day in the dusk of the evening. The rattling of the wheels announced their approach; the mother and all the children came forth. She, whose frequent prayers had heretofore been addressed to the Throne of Divine Grace for the safety and return of her son, now trembled and was almost overcome as she beheld him led by his father and presented to her, the partner of her sorrows. She caught him to her bosom and held him long in her embrace, while tears of joy flowed. His brothers and sisters clustered eagerly around and welcomed him with a kiss of affection. It was a scene of deep feeling not to be described, and known only to those who have been in similar circumstances. The happy family, all once more beneath the parental roof, knelt down and united in thanksgiving to Almighty God for all His mercies to them in protecting and restoring to their arms a beloved and long-absent child.

The children scrutinized him with curiosity and amazement. Dressed in Indian costume, composed of a breech-cloth around the waist, with moccasins and leggins, his hair about three inches long and standing erect, he presented a strange appearance. By degrees he laid aside the dress of the wilderness, which he greatly preferred, forgot the Indian language, and became reconciled to his native home. But the rude treatment which he received from the Indians impaired his constitution. They frequently broke holes in the ice on rivers and creeks and dipped him in order to make him hardy, which his feeble system could not endure without injury.

Respecting the son of Mackey, he was given by the Indians to the French, and passed into the hands of the English, and was taken to England, came as a soldier in the British army to America at the time of the Revolutionary war. He procured a furlough from his officers and sought out his widow's mother, who was still living, and who had long mourned him as dead. She could not recognize him after the lapse of so many years. He stood before her, a robust, fine-looking man, in whom she could see no familiar traces of her lost boy. He called her "mother," and told her he was her son, which she did not believe. "If you are my son," said she, "you have a mark upon your knee that I will know." His knee was exposed to her view, and she instantly exclaimed, "My son indeed!" Half frantic with joy, she threw her arms around his neck, and was clasped in those of her son. "Oh, my son," said she, "I thought you were dead, but God has preserved you and given me this happiness. Thanks, thanks to his name! Through long years I have mourned that sorrowful day which bereft me of my husband and child. I have wept in secret till grief has nearly consumed me, till my heart grew sick and my poor brain almost crazed by the remembrance. I have become old more through sorrow than years, but I have endeavored to 'kiss the rod' which chastised me. My afflictions have not been sent in vain, they have had their subduing and purifying effect; heaven became more attractive as earth became dark and desolate. But I now feel that I shall yet see earthly happiness. Nothing in this world, my son, shall separate us but death." He never returned to the British army, but remained with his mother and contributed to her support in her declining years.

There was another interesting meeting, that of Mackey with the son of Mr. Barnett. They recapitulated the scenes of hardship through which they passed while together with the Indians, which were indelibly impressed upon the memory of both. They presented a great contrast in appearance.—Barnett a pale, delicate man, and Mackey the reverse. The former sank into an early grave, leaving a wife and daughter. The daughter married a Mr. Franks, who subsequently removed to the city of New York.

Mr. Barnett, the elder, after experiencing a great sorrow in the loss of his wife, removed to Allegheny County, spending his remaining days with a widowed daughter. He died in November, 1808, aged eighty-two years, trusting in the merits of a Divine Providence. His eventful and checkered life was a life of faith, always praying for the sanctified use of his trials, which were many. His dust reposes in the little churchyard of Lebanon, Mifflin township, Allegheny Co.

In 1768 a movement was put on foot to divide the township, and again the year following. Prior to 1759 no records have been found giving the township officers. From that period until the erection of the county in 1785 we have gathered the following:

1769. Constable.—Samuel Sterret.
Overseers of Roads.—Robert Snodgrass, William Thompson.

Upon the formation of the county, Hanover was divided into East and West Hanover, and thus continued until 1813, when Lebanon was formed, when the entire East Hanover, with a portion of West Hanover, were included in the new county. West Hanover in Dauphin continued as such until the year 1842, when by the sixty-fourth section of an act of Assembly, passed on the 4th of March that year, it provided "that the township of West Hanover, in the county of Dauphin, shall, as then divided into three separate election districts, thereafter form three separate townships, the south district to be called South Hanover, the east district to be called East Hanover, and the west district West Hanover, and that the then supervisors should file in the office of the clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County, as the dividing lines of said townships, the survey and draft thereto annexed of the election lines run of said West Hanover township, pursuant to law, by M. Robeson, on the 17th day of September, 1838."

On the 14th of March, 1842, the survey and draft of M. Robeson was filed as above directed, and was recorded in Road Docket A, page 253, as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at the Swatara Creek, half a mile south of the intersection of Bow Run with said creek, at a chestnut oak on the land of John Fox; thence through land of Conrad Waggoner, Philip Stine, Abraham Hoover, Jacob Leasure, and John B. Morehead, to the present residence of J. B. Morehead, leaving the houses on all said farms north, except Conrad Waggoner—whole distance, 2 miles and 20 perches—course bearing south 82 degrees west; thence from J. B. Morehead's through other land of said Morehead, Doc. William Simonton, Samuel McCord, William McCord, Jacob Keiffer, Samuel Shellenberger, George Bashore, William Bongardner, and Christian Walters, to Beaver Creek to a hickory, leaving all the houses on said farms north, except J. B. Morehead's present residence, one of Doc. William Simonton's tenant-houses, now occupied by John Farling, Samuel McCord's and William McCord's—these five are south—course bearing the same, viz., south 82 degrees west, distance $2\frac{5}{8}$ miles. Then beginning at the house of J. B. Morehead (present residence); thence through land of said Morehead, and near land of Daniel Keim, through land of Doc. William Simonton, Alexander McFadden, Daniel Keiffer, Samuel Zimmerman, John Snodgrass, Simon Stont, Samuel Fleming, Mary McCreight, Joseph Shoop, Benjamin Snodgrass, Emanuel Cassel, junior (near Daniel and William Gross), Joseph Allen, William Crum (near Daniel Aungst), E. and C. B. Grubb, George Rhoads, John Rhoads, and E. and C. B. Grubb, to the top of the second mountain—the present boundary of West Hanover township—leaving all the houses on said farms west, except Daniel Keim, Simon Stout, Benjamin Snodgrass, Daniel and William Gross, Emanuel Cassel, junior, Daniel Aungst, E. and C. B. Grubb, George Rhoads, and John Rhoads; course bearing north $14\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west, distance 8 miles."

SOUTH HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

THIS township lies south of the other Hanovers, with the Swatara and Beaver Creeks on its entire eastern, southern, and western border. It is well watered, and there is little poor or untillable land in the township.

UNION DEPOSIT was laid out by Philip Wolfersberger, July 30, 1845, and called Unionville. The survey was made by Samuel Hoffer, and the platting done by Jacob R. Hoffer. It comprised twenty-three lots. In the same year Isaac Hershey laid out some lots adjoining. The place, however, always went by the name of Union Deposit, from the fact of its being a deposit of all the grain produce, etc., of this region, preparatory to its shipment on the canal by Mr. Wolfersberger, who owned several boats. He also kept the first store. Dr. D. C. Keller came in 1848, and was the first resident physician. The first house built on the hill was the one in which he resides. The post-office was established in 1857, and David Wolfersberger appointed postmaster. McCormick's Furnace was erected about 1857, and a few years ago a railroad built from it to Swatara Station, on the Lebanon Valley Railroad, a distance of a mile. It manufactures pig metal, and employs in the furnace and quarries some forty hands. Most of the ore is obtained from Sand Hill, three and a half miles distant, the rest from Cornwall and other banks.

The churches are the Lutheran and Reformed, a one-story brick edifice, erected in 1847, and the United Brethren, a similar structure, built in 1848. The former is supplied by the Hummelstown pastors. Its trustees are George Hocker, Sr., Lutheran, and Jacob Walmer, Reformed. Rev. David S. Longnecker, of Derry, is the United Brethren pastor. The village is on Swatara Creek and the Union Canal, one mile from Swatara Railroad Station.

HOERNERTOWN is situated in the southwestern part of the township, one and a half miles north of Hum-melstown. It takes its name from John Hoerner, born in 1782, of one of the earliest families that settled in this region, and whose descendants are very numerous in this vicinity. The place has a store, post-office, and the usual number of small shops. The United Brethren Church is at the east end of the village, and the German Baptist at the west.

MANADAVILLE lies in the extreme eastern part of the township, at the junction of the Manada with Swatara Creek. It contains a saw- and grist-mill, school-house, cabinet-shop, store, and several other shops. The first settlers in the place were J. Ream, G. F. Yengst, D. Houck, John Gordon, Dr. Samuel Eby, H. Styles, J. Dougherty, D. Ritter, and S. Rose.

WEST HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

ADJOINING East Hanover township on the west is the extreme portion of the Hanover of 1737. To the north and west is Middle Paxtang township, while on the south lies South Hanover township, and southwest Lower Paxtang township. In the northern part of the township are the First and Second Mountains of the Kittochtinny range, between which lies Fishing Creek Valley, entered through a gap in the First or South Mountain, long known as Heckert's Gap. The township contains many fine, well-watered, and productive farms. The history of this locality is so intimately connected with not only the history of the township proper and the county, especially during the most interesting epochs, that what might otherwise be of interest here will be found elsewhere. The Barnett place, one of the earliest farms cleared within the township, is located one mile and a half east of Linglestown, recently owned by George Runyen. Another landmark of the early settlement is the late Robert Stewart homestead on Beaver Creek.

MANADA HILL is the only village in the township, and lies in the southwest of the township near East Hanover line. It has a post-office, store, and several shops. A mile and a half southwest is the Lutheran Church, a one-story frame structure. Two and a half miles southeast is the German Baptist Church, and a little northeast is the Zion Lutheran Church, a one-story brick structure.

EAST HANOVER TOWNSHIP.

EAST HANOVER TOWNSHIP, as defined by the record, is bounded on the north by Rush township, on the east by Lebanon County, on the south by South Hanover and Derry townships, and on the west by Middle Paxtang and West Hanover townships. In the northern part of the township are the three ranges of the Kittochtinny Mountains, the First, Second, and Third, and as a consequence the land is much broken and the greater portion sterile. The central and southern part of the township is well watered, highly cultivated, and productive. On the southern border, separating the township from Derry, is Swatara Creek. Bow Creek is in the eastern part of the township, while the Manada, another branch of the Swatara, courses through the entire western side, rising in Lebanon County between the First and Second Mountain, finding its way through the former by the Manada Gap. Between the Second and Third Mountain is Stony Creek, in the centre of Stony Creek Valley, appropriately named.

SHELLSVILLE, often called Earlysville from the large number of Earlys living in and near the village, and whose post-office is called "West Hanover," is situated a little south of the centre of the township. It takes its name from Maj. John Shell, who was born Dec. 20, 1790, and died March 27, 1875. He laid out the town, and in 1821 opened the first hotel, in which he was succeeded by Henry Dick, John Adam Albert, and William Snyder. This tavern is the oldest building in the village, being originally a log house built in 1764, but has been remodeled and additions put to it. The first store was opened by Maj. John Shell and Jacob Early, as partners, in 1822. It has two churches, the Evangelical Association, of which

Rev. C. S. Brown is pastor, and the joint Lutheran and Reformed Church. Rev. Mr. Gauker is pastor of the Lutheran congregation, while that of the Reformed is supplied by the minister of Hummelstown, Rev. A. S. Stauffer.

GRANTVILLE is a thriving village, located a mile and a half east of Shellsville, near the Lebanon County line. It is a new place which sprang up since the war. It is a growing town, and has a large trade with the surrounding country. The United Brethren have a neat church edifice and beautiful cemetery.

MANADA FURNACE is in the northwest of the township. It is owned by the Grubb heirs, and embraces some twenty-five hundred acres. It was built in 1836, but is not now in operation. Near it is the site of old "Fort Manada," erected about 1755 for protection against the Indians, and as a kind of block-house to which the early settlers fled on the advance of the red men.

The German Baptists have a meeting-house in the southeast end of the township, and the Methodist Episcopal congregation are near the centre, just about the proposed South Mountain Railroad.

HANOVER CHURCH.

Nearly eleven miles from Harrisburg, on Bow Creek, was located old Hanover Church, one of the landmarks in the history of the Scotch-Irish and of Presbyterianism in Pennsylvania.

HANOVER CHURCH.

In 1735 the Presbytery of Donegal, then the only Presbytery of the Presbyterian Church in America west of Philadelphia, was in session at Nottingham, Chester Co., Pa., in the month of September. This Presbytery had been created by order of the Synod of Philadelphia in September, 1732. The original members of it were Rev. Messrs. James Anderson, Adam Boyd, William Bertram, John Thomson, and Robert Orr. On the 3d of September, 1735, a supplication was presented from "A people on the borders of Suctara Congregation, desiring the countenance of Presbytery in building a new meeting-house in order to have supplies," which being read, the Rev. William Bertram, the pastor of the Swatara congregation, reported that his people desired him to signify to the Presbytery that they desire them to defer granting said supplication until they be heard. The matter was deferred until the next meeting of Presbytery.

At a session of Presbytery held at the same place Oct. 7, 1735, the affair of the people of Manada Creek was again deferred.

"Mr. Richard Sankey, a theological student from Ireland, having produced his certificate at last meeting before the members of Presbytery and been taken under its care, the Presbytery ordered that he endeavor to acquaint himself with the brethren before our next meeting, and also endeavor to prepare some preliminary extempore trials against our next meeting."

At a session of the Presbytery held at Middle Octorara, Lancaster Co., November 20th, Lazarus Stewart appeared to prosecute a supplication of Manada Creek for a new erection. The region along Manada Creek to the mountains was settled rapidly, and the people early began to feel the inconvenience of going so far as Derry to church, and moved for a new "erection or congregation." At that early day they were all Scotch-Irish, and were connected with the Presbyterian Church. The boundaries of congregations and the location of meeting-houses were determined by the Presbytery with considerable authority.

On the 10th November, 1736, Presbytery ordered James Gelston and Richard Sankey to supply Pequea and Manada by monthly turns alternately until the next meeting of Presbytery. On the 6th of April following, in pursuance of a supplication from the people of Manada, Mr. Bertram was ordered to supply that people on the last Sabbath of April, and to convene the people on some day of the following week in order to moderate a call to Mr. Sankey.

On the 22d June, 1737, a supplication and a call to Mr. Sankey was presented to Presbytery by John Cunningham and Robert Grier, commissioners from the congregation of Hanover (Manada), by which said commissioners are empowered to promise towards Mr. Sankey's support among the people of Hanover as their orderly pastor the annual payment of sixty pounds, i. e., one-half in cloth and the other in particular commodities, as flax, hemp, linen, yarn, and cloth, together with several gratuities mentioned in said supplication. Said call was recommended to Mr. Sankey's consideration till the next meeting of Presbytery. He was appointed to supply Paxtang and Hanover alternately, and to open the next meeting of Presbytery with a sermon from Rom. vi. 21.

On the 30th August, 1738, the Presbytery of Donegal met for the first time at Hanover. Richard Sankey was ordained and received as a member of the Presbytery of Donegal, and was installed as the first pastor of the Hanover Church.

On June 6, 1759, we learn that Mr. Sankey, having received a call to a congregation in Virginia, and designing to remove there, applied for and received credentials from the Presbytery. His relation to the Hanover Church as pastor seems to have been already dissolved. He removed to Virginia, accompanied by many of the Hanover congregation, about 1760. The main reason for going was to escape the incursions of the savages. He settled at Buffalo, joined the Hanover Presbytery of Virginia in 1760, and was appointed to preside at the opening of the Synod of Virginia in 1785. He lived to a good old age, respected by his people and his brethren in the ministry. Mr. Sankey served the Hanover Church for twenty-one years, and, though no further record is known of his ministry, it was evidently an acceptable one to the people, who kept him so long, and many of whom accompanied him when he left the place. After his dismissal, during the year 1759 the church was supplied occasionally by Rev. Messrs. John Steel and John Elder.

In November, 1762, a call was made for the Rev. Robert McMordie, which he accepted. During the year 1765 or 1766 the church of Hanover became vacant. No record of Mr. McMordie's resignation exists, but it was doubtless caused by the dissensions in his church. After his withdrawal the church continued in a distracted and enfeebled state. In April, 1772, Mr. William Thom was appointed one of the supplies at Hanover. On the 21st of May a call for Mr. Thom was presented in Presbytery, with a copy of a subscription paper of over one hundred pounds. The call was put into his hands. In the mean time Mr. Thom received other calls from Big Spring, Sherman's Valley, and Alexandria, Va., and on Oct. 15, 1772, accepted the latter. For the next seven years, covering part of the period of the Revolutionary war, the Hanover Church depended on occasional supplies. The times tried men's souls. Men were called away to war; the people were poor.

On the 20th of June, 1781, a call from Hanover to Rev. Matthew Woods was made out, in which they promise to pay him six hundred bushels of wheat, or a sum of hard money equivalent thereto, and also a gratuity of six hundred bushels. The cause of these peculiar calls in grain was the greatly depreciated value of the Continental currency. Mr. Woods accepted the call, and was ordained and installed over the Hanover congregation June 19, 1782. The pastorate of Mr. Woods was a brief one. On Sept. 13, 1784, the Rev. Matthew Woods died. His remains were buried in the Hanover graveyard adjoining the church, and a tombstone erected by subscription to his memory in 1789.

In 1787, Hanover was allowed to prosecute a call to a probationer for the ministry under the care of the Presbytery of Philadelphia. On the 16th of October, Mr. James Snodgrass was received under the care of the Presbytery from the Philadelphia Presbytery, and having accepted a call from the Hanover congregation he was appointed to prepare a lecture on Rom. viii. 1-7, and a Presbyterial exercise on 1 Cor. xv. 22, as parts of his trial for ordination.

On the 13th of May, 1788, the Presbytery of Carlisle met at Hanover,—John Craighead, Robert Cooper, and Samuel Waugh, with James Johnston, elder. Upon the next day, May 14th, James Snodgrass was ordained and installed as pastor of the Hanover congregation. Rev. John Craighead presided and gave the charge, and the Rev. John Linn preached the sermon.

During the first eight or ten years of his pastorate Mr. Snodgrass kept in a blank-book of the trustees of the church a record of the marriages, baptisms, and admissions to the church, but he seems to have become weary of it, and to have utterly abandoned it before the year 1800. There is no record of removals from the church by letter or by death. A list remains of the heads of families about the year 1788, and the lists of those who paid stipends are continued down to the date of his death. Mr. Snodgrass' receipts for his salary and the records of the board of trustees are also in existence.

The church was very weak at the time of his death, and never had another pastor. The building fell into decay, and was at length in 1875 or 1876 taken down. The care of the glebe funds and the cemetery grounds was placed in the hands of trustees.

HALIFAX TOWNSHIP.

AT December sessions, 1803, the court issued an order to certain commissioners to view and lay out a new township out of parts of Upper and Middle Paxtang townships, who reported the following boundaries of the new township, to wit:

"Beginning on the west side of the Susquehanna River, opposite the end of Peter's Mountain; thence along the top of Peter's Mountain to the Berks and Dauphin County line; thence along said line to Wiconisco Mountain; thence along the top of said mountain to the Susquehanna River, and across said river and thence to the place of beginning."

This report was confirmed by the court at their March sessions, A.D. 1804, and it was ordered that the new township be called Halifax. The mountain called "Wiconisco" in the above report is the same usually called Berry's Mountain.

The history of the township centres about Fort Halifax and the town of Halifax, and is referred to elsewhere. There are certain facts, however, of local importance which it is well to consider in this connection.

The township accepted the free school law in 1836, and the most active persons in urging the adoption of the system were Judge Landis and John Mutch.

Opposite the town of Halifax is Clemson's Island, once the site of a Shawanese Indian village as late as 1701. A large mound on the island partially examined shows it to be one of those burial-places of the aborigines which evidence some great sanguinary struggle or sudden calamity, where the large number of dead required their sepulture in one common grave. Various surmises and traditions have come down to us concerning this Indian mound, but whether the result of the famed "grasshopper war" of the Indians centuries ago we know not. Many implements of the Stone Age have been exhumed.

On one of the islands opposite the borough, prior to 1820, was a noted roosting-place of bald eagles.

A Lutheran and Reformed Church is located two miles northeast of Halifax. It is a substantial one-story brick structure. It is better known as Fetterhoff's Church.

The Mennonites have a church situated a few rods distant from the foregoing.

MATAMORAS is a village situated about two miles south of Halifax. It contains three churches, the Church of God, United Brethren, and Methodist Episcopal, the latter supplied by the Halifax pastor. It has several industrial establishments, a good school-house and stores. The post-office is called "Powell's Valley." Southwest of the village is another United Brethren Church with graveyard, and a little north of the village is the Union meeting-house and cemetery. There is a fourth United Brethren Church in the northwest part of the township, just back from the Susquehanna River.

LYTLE'S FERRY.—Joseph Lytle removed from Marietta to the spot which was afterwards known as "Lytle's Ferry" in the fall of 1773. The property was obtained by warrants issued severally to John Kroker, Samuel Hunter, and Joseph Lytle, and comprised about two hundred acres in all. Geographically, the location was about four miles north of Halifax, two miles south of Millersburg, and about a half-mile below Berry's Mountain, which was then a formidable barrier to journeying along the river. Here Joseph Lytle established a ferry, which became the most important crossing on the river between Harris' Ferry and Sunbury (Fort Augusta). The property was surveyed by Bartrem Galbraith and styled "Fairview," in December of 1773. Joseph Lytle continued in this occupation until his death, about 1790. The ferry property was then purchased by his only son, John Lytle, and Michael Bauer. At the end of about sixteen years they sold the ferry to William Moorhead, father of the Moorhead brothers (J. Kennedy, of Pittsburgh, J. Barlow, of Philadelphia, etc.), well known through Pennsylvania, in April, 1806. Mr. Moorhead came from Soudersburg, Lancaster Co., and after some time also tried to start a town. It was located on the old "Moorhead homestead," about two miles south of Millersburg, more recently known as the "Finney farm," and at present as the "Miller farm." The project never amounted to anything, and no buildings were ever erected on the lots.

With all its advertised attractions the project failed, and the contemplated town and future county-seat forever remained a farm, on whose fertile fields several generations have lived and labored.

HALIFAX BOROUGH.

THE town of Halifax, pleasantly located on the Susquehanna River seventeen miles above Harrisburg, was laid out July 18, 1784, by George Sheaffer and Peter Rise. The first deed given by white men in this vicinity was issued to Robert Armstrong by Thomas and John Penn, proprietaries. The warrant for the land was dated April 17, 1764, and the deed given Feb. 8, 1775. As the valley and creek still bear his name, Armstrong was no doubt the first white settler here. The price stipulated was £51 18s. and 7d.,—from sixty to seventy cents an acre. This, however, did not include the rental of one halfpenny per acre which had to be paid to the agent of the Penns at Lancaster City yearly in the month of May. The land included in this deed is now owned by the Boyers, Geiger, and Loomis families, beginning at the northern line of the borough and extending along the river to Armstrong's Creek. It is described as having been bounded on the east by a barren ledge of hills, on the west by the Susquehanna River, south by vacant lands, and north by settlements in the right of Simon Girty. The house of Robert Armstrong is still standing on the bank of the river, three-fourths of a mile above the town, and is the oldest house in the neighborhood. This is also the site of old Fort Halifax, from which the town derives its name, reference to which has been made in the general history. There is nothing now to mark the place except in a slight elevation of the ground and a well known to have belonged to the fort.

The land on which Halifax stands was deeded to James Aston, Sept. 29, 1773, and was called in popular parlance "Flat Bottom," and about the same time the tract adjoining—perhaps the one now owned by George Singer and others—was conveyed to Aston, and was known as "Scanderoon." From 1729 to 1785 Halifax was in Upper Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. From 1785 (at which time the county of Dauphin was formed) until 1803 it was in Upper Paxtang township, Dauphin Co.

As heretofore stated, the town of Halifax was laid out by George Sheaffer and Peter Rise in 1794, but we find that the deed was recorded by Philip Brindle and George Norton, attorneys for George Winters, on the 8th of May, 1794.

The plot of the town extended from the river to the alley adjoining the property of Henry Sha-mond, and from north to south as indicated by the present length of Front Street from Boyer's to Singer's land.

When the town was laid out the lots were sold for twenty dollars each by means of a lottery, then the customary way of designating the public preference for lots. John Downey made the survey for the original proprietors. In 1801 the houses were mostly on the river, and even in 1825 and 1826 all the old houses but five or six were along the Susquehanna. The original settlers were generally Scotch-Irish, who soon gave way to the German tide that fast set in in this region. James Ferguson in 1801 bought an old story and a half log house (stone basement) on his arrival and there lived. Three tanneries were early established, George Leebrick's, John Shammo's, and Hassinger's (first built and started by Abraham Landis). Three-quarters of a century ago four cooper-shops flourished and four distilleries in or adjoining the town, and at a somewhat later period Isaac Jones started the first hat manufactory.

At an early period the town was a flourishing point of trade, receiving its impetus from the "shad fisheries," which were the largest and best-paying along the Susquehanna River. During the fishing season large quantities were packed, and often fifty and sixty teams were here from a distance to haul away the fish. In olden times the place was noted for horse-racing, and two men, Brubaker and Bower, were killed when running horses, but at times twenty years apart. The old track was along the river bottoms.

Halifax was incorporated into a borough May 29, 1875, its first burgess being Dr. H. W. Bischoff. The first election was held on June 29th following, of which the judge was T. J. Sawyer, and the inspectors were William B. Gray and J. B. Markley. The corporation officers have been: Burgesses, 1875-79, H. W. Bischoff; 1879, Isaac Lyter; 1880-82, Albert S. Loomis. Clerks, 1875-77, G. T. Leebrick; 1877-80, C. D. Waldron; 1880-82, Isaac Lyter.

THE HALIFAX BANK was organized Aug. 1, 1871. Since its establishment the officers have been William Lodge, president; William Shammo, cashier, and J. E. Lighter, teller. The directors in 1881 were Andrew Bowerman, Joseph Fetterhoff, Leonard Clemson, William Taylor, J. B. Landis, James Hoffman, William Fitting, Charles W. Ryan, Conrad Bauer, Thomas J. Sawyer, Andrew Shepley. Its capital stock is one hundred thousand dollars. It has always occupied the same building.

THE "HALIFAX HERALD," the only newspaper ever published in the town, was established Feb. 22, 1844, by Anthony Wayne Loomis. It was originally a four-page sheet of four columns each, and its terms were one dollar a year if paid in advance, one dollar and twenty-five cents if paid during the year, and one dollar and fifty cents if paid at the close. Its motto was, "We aim to serve the people and to promote the greatest good of the greatest number." It was Democratic in politics, and warmly espoused in the campaign of 1844 the election of "Polk and Dallas."

HALIFAX METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—About 1799 and 1800 several Methodist families settled in and around the town. Three members of them, James Ferguson, Robert Bowes, and Thomas Burrell, who had emigrated from Ireland, located in the town. Soon after, Philip Shephard established himself three miles above town, and George Lemon four miles below town, both families coming from the lower end of the State. About the same time five or six more families of the Methodist Episcopal Church settled in Lykens Valley, and John and Daniel Miller settled near the mouth of Wiconisco Creek, where they laid out Millersburg. Two or three miles farther up the valley settled Daniel Stever, an old soldier of the Revolutionary war, and the first Methodist exhorter in the county. About this time John Motter, Philip Verner, John Deitrich, and Samuel Wells located ten miles farther up the valley. Just a few miles from the Dauphin County line, in Schuylkill County, lived Henry Kuzelman, who afterwards became an itinerant preacher of the Methodist faith, preaching in the German language. In the summer of 1801 the Philadelphia Conference sent out Rev. William Rose, an Irishman, as a missionary, who, after making several excursions through the upper end of Dauphin County with the view of establishing permanent appointments for preaching, organized several classes and preaching appointments, one in Halifax, one near where Millersburg is, and one near where Berysburg is. Next year he was followed by the eccentric Rev. Jacob Gruber, who preached in both German and English. The Dauphin Circuit was then fully explored and organized, embracing Dauphin, Lebanon, and parts of Schuylkill County, making a six weeks' tour, day or night appointments, besides the Sunday labors. This territory now embraces twenty circuits and stations (or, as old Father Gruber called them, tobacco patches), supporting from one to two ministers each, with at least two preaching appointments each Sabbath. In 1834, Harrisburg was cut off as a station, and in 1837 the circuit was divided, making Peter's Mountain the line, the upper end forming Halifax Circuit. Afterwards Lykens and Wiconisco were made into a circuit, and Williamstown into a station, with other sub-divisions hereafter to be noted under the heads of the various towns.

The old log meeting-house in Halifax was probably the first Methodist edifice in the county, and was built in 1806. The following is a list of all the itinerant and station preachers that have preached or ministered at Halifax:

Dauphin Circuit from 1801 to 1837:

1801, William Ross, missionary; 1802-3, Jacob Gruber; 1803, Henry Boehm; 1804, Auning Owens, Henry Boehm; 1805, Joseph Osborne, Joseph Stephens; 1806, William Hunter, Daniel Ireland; 1807, Thomas Burch, William Hoyer, George Harmer; 1808, Thomas Burch, James Miller, J. Kitchell; 1809, Thomas Boring, John Betchell; 1810, Thomas Baring, John Farmon; 1811, William Fox, D. Brown, John Van Shock; 1812, William Fox, James Mitchell, William W. Foultz; 1813, James Mitchell, William W. Foultz; 1814, William W. Foultz, John Walker, Henry Kunzelman; 1815, Henry Kunzelman, Lawrence Lawrenson; 1816, John Goforth, Richard McCallister; 1817, John Price, Phineas Price; 1818, William Leonard, William Able, Samuel Grace; 1819, William Quinn, Henry G. King; 1820, Henry G. King, Jacob Gruber (2d time); 1821, Jacob Gruber, Joseph Cary; 1822, John Woolson, W. W. Wallace; 1823, John Woolson, Matthew Soren; 1824, John Goforth (2d time), William Allen; 1825, A. Ogden, Henry G. King (2d time); 1826, Henry G. King, Joseph McCool; 1827, Francis Hodgson, Thomas Neal; 1828, Thomas Neal, Francis Hodgson; 1829, Eliphalet Reed, Jefferson Lewis; 1830, Eliphalet Reed, J. B. Ayres, C. B. Ford; 1831, David Best, J. B. Ayres, A. Z. Baring; 1832, David Best, Allen John, Richard W. Thomas; 1833, Thomas Sovern, Allen John, Francis Hodgson (2d time); 1834, John Edwards, Robert E. Kemp; 1835, Charles W. Jackson, Robert E. Kemp; 1836, Richard W. Thomas (2d time), Charles W. Jackson.

Halifax Circuit from 1837:

1837, Jonas Bissey, Charles Schock; 1838, Charles Schock; 1839, Jacob Davidson; 1840-43, Eliphalet Reed (2d time); 1843, John Edwards (2d time), William L. Gray; 1844, Edwards and Gray; 1845, Leeds K. Berridge, Thomas A. Fernley; 1846, John Watson, John Hough; 1847, Eliphalet Reed (3d time), S. R. Gillingham; 1848, Valentine Gray, C. L. Stine-man; 1849, Valentine Gray, George W. McLaughlin; 1850, James E. Meredith, Frederick Illman; 1851, John Cummins, C. R. Curry; 1852, Cummins J. Childs; 1853, H. H. Hickman, Joseph S. Cook; 1854, Joseph S. Cook, Robert L. Collier; 1855, Henry B. Manger, J. Wheeler; 1856, H. B. Manger, G. W. Barr; 1857, H. H. Hobbs, R. J. Carson; 1858, William B. Gregg, Joseph Cook; 1859, William B. Gregg, J. T. Crouch; 1860, S. W. Kurtz, Gearge Sheaffer; 1861, Kurtz and Sheaffer; 1862, William H. Burrell, C. W. Ayres; 1863, W. H. Burrell, John Stumger; 1864, G. S. Conway, J. E. Kesler; 1865-66, J. E. Kesler, F. M. Brady; 1867, S. R. Gillingham (2d time); 1868, E. J. D. Pepper; 1869-71, Silas B. Best; 1872, M. Barnhill; 1873, Thomas Sumption; 1874-76, Joseph Aspril; 1876, Richard Morley; 1877-80, Jonathan Dungane; 1880, Henry White.

Some of the above was paid in work and labor, some in materials and hauling, and the remainder in cash. Some of the subscribers gave more than they originally promised, and only in two or three instances did the subscribers fail to make their subscriptions good. When the old church was taken down the shingles were found as good as when first put on.

The old log church was replaced in 1850 by the present substantial brick edifice, built in the centre of the town. The circuit now embraces Matamoras, Trinity Church in Powell's Valley, and preaching in United Brethren Church near the Parks neighborhood.

THE LUTHERAN CHURCH, a one-story log structure, was built about 1814, but from 1826 to 1838 was used occasionally (nearly half of the time) by the village school. The Lutheran congregation gradually dwindled down so that by 1838 it had no members, or at least no officials to take charge of it. Then the citizens held a meeting and sold its material to Anthony W. Loomis, who removed it to the village. The proceeds from its sale were used to inclose the graveyard lot, upon which it stood, with a substantial fence. It stood on the hill.

UNITED BROTHERN CHURCH IN CHRIST.—This congregation was organized about 1840, but the present church edifice was not built until 1868. Since 1868 the pastors have been Revs. J. W. Hunkle, A. F. Yeager, Joseph Young, John W. Geiger, Mr. List, William D. Knower, A. V. H. Gosweiler, Ezekiel L. Hughes, V. S. Riddle, W. D. Mowcr, and S. P. Funk, the present incumbent, who came in 1881.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH was until recently part of the Millersburg Circuit, but preaching here has been abandoned.

RUSH TOWNSHIP.

On the 23d of October, 1819, the Court of Quarter Sessions issued an order to commissioners to inquire into the propriety of dividing the township of Middle Paxtang. The commissioners reported in favor of a division, and that they had run a dividing line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning on a stone heap on the Second Mountain, the summit of which separates West Hanover from Middle Paxtang township, at the distance of three and one-half miles from the northwest corner of West Hanover township, thence north ten degrees west three miles one hundred and fifty perches to a chestnut-oak tree on the top of Peter's Mountain and line of Halifax township."

This report was confirmed by the court March 14, 1820, and it was ordered that the new township be called Rush township. (For record, see Sess. Doc. 1815-23, page 282.) The line above described continued to be the dividing line between Rush and Middle Paxtang townships from 1820 to 1832. Previous to the 22d of November, 1831, a petition had been presented to the court praying for an alteration of the dividing line between those two townships, and on that day the court issued an order to commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the prayer of said petition, who made report in favor of altering the line, and that they had run the line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a chestnut-oak on the top of Peter's Mountain, the northwest corner of Rush township; thence a southwesterly course along the summit of said mountain, which separates Jackson and Halifax townships from Middle Paxtang and Rush, seven miles twenty-five perches to a marked hickory; thence passing on the line between John Williams and the Widow Fortenbach south ten degrees east one mile and one hundred and eighty-five perches to a chestnut-oak on the summit of the Third Mountain; thence a northeasterly course along the top of the said mountain seven miles, intersecting the west line of Rush township."

This report was confirmed by the court Nov. 19, 1832. (See Road Doc. A, page 74.)

The township as thus organized, being exceedingly mountainous, contains fewer farms and the least number of inhabitants than any other in Dauphin County. Clark's Creek flows through the centre of the entire township westward. Third or Sharp Mountain forms its southern, while Peter's Mountain its northern boundary.

JACKSON TOWNSHIP.

On the 23d of August, 1828, an order was issued by the Court of Quarter Sessions to three commissioners to view and report upon the propriety of dividing the township of Halifax according to the prayer of inhabitants of the east end of said township, asking for a division, and that the new township might be called Jackson, previously presented to said court. The commissioners reported that in their opinions a division of said township was necessary and proper, and that they had run and marked a division line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a chestnut-oak on the top of Peter's Mountain, in Winn's Gap, on the line dividing Halifax and Middle Paxtang townships; thence across Powell's and Armstrong's Valleys, north $3\frac{1}{2}$ degrees west 6 miles and 280 perches to a hickory on the line between Upper Paxtang and Halifax townships, on Berry's Mountain, at a small curve in said mountain about three-quarters of a mile west of Woodside's Gap."

This report was confirmed by the court at November sessions, 1828. (See Road Docket A, page 37.) It was thus named for the then President of the United States, Gen. Andrew Jackson, and as thus established was diminished by the erection of Jefferson in 1842. The early settlers in the township were the Hoffmans, Enders, Fishers, Millers, Snyders, Fetterhoffs, Werts, Shotts, and others, many of whose descendants remain in the locality. Armstrong's Creek rises in this township, and flowing southwest, empties into the Susquehanna above Halifax.

FISHERVILLE was laid out in 1854 by Adam Fisher, now deceased, then an extensive landholder. It is now a flourishing little village, containing a neat frame school building, stores, etc. The Methodist Episcopal Church edifice was erected in 1859, and is supplied by the Halifax Circuit. Of the United Brethren congregation, Rev. Jacob Funk is pastor, those formerly being the same as at Jacob's Church in Wayne township, and St. John's in Mifflin township. The Evangelical Lutheran Church was erected many years ago. It is a one-story brick building.

JACKSONVILLE was laid out about 1825 by George Enders and Joseph P. Lyter, most of the houses being on the lots owned by the former. It was named in honor of Ex-President Jackson. Joseph Bowman built the first house. William Enders had the first store. The first blacksmith was Joseph P. Lyter; the first physician was Dr. McGuire. The post-office was established under President Pierce's administration in 1854. The present postmaster is J. F. Helt, and the first one was William Enders, after whom the office was called "Enders Post-Office." There are two churches, the Lutheran and Reformed (Star of Bethlehem), a neat frame edifice erected in 1875, and the United Brethren built in 1873. Rev. Isaac Erhart is pastor of the former, and Rev. Jacob Funk of the latter.

East and northeast of Jacksonville are the following churches: Stearn's, Miller's (Reformed, of which Rev. A. S. Stauffer is pastor), and the United Brethren, at Deitrich's.

JEFFERSON TOWNSHIP.

In the year 1842 inhabitants of Jackson township petitioned the Court of Quarter Sessions, asking for a division of said township; whereupon the said court, on the 23d April, 1842, issued an order to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting the said prayer, who made report that they considered a division of the said township necessary, and had run a dividing line as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a white-oak on the summit of the dividing ridge, at the Halifax township line, and between the farms of Abraham Kinports and Lewis Culp; thence north 66 degrees east 250 perches to a post; thence north 42 degrees east 50 perches to a post; thence north 66 degrees east 340 perches to a post; thence north 71 degrees east 160 perches to a post; thence north 66 degrees east 80 perches to a post; thence north 69 degrees east 656 perches to a post; thence 18 degrees east 171 perches to a post; thence north 55 degrees east 28 perches to a post; thence north 39 degrees east 304 perches to a post; thence along Broad Mountain north 13 degrees east 140 perches to a post; thence north 7 degrees west 520 perches to a pine in Deitrich's Gap, on the summit of Berry's Mountain, being in length 8 miles and 140 perches."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 24th of November, 1842. In the year 1844 the inhabitants of Jackson petitioned the court, complaining of part of the division line as made in 1842, and praying for an alteration. Whereupon the court appointed other commissioners to view and report on the propriety of making such alteration. These commissioners reported in favor of alteration, and that they agreed upon and run the following line:

"Beginning at a pine on lands of John Shoop, Sr., corner of former partition line between said Jackson and Jefferson townships; thence north 68 degrees east 13½ miles to the Schnylkill County line."

This report was confirmed by the court Nov. 23, 1844. The township was named for President Jefferson, and as thus established continued until 1879, when the western portion was erected into a separate township and called Wayne. The early settlers in the township were the Buffingtons, Bordners, Etzweilers, Hoffmans, Shoops, Pauls, Millers, Werts, Runks, Wolfangs, Enders, Deitrichs, Trawitzs, Lehrs, Hawks, and others of German descent, nearly all of whom have representatives in the valley. The surface of the township is irregular and abrupt, but contains a number of fine productive farms. Powell's Creek rises in the township, flows westward, emptying into the Susquehanna above Clark's Station.

There are several old churches in the township. St. James' Reformed Church has a large congregation, of which the Rev. A. S. Stauffer is pastor. Of St. Jacob's Lutheran Church the present minister is the Rev. Joseph Hilpot, and for his predecessors see St. John's Church, Mifflin township, of which charge this church forms a part.

CARSONVILLE is the only village in the township, and contains a store, church, post-office, etc. Near the village are the remains of old Shawanese Indian camps and burying-grounds, the location being on one of the Shamokin trails, which passed through the limits of the county.

REED TOWNSHIP.

REED TOWNSHIP was erected by the act of Assembly of the 6th April, 1849, which directed "That portion of the qualified voters of Penn election district, Dauphin County, that reside in Middle Paxtang township, shall hereafter vote at the regular place of holding elections for said township, and the balance of the voters of said Penn election district shall hold their election at the new school-house on Duncan's Island, and shall be erected into a separate township and school district, to be called Reed township," etc.

The township is bounded on the north and northeast by Halifax township, on the west by Juniata and Susquehanna Rivers, and on the south and southeast by Middle Paxtang township. It includes the large islands on the western side of the river,—Duncan's and Haldeman's. It is named for William Reed, who resided about half-way between Clark's Ferry and Halifax. Previous to being set off as Reed township it was Penn election district, formed of portions of Middle Paxtang and Halifax. When the township was erected, the portion of Middle Paxtang reverted to the original township.

The history of this township centres chiefly around the islands at the mouth of the Juniata, well known by the general designation of Duncan's Island; The southern part of the township includes the Susquehanna portion of Peter's Mountain, and the land is much broken. There are several fine farms on Powell's Creek, while the lands on the large islands in the river are unsurpassed for cultivation. The Wiconisco Canal, connecting with the Pennsylvania Canal at Clark's Ferry, and the Northern Central Railroad edge the river the entire length of the township. Clark's Ferry, at the crossing to the islands and the Juniata (named by the Indians Queenashawakee), was for many years quite a noted place. Being hemmed in by the mountain and river, it has never increased beyond the usual country tavern.

DUNCAN'S ISLAND.

The first we hear of Duncan's Island was in 1733, when at a Provincial Council held at Philadelphia, on the 19th of June, Shikellamy, a chief of the Five Nation Indians, a man of much consequence among the savages, asked through Conrad Weiser, the interpreter,—

"Whether the Proprietor had heard of a letter which he and Sasoonan sent to John Harris, to desire him to desist from making a plantation at the mouth of the Choniata, where Harris has built a house and commenced clearing fields.

"They were told that Harris had only built that house for carrying on his trade; that his plantation, on which he has houses, barns, etc., at Peixtan, is his place of dwelling, and it is not to be supposed he will remove from thence; that he has no warrant or order for making a settlement on Choniata.

"Shikellamy said that though Harris may have built a house for the convenience of his trade, yet he ought not to clear fields. To this it was answered that Harris had only cleared as much land as would be sufficient to raise corn for his horses. Shikellamy said that he had no ill will to John Harris; it was not his custom to bear ill will; but he is afraid that the warriors of the Six Nations, when they pass that way, may take it ill to see a settlement made on lands which they had always desired to be kept free from any person settling upon. He was told in answer that care should be taken to give the necessary orders in it."

John Harris had settled upon the island; that is, established a trading-post, being a large Indian village there, but at the request of the authorities, who had granted him previous permission, he removed therefrom. At this period the inhabitants were mostly Shawanese. By what tribe it had previously been inhabited, we know not. It is probable by a band of Susquehannas. Upon the advent of the whites there was a large mound on the island (Duncan's), upon which large trees had grown. During the construction of the Pennsylvania Canal this mound was dug into and found to contain the bones of hundreds of Indian warriors, who had no doubt fallen in battle. The archæologist of the future was not consulted, and these remains of the aboriginal inhabitants were used as filling-material for one of the shoulders or bastions of the dam. Indian relics have been found all over these islands, and we are of the opinion that the antiquary, to whom we have alluded, will no doubt be able by research in that locality to discover much relating to the primal inhabitants.

The first notice we have of the Shawanese on these islands is from the journal of the Rev. David Brainerd in 1745, and which has been reprinted.

From a "rough draught" of the islands at the mouth of the Juniata, made by Marcus Hulings in 1762, three are noted. One, now known as Duncan's Island, is marked "Island," and house as "Widow Baskin's." The large island in the Susquehanna known as Haldeman's Island, containing three houses, the one to the southern point "Francis Baskin," one-third farther up, on the Susquehanna side, "George Clark," while about the centre that of "Francis Ellis." On the north point is the word "Island." Almost opposite, on the east bank of the Susquehanna, is "James Reed's" house, while between the centre of the island and the western shore is a small triangular "Island," so marked. On "the point" between the "Susquehanna River" and the "Juneadey River," near the bank of the latter stream, is "Hulings' house." Some distance from "the point" is a straight line running from river to river on which is written "this is the way I want my line," while beyond, on the West Branch of the Susquehanna, nearly opposite "James Reed's" house, is "Mr. Neave's" house. Farther up the river, opposite a small island, is "Francis Ellis's" house. A circuitous line, denominated "Mr. Neave's line," crosses the straight line referred to which included "Part of Hulings' Improvement." On the south of the Juniata, below the mouth thereof, is "William Kerl's" house, opposite the point of Duncan's Island "James Baskin's" house, while "Hulings' house" (another improvement) is farther up, in what is named the "Onion Bottom." Beyond this, on the same side of the Juniata, is a house marked "Cornelius Acheson, who had encroached upon Hulings' Improvement in the Onion Bottom, settled there last spring." Opposite the islands, on the east bank of the Susquehanna, are "Peter's Mountain" and "narroughs."

Prior to this the French and Indian war had desolated the Juniata Valley, and the islands at the mouth felt the terrible blow. In the spring following Braddock's defeat (1756) the savages had reached the Susquehanna, but the few scattered frontiersmen were unequal for the conflict, and were obliged to flee. Some lingered too long, for the wily red man came down suddenly, and the tomahawk and scalping-knife were reeking with the life-blood of the hardy but unfortunate pioneers. Mr. Hulings on being apprised of the near approach of the savages, hurriedly packed up a few valuables, and placing his wife and youngest child upon a large black horse (the other children having previously been removed to a place of safety) fled to the point of the island, ready to cross over at the first alarm. Forgetting something in the haste, and thinking the Indians might not have arrived, Mr. Hulings ventured to return alone to the house. After carefully reconnoitering he entered, and found, to his surprise, an Indian up-stairs "coolly picking his flint." Stopping some time to parley with the savage, so that he might retreat without being shot at, the delay to his wife seemed unaccountable, and fearing he had been murdered, she whipped up her horse and swam the Susquehanna. The water was quite high, but nowise daunted, she succeeded in reaching the opposite shore in safety. Mr. Hulings soon appeared, and finding the animal with his wife and child had disappeared, in turn he became alarmed, but a signal from the eastern shore of the stream relieved his anxiety, and he himself, by means of a light canoe, was safe from pursuit. The fugitives succeeded in reaching Fort Hunter, where the Baskins and others of their neighbors had congregated, and the inhabitants of Paxtang had rallied for a defense.

In the summer following William Baskins, living on Duncan's Island proper, returned from Fort Hunter with a portion of his family to cut his grain, and while thus engaged they were suddenly startled by the yell of Indians who were hard by; however, discovering they were neighbors, their alarms were quieted, but, alas! they were deceived, for the barbarous savages, as soon as they were near enough, gave them distinctly to understand their object was their scalps. At this moment they all fled in consternation, hotly pursued, towards the house, and when there Mr. Baskins, in the act of getting his gun, was shot dead and scalped; his wife, a daughter of about seven, and a son three years old were abducted. Mr. McClean, who was also in the field, plunged into the river and swam the Juniata at what is called "Sheep Island," and concealed himself in a cleft of rocks on the opposite side, and thus eluded the pursuit of the savages and saved his life. Mrs. Baskins effected her escape from the Indians somewhere near Carlisle; the daughter was taken to the Miami country west of the Ohio, then an unbroken wilderness, where she was detained for more than six years, when, in conformity with Bouquet's treaty made with the Indians, she was delivered up and returned. She subsequently married John Smith, the father of James Smith, of Newport. The lad who was captured at the same time was taken to Canada, subsequently christened Timothy Murphy, and concerning whose history we have the following account:

The first we hear of Murphy was his being one of the chief riflemen of Morgan's celebrated sharpshooters. At the battle of Bemis' Heights, Morgan selected a few of his best marksmen and directed them to make the British general, Fraser, their especial mark. Several of them fired without effect, but when Murphy fired Fraser fell.

A short time after the battle of Monmouth, three companies of Morgan's corps were sent into Schoharie, N. Y. Among these was Murphy, and before long the Tories set an extra price on Murphy's scalp, a price that was never paid, although many Indians lost their hair in trying to win the reward. Murphy was a stout, well-made man, with rather a large body and small limbs, handsome in face, with jet-black hair and eyes.

Murphy's hairbreadth escapes were many in number. In the nick of time something was certain to turn up to help him out. He had at one time a double-barreled rifle, a weapon unknown to the Indians in those days. He was chased by a party, and although he could generally outrun them, on this occasion they gained upon him. So he turned and killed one. Then he ran on, and while sheltered from the view of his enemies by a clump of bushes managed to load the empty barrel. As they gained upon him still, he stopped and shot another. The party pursued him without firing, being particularly anxious to roast him before a slow fire or show him some such warm hospitality, which anxiety would not be satisfied if they shot him dead. They were sure of taking him, and he felt that his luck had deserted him at last. Utterly exhausted he treed, and as they advanced killed another redskin. To his astonishment the party immediately fled. Murphy afterwards ascertained that, seeing him fire three times without seeing him load once, they imagined he had a great medicine of a gun that would shoot forever.

At the war's end Murphy became a farmer. It was characteristic of this man to live for others, and he died from a disease contracted in saving the children of a neighbor from a winter's flood.

When peace was declared and our independence acknowledged, many of the Schoharie Indians had the assurance to return and settle again among a people whose houses and barns they had burned, and whose friends and relatives they had killed. There was one Indian named Seths Henry, who had killed more Schoharie people than any other man. He would sometimes leave a war club upon the dead body of a victim, with a horrid row of notches thereon, each notch indicating a scalp taken. An energetic savage, he once led a party from Fort Niagara in the winter to capture certain Schoharie patriots, and he succeeded, traveling six hundred miles through the snow to do so. He, too, had the audacity to come back, but he was much upon his guard. One day he started from one house to another. Timothy Murphy was observed to go in the same direction shortly afterwards, and it is a curious coincidence that, as far as can be ascertained, Seths Henry never reached any place in this world.

After this there began to be mysterious disappearances of Tories and Indians, and was to be noted that coincident with a disappearance would be a bush-heap fire in the vicinity in which the missing person was last seen. It is to be supposed that calcined human bones might have been found in the ashes of these bush-fires. The remaining renegades and savages took the hint and departed that land before they departed this life, so the country was cleared of the vermin.

Timothy Murphy was a capital stump-speaker, and was a political power in Schoharie County. He brought William C. Bouck into public life, which brought him into the gubernatorial chair of the Empire State. He died in 1818, at the age of seventy years.

As to the widow of William Baskins, the first settler on Duncan's Island, she married her neighbor, Francis Ellis. Ellis established a ferry across the Susquehanna during the Revolution, which he carried on many years.

As previously mentioned, Duncan's Island was noted in early times, and really until the construction of the great Pennsylvania Railroad, as an important point on the line of travel northward and up the Juniata.

In 1819 strenuous efforts were made by interested parties to annex Duncan's Island to Cumberland County. Upon the formation of Perry County in 1824, no doubt the opportunity would have been afforded the secessionists to be included in the new county, but that did not please them, and hence they remain loyal to the county of Dauphin, to which they are allied by many interests.

In the latter part of the eighteenth century, and until the march of internal improvements which has needlessly destroyed our fisheries, the islands at the mouth of the Juniata were noted for their catch of shad, and these rights were in themselves considered of great value there as elsewhere on the Susquehanna and its branches.

At the commencement of the present century Duncan's Island proper was named Isle Benvenue, but why so designated, instead of Juniata Island, we have not learned. Duncan's Island is about two miles in length, although quite narrow, at the eastern end of which is the village and post-office of Benvenue. Haldeman's Island (so named for the owner) lies to the north, and separated from the former by a narrow channel. Unlike Duncan's Island, it is not of alluvial origin, but is elevated far above the neighboring flat-lands. The farm-house on it commands a magnificent landscape, comprising many of the wonders both of nature and art. The river here is nearly a mile in width, and is crossed by a wooden bridge. A dam across the river, just below the bridge, creates a pool, upon which canal-boats cross by means of a double towing-path attached to the bridge. The canal continues up Duncan's Island, diverging at its upper end into the Juniata and Susquehanna divisions. The Juniata division then crosses the Juniata River on a splendid aqueduct with wooden superstructure, and continues up the right bank. There is also a fine bridge across the mouth of the Juniata.

WAYNE TOWNSHIP.

THIS was the last created township in the county, and the first erected under the Constitution of 1874, which directed that in case a division of a township is desired, the whole question must be submitted to the popular vote of legal voters within the township. There were in favor of a division of the township of Jackson one hundred and seventeen, and sixty-six against a division. At the court in May, 1878, his Honor Judge Pearson issued the following decree:

"It appearing to the court by the vote taken and the return of the election ordered and held for the purpose of determining the question of a division of Jefferson township, and the return of said election showing that a majority of the votes taken are in favor of the division of said Jefferson township as reported by the commissioners for that purpose, the court therefore order and decree that said township be, and the same is hereby divided according to the report of the commissioners and the lines marked out and returned by them, and the draft attached to and made a part of said report; and that the east end of said township division shall continue to be named Jefferson, and the west end of said division shall be a new township, to be named Wayne, and shall by that name be known for all corporate purposes; that the elections of said township of Wayne shall hereafter be held at the school-house, No. 2 (named Sawyer's), in said township; and the elections for the said township of Jefferson shall be held at the school-house in Carsouville, in said township; and the courts appoint Simon Smith Judge, and Henry Buffington and George W. Bowman inspectors for the said Jefferson until the next election for said officers; and the court appoint for the township of Wayne John P. Sweigert as Judge, and George Becker and James Lebo inspectors until the next election for said officers.

"By the court.

"JOHN J. PEARSON, President Judge."

The commissioners appointed to divide Jefferson township reported as follows:

"Beginning at a pine-stump on land of Jacob Miller (formerly John Shoop), and on the line between Jackson and Jefferson townships; thence by land of said Jacob Miller south nine and a quarter degrees east forty-four perches to a pine-tree at forks of public roads; thence south thirty-eight degrees through woodland of Samuel Shoop and others east one hundred and twenty perches to a stone corner of lands of Christian Hoffmann and John Werner; thence south twenty and a half degrees east through lands of Christian Hoffman fifty-four perches; thence by the same bearing on what is termed the Old Bull or Sawyer line six hundred and ninety-four perches to a chestnut-oak-tree on the summit of Peter's Mountain line between Rush and Jefferson townships; and that they consider the division of said township necessary for the convenience of the inhabitants as regards assessments, roads, elections, schools, etc.

"JOHN K. MCGANN.

"GEORGE W. FITTING.

"WILLIAM H. ENDSER."

The early settlers were the Buffingtons, Hoffmanns, Lebos, Gross, Swigards, Millers, Sheets, Sheesleys, Breslers, Enterlines, Lenkers, Bowermans, Lehrs, Enders, Etsweilers, Engles, Lautzs, Shoops, Zimmermans, Wises, Sponslers, Hoovers, Pauls, and Pottigers.

ENTERLINE POST-OFFICE is in the centre of the township. In 1855, Jonathan Enterline opened a store here, and kept the same for fifteen years. He was the first postmaster, the office being named in his honor. The present store is kept by Abraham Fortenbaugh, and the postmaster is Amos Sponsler. The Reformed Church here was erected about 1830, of which the present pastor is Rev. A. S. Stauffer.

JACOBS' UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH is a one-story frame building located in the western part of the township, built in 1861. Its pastors have been Revs. George Hoffman, Amos Yeager, Israel Carpenter, Knuckle, Loose, Doner, and Jacob Funk, the present incumbent.

HOFFMAN CHURCH.—This church edifice, just east of Enterline post-office, is no longer used for worship. Attached to it is an old graveyard, but with few tombstones standing.

UPPER PAXTANG TOWNSHIP

At a Court of Quarter Sessions held at Lancaster in August, 1767, a petition was presented from the inhabitants of Lower Paxtang township, stating that "some time ago Upper Paxtang above the Narrows was a separate township from Lower Paxtang, and had their annual officers. James Murray and William Clark served as constables in said Paxtang above the Narrows, and they had their own inspectors, etc., and learning that the inhabitants of Upper Paxtang above the Narrows had petitioned the court for a road from the Narrows to James Reed's, and obtained an order for a view of the same as in Lower Paxtang, which alarmed the petitioners, and they therefore prayed the court to grant them relief by confirming a division line of said townships." Whereupon the court ordered that the partition line "between Upper and Lower Paxtang be made from the mouth of Fishing Creek, where it empties into Susquehanna, and from thence along the top of Kittatonia Mountain, next to Lower Paxtang, to Beaver Creek."

There does not appear to be any record of the court previous to the date of the above establishing or in any way recognizing the existence of Upper Paxtang township. The minutes of the Court of Quarter Sessions, which usually exhibit the townships and the names of the constables for each at the commencement of each session, does not notice either the name of Upper Paxtang township or any constable as from such township until after the date of the order of 1767; that order is the only record found creating this township at all, and as it has in that order no northern limit assigned, it may be taken that from August, 1767, Upper Paxtang embraced at least all the territory subsequently assigned to Dauphin County, from the lower mountain to the Mahantango Creek, subject, however, to a debatable question whether Hanover township extended northward by the second mountain, a question which is noticed more at large under the head "East and West Hanover."

The first assessment-list of Upper Paxtang is that for the Wiconisco District in 1778. It is the earliest record we have of the inhabitants of Lykens Valley, as separate from Upper Paxtang. The paper is indorsed "Appeal Dublicate, 1778, Peter Hoffman, Upper Paxtang, Wikiniski District," and the orthography of the surnames given as in the original. It will be seen by the large number of "Located Lands" that much of the valley had been taken up by outside parties for speculation or as investments. Aaron Levy, Michael Miller, John Cline, and Henry Walls, from the amount of taxes assessed, seem to have been very large landowners. The latter portion of the list refers to the age of persons who were not liable to military duty:

Upper Paxtang remained entire until after the formation of the county of Dauphin, when it was divided following division, until all now left of the original township is what we find in the extreme northwest corner of the county. The full return for 1780 is herewith given, that comprising the "Upper District" included all that section north of Berry's Mountain, the "Lower District" that portion lying south of Berry's Mountain and north of the First Mountain. In the Upper District there is no return for a mill, and but one still, and that owned by Capt. Weaver. In the Lower District, Marcus Hulings and Joseph Lytle had each a ferry, while Christian Hettick is returned for a boat; David Ireland has one negro.

The township of Upper Paxtang, as now existing, is bounded on the north by the Northumberland County line, on the east by Mifflin and Washington townships, on the south by Halifax and Jackson townships, and on the west by the Susquehanna River.

KILLINGER'S POST-OFFICE.—This point is situated on the road from Millersburg to Berrysburg, three miles from the former place and seven from the latter. Near by is the Salem Evangelical Lutheran Church, an elegant two-story-brick edifice erected in 1872. This church is supplied by the Millersburg pastors.

DAVID'S REFORMED CHURCH edifice, a two-story brick structure, was built in 1866, and is only a few yards from Salem Lutheran Church. The congregation of David's was formed prior to 1774, as baptisms are found recorded as early as June 8th of that year. Rev. Samuel Dubenborn was the pastor, and labored from 1779 to 1789. After 1795 he returned and remained a while. On March 7, 1775, these two congregations—Lutheran and Reformed—had one hundred and sixty-one acres of land surveyed for them jointly, called "Good Intent," and received a deed therefor Sept. 22, 1804. According to an agreement between them, dated March 30, 1792, they made a division in 1808. In 1794 the old log church was built, and on Feb. 27, 1797, a contract was made with some one to finish it for one hundred and eight pounds. The building committee on the part of the Reformed congregation were Abraham Nachbar [Neighbour], Jacob Meek, George Neagley, and Valentine Weker. It stood at the lower end of the cemetery, and was a two-story log house, weatherboarded, plastered, and with galleries on three sides. The pulpit was ascended by stairs and surmounted by a sounding-board. It is not known whether it had regular pastors or not, but occasional preaching was had by Revs. William Hendel, of Tulpehocken, Geistweit, Anthony Hautz, of Lebanon, and Philip Gloninger, of Harrisburg. During the Revolutionary war, when Rev. William Hendel came, he was escorted by members of the congregation with muskets to protect him and them from the prowling Indians, and during the services guards stood with guns in hand near the church to protect the worshipers from skulking savages. Rev. Hendel had a catechism class of eighty-five, many of whom came ten or fifteen miles to attend class or service.

Rev. James Reily was pastor from 1812 to 1819, and during his time the parsonage was built opposite the church (where the farm-house now is). Rev. Isaac Gerhart was pastor from 1819 to 1844. His successors have been: 1844-56, J. A. Ellis; 1856, Richard A. Fisher; 1857-65, Ephraim Kieffer; 1865-68, F. J. Moore; 1868-75, J. W. Lescher; 1875 to present time, J. B. Kerschner.

The old church edifice was torn down in 1865, and the corner-stone of the present structure laid Sept. 9, 1866. The basement was dedicated Dec. 8, 1868, and the main audience-room May 24, 1868.

HOOVER'S CHURCH.—This church edifice, lying in the southeast part of Upper Paxtang township, near the Mifflin township line, is a joint church of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches. The Evangelical Lutheran congregation (called "Zion's") is supplied by the pastors of St. John's Church, near Berrysburg, and the Reformed congregation ("Zion's") by the Millersburg pastors of that denomination. In 1842, Andrew Keefer, Sr., donated one-fourth acre of land upon which to build a church edifice. The corner-stone was laid in 1843, and a neat structure built thereon.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH, at Riegel's, a handsome frame edifice, is in the extreme eastern part of Upper Paxtang township, and only a few yards from the Mifflin township line. It is supplied with preaching by the pastor of the Berrysburg church.

PAXTON POST-OFFICE is the name of a village in the northwestern corner of the township, at the mouth of the Mahantango Creek. It contains a population less than one hundred.

MILLERSBURG BOROUGH.

MILLERSBURG BOROUGH is situated on the Susquehanna River, at the confluence of the Wiconisco Creek, twenty-three miles north of Harrisburg, on the Northern Central and Lykens Valley Railroads. The place was settled some years prior to the time it was laid out. It derived its name from Daniel Miller and John Miller, who emigrated from Lancaster County about 1790. They took up some four hundred acres of land and began a settlement. It was laid out by Daniel Miller into town lots in July, 1807, and incorporated into a borough April 8, 1850, from which time its progress has been rapid. Daniel Miller's first wife, Elizabeth, died in 1813, and he married for the second time Mary Wingert, July 8, 1817. They both died in October, 1828, leaving one child, Mary, who was born Nov. 25, 1820, married George W. Bowers, Feb. 11, 1838, and is still living in the town. Daniel Miller, who was born in 1750, had two children by his first wife, who removed at an early day to Ohio.

The first settlers in this region, known as "Lykens Valley," were French Huguenots and Germans. Francis Jacques or "Jacobs," commonly known as "French Jacob," Larue or La Roy, Shora, Sandoe, the Kleims, Werts, Steevers, Shotts, Ferrees, Millers, Andrew Lycan, and John Rewalt are found among the earliest names of white men who settled in this section. About the time John and Daniel Miller settled here "French Jacob" built his grist-mill on the north bank of the Wiconisco Creek, just above the foot of Race Street, and near to which, some time before, he had built his log cabin, then considered quite a pretentious structure, large and strongly put together, and well provided with loop-holes,—a kind of fort to which the settlers might fly for safety in cases of attack from the Indians. Here was taught the first school, kept by Daniel Miller, the proprietor of the town. Neither cabin or mill are longer to be seen. Domestic trouble had caused at an early date the owner (Jacobs) to remove forever from the spot. The property was at times unused and unoccupied. It fell under the ban of superstition, several of the settlers having seen about it divers strange and unearthly appearances, "shapes dire, dismal, and horrid." Time and the spoliation of man have done their work, and the almost obliterated channel of the old head-race alone is seen to mark the spot where once was the forest-home of the old French Huguenot. Upon a part of this land Daniel Miller, the then sole proprietor, through Peter Williamson, his surveyor, laid out the town-lots in July, 1807. These lots sold very readily, being selected by lottery, and soon the place assumed the importance of a rapidly-growing and prosperous town. The town is regularly laid out, with spacious streets crossing each other at right angles, and practical alleyways giving passage to the rear of every building. The Susquehanna River at this point is a mile in width, stretching away in lake-like form some three miles, from Berry's Mountain in the south to the Mahantango Mountain in the north, at which points, forcing its way through these mountains much diminished in its bed, it hurriedly tumbles over rocks and pebbles of the passage, winding quickly out of sight.

The first school was taught in a log cabin or fort by Daniel Miller, the founder of the town, and he was succeeded by a Mrs. Miller. This fort was built about 1794, on the banks of the Wiconisco Creek, as a place of safety from the surrounding Indians. The next house was built about 1812 or 1813, on Union Street, and was taught by an educated German. This house was superseded by a poorly-constructed brick building, and that by a frame structure on the site where now stands the large and substantial building on Middle Street, which continued in use until the citizens refused to send their children. In 1833 a select school was taught by Mrs. Susan Barringer, a lady of considerable culture, who established a good educational sentiment, and was succeeded by Samuel McGaw, a man of scholastic abilities. About 1844 or 1845 the free-school system was adopted, after being defeated twice, as the town and township were at that time one school district. The opposition from the township was very great, but persistent perseverance overcame all the opposing forces. The most active school men in the early history of the town were Jacob Seal, Dr. Robert Auchmuty, David Link, Simon Wert, Adam Light, John Ebery, Benjamin Musser, and Matthias Freck. The town has now two first-class school buildings and five graded schools. Its high school compares favorably with any in the county.

In 1846 there were in Millersburg about eighty dwellings, two stores, one mill, and three churches. In 1850 it had five hundred population, which it doubled in 1860 and trebled in 1880.

The officers of the borough since its incorporation in 1850 have been:

THE MILLERSBURG LITERARY SOCIETY was organized in 1876, and is in successful operation, being patronized and actively participated in by many of the best and most prominent men of the town.

TRINITY REFORMED CHURCH.—About the year 1833 several members of the Reformed faith purchased a frame building on Middle Street and fitted it up for church services. Here Rev. Isaac Gerhart preached occasionally. The building was never dedicated, and no regular pastors were called. In 1856 the Reformed and Lutheran congregations jointly erected the brick church on Middle Street. The corner-stone was laid in June, and the building dedicated on the 30th of November following. The first consistory was elected April 25, 1857. Rev. Ephraim Kieffer was the first pastor, and the present incumbent is Rev. J. B. Kerschner; for the others see David's Church, which with Zion's at Hoover's and this make one charge. In 1874 this congregation bought out the interest of the Lutherans.

ST. PAUL'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.—About the year 1830 the Rev. J. N. Hemping preached occasionally to the Lutherans here in the old school-house in the German language. In 1832, Rev. S. D. Finckels, of Middletown, came here every four weeks and preached in both English and German. In 1842, Rev. W. G. Laitzell, one of the seven founders of the East Pennsylvania Synod, who had been called to his first charge in Armstrong's Valley, crossed Berry's Mountain and preached here and at Salem (Killinger's). From 1846, Rev. C. F. Stower, of Berrysburg charge, preached here for four years as often as convenient, and in 1852, Rev. Jacob Martin, of same charge, came occasionally. In November, 1853, Rev. D. Sell, of same charge, began holding services, and after one year's labors organized a congregation, which united with the Reformed, and in 1856 built the church edifice on Middle Street. The pastors have been: 1856-61, D. Sell; 1861, P. P. Lane; 1862, George P. Weaver; 1863-66, C. A. Fetzer; 1866-78, M. Fernsler; July 27, 1879, George Conrad Henry. Under Rev. M. Fernsler the charge consisted of Berrysburg, Millersburg, Salem (Killinger's), and Lykens, but in 1871 the latter was withdrawn. In 1871 the project of withdrawing from the joint union building and erecting a new church was discussed. It sold its interest in the Union Church to the Reformed congregation for fourteen hundred dollars, broke ground for a new edifice in March, 1873, and laid the corner-stone in June, 1874. The basement was dedicated in 1878, and the audience-room Nov. 14, 1880.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH.—This congregation was organized about 1840. The first church edifice was built on the lot where the present parsonage stands, and was a log structure weatherboarded. The present church building, a commodious two-story brick structure, was built in 1860. Since 1862 (as early as any records are found) the pastors have been:

1862-64, William Hain; 1864, Joseph M. Saylor; 1865-67, F. P. Lehr; 1867-69, A. A. Overholt; 1869-71, L. Snyder; 1871-73, S. S. Chubb; 1873-76, H. A. Neitz; 1876-79, W. K. Wiand; 1879-81, S. S. Chubb; 1881, H. A. Neitz, present incumbent.

Berrysburg was the first seat of this denomination in this region, and two years after its organization into a church this one was organized. It owns valuable church property, and is clear of debt.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Millersburg and Berrysburg Circuit was cut off of Halifax in 1866. Since then the pastors have been: 1866-68, A. W. Wiggins; 1868-70, Able Howard; 1870, Thomas Kilpatrick; 1871-75, W. H. Fries; 1875-77, W. S. Pugh; 1877-79, J. M. Hinson; 1879, William M. Gilbert; 1880-82, N. D. McComas. It was made a station. The large brick edifice was erected in 1858. The church has one hundred and seventy-five members, and a parsonage adjoining the church edifice.

THE MANUFACTURING INDUSTRIES of the borough are the planing, saw-, and lumber-mills of John Neagle, C. F. Freck, and Alfred Douden and the Standard Axle Manufacturing Company, the latter of which has proved a successful enterprise.

The Millersburg Herald was established by its present editor, proprietor, and publisher, J. B. Seal, on the first Friday in January, 1875. It is a weekly family journal, and specially devoted to local news. It is a four-page sheet of thirty-two columns, and enjoys a large circulation. With it is connected a well-equipped job-office. This paper is independent in politics, and occupies a position which gives it great strength in moulding opinion in the north of the county.

THE FIRST NATIONAL BANK was organized Feb. 12, 1867, as the Lykens Valley Bank, and began business March 6th following. It was a private company, composed of G. M. Brubaker, S. P. Auchmuty, Benjamin Reigel, Philip Moyer, Joseph F. Corbett, Henry Walborn, George Gleim, Aaron Mattis, Jonathan Reigel, and Daniel Good. Its capital was twenty-five thousand dollars, which was shortly after increased to forty thousand dollars by the addition of the following new partners: Tobias Bickel, A. Fortenbaugh, Jonathan Swab, Sept. 7, 1868, and Benjamin D. Reigel, George Deibler, and George Daniel in March, 1869. It was incorporated Feb. 29, 1872, and reorganized as a corporation. It was merged into a national bank April 13, 1875, with its charter numbered 2252, and began business as such May 1st the following. G. M. Brubaker was president to January, 1875, and was then succeeded by Alfred Douden, the present incumbent. George Gleim was cashier until April 14, 1873, when Ferdinand H. Voss succeeded him. It has a capital stock of one hundred thousand dollars, with a surplus of twelve thousand dollars. Its first banking-house was on Market Street. In 1869 it erected its present building, and occupied it in the fall of that year.

THE MILLERSBURG BANK was organized in the fall of 1868. It is an individual banking institution, composed of eighty to one hundred stockholders, mostly of the wealthiest farmers, and all individually liable. Its capital stock is thirty thousand dollars, with a surplus of ten thousand dollars. Its first president was S. Buck, succeeded in 1875 by the present incumbent, F. Wenrich. J. S. Gilbert has been cashier from its organization, and Isaac Miller vice-president since the creation of that office. Since its establishment it has occupied its own building on Union Street.

MIDDLE PAXTANG TOWNSHIP.

At a Court of Quarter Sessions, held in Dauphin County in the month of August, 1787, an order was issued to commissioners to take into consideration the necessity and propriety of dividing Upper Paxtang township, who reported a dividing line, "commencing at the river Susquehanna, at the mouth of a run emptying into the said river, and running from Jacob Strickler's spring, and thence along the different courses of the said run to the place where the said spring extracts out of the earth, and from thence by a direct line to the dividing ridge; thence along the said ridge to the extremity thereof, to the line of Berks County."

The court directed the township to be divided, agreeably to this report, from the said line to the upper boundary of Lower Paxtang, to be called Middle Paxtang. As thus constituted the township included the section of the county between the First and Peter's Mountains, embracing Fishing Creek, Stony Creek, and Clark's Valleys. As may be surmised, the face of the country is much broken, and save along the principal streams as they near the Susquehanna and the valleys expand, the land is poor and unproductive. Nevertheless, there are some fine farms on Clark's Creek and along the Susquehanna.

The history of the township is so intimately connected with that of the general record of the county, and to which reference is made for a history of Fort Hunter, at the mouth of Fishing Creek, and other details relating to the French and Indian war. The following incident, however, is of such a local character that we give place thereto.

Ludwig Minsker, an emigrant from the Palatinate, located in Clark's Valley in 1750. He built his cabin on a run near the place where the house of John Hoeker, Jr., now stands. He was a man of great courage, and the Indians of the neighborhood fearing him, never molested him or his family.

It was subsequent to Braddock's defeat that hostile Indians crossed over the mountains and spread death and desolation on the frontiers. While out hunting during the spring of 1756, Ludwig observed the trail of the marauding savages. Knowing that if they discovered his cabin, his wife and child in his absence would be killed, he hastened home and quickly devised means for their protection. It was too late to go below the mountains, for he would be overtaken. Having in his house a chest six feet long, he bored a sufficient number of holes in it to admit air; then taking it upon his shoulder, waded up the run some distance, placing it in a sequestered nook. Returning to his cabin he took his wife and child (the latter but six months old) in the same way to the chest to conceal his trail, where the dense foliage covered their hiding-place. It was ten days before the hostiles had left the valley, and during all that time Mrs. Minsker and her child were safely secured in the huge chest, her husband in the mean time keeping guard in the neighborhood of their cabin, hunting and carrying provisions to the refugees.

One autumn, while Ludwig was carrying towards his cabin half of a good-sized hog he had butchered, an Indian stealthily came up behind him, quickly severed the lower part, exclaimed, "Hog meat very good meat, Indian like him," and scampered off to the woods.

The child who was concealed with his mother in the chest became Ludwig the second. He married a daughter of Thomas Cairn, and built his cabin at a spring on the Third Mountain, on property now belonging to Harry Zeiders, who is a descendant of the first Ludwig. It is only a few years since that the cabin was torn down.

Prior to the Revolution a friendly Indian had his cabin on the north side of Peter's Mountain, near the spring which supplies the water-trough on the pike. Here he lived for years unmolested. One evening in the fall of the year Mrs. Minsker, while standing in the door-way, heard a loud moan, resembling that of some one in extreme agony. She told her husband, who replied that it was the cry of a panther. Still listening, she found by direction of the sound that the person was going up the mountain, but Ludwig to quiet her said she must be mistaken, it was only the cry of the panther. The ensuing summer the cows remained out beyond the usual time, and the children were sent in search of them. Going up the mountain they came to what was then called and still known as the "King's Stool," when they found a skeleton lying under it. Informing their father of the fact, Ludwig examined the remains, and found by the hunting-shirt, which was intact, that it was the Indian referred to. It appeared that some ill-disposed whites had gone to the cabin of the Indian and wantonly shot him, but did not kill him. With his little strength remaining the poor Indian crawled up and then down the side of the Fourth Mountain, across Clark's Valley; thence up the Third Mountain to the "King's Stool," where he died from exhaustion. The rock alluded to is a huge boulder heaved on the top of another, and as high as the tallest trees.

DAUPHIN is a prosperous town located at the mouth of Stony Creek, nine miles north of Harrisburg. The first settlement made at that point was by Samuel Sturgeon, who removed thither shortly after the French and Indian war. A mill was built there in 1770, and the place went by the name of Green's mill. The town was laid out in 1826 by Innis Green for the Dauphin and Schuylkill Coal Company, and by him named Port Lyon. It was afterwards and for many years called Greensburg, until it was made a post-town, when the name was changed to Dauphin, for the county, and when the borough was incorporated, 31st of March, 1845, the post-office name was adopted.

CORPORATION OFFICERS.—The borough was incorporated March 31, 1845. Its officers since then have been:

BURGESSES.

1845. Joseph S. Dixon.	1857. Jacob Stevenson.
1846. H. B. Crouse.	1860. Dr. William Graydon.
1847. John Ehrman.	1861. J. W. Griffith.
1848. Robert Simmons.	1864-65. Not found.
1850. William Luckey.	1866. William Clark.
1851. J. Ray.	1872. John Crouse.
1852. Martin Ryan.	1879. Edward O. Wion.

HILL CHURCH.—About 1770 a log house was erected for a meeting-house on land owned by Robert McCord, half a mile north of the present town, and on the site of the "Hill Church Cemetery." On Oct. 11, 1796, an agreement was entered into whereby Mr. McCord stipulated to convey by deed said lot to the trustees of the Middle Paxtang Presbyterian congregation. This conveyance was made Nov. 6, 1813, to William Cochran, William Forster, and James Green as said trustees. The expenses of its erection were principally met by the Scotch-Irish settlers, who were then the main farmers of this region. The congregation at one time, was very large, and this old log structure (weatherboarded) held two hundred persons.

The increase of German settlers led to the Scotch-

Irish Presbyterians removing, and the church edifice passed into the hands of the Lutherans and German Reformed, or was jointly owned by them and the remaining Presbyterians. It burned down in 1855, but for some five or six years previous had not been used for religious services.

A PRESBYTERIAN CONGREGATION was organized April 6, 1850, when twenty-three members entered into solemn articles of covenant and faith. There is no record before that, although previous to that time Rev. Dr. DeWitt, of Harrisburg, preached occasionally in the school-house and at the old "Hill Church." Rev. George R. Moore came June 21, 1848, to officiate at the old "Hill Church," and was ordained Oct. 18, 1848. Under his auspices the congregation was formed as previously stated. He preached mainly in the school-house. The new church was dedicated May 12, 1850. The bell was a donation from John W. Patton, Esq., of Philadelphia. Miss Monroe and other ladies, of Wilmington, Del., donated the communion service. Rev. George R. Moore continued as pastor to June, 1856; Rev. John W. Davis, from March, 1857, to August, 1860; Rev. Alexander D. Moore, from Sept. 8, 1860, to Sept. 8, 1868; Rev. David C. Menker, from Dec. 1, 1868, to April 25, 1880; and the present incumbent, Rev. Robert F. McClean, from Sept. 1, 1880.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Dauphin Circuit was cut off of Halifax Circuit in 1838, since which time the pastors have been: 1838, D. Sheets; 1839, V. Gray, William McCombs; 1840, H. E. Gilroy, William McCombs; 1841-43, William Cooper, T. W. Arthur; 1843, R. M. Greenbank, J. M. Wyeth; 1844, R. M. Greenbank, T. A. Fernley; 1845, William L. Gray, George D. Brown; 1846, Eliphalet Reed; 1847, John C. Thomas; 1848-50, C. R. Brooks; 1850-52, Henry Suttou; 1852, H. Sanderson, C. R. Curry; 1853, H. Sanderson, J. J. Lane; 1854, S. R. Gillingham, H. H. Hickman; 1855-57, Valentine Gray, E. J. Pepper; 1857-59, William Dalrymple; 1859-61, George G. Rakestraw; 1861-63, Abel Howard; 1863-65, S. L. Kemble; 1865-67, G. T. Hurlock; 1867, Gideon Barr; 1868-70, T. Montgomery; 1870-72, John Stringer; 1872, J. Robison; 1874-76, Frederick Illman; 1876-79, Ephraim Potts; 1879 to the present time, R. C. Wood. The church edifice, a commodious frame structure, was erected in 1837. The circuit embraces Dauphin, Rockville, Coxestown, and Paxtang, a preaching appointment four miles from Harrisburg and near the residence of Judge Hies-ter.

ZION'S LUTHERAN CHURCH.—This congregation before 1849 had worshiped in the old "Hill Church," but on September 5th of that year it resolved to erect a new church edifice in the town. The joint building committee then appointed were Daniel Poffenberger, Elias Fertig, H. C. Sponsler, George Kinter, George W. Urbin, Nelson C. Hyde. It was built on a lot of Mrs. Gross by the Lutheran and Reformed congregations jointly. The corner-stone was laid Aug. 10, 1850, and the building dedicated Feb. 2, 1851, with a dedicatory sermon by Rev. A. H. Lochman. The pastors have been: 1851, Rev. C. F. Stoever; 1852-56, Rev. C. Nittenhaner; 1856-68, Rev. George J. Martz; 1868-70, Rev. Kurtz; 1870-80, Rev. D. P. Rosenmiller, who died in 1880, and since then the congregation have had no regular pastor.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION CHURCH.—This congregation was organized prior to 1872, when the church building was built. Before then services were occasionally held in the school-house. The pastors have been: 1872-75, Rev. J. A. Fager; 1875-77, Rev. Leslie; 1877-78, Rev. A. Markley; 1878-80, Rev. John Hoover; 1880, the present incumbent, Rev. H. M. Copp. This circuit embraces two other churches,—Zion's, some two miles from town, and which was organized in 1862, and the one at Fishing Creek, organized in 1831. The Halifax Church was an offshoot of Zion's, and was instituted to accommodate the town members.

BERRY'S MOUNTAIN MILLS, near Berry's Mountain, in Middle Paxtang township, were built in 1797, the large saw-mill by Mr. Barr. They were afterwards operated by Mr. Rutter, and later by Loomis & Kingsbury. In 1834 and 1835 they transacted a large business. Shurr's mill was a short distance above.

LYKENS VALLEY.

THE Wiconisco or Lykens Valley includes that section of the "Upper End" of the county of Dauphin that is watered by the Wiconisco Creek and its branches, save where local names have been given to certain portions, such as Williams Valley, etc. As much of the history of the townships is so closely allied, we purpose to give such facts relating thereto as do not specially belong to the townships proper. It may be here stated that locally Lykens Valley is but a small part of Wiconisco Valley, and yet we are compelled to designate the "Upper End" by that general title.

The early history of the Wiconisco Valley is one of interest, inasmuch as the individual for whom the entire valley now takes its name was among the first settlers. In 1732, Andrew Lycans (not Lycan) settled on the Swatara Creek, where he took up two hundred and fifty acres of land, adjoining lands of Robert Young and Lazarus Stewart, and which was surveyed to him on the 4th of April, 1737. About 1740 he seems to have sold out and removed, with a number of others, to the west side of the Susquehanna, where he settled and made some improvements on a tract of land between Sherman's Creek and the Juniata, in then Cumberland County. This not being included in the last Indian purchase, the Shawanese, who had a few scattered villages on the Juniata, complained of the encroachments of these settlers and demanded their removal. To pacify the Indians the Provincial authorities sent, in 1748, the sheriff of Lancaster County, with three magistrates, accompanied by Conrad Weiser, to warn the people to leave at once. But, notwithstanding all this, the settlers remained, determined not to be driven away, at least by threats.

On the 22d of May, 1750, after more decisive measures had been decided upon by the Provincial government, a number of high dignitaries who had been appointed by the Lieutenant-Governor held a conference at the house of George Croghan, in Pennsborough township, Cumberland Co. Subsequently, accompanied by the under-sheriff of that county, they went to the place where Lycans and others lived, and after taking the settlers into custody burned their cabins to the number of five or six.¹

They were subsequently released by order of the Governor of the Province, when Andrew Lycans removed with his family to the east side of the Susquehanna beyond the Kittochtinny Mountains, and by permission of the authorities "settled on a tract of about two hundred acres, situated on the northerly side of Whiconescong Creek." Here he made "considerable improvements," which we learn from a document in our possession.

Until the spring of 1756 these pioneers on the Wiconisco were not disturbed in their homes, but following the defeat of Braddock, everywhere along the frontier the savages began their work of devastation and death. Their implacable cruelty was stimulated by the promise of reward for scalps on the part of the French, beside the further one of being put into possession of their lands. On the morning of the 7th of March, 1756, Andrew Lycans and John Rewalt went out early to fodder their cattle, when two guns were fired at them. Neither being harmed, they ran into the house and prepared themselves for defense in case of an attack. The Indians then got under cover of a hog-house near the dwelling-house, when John Lycans, a son of Andrew, John Rewalt, and Ludwig Shott, a neighbor, crept out of the house in order to get a shot at them, but were fired upon by the savages, and all wounded, the latter (Shott) in the abdomen. At this moment Andrew Lycans saw one of the Indians over the hog-house, and also two white men running out of the same and get a little distance therefrom. Upon this Lycans and his party attempted to escape, but were pursued by the Indians to the number of sixteen or upwards. John Lycans and Rewalt being badly wounded and not able to do anything, with a negro who was with them, made off, leaving Andrew Lycans, Shott, and a boy engaged with the Indians. The savages pursued them so closely that one of them, coming up to the boy, was going to strike his tomahawk into him, when Ludwig Shott turned and shot him dead, while Lycans killed two more and wounded several in addition. At last, being exhausted and wounded, they sat down on a log to rest themselves; but the Indians were somewhat cautious, and stood some distance from them, and consequently returned to look after their own wounded. Lycans and all his party managed to get over the mountains into Hanover township, where they were properly cared for. Here Andrew Lycans died, leaving a wife, Jane Lycans, and children,—John, Susanna, Rebecca, Elizabeth, Mary, and Margaret. It is not known when Lycans' family, with the other settlers, returned to their homes in the Wiconisco Valley, but not until all danger was over; and although on a number of occasions they were obliged to leave all and flee before the marauding savages, yet the one alluded to was the only occasion where they so narrowly escaped with their lives. Besides, the erection of the forts at Shamokin (Sunbury), and at Armstrong's (Halifax), and at McKee's, at the foot of Berry's Mountain, was perchance ample protection from the annual marauds of the Indians, which up to the year 1764 kept the frontier inhabitants in a terrible state of apprehension and fear.

John Lycans, son of Andrew, became an officer of the Provincial service, commissioned July 12, 1762. In June, 1764, he was stationed at Manada Gap. It is probable he removed from the valley prior to the Revolution. His mother, Jane Lycans, in February, 1765, had a patent issued to her for the land on which her husband had located. The Lycans' cabin stood until about twenty years ago on McClure's farm, owned at present by H. L. Lark. Ludwig Shott died about 1790, and left a large family; some of his descendants remain in the valley. Rewalt subsequently removed to the now thickly-settled portion of the Province.

Andrew Lycans has given his name to the beautiful valley of the Wiconisco, owing perchance to the terrible encounter with the Indians as narrated. The orthography has been changed within the last fifty years, but we have not learned the reason therefor. Whether Lykens or Lycans, we trust that no attempt may ever be made to deprive the first pioneer of the name which has been appropriately given to it.

After Andrew Lycans' the first house built at Oak-Dale Forge was erected by Henry Shoffstall for Joel Ferree, of Lancaster County, then owner of the Lycans' tract, about the year 1771. Its location was about seventy-five yards northwest of where the present bridge crosses the Wiconisco Creek. The property was purchased by Mr. Ferree from Jane Lycans, the widow of the old pioneer. On the death of the former it became the property of Isaac Ferree, of Lancaster County, whose son, Isaac, Jr., moved into it in 1800. At the period when Andrew Lycans lived on the Forge property there was an Indian village on the land now owned by Henry Bohner, and the spring at his house is the head of the run which empties into the head of the Forge dam and called the "Indian Town Run." This Indian town property, when it was abandoned by the Indians, was taken up by Joel Ferree, first named.

When the house was built by Mr. Shoffstall, there were few settlers in the neighborhood. There were, however, Shott (now Kottka), George Buffington, near Buffington's Church, John Nicholas Hoffman, and Philip Umlholtz, near Gratz. In Williams Valley the nearest person was Conrad Updegraff, at (now) Williamstown, and next Daniel Williams, who had a grist-mill there, at or on the property now owned by Martin Blum, east of Williamstown. Another person about this time, by the name of Daniel Hain, built a saw-mill where the Summit Branch Railroad crosses the creek at Lykens, taking the water from Rattling Creek by a race to Wiconisco Creek.

Oak-Dale Forge was built about the year 1828, by James Buchanan, who at the same time, or the year following, built six or seven houses for his workmen. The houses were located on the south side of the creek, and were occupied by John Ginter, Thomas Nutt, George Conner, Samuel Boon, Joseph Dunlap, and others. Mr. Buchanan came from Harrisburg. He subsequently removed to Baltimore, where he died. He kept a store at the Forge, and also the post-office, which latter was established about 1830, the mail being carried by pack-horse. Previous to that time the post-office was at Millersburg, each neighbor taking his turn to bring the mail from there weekly.

From 1795 to 1800 there were only three houses built between the Forge and Lykens. One was located on the property now of Henry Bohner, and then occupied by Joel Ferree, the younger, who died at Baltimore, in the War of 1812. The second house was built by George Setzler on the property now of Isaac Seebolt. The third on property now owned by John Wallace, erected by Peter Shoffstall and occu-pled by him for a time, subsequently by Peter Minnich. This cabin stood near the old house on Wallace's farm, and was in later years occupied by Solomon Shoffstall, who erected the present old log house on the premises.

The first election held in the valley, or in Lykens township, was probably in Gratz, about the year 1815. Hoffman's Church was the first place of religious worship.

The importance of Lykens Valley may be dated from the year 1825. In that year coal was discovered by Jacob Burd, Sr., and Peter Kimes, then living near the lower end of the Short Mountain, in what was then Lykens township. They had gone out one Sunday morning to take a walk, and reaching the top of the mountain they paused, one of them having a stick in his hand, carefully dug into the earth, when it revealed black dirt. This gave rise to the opinion that there must be coal in the mountain. A short time afterwards a wagon road was made, and men commenced to dig. This was the first beginning of the coal operations which gave rise to the Lykens Valley, Short Mountain, and Franklin Coal Companies. This was in the same year that anthracite coal was first burned successfully in Philadelphia, and its advocates, after having undergone the usual derision that men of new and progressive ideas have to contend with, began to reap their reward. No doubt this combination of circumstances determined the action of the shrewd Simon Gratz. He at once bought the land in and east of the Gap from one Frey, its owner up to that time.

Professor Sheaffer, of Pottsville, who was a native of the "Upper End," furnishes us the subsequent history of this enterprise. The Wiconisco Coal Company was organized in 1831, composed of six members,—Simon Gratz, Samuel Richards, George H. Thompson, Charles Rockland Thompson, all of Philadelphia, and Henry Schreiner and Henry Sheaffer, both of Dauphin County.

They began work at opening their mines by drifts in the gap at Bear Creek, a tributary of Wiconisco Creek, and sold coal in the vicinity in 1832. The first miners were three Englishmen, James Todoff, John Brown, and William Hall, who came in from Schuylkill County.

The Lykens Valley Railroad, the fourth railroad in the United States to carry anthracite coal, and the first in Dauphin County, was located by Mr. Ashwin, an English civil engineer, and extended from the mines in Bear Gap, sixteen miles, to the Susquehanna River, along the north foot of Berry's Mountain. This road was constructed under the direction of John Paul, civil engineer, Henry Sheaffer, superintendent, and Simon Sallade, director. The road was completed and began transporting coal in 1834, by horse-power, on a flat strap-rail. A number of ark-loads of coal were shipped from Millersburg in March and April, 1834. Then the coal-cars were boated across the Susquehanna from the terminus of the railroad at Millersburg to Mount Patrick, on the opposite side of the river, in Perry County. This site was formerly owned by Peter Ritner, brother of Governor Ritner. Here the Lykens Valley Company had a set of chutes on the Pennsylvania Canal, where they shipped their coal to market. The first boat-load of Lykens Valley coal was sent on Saturday, April 19, 1834, by boat "76," forty-three tons, Capt. C. Faunce, consigned to Thomas Borbridge, Columbia, Pa.

Shipments continued in this manner until 1845, when the railroad was worn out and abandoned until 1848. Then a portion of the railroad was regraded, and all laid with a new T-rail. The Wiconisco Canal, connecting the Pennsylvania Canal at Clark's Ferry with Millersburg, was built and shipments resumed in 1848, and have continued ever since. Up to and including 1858 the total shipment of coal from the Lykens Valley mines, from the beginning, amounted to eight hundred and forty-eight thousand seven hundred and eighty-one tons, and the grand total shipments on the Susquehanna were three millions two hundred and thirty-four thousand seven hundred and eighty-one tons, which included shipments of coal by the Union Canal and other avenues as follows: The Shamokin Railroad was opened in 1839, the Dauphin and Susquehanna in 1854, the Trevorton Railroad in 1855.

At that early day of the coal trade this portion of the country was wild and seemed far removed in the woods. Lykens Valley is the broad expanse, three to five miles in width, of fertile, red-shale soil between Mahantango Mountain on the north and Berry's Mountain on the south, with the Susquehanna River as its boundary on the west. Its eastern portion is a distance of twelve miles from the river, and is subdivided into two smaller valleys, the main or northern one extending some ten miles east to the valley of the Mahanoy Creek. The south portion is named after its early settler, Williams, who built a grist-mill near Williamstown, also named after him.

This valley, hardly a mile in width, extends east from its junction with Lykens Valley ten miles, with the Short Mountain on the north and Berry's Mountain on the south, to a point where it coalesces with Clark's Valley, the two headed off by Broad Mountain, beyond Tower City. This Short, or Coal Mountain, is a prong of the southern anthracite coal-field, forming a narrow basin, hardly more than a mile wide. The southern side of the basin, or north dip, is the only one worked. It is now pierced at Tower City, where it is extensively worked by the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company, and again at Williamstown, by the Summit Branch Coal Company, the lands of which two companies adjoin at the county line between Schuylkill and Dauphin, where a willful wall of the Pennsylvania Company and the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company prevents a junction, much to the annoyance of the public, who want a rail connection between the two counties, joining the two rivers, the Schuylkill on the east and the Susquehanna on the west. This mountain is again tapped at Bear Gap, the original mines above referred to. The North Mountain was penetrated by a tunnel directly north of the gap, but thus far has not been very productive of coal. In fact, what seems singular in this connection is that only two beds, the very lowest in the series, are productive here, one being farther east, too small for working, while the great mammoth bed, the great productive bed of the eastern district, is hardly known here. These two lower inter-conglomerates, one eight and the other four feet thick, are dissimilar from other anthracite coals in their lustreless appearance, and their cubic fracture shows its western approach to the semi-bituminous coals farther west. It is a free-burning, red-ash coal, but free from impurities, ready of ignition, and the most popular coal (especially for domestic purposes) of all the anthracites. The lands in the vicinity of the old mines were controlled by the following ownership: The western portion, by Thomas P. Cope, a well-known merchant of Philadelphia; afterwards it became the lands of the Short Mountain Coal Company, controlled by Job R. Tyson, the son-in-law of Mr. Cope, a well-known attorney of Philadelphia. J. Edgar Thomson, the famous president of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, took an interest in said company, and had their first breaker built under the direction of Professor Sheaffer, whose education in coal began at the old Lykens Valley mines. The lands covering Bear Gap and North Mountain were owned by the Wiconisco, afterwards the Lykens Valley, Coal Company, of which Simon Gratz, a prominent merchant of Philadelphia, was the president and principal owner.

Adjoining said lands on the east was the coal territory of Messrs. Elder & Haldeman, both prominent residents and landowners of Harrisburg. These three bodies of land are now in the ownership of the Summit Branch Coal Company, controlled by the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

The popularity of this coal, first opened by Henry Sheaffer, led to the opening of the Short Mountain Coal Company's mines in 1854, after the sale of the Elder & Haldeman lands to the Summit Branch company. They extended a branch road eastward from the town of Lykens, where they penetrated the south side of the mountain by a tunnel, cutting coal in great perfection, and where they have mined, prepared, and shipped one thousand tons of coal per diem for several years in succession. The same large shipments are now being made just east of the Summit Branch mines, at the Brookside colliery of the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company. The same beds of Lykens Valley coal, and the same coal in all its peculiarities, is now mined in Stony Mountain, at the Kalmia colliery of Phillips &

Sheafer, south of Tower City. All the above collieries, except Kalmia, have sunk deep slopes under water-level. The future of the Lykens Valley district must, ere many years, be transferred to the south dip, on the north side of the mountain, where the same bed lies intact for twelve miles, more or less, mostly below water-level. Before another century begins, the active shipments of coal must come from that side, through the old works in the South Mountain, or from independent collieries along the north foot of the North Mountain, where railroads must be built, one leading west to the Susquehanna, and another east to the Schuylkill, through Klinger's Gap, where the Philadelphia and Reading Coal and Iron Company have a large body of lands, and a site for a grand colliery above water-level.

There are four collieries open and in working condition in Upper Dauphin,—Big Run, by James Fennel (it is a land-sale colliery, shipping none by rail); the other collieries are known as Short Mountain, Lykens Valley, and Summit Branch or Williamstown. Big Lick colliery is not now in operation.

Dependent on these collieries are the towns of Williamstown, Wiconisco, Lykens Borough, and some two or three small villages, with a population numbering between eight and ten thousand persons. Eighty per cent. of the dwellings in this once prosperous valley are the property of working-men, the result of hard toil, self-denial, and privation.

One familiar with the picture of Bear Gap and its wild surroundings in 1832, all forest, its lofty mountains and rushing streams, no work of the hands of man apparent, no sound but the roaring of the creeks, the streets of the town of Wiconisco, as located by Henry Sheafer, and those of Lykens, by Isaac Ferree, Sr. (an intelligent emigrant from Lancaster County), can appreciate the great development. Fifty years of earnest labor has sent millions of tons of coal from its long-sealed tomb to land and sea, building towns, railroads, canals, churches, and schools, and lighting and warming all the people with its cheerful glow. But few of the original parties who began this enterprise remain among us. It but remains for us to make this brief record of their work, that our citizens may know somewhat of the enterprise of the early pioneers.

LYKENS TOWNSHIP.

UPON the petition of inhabitants of Upper Paxtang township asking for a division of said township, the court issued an order at their January sessions, 1810, to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of granting said prayer, and to make a plot or draft of the township, etc. The commissioners reported in favor of a division of the township by the following line, to wit:

"Beginning at a pine-tree in the Halifax township line on the summit of Berry's Mountain at Peter Richert's Gap; thence north ten degrees east along and near a public road which leads from Halifax to Sunbury through Hains' Gap, four hundred and sixty perches to a post on the north side of Wiconisco Creek near the said road; thence north eighty perches to a pine; thence running along the public road aforesaid north five degrees west four hundred and seventy perches to Buffington's Church, leaving the said church on the westward; thence a course north ten degrees west, leaving the dwelling of John Hopple westward eleven hundred and fifty perches to Mahantango Creek," etc.

The report then follows the lines around the two divisions of Upper Paxtang as they were after taking off Halifax township (running the lines across the river). It is therefore unnecessary to follow them further here, as the line given above shows the division of what was then Upper Paxtang township. This report was confirmed by the court on the 3d of September, 1810, and it was ordered that the eastern division be called Lykens township. Lykens township was reduced in 1819 by the formation of Mifflin township from Upper Paxtang and Lykens, and further in 1840 when that portion south of the north side of Coal or Thick Mountain was erected into Wiconisco township.

This township and the valley is named for Andrew Lycans, one of the earliest pioneers of this section, and to whom full reference has been made in the sketch of Lykens Valley proper.

GRATZ BOROUGH.

Gratz was laid out in 1805 by Simon Gratz. It is situated on the road leading from Millersburg to Reading, thirty miles from Harrisburg. It was incorporated into a borough April 3, 1852. In 1838, Mrs. Frey kept the tavern and Solomon Shindle a store. The oldest resident of the place is Squire George Hoffman, who was born two miles east of the borough March 13, 1798. He was the son of John Nicholas and Margaret (Harman) Hoffman, one of the earliest settlers in the valley, and a prominent family. Squire Hoffman has been magistrate for the past thirty-five years. When he came to Gratz in 1819 there were only five houses in the place; one was the oldest house, built here by Ludwig Shoffstall, now owned by Edward L. Umholtz. The second was built by Lewis Faust, who sold it to Rev. William Hedel, now belonging to the estate of A. K. Kepler, deceased. The third was occupied by George Feagley, and the fourth by Adonijah Matthias, a Frenchman. The fifth was occupied by George Crapp, a tenant of Mr. Wise. The store was kept by Conrad Frey, then by his widow, and later by her son-in-law, Solomon Shindle.

The municipal officers of the borough since its incorporation have been :

This town, located on the old Reading road, was the centre and field of the old-time militia musters, at which thousands used to assemble to witness the evolutions of the battalions. Jacob Hoover had a noted grist-mill two miles distant, on the Little Wisconsin. After the opening of the coal-mines a post-office was established. The present postmaster is J.

Arnholtz, and his predecessors (as far as ascertainable) were Jacob Buffington, Solomon Shindle, and C. T. Bowman. The ridge on which the borough stands was in old times called "Wild-Cat Ridge," from its being the abode in pioneer times of wild-cats.

ST. SIMEON'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CONGREGATIONS were organized in 1823, and until 1832 preaching was had in a house built by Mr. Gutz, where William Boyer now lives. A joint church edifice was built in 1832. Rev. Isaac Gerhart was the first Reformed and Rev. John Peter Shindel the first Lutheran pastor, and Rev. Joseph Hilpot the present Lutheran incumbent. The pastors of St. John's Lutheran and Hoffman Reformed Churches have generally preached here.

HOFFMAN REFORMED CHURCH.—This old church edifice, a two-story frame, built over half a century, is two and one-fourth miles from Berrysburg, three from Gratz, and is in Lykens township. The ground on which it was erected was donated by Squire John Hoffman, who was a magistrate from his twenty-fifth year until his death in 1877.

COLEMAN CHURCH.—This Union Church of the Lutheran and Reformed Churches is near the Schuylkill County line, in the extreme eastern part of Lykens township. St. Matthew's is the name of the Lutheran congregation, which is supplied with preaching by pastors of St. John's Church, Rev. Joseph Hilpot being the present incumbent.

MIFFLIN TOWNSHIP.

At a Court of Quarter Sessions held the 22d day of October, 1818, an order was issued to three commissioners to inquire into the propriety of dividing the townships of Upper Paxtang and Lykens, then embracing the whole of Lykens Valley, into three townships, as had been petitioned for by the inhabitants of said valley. The commissioners reported that they were of opinion that the two aforesaid townships ought to be divided into three, and that they had accordingly run and marked the lines of division as follows, to wit :

"The First township beginning at Mahantango Creek, a short distance below Miller's fording, on the old Sunbury road; thence down the same to the river, and across said river to the mouth of West Mahantango Creek; thence down the western shore of Susquehanna to a point opposite to Berry's Mountain; thence by Halifax township across said river and along the summit of said mountain 5 miles 200 perches to a chestnut-oak-tree; thence north 7½ west

6 miles 80 perches to the beginning, which we have called Upper Paxtang township. The Second we have called Berry township, beginning at the chestnut-oak aforesaid; thence by the summit of Berry's Mountain aforesaid 4 miles 260 perches to a small chestnut-oak; thence north 6 west 7 miles (through Hain's Gap) to Mahantango Creek aforesaid; thence down the same to the point aforesaid, near Miller's fording; thence by the line of Upper Paxtang aforesaid (reversed) south 7½ degrees east 6 miles 80 perches to the beginning. The Third beginning at the same chestnut-oak aforesaid; thence along the summit of Berry's Mountain aforesaid 10 miles to the line of Schuylkill County; thence by the same 8½ miles to Mahantango Creek aforesaid; thence down the same to Berry township aforesaid; thence by the same south 6 degrees east 7 miles to the beginning, and which we have called Lykens township."

This report was confirmed by the court March 12, 1819, except so far as the new or centre division, which the court ordered to be called Mifflin township instead of Berry, as suggested by the commissioners. It was named for General and Governor Thomas Mifflin. (See Sess. Doc. 1815-23, page 212.)

The township is bounded on the north by Northumberland County, east by Lykens township, south by Washington township, and on the west by Upper Paxtang township. The Mahantango Mountains run the entire length of the upper part of the township, the Mahantango Creek, the Northumberland County boundary, being at the foot on the north side. The township is well watered, and there are very many fine productive farms.

Much of the history of the township is identified with the history of the Lykens Valley proper; that which may have transpired during the eventful eras of the county's existence will be found in other portions of this work. It contains two important townships, Berrysburg and Uniontown.

BERRYBURG is situated on the road leading from Millersburg through Lykens into Schuylkill County, thirty-five miles from Harrisburg. It was incorporated into a borough Dec. 14, 1869. The town was laid out by John Adam Heller in December, 1819, who owned a large tract of land, including the present town and a farm adjoining, now owned by Daniel Romberger. Heller was of a pioneer family in the valley, but removed in 1839 to Sugar Valley, and subsequently to Ohio. John Paul, Jr., surveyed the town for Heller, who called it Berrysburg, from the mountain named Berry's, lying in the vicinity, but for many years went by the name of the proprietor.

A school was organized in Berrysburg about 1826. The different organized churches owned small tracts of land, from ten to twenty acres, on which a school-house was erected, all one story with divisions, one part to be occupied by the teacher and his family and the other as a school-room. About this time the townships now called Mifflin, Washington, Lykens, Wiconisco, and Williams had nine schools,—a territory of one hundred and fifty square miles. All the schools were taught in private houses except three, which were built by the citizens. The land in some cases was purchased for a few dollars and some donated, but in either instance only sufficient to erect the building. On a fixed day the inhabitants assembled at the place where the house was to be built, and some went to felling trees, others to hauling the logs, and the rest erected the house. In two or three days the house was finished. The furniture was made of pine or oak boards nailed against the wall; the benches made of slabs.

The officers of Berrysburg borough have been :

BERRYBURG SEMINARY.—This institution was organized about thirty years ago, but in the lapse of time its building was sold to the town for public-school purposes. On the reorganization in 1879 the seminary secured the property known as the town hall for its rooms. Nearly one-half of the teachers in the upper end of the county have been connected with this seminary at one time or another. This seminary was built by Rev. H. S. Bosler, and its first teacher, in 1851, was Edward Witman.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—This elegant brick church edifice is the pride of the Lutherans of Lykens Valley, and is one of the finest church buildings in the county outside of Harrisburg. The first settlers in Mifflin and Washington townships were Germans, who, on June 5, 1780, organized a church congregation called St. John's. The first baptism was Dec. 3, 1780, of Hannah, daughter of Nicholas Schnug; the second, May 8, 1781, of Catharine, daughter of Henry Umholtz; and the third, May 13, 1781, of Philepna, daughter of Christian Schnug. The first pastor was Rev. Michael Enterline. Services were held in the private dwellings of the members until 1791, when a school-house was erected, in which preaching was then had. In this year the deacons were Christian Schnug and John Matter. On Jan. 19, 1797, the following building committee were appointed to erect a new church edifice: John Matter, Sr., David Harman, Philip Bechtel, and Reuben Wise. It was built in 1798, but not being fully paid for, was not dedicated until Oct. 24, 1802. This old two-story frame edifice, with its antique but venerable steeple, stood until 1876, when the present building, a brick structure ninety by fifty-five feet, was erected. It stands on a high ridge one mile from Berrysburg and three from Elizabethtown, on land the congregation has owned since 1780. Directly opposite is the fine farm of the church, comprising sixty-five acres, with a substantial farm-house, occupied by the sexton of the church.

The pastors have been: 1780-1807, Michael Enterline; 1807-9, C. Walther; 1809-11, Daniel Ulrich; 1811-15, C. Walther; 1815-44, John Peter Shindel; 1844-50, J. Nicholas Hemping; 1850-52, C. F. Welden; 1852-53, Nathan Jaeger; 1853-64, F. Waltz; 1864-70, Jeremiah Shindel; 1870-75, Thomas T. Steck; 1875-81, R. S. Wagner; 1881, Joseph Hilpot.

UNION SALEM CHURCH of the Lutheran and Reformed congregations was built in 1844, and rebuilt in 1873. It is supplied with preaching by pastors from Elizabethtown and Millersburg. Rev. A. S. Stauffer is the present Reformed, and Rev. George Conrad Henry the present Lutheran pastor. Before 1846, John Peter Shindel preached as Lutheran pastor.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—This congregation was organized in 1846, and the church edifice was erected the same year. The first six pastors were Revs. John Kramer, Abraham Bost, Michael Sindlinger, John Sentzell, William Hime, Mr. Sharfe. Among their successors were Revs. C. S. Haymon and Jacob Adams. Since 1870 the pastors have been: viz., 1870-72, J. K. Knerr; 1872-74, J. C. Hornberger; 1874-75, John Leib; 1875-78, J. S. Newhart; 1878-80, William Black; 1880-83 (present incumbent), A. Dilahar. The circuit embraces this congregation, one at Oakdale, Weaver's, and at Gratz.

METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—This church in 1866 was made a part of Millersburg and Berrysburg Circuit, and in 1870 of the circuit composed of Berrysburg, Oakdale, and Cross-Roads. The latter was abandoned in 1877, but the church property at Oakdale is still owned. Since 1866 the pastors have been: 1866-67, A. W. Higgins; 1868-70, Abel Howard; 1870, George C. Young; 1871-74, H. White; 1874, F. M. Collins; 1875-77, F. M. Brady; 1877, John Bell; 1878-80, Joseph Gregg; 1880-82, John McQuoid.

THE UNITED BRETHREN have a large congregation and neat church in the western part of the township near the Upper Paxtang line.

UNIONTOWN.—This borough, whose post-office is Pillow, is situated in the northeast part of Mifflin township, between Deep Creek and Mahantango Creek. It was laid out in 1864, and has developed into a thriving town. It contains a Union Church (Lutheran and Reformed), Evangelical, and a United Brethren, several stores and shops, a foundry, and good school-house. Near by on Deep Creek is a large cotton-mill and saw-mill, and on Mahantango is an extensive flouring-mill. The early settlers of this region were the Deiblers, Bonawitzs, Millers, Jurys, Koppentheffers, Bohners, Weists, Boyers, Witmers, Weavers, Williards, Shepleys, and Hess'. The town is situated in a gap of the Mahantango Mountains, and is connected by stage with Elizabethville, running from the latter place to Georgetown. The first settlers were of German and Swiss-French extraction.

WICONISCO TOWNSHIP.

THE 90th section of an act of the General Assembly, passed July 2, 1839, Pam. Laws, page 602, provides:

That that part of Lykens township, in the county of Dauphin, north of lines to be run by the supervisors of said township, "commencing at a bridge crossing the head of the Widow Snyder's mill-dam at the Mifflin township line; thence east to the hand-board in the forks of road on the lands of Elder and Haldeman; thence a straight line to a house of Martin Rickert, now occupied by Peter Rickert, at the foot of the Short Mountain; thence east along the foot of the mountain (north side) to the Schuylkill County line, shall hereafter form a separate township to be called Wiconisco.

By the 54th section of an act, passed April 14, 1840, Pam. Laws, page 342, it is provided that "the name of Peter Rickert in the foregoing act shall be taken and construed to mean Henry Rickert, and that it shall be the duty of the supervisors to file the survey or plot of said lines run in the office of the Clerk of Quarter Sessions of the county of Dauphin."

On the 26th June, 1840, the plot or draft of the lines run was filed as above directed, and are as follows, to wit:

"Beginning at a point on the Mifflin township line; thence north 63½ degrees east 296 perches to cross-roads; thence due east 464 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 83 degrees east 52 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 77 degrees east 30 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 53 degrees east 120 perches to a black-oak; thence north 60 degrees east 79 perches to a chestnut; thence north 65 degrees east 61 perches to a poplar; thence north 80 degrees east 450 perches to a white-pine; thence north 75 degrees east 82 perches to a white-pine; thence north 70 degrees east 280 perches to a chestnut-oak; thence north 67 degrees east 186 perches to a chestnut; thence north 64 degrees east 300 perches to a chestnut; thence north 67 degrees east 310 perches to a white-oak at the Schuylkill County line, making in all 8 miles, 150 perches."

The early history of Wiconisco is embraced in that of the valley proper. The erection of the township divested the old township of Lykens of its coal-mining operations; all the collieries and coal-beds now lying in the new township. The contiguity of the town of Lykens, however, to that of Wiconisco borough being less than half a mile distant, still gives the former borough the prestige of being the business centre of the Lykens Valley coal operations.

The land where Lykens and part of Wiconisco now stands was owned by James Way, of Chester County, who died in 1825, before receiving a patent therefor from the State. His executor, George Pearce, obtained a patent for the land Feb. 2, 1826, and had it with other contiguous tracts surveyed by Isaac Ferree and his son, Joel B. Ferree. After they were surveyed they were put up for sale at public outcry down at the brick mill and sold. The conditions were that any person purchasing any tract was to pay immediately after the sale twenty-five dollars in cash as hand money.

LYKENS BOROUGH.

The tract of sixty-seven acres on which the borough of Lykens stands was struck down to Jane and Rachel Ferree for nineteen dollars and ninety cents. The sale really was to their father, Isaac Ferree, but for prudential reasons he ordered the deed for this tract to be made in the names of his daughters, Jane and Rachel. Isaac Ferree formerly owned a considerable amount of land in this section, and operated a powder-mill, the products of which he sold all over the country, and frequently took long drives up the river to his customers. He brought the saltpetre from Philadelphia by teams. Joel B. Ferree and his sisters subsequently laid out a town on this tract, named it Lykenstown, and the two sisters sold the lots for eleven dollars each. They were all numbered and drawn by lottery, and some hundreds of lots were thus drawn and paid for. Upon these lots log houses were built by William Zerby, Isaac Ferree, Martin Blum, Jacob Staley, Kate Bordner, Benjamin Drum, John Shehan, and Patrick Martin, south of the railroad, some of which are yet standing. The first log house, however, was built by Joel B. Ferree, in the lower part of the borough, in April, 1832, the stonework of which was done by Richard Nolen. This was the extent of Lykens in 1832.

In 1803, Simon Gratz recovered a judgment for a small amount against Isaac Ferree, and kept it alive by successive writs of scire facias. In 1835 said judgment was issued upon, and the land sold as belonging to Isaac Ferree, the court holding, in the legal contest which followed, that his daughters only held the property in trust for him. Therefore the purchaser, Simon Gratz, purchasing at sheriff's sale the interest of Isaac Ferree, it is presumed, received a good title. After the death of Simon Gratz, the land was conveyed to William Hawkins, who the same day sold it to Edward Gratz. He bought up a tax title to the same, held by Jacob M. Haldeman and Thomas Elder, July 8, 1847, which gave him an undisputed title. He then caused it immediately to be laid in lots a second time, as they now are, by Daniel Hoffman, in 1848. The first purchasers, under the Ferree sisters, all lost their lots, with the exceptions of those whose deeds were recorded at a certain date.

Since its first settlement the town has rapidly increased in wealth, influence, and population. It is the centre of the coal trade of the Upper End, and much of the industrial development of that section is due to the energy displayed by its citizens.

Lykens borough received its charter of incorporation in 1871. The chief municipal officers since that year have been :

BURGESSES.

1872. Hon. M. R. Young.	1878. Charles Wolcott.
1874. L. Katzenburg.	1880. W. S. Young.
1875. Charles Wolcott.	1881. Riley Bressler.
1876. John E. Nace.	1883. Henry Feloldt.

TOWN CLERKS.

1872. C. A. Harper.	1877. P. S. Bergtresser.
1873. E. H. Wilison.	1879. Henry Helt.
1874. Harry W. Troy.	1881. John O'Neill.
1875. John E. Nace.	1883. Henry Helt.
1876. Benjamin F. Eby.

The borough has no debt.

GRACE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—The first sermon ever preached in this place was by Rev. Thomas Sovern, of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Halifax, in 1833, it being the funeral sermon of a young Englishman killed in the mines. This sermon was preached on the porch in front of Michael Sheaffer's house. The next religious service was a prayer-meeting held in the stone school-house which stood near where the coal dirt has been burning for years. That meeting was opened by Richard Nolen, who had built the school-house. This meeting was there kept up for some time, and until another school-house was erected, and for a long time the preaching, prayer-meetings, and Sunday-schools were held in it until the building of the present churches. In 1848, Edward Gratz, Hon. A. O. Hiester, and Richard Nolen took the incipient steps for building a Methodist Episcopal Church. Mr. Gratz gave the lot and guaranteed the collection of two hundred dollars towards the building.

Mr. Nolen opened the subscription-list, and in 1850 a building committee was appointed. Mr. Nolen did the stone-work, and it was completed under the pastorate of Rev. John Cummins, and dedicated in January, 1852. This was the first church in Lykens, and this stone building is now owned by A. F. Englebert, who rented it for a dwelling, and subsequently was used for an armory. The present church edifice is the finest in the borough. Lykens and Wiconisco Circuit was formed in 1857 out of Halifax Circuit, whose pastors to that date had supplied it with preaching. Since then the pastors have been : 1857, Charles L. Stineman ; 1858, Able Howard ; 1859, John C. Gregg ; 1860, A. Fisher ; 1861, Oliver W. Landreth ; 1862, S. J. Kemble ; 1863-65, C. H. McDermit ; 1865-67, J. M. Wheeler ; 1867-68, J. J. Jones ; 1869-72, F. M. Brady ; 1872-74, J. A. Watson ; 1874-77, J. F. Meredith ; 1877, George G. Rakestraw ; 1878-80, H. R. Calloway ; 1881, Israel M. Gable, William Powick.

CHRIST PROTESTANT EPISCOPAL CHURCH.—Lykens parish was organized in 1861. The first preaching was by Rev. William V. Feltwell, in the school-house, who officiated as deacon. Mr. Feltwell's services ceased in May, 1863, from which time to 1870 no services were held, save lay readings by S. H. Barrett and George E. Hoffman. The parish was re-organized May 7, 1871, and Rev. Daniel Shaver temporarily officiated. Occasional services were held until Oct. 3, 1871, when Rev. V. Hummel Berghans became rector. Under his rectorship the church was chartered in 1872, and the corner-stone laid for the present church edifice on May 26, 1874. He resigned Jan. 1, 1875, and for four years there was no rector. Rev. Jesse M. Williams was called in 1879, and remained two years, when he was succeeded by Rev. S. H. Boyer, who continued about a year and a half. His successor was the present rector, Rev. Henry C. Pastorius, who came June 12, 1881. The church edifice was consecrated Jan. 4, 1881, and before its erection the services were held in the brick school-house.

ZION'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The first minister representing the Evangelical Lutheran Church in this vicinity was the Rev. C. F. Stoever, who preached occasionally in Lykens and Wiconisco. He was on the Berrysburg charge from 1845 to 1850. The next minister who effected a temporary organization of the congregation at Lykens and Wiconisco was Rev. N. Yeager, of the Berrysburg charge, who was here from 1850 to 1852. Rev. D. Sell, of same charge, came Nov. 2, 1853, and took up this vicinity and permanently organized the congregation, and built the present church edifice in 1859. He remained pastor until April 1, 1861, and was succeeded by Rev. P. P. Lane, who continued till April 1, 1862. Rev. G. P. Weizer took charge then until April 1, 1863, and his successor, Rev. C. A. Fetzer, remained until April 1, 1866. Rev. M. Fernler came on the Berrysburg charge Dec. 2, 1866, to April 1, 1871, at which time Lykens and Williamstown were made a separate charge, and the Rev. D. Kloss took Lykens April 1, 1871, to April 1, 1877. Rev. J. A. Wirt, the present pastor, came in charge June 1, 1877.

EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION.—Before the erection in 1873 of this church edifice the association had had preaching occasionally some six or seven years in the school-house. Its pastors have been: 1872-73, W. A. Shumacker; 1874, J. H. Wulforth; 1875-77, L. N. Warman; 1877, J. R. Hensel; 1878-80, J. S. Newhart; 1880-82, A. A. Delong. Up to 1880 this congregation was a part of Williamstown Circuit, but is now the Lykens Circuit, and embraces Wiconisco and Dayton's school-house, just this side of Williamstown.

ST. MARY'S ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.—Before 1852 services were occasionally held in the town by Father Maher, of Harrisburg. In 1852 the present church edifice was begun by Father Egle, the first regular pastor, on the formation of the congregation, and was completed in 1853. The next pastors were: in 1853, Father McLoughlin, who remained eleven years; in 1864, Father McElvain, succeeded by Father Lochland, then Father Noonan, then Father McElvain (second time), then Father Murray, then Father Mark

O'Neill, the present incumbent. The residence or parsonage was built in 1876. The building of the church edifice was largely due to the labors of J. M. Blum, the first merchant of the town.

ST. JOHN'S EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH.—The congregation was organized in 1873, and the first church edifice, a frame structure, erected in 1874. It burned down in February, 1876, and the present one was built in 1879. Its pastor has been since its organization Rev. M. B. Lenker, who has also a charge at Tower City and at Johnstown, Schuylkill Co., and a mission at Williamstown.

THE GERMAN REFORMED CHURCH was built in 1874, but is now the property of the Miners' Deposit Bank. Last pastor in 1880 was the Rev. A. S. Stauffer.

UNITED BROTHERS IN CHRIST.—This church edifice was remodeled in 1874 as a centenary. Rev. Mr. Lehman is the present pastor.

MINERS' DEPOSIT BANK.—The first banking business done in Lykens was by a branch of the Lykens Valley Bank. It was started in 1870, with C. J. Corbett sole officer. On May 6, 1872, the Miners' Deposit Bank was incorporated with an authorized capital of one hundred thousand dollars; sixty thousand dollars was paid up. The first president was J. M. Blum, whose successors have been E. G. Savage, J. Reigle, W. E. Ray, and the present incumbent, A. F. Englebert. C. J. Corbett was cashier up to July, 1879, when he was succeeded by E. W. Deible, who had been its teller from its first organization. Its present capital is fifty thousand dollars.

NEWSPAPERS.—In 1856 the first printing-press was brought to Lykens. It was a No. 2 Washington hand-press, and is still in the Register office. The first paper published was entitled The Farmers' and Miners' Journal, and the first issue appeared Aug. 16, 1856. The office was owned by an association, which employed Dr. J. B. Hower as editor, with S. B. Coles as publisher. The services of the doctor were dispensed with at the end of three months, and upon Mr. Coles then devolved the management of the paper for some two weeks, when E. J. Pinkerton, of Lancaster, took charge of the office, and remained nearly a year, when he left. Daniel Hoffman then took the paper as publisher and proprietor, with George Wolf Buehler as editor. This continued thirteen months, when Mr. Buehler became proprietor and publisher, and so continued until October, 1861, when the office turned all of its four employes into the army as its quota to aid in the suppression of the Rebellion, causing the suspension of the paper. These four printer volunteers were Henry Keiser, of Company G, Ninety-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, who served four years; John C. Gratz, of same company, who died in service of typhoid fever; John E. Roberts, enlisted at age of fifteen years in Company D, Fifth Pennsylvania Reserves, and after proving his bravery on three fields, fell at New Market Cross-Roads, June 26, 1862, and though supposed to be but wounded at the time, was never afterwards heard of; and Christopher C. Hynicka, of Seventy-sixth Pennsylvania Volunteers, was captured by the Confederates, and after a confinement of over a year was unable to reach the boat to be transported home, and surrendered his life on the altar of his country. The office then passed into the hands of S. B. Coles, who published an advertising medium called The Business Man's Journal. This continued until Aug. 1, 1865, when Capt. George W. Fenn was induced to purchase one-half of the office and establishment. The 17th of August, 1865, he published the first number of The Upper Dauphin Register and Lykens Valley Miner as a Republican paper. This firm continued but a few months, when Mr. Coles again became owner of the concern, and published the paper until November, 1868, when the present owner, Samuel M. Fenn, came in possession. On Jan. 1, 1872, the paper was enlarged, the name changed to Lykens Register. A new power-press and new material were purchased, and the Register, now firmly established, takes rank as one of the live local papers of the State. It is a thirty-two-column weekly journal, and is published Fridays.

The first number of the Lykens Record was issued July 11, 1874, by Ettinger & Charles, who continued its publication until purchased by the Lykens Printing Association incorporated March 3, 1876. The stock of this corporation was held by forty-five citizens, principally business men of the Upper End. A board of directors, president, superintendent, treasurer, and editor were annually elected to conduct the business. This paper, a thirty-two-column sheet, containing original matter on both sides, and having at one time a circulation of over seven hundred, was published about three years and then abandoned.

WICONISCO.

This enterprising town lies on the historical stream and in the township of same name. It is located on a tract of forty-eight acres of land sold in 1826 by George Pearce as executor of James Way. The conditions of the public sale were that any person purchasing any tract (of the many then to be offered) should pay immediately after the sale twenty-five dollars as hand money. This forty-eight-acre tract was struck off to John Gilbert for twelve dollars. Mr. Pearce then demanded of Gilbert the twenty-five dollars, according to the conditions, which the latter would not pay and did not take the land. Then Daniel Hoffman agreed to take it, but according to the deed he only paid for it twelve dollars after all. After the latter's death his heirs sold it for something like fifty dollars per acre. Henry Sheaffer opened the first store in a small log house in 1832. Another early settler was his brother, Michael Sheaffer, who died in November, 1849. Benjamin Carman, who kept store several years prior to 1848, removed it that year to Lykens.

The town was laid out in 1848 by Thomas Couch and Peter W. Sheaffer. It is largely settled by miners, who with their families compose an industrious and thrifty class of people. It is separated from Lykens by the Wiconisco Creek.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH edifice is the oldest, having been erected in 1854, and remodeled and enlarged in 1878. It forms part of the Lykens Circuit, for which see pastors.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION is the oldest congregation, having been organized in 1831, and with Lykens and Dayton's school-house forms a circuit, Rev. A. A. Delong, pastor.

THE WELSH BAPTIST CHURCH was erected in 1865, Rev. Jones as pastor.

THE WICONISCO TANNERY, owned by George D. Moyer & Son, is the principal industrial establishment in the town of Wiconisco. It is located near the line of the Summit Branch Railroad, and has lately been remodeled and the business facilities largely increased.

WASHINGTON TOWNSHIP.

UPON the petition of inhabitants of Mifflin township asking for a division of that township, the court, on the 3d of September, 1845, issued an order to three commissioners to view and report on the propriety of granting the prayer of said petition, who reported that in their opinion a division of said township was necessary, and that they had laid off the following portion of the same, to be called Washington, to wit:

"Beginning at a post on the line dividing said township of Mifflin from Upper Paxtang township, on the property belonging to Philip Lenker; thence a straight line bearing north seventy-five and a half degrees east fifteen hundred and six perches, or near four and three-quarter miles, to a post on the line dividing said township of Mifflin from Lykens township; thence by said line bearing south seven degrees east and about two and three-quarter miles to the top of Berry's Mountain; thence along the north side of said mountain westward four and three-quarter miles to a stone heap; thence along the Upper Paxtang township line north seven degrees west two and three-quarter miles to the place of beginning."

This report was confirmed by the court on the 23d day of January, 1846. As thus erected the township includes the fairest portion of the Lykens Valley. It is well watered by Wiconisco Creek, and is a highly-productive region. The early history of the township is comprised in that of the valley proper, for within the confines of the township Andrew Lycans, the pioneer, settled and lived.

ELIZABETHVILLE is a prosperous village, situated on the Summit Branch Railroad, nine miles from Millersburg. It was laid out about 1817 by John Bender, who owned a large tract of land upon which it is now located and in the immediate vicinity. It was for a long time called "Benderstoettle," but finally the name of Elizabethville was given it in honor of the founder's (John Bender) wife. Before it was laid out Richard Peter had built a house on the lot now the property of Widow Rickert. After the laying out of the place the first house built was put up by John Bender, and stood on the old road, but was subsequently removed to the new road, and is now owned by Adam Messersmith. It was a log structure, but has been weatherboarded and remodeled. The first blacksmith in the town was Martin Paul, although John Smith had a blacksmith-shop a short distance from the village, while his father, Adam Smith, at an earlier period had a shop farther from the place. The latter moved to town about 1819, and his son, Daniel Smith, who was born in 1809, is the oldest continuous resident there. The first store was opened by Benjamin Buffington in 1842, at which time there were not over a dozen houses in the village. John Bender, the founder of the town, kept the first hotel, which, being on the old Harrisburg road, was quite a resort for travelers and teamsters. The first wagon-maker was Benjamin R. Buffington. The first physician was Dr. John B. Stroup, who located in 1852, and who resides near the town.

WASHINGTON SQUARE is situated east of Elizabethville, and continuous therewith. It is the railroad station for the latter village, and properly is included in the same post-office. For a long time it was called Cross-Roads, and then Washington Square, by which latter title it is generally known. In 1832 there was only one house in the place. It is now a flourishing town with several stores, telegraph-office, and a number of small industries, the principal of which latter is the wagon establishment of Jonas Swab, which gives employment to a score of men.

THE LUTHERAN AND REFORMED CHURCH was erected in 1833 by the joint labors of the Salem Lutheran and Reformed congregations. It was built of stone by John Adam Heller, for three hundred dollars. The building committee on the part of the Lutheran congregation were Simon Sallada, Michael Runk, Ludwig Lingert. Its Lutheran pastors have been: 1833-44, John Peter Shindel; 1844-50, J. N. Hemping; 1850-52, C. F. Walden; 1852-53, Nathan Jaeger; 1853-64, F. Waltz; 1864-70, Jeremiah Shindel; 1870-75, Thomas T. Steck; 1875-81, R. S. Wagner; 1881, Joseph Hilpot, who is the present incumbent.

The Reformed pastors have been Revs. Isaac Gerhart, N. E. Bresler, G. B. Leshner, Kratzing, and A. S. Stauffer, present incumbent, who was called in 1876. The Reformed Sunday-school superintendent is James Miller.

THE UNITED BROTHERS CHURCH was erected by the Methodists in 1871, who in 1877 conveyed it to the former denomination. About a mile east of the town is another church of the United Brethren, a neat frame building, erected a few years since, of which, as of the first named, the Rev. Mr. Light is pastor.

AT OAKDALE, now Loyalton Post-Office, is established a flourishing academy. Prior to 1870 the Methodist Episcopal Church was erected, but in that year the charge became a part of the Berrysburg, Cross-Roads, and Oakdale Circuit. Latterly regular preaching is no longer conducted in it.

WILLIAMS TOWNSHIP.

On the 7th of February, 1869, the township of Williams was formed from the township of Wiconisco, the court directing the boundary lines as follows:

"Beginning at a black-oak on the Schuylkill County line east $46\frac{1}{2}$ degrees south 1380 perches; thence south 81 degrees west 1400 perches along the highlands of Berry's Mountain; thence due north 490 perches; thence north 60 degrees east 415 perches to the place of beginning."

As thus formed, the township is bounded on the north by Lykens township, on the east by the Schuylkill County line, on the south by Jackson township, and on the west by Wiconisco township, and includes most of what is commonly called Williams Valley. Although one of the smallest townships in the county, it is by no means the least important. It is the centre of the Lykens Valley coal basin, and the termination of the Summit Branch Railroad. Its early history and the development of its coal interests are part of the history of Lykens Valley. The business of the township centres in the mining operations.

WILLIAMSTOWN.—This great coal mart has come into existence as a town since the commencement of the coal trade. Near it is the Summit Branch Railroad and the famous Williamstown Colliery, the largest in America. In 1873 it shipped three hundred and one thousand three hundred and twenty-six tons of coal. The coal company began operations in the spring of 1866. The town was laid out by the coal company, by Martin Blum and Mr. Hellinder, and by Henry Workman, which three parties and company owned all the land upon which the town stands. What is the town proper was once offered in exchange for five thousand shingles, and subsequently sold for a span of horses, not worth over three hundred dollars, by a Mr. Updegrave. The first store in the place was kept by Jacob Hartman, and the next three were opened by George Hains, Daniel Batdorf, and Joseph W. Durbin. The oldest house in or near town is that of John Hartman, built before the coal trade opened. Jacob Hartman kept the first tavern and George Hains the second, both in connection with their little stores. Joseph W. Durbin was the first regular merchant on a large scale, and located here in May, 1866. The town was laid out in 1869, and is the largest mining town in the Upper End.

THE EVANGELICAL ASSOCIATION erected the first church, which was built in 1869 and 1870, and on the 29th of December of the latter year the congregation was incorporated. It was first a part of the Berksburg Circuit, then made Williamstown Circuit, out of which Lykens has since been taken. The pastors have been: 1871, R. Dreiblebiss, A. A. Delong; 1872, R. Dreiblebiss; 1873, W. A. Shoemaker; 1874-76, J. S. Wulfurt; 1876-78, L. N. Worman; 1878-80, J. S. Newhart; 1880-82, H. J. Glick. Before the erection of the church edifice preaching was had in the school-house. The parsonage was purchased in 1880. In the rear of the church is a neat cemetery, owned by the church, but open to all denominations for burials.

THE METHODIST EPISCOPAL CHURCH was erected in 1871. The pastors have been: 1871, F. M. Brady, Ephraim Potts; 1872-75, S. G. Grove; 1874-77, Henry White (one year, with Mr. Grove); 1877-80, Richard Turner; 1880-82, E. L. Martin. The parsonage was bought in 1880, and refitted.

THE ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH was erected in 1875, under the auspices of Rev. Mark O'Neill, present pastor, whose residence is Lykens. Before the church was built services were first held in the school-house and in the Williamstown Hall.

THE EMANUEL EVANGELICAL LUTHERAN CHURCH building was erected in 1874, under the pastorate of Rev. D. Kloss, who was succeeded in 1877 by the present incumbent, Rev. J. A. Wirt, who resides in Lykens.

THE PRIMITIVE METHODIST CHURCH building was erected in 1875 and 1876, on Broad Street. Its pastor is Rev. Thomas Coburn.

UNITED BRETHREN IN CHRIST.—This denomination has a neat church edifice, a frame structure, erected a few years since. Its pastor is Rev. Lehman, of Lykens, who has congregations at that point, here, and at Tower City.

BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY.

I.

(ALL SKETCHES MARKED WITH AN ASTERISK (*) WERE CONTRIBUTED.)

JAMES ALRICKS.

James Alricks belongs to probably the oldest family in the State. Pieter Alricks came from Holland with dispatches for the Dutch government on the Delaware in 1660, as appears by Hazard's Annals of Pennsylvania. He was immediately put in command of the fort, and was soon after sent with D'Hinnoyossa "to negotiate peace" with the Governor of Maryland. In 1665, the English having conquered the Dutch, the estate of Pieter Alricks was confiscated. Some years afterward the Dutch again obtained possession not only of the banks of the Delaware, but also of Fort Amsterdam, now New York City, and held possession until the English Governor, Audross, arrived, and then the Annals inform us thus: "Nov. 10, 1674, Fort Amsterdam, New York, was this day surrendered to Governor Audross, and all the magistrates in office at the time of the Dutch coming here to be reinstated for Delaware River, except Pieter Alricks, he having proffered himself to the Dutch at their first coming, of his own motion, and acted very violently as their chief officer ever since."

William Penn arrived for the first time on the Delaware in October, 1682. He was a model of moderation, for the next day in appointing "a court of judicature," composed of six justices, the second person named is Pieter Alricks. The next year Penn laid out the city of Philadelphia, and in 1685 he bought out the title of the Indians in a large body of land lying between Philadelphia and Wilmington, extending back from the Delaware River as far as a man "can ride in two days with a horse." The first witness to this Indian deed is Pieter Alricks.

Wissel Alricks, son of Pieter, was a native of Wilmington, Del., removed to Philadelphia, and was afterwards sheriff of Philadelphia County. Fifty years after the witnessing of this deed by Pieter Alricks, his grandson, son of Wissel, Hermanus Alricks, of the city of Philadelphia, gentleman, was examined under oath, and his testimony taken. This deed and the affidavit, dated in 1735, are both in print in the Pennsylvania Archives. Hermanus Alricks, then a young man, went some years afterwards and settled in what became Cumberland County, and was the first member of the Legislature at the organization of the county, in 1750. There were then but six counties in the State. The Legislature sat but a few weeks, and when he returned home to "Letort Springs," now Carlisle, he brought with him a commission appointing him prothonotary, register, recorder, clerk of the courts, and justice of the peace. The justices at that day sat upon the bench. While there he married Ann West from the north of Ireland, who had landed shortly before at Philadelphia with her brother, Francis West, afterwards the grandfather of the late Chief Justice Gibson. The chief of those offices, Hermanus Alricks, held as long as he lived, a period of nearly twenty-five years. All his children were born in Carlisle, his youngest child, James, the subject of this sketch, being born in that town on Dec. 2, 1769, in a house long afterward owned and occupied by Dr. McCoskry.

In 1791-92, James Alricks was engaged in mercantile business in May Town, Lancaster Co., and in 1815 he removed with his family from Lost Creek Valley to Harrisburg. He was a man of extensive reading, passionately fond of books, and he regarded an honest man, of fine education and refined manners, as the most remarkable object on the face of the earth. After his father's death he was raised on a farm in Donegal, Lancaster Co., and used to say that at that period no one could get an education for want of teachers. While lamenting his own want of education, he was remarkably well acquainted with history, ancient and modern, and with geography. He was likewise quite familiar with the writings of Shakespeare, Goldsmith, Burns, Campbell, etc. While living in the prime of life on the Juniata, he was delighted to meet and converse with such men as the Rev. Matthew Brown, the first Dr. Watson, of Bedford, Judge Jonathan Walker (the father of Robert J. Walker), William R. Smith, etc. He married, in 1798, Martha, second daughter of John Hamilton and Margaret Alexander, of Harrisburg. Mr. Alricks then resided at Oakland Mills, on Lost Creek, now in Juniata County, engaged in farming, but about 1815 removed to Harrisburg, where he entered mercantile pursuits. On March 10, 1821, he was appointed clerk of the Orphans' Court and Quarter Sessions, serving until Jan. 17, 1824. He subsequently served as one of the magistrates of the borough. Mr. Alricks died at Harrisburg on the 28th of October, 1833, aged sixty-four years. His wife preceded him, dying on the 16th of March, 1830. He was highly esteemed as a citizen, honorable and upright in character. The children of James Alricks were Ann, wife of Samuel Thompson, who was a merchant and died at Pottsville; Margaret, died unmarried; Hermanus and Hamilton, both eminent lawyers; Francis Evans, died unmarried; and Jane, wife of Ovid F. Johnson, an attorney-general of Pennsylvania. *

HERMANUS ALRICKS.

Hermanus Alricks, son of James Alricks and Martha Hamilton, was born at Lost Creek Mill, in Juniata County, in 1804. His descent in the paternal line was from Jacob Alricks, of Amsterdam, who was director for the Dutch West India Company on the Delaware, in 1657, and in the maternal line granddaughter of John Hamilton and Jane Allen, who came to Pennsylvania in 1745. In 1814 the family of Mr. Alricks removed to Harrisburg, and there the son grew to man's estate, thereafter one of the most respected citizens, receiving his education in the Harrisburg Academy, reading law in the office of Thomas Elder, Esq., marrying a daughter of Rev. William Kerr, who was a great-granddaughter of Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang. He quickly obtained a lucrative business before the courts, became one of the prominent men at the bar, and at his death the senior practitioner in Dauphin County. He was averse to holding office. The only one of prominence held by him was that of deputy attorney-general in 1829, by appointment of Hon. Amos Ellmaker, an appointment which made a great political uproar at the moment, and it is said caused the resignation of Mr. Ellmaker and of his deputy. He frequently served his fellow-citizens in municipal office, was a popular man with them, and his counsel sought upon all questions of importance.

In addressing a jury his manner was quiet, his statement clearly presented, and argument logical. His rule was to undertake no cause unless his client was able to demonstrate the justness of his case. His early training in the practice of the Orphans' and Registers' Courts soon gave him a lucrative business in that branch of his profession, where clear, concise expositions are of far more weight than the stirring eloquence of the Quarter Sessions. He was an excellent, precise, real-estate lawyer.

No one was a better reference upon questions of town or county history. His personal acquaintance was extensive, and his taste ran in acquiring the family traditions of our earliest settlers. His fund of information was at the service of his friends, always pleasantly and accurately retold, with the authority for each fact or anecdote, and he abounded with many curious and fascinating ones. His presence was imposing, quite six feet in stature, large frame, erect, and neatly clad, quite "like a lawyer of the olden time." He died at Harrisburg, February, 1874. His surviving family are Mary Wilson, married to James McCormick, Esq., William Kerr, Hamilton, Clara B., and Martha O. Alricks.

WILLIAM AYRES.

William Ayres, son of John Ayres and Jane Lytle, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was born Dec. 14, 1788, at the eastern base of Peter's Mountain, Dauphin County, where his grandfather (whose name he bore) had settled in October, 1773. The locality is noted as the commencement of the old road over the mountain. William was endowed with rare native energy and unflinching perseverance, but his opportunities for educational improvement were meagre indeed; he was indeed self-educated. His first venture, apart from the business of his father's farm, was an engagement with James S. Espy, merchant at Harrisburg, in 1816. During his two years' residence there he married Mary Elizabeth, eldest daughter of Hon. Jacob Bucher, May 6, 1817.

The next year he was induced to return to Peter's Mountain, where he kept the hotel at the crossing, assisted in conducting the farm, and became justice of the peace Dec. 13, 1819. He was elected major Second Battalion of the Sixteenth Regiment, and commissioned Feb. 22, 1822.

Looking forward, however, to making the law his profession, he removed to Harrisburg in 1824, and resided along the river, just above the town. Here he acted as a justice both for the borough of Harrisburg and for Lower Paxtang and Susquehanna townships; while at the same time he pursued his legal studies under Samuel Douglas, Esq., an eminent member of the Dauphin bar.

He was admitted to practice May 3, 1826, and his private docket shows him to have been successful from the start. He had a very large acquaintance in "the Upper End," was able to speak German, and otherwise possessed many qualifications then valued and essential to practice with profit. The celebrated McElhenny murder case, in which he saved his client from the gallows, gave him a marked prominence.

He was also attorney for various officers of the county, turnpike companies, etc.

He was elected to the Legislature in 1833-34, and again for the session of 1834-35. During this time he was the coadjutor of Thaddeus Stevens in his great conflict against the powers of darkness and ignorance for the establishment of the common-school system of 1834. The friendship of Ayres and Stevens here begun lasted through life.

In 1839, William Ayres was elected to the Town Council, and the circumstance proved a fortunate one for Harrisburg. He at once brought his great energies to bear on a project for the introduction of Susquehanna water into the borough. The idea seemed so premature that it was deemed fanciful and impracticable. Nevertheless, he alone was the means of its accomplishment, which he did by borrowing funds from the United States Bank, of which he was then a director. Harrisburg received water in seven months' time from breaking ground, and this despite of much opposition from the old fogies.

His directorship in the United States Bank (at Philadelphia) was at the invitation of the famous Nicholas Biddle, who presented him with stock and had him elected; having selected him as "a country gentleman to complete the board of directors."

Harrisburg, and having obtained an act of incorporation he went vigorously to work, as was always his way, and Harrisburg was lighted with gas.

The incorporation of the Pennsylvania Railroad, about 1846, was a project in which he was much interested, and he gave his time and services on the "Hill" gratuitously.

By this time there was not a man in Central Pennsylvania more widely known for his spirit, energy, and capacity in matters of public improvement. As a result, he was engaged by the citizens of Huntingdon to lead a project in their coal region,—the Huntingdon and Broad Top Railroad. After securing the necessary legislation, he was elected president Jan. 10, 1853. He was obliged to spend so much of his

WILLIAM AYRES.

Having thus embarked in public enterprise, even to the great sacrifice of his legal practice, he next sought to obtain a free bridge over the river, but he could not obtain sufficient aid in subscriptions to buy out the old company. He was mainly instrumental in getting up the then new prison to replace the old jail.

He was an active supporter of Gen. Harrison for President; and the Harrison letters, still preserved, show that William Ayres was his confidential friend at the capital of Pennsylvania. He had been also the advocate of Governor Ritner, whose confidential correspondence is also preserved.

The successful introduction of water encouraged him to attempt the formation of a gas company at time at Huntingdon that he could only give the road a good start; but he left its completion to others. He relinquished his position with honor, the company voluntarily presenting him two thousand dollars in cash and stock.

He immediately took up a more convenient enterprise, the Harrisburg and Hamburg Railroad, a rival line to the Lebanon Valley Railroad. He became president of the company, obtained subscriptions, and had the route surveyed, with the intention of beginning active operations in the spring of 1856. The winter of 1855-56 was devoted to office work by the engineers at Jonestown.

But William Ayres' iron constitution was crumbling by the insidious action of heart-disease. He was unable to give his own active duty or instill his own energy into others, and the railroad languished just when it should have progressed.

Mr. Ayres died, after some months' illness, May 26, 1856. His fellow-citizens united with his associates of the bar in attesting the loss of one in whom the capital of Pennsylvania found her most enterprising and energetic citizen, ever ready to labor and sacrifice for the public good, and one who, having many opportunities to have made himself rich, could never be tempted or bribed, proved unflinchingly honest, and died poor. *

MAJ. JOEL BAILEY.

Joel Bailey, son of Joseph and Lydia Bailey, was born Sept. 26, 1789, in Penn's Manor, Bucks Co., Pa. He learned the trade of a blacksmith, but late in life became a contractor on the public works. He came to Harrisburg shortly after his majority. He was first lieutenant of Capt. R. M. Crain's company in the war of 1812-14, and for many years subsequent was brigade inspector and a prominent military officer. In 1821 he was appointed one of the commissioners to fix the site of the seat of justice of Juniata County, and for a number of years was keeper of the State arsenal at Harrisburg. He was burgess of the borough in 1832, and served several terms as a member of Council. Maj. Bailey was a very active politician, an influential citizen, and a high-toned and upright gentleman, who had the respect and esteem of all who knew him. He died at Harrisburg on the 16th of October, 1845. He married, March 10, 1814, Elizabeth Seidle, of Berks County, who died Aug. 14, 1875, aged eighty-three years.

JOHN C. BARNITZ.

John Charles Barnitz, son of George Barnitz (1770-1844) and Maria Catharine Spangler (1769-1824), was born Feb. 26, 1795, at York, Pa. His ancestors were early settlers in York, and among the more prominent in the business and political affairs of that section. John C. was educated in the schools of York, and learned the occupation of a brewer. In 1831 he removed with his family to Harrisburg, purchased the lot on the corner of Third and Locust Streets, whereon he built a brewery the same year, and which he managed for a long period. He died Jan. 31, 1872, at Harrisburg. He was an active and energetic citizen, and in the First Lutheran Church, with which he was connected many years, filled responsible positions, and was organist until the burning of the First Church building, and also of the German Lutheran Church. Mr. Barnitz married, Oct. 17, 1820, Elizabeth Kunkel, born May 9, 1799, at Harrisburg, where she died Jan. 19, 1880, daughter of Christian Kunkel and Elizabeth Weltzhoever.

HENRY BEADER, Sr.

Henry Beader, son of Peter and Susannah Beader, was born in 1763, in Paxtang township, Lancaster

(now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received an education such as the schools of the period afforded, and was brought up on his father's farm until his seventeenth year. In 1779 he was in Capt. Rutherford's company which marched to Bedford County to protect the settlers there from the Indians while gathering their crops. He learned the business of a brewer, in which he established himself at Harrisburg shortly after its founding. He became quite prominent in the affairs of the new town and county, and served as one of the commissioners of the county from 1792 to 1794, and from 1797 to 1799; was county treasurer from 1806 to 1809, and commissioned by Governor Snyder register and recorder of Dauphin County, an office he filled acceptably until his death, which occurred Aug. 13, 1816, at Harrisburg, aged fifty-three years. Mr. Beader married Margaretta Horter, daughter of Valentine Horter and Magdalena Reis (born 1768; died 1847), at Harrisburg, and with her husband there buried. Their children were Henry, died unmarried, a gentleman who always took a deep interest in the prosperity of his native town; was a member of the Borough Council many years, a justice of the peace, and at the time of his death an alderman of the city; Elizabeth, married John Jacob Miller; Catharine, married, first, Nicholas B. Wood, second, Montgomery Kirk; John Louis, d. s. p.; Mary Anna, married Thomas Cooch; Peter, died unmarried; and Susan, married, first, David Beisel, second, John Pricer.

CAPT. JAMES BEATTY.

Prior to the laying out of the town of Harrisburg came James Beatty and family, locating there. From the family record, in the possession of his descendants, we have this entry: "That my children may know the place of their nativity I, James Beatty, was born in the Kingdom of Ireland, and County of Down, Parish of Hillsborough and Townland of Ballykeel-Ednagonnel, in the year of our Lord 1746, and came to America in the year 1784. My wife, Ally Ann Irwin, was born in said kingdom, county and parish, and Townland of Tillymore, within two miles of Hillsborough, three of Lisburn, three miles of Dromore, and six miles of Bally-nahinch, and ten of Belfast, which last place we sailed from the 27th of June, 1784." In the fall of this year he was settled at Harrisburg, and thus became one of its first inhabitants.

It may not be out of place in this connection to refer to the ancestors of James Beatty. After the battle of the Boyne there was a large influx of Scotch families into the north of Ireland. Among them was that of James Beatty, who located in the county of Down. The building he erected, known as "Sycamore Lodge," is yet standing, and has never been out of the occupancy of a James Beatty. It was here that the subject of our sketch was born. The first James Beatty was at the head of a very large family, some of whose descendants remain in the land of their nativity, but the greater portion are scattered over many States of the Federal Union. He was a Covenanter of the old school, and a prominent member of the Anahilt congregation, near which church repose the remains of himself and a portion of five or six generations following.

His son, William Beatty, was the father of Capt. James Beatty. He died at Ballykeel-Ednagonnell in February, 1784, and was buried in Anahilt glebe. "The grave," writes one of his descendants, "is covered with a flat tombstone, and with the exception of the name nothing can be traced, owing to the wear and tear of the weather and the continual friction of passing feet. The central portion of the stone has been worn perfectly smooth." William Beatty married, in 1741, Mary McKee, and had issue.

A few months after the death of his father, James Beatty, his wife and children came to America. He became the purchaser of a number of lots in the town of Harrisburg, some of which remain in possession of his descendants. He became quite prominent in his adopted home, and held several official positions under the borough charter. He died on the 1st of December, 1794, at the age of forty-eight, comparatively a young man. He was buried in the Presbyterian graveyard, of which church he held membership.

Capt. Beatty married, in 1768, Alice Ann Irwin, daughter of Gawin Irwin and Mary Brereton, of Tullynoore. She died in Harrisburg, June, 1805.

In personal appearance Capt. Beatty was about five feet eight inches, thick set, florid complexion, dark hair, and blue eyes. He was an active and energetic business man, and his death was a great loss to the young town.

GEORGE BEATTY.

George Beatty, youngest son of James Beatty and Alice Ann Irwin, was born in the Townland of Ballykeel-Ednagonnell, county Down, Ireland, Jan. 4, 1781. His father emigrated to America in the summer of 1784, locating at Harrisburg the same year. The elder Beatty dying in 1794, the son, after receiving a regular school education, learned the watch and clock-making with his brother-in-law, Samuel Hill, whose clocks are more or less celebrated to this day. In 1808, Mr. Beatty established himself in business, which he continued uninterruptedly for upwards of forty years. He was an ingenious mechanic, and constructed several clocks of peculiar and rare invention. In 1814 he was orderly sergeant of Capt. Thomas Walker's company, the Harrisburg Volunteers, which marched to the defense of the city of Baltimore. Mr. Beatty in early life took a prominent part in local affairs, and as a consequence was frequently solicited to become a candidate for office, but he almost invariably declined. He nevertheless served a term as director of the poor, and also as county auditor. He was elected a burgess of the borough, and was a member of the Town Council several years, and while serving in the latter capacity, was one of the prime movers in the efforts to supply the borough with water. Had his suggestions, however, been carried out, the water-works and reservoir would have been located above the present city limits. Mr. Beatty retired from a successful business life about 1850. He died at Harrisburg on the 10th of March, 1862, aged eighty-one years, and is interred in the Harrisburg cemetery. He was an active, enterprising, and an upright Christian gentleman.

WILLIAM BELL.

William Bell was born at Jaysburg, Pa., in 1790. His education was limited, and was in early life, owing to the accidental death of his father by drowning, apprenticed to the trade of a carpenter. He came to Harrisburg during the erection of the capitol, and was employed by Mr. Hills until its completion. He carried on the business until 1829, when he established a grocery, which he conducted until his death. He served frequently as a member of the Borough Council, and took a deep interest in the prosperity of his adopted home. He died at Harrisburg, on the 20th of May, 1847, aged fifty-seven years. Mr. Bell married in 1819, Elizabeth Hutman, daughter of Matthias and Catharine Hutman, born in 1792; died Feb. 28, 1868, at Harrisburg. Their children were, Catharine, George, William, Maria (married Edward Curzon), Ann, and Elizabeth.

GEORGE BERGNER.

George Bergner was a native of the village of Neunkirchen, a few miles distant from the free city of Bremen, in the kingdom of Hanover, where he was born on the 6th of June, 1818. He came to America at the age of twelve years, and reaching Reading, Pa., he apprenticed himself to Engelman, a printer and a well-known almanac-maker, with whom he served his time. In 1834 he came to Harrisburg, and worked as a compositor on the different German newspapers and journals. In 1838 he was sent by the executive committee of the anti-Masonic party to Somerset, Pa., to publish a German campaign paper, and during the Harrison campaign was sent on a similar service to New Bloomfield, Perry Co. In 1841 he purchased the Vaterland Waechter of his former employer, Mr. Ebfrenfried. During the Know-Nothing campaign of 1854 he published the American, in opposition to the tenets of that then dominant party. The following year he purchased the Telegraph, which he soon established on a successful and permanent basis. From 1857 to his death he was the publisher of the Legislative Record. In 1861, Mr. Bergner was appointed by President Lincoln postmaster at Harrisburg. He was removed by President Johnson in 1866, but upon the election of President Grant he was reappointed to the position, an office he held at the time of his death. During the Rebellion his pen and his purse were at the service of the Union, while he himself went out as a private soldier in the First Regiment Pennsylvania Militia, during the invasion of the State in 1862. Mr. Bergner's life was an active one, and yet, apart from his own business affairs and official position, much of his time was given to the public. For many years he was one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison, was a trustee of the State Lunatic Asylum, vice-president of the Pennsylvania Agricultural Society, bank director, etc. His business career was a very successful one. He died at Harrisburg, after a very brief illness, Aug. 5, 1874, aged fifty-six years.

REV. WILLIAM BERTRAM.

William Bertram, of respectable parentage, was born Feb. 2, 1674, in the city of Edinburgh, Scotland. He received his education in the university of his native place, studied for the ministry, and was licensed by the Presbytery of Bangor, Ireland, who gave him "ample testimonials of his ordination, ministerial qualifications, and regular Christian conversation." He married, about 1706, Elizabeth Gillespie, and their children were John and Elizabeth. During one of those periodical political excitements in the British Isles the son disappeared, and his parents, under the impression he had come to America, they determined, if possible, to ascertain his whereabouts, and came to Pennsylvania about the year 1730; but failing in their search they decided to remain in this country, and the following year we find him unanimously received by Donegal Presbytery, which he joined. At the same time George Renick presented him an invitation to settle at Paxtang and Derry, which he accepted. He was installed Nov. 17, 1732, at the meeting-house on Swatara. The congregation then appointed representatives. "On this side, Thomas Forster, George Renick, William Cunningham, and Thomas Mayes; on the other side, Rowland Chambers, Hugh Black, Robert Campbell, John Willson, William Willson, James Quigley, William McCord, and John Sloan." They executed to Bertram the right and title to the "Indian town tract," situated in Hanover township, on the north side of the Swatara, containing three hundred and fifty acres. On the settlement of Rev. Bertram the congregation in Swatara took the name of Derry, and the upper congregation, on Spring Creek, was styled Paxtang. In 1735, Mr. Bertram complained of the "intolerable burden" he was under with the two congregations, and Sept. 13, 1736, he was released from the care of Paxtang. The Rev. William Bertram died on the 2d of May, 1746, aged seventy-two, and his remains are interred in Derry Church graveyard, his wife dying prior thereto. He was a faithful minister of the gospel. It may be stated that through his marriage with Miss Gillespie his descendants became heirs to a handsome estate in Edinburgh. Efforts were made to secure this, but the difficulties inherent upon proving descent, we presume, have been the means of keeping the rightful parties from enjoying this patrimony.

SAMUEL S. BIGLER.

Samuel Smith Bigler, son of John Bigler, was born in 1815, in Harrisburg, Pa. His educational advantages were limited to the schools of the borough and the printing-office. He learned the art in the establishment of Jacob Babb, who then published the Morgenrothe, a newspaper with which he subsequently became identified as part proprietor and editor. Later in life he established himself in the lumber business, in which he was quite successful. He was a gentleman of energy and great force of character. In private life he was sociable, generous-hearted, and of agreeable manners. Well informed, he took a keen interest in public affairs, and withal conservative in his views of measures and men. He died at Harrisburg on the 16th of June, 1880, aged sixty-five years. Mr. Bigler married Sarah Anu Finley Laird, daughter of Andrew Finley Laird and Mary Shroom, who with five children survive.

FREDERICK BOAS.

Frederick Boas, son of Rev. William Boas, was born at Reading, Pa., July 3, 1785. His parents were emigrants from Germany and came over with the Muhlenbergs. Frederick learned the trade of a coppersmith and tin-plate worker at Reading, but commenced business for himself at Kutztown. He came to Harrisburg in 1811, where he carried on his trade successfully. He was an enterprising citizen, and although quiet and unobtrusive, a representative man in the community. He died at Harrisburg June 13, 1817, aged thirty-one years. Mr. Boas married, May 17, 1811, Elizabeth, daughter of David Krause and Regina Orth, of Lebanon, who survived her husband many years, leaving two children, Frederick Krause and Elmina (Mrs. William Jennings).

JACOB BOAS.

Jacob Boas, brother of the preceding and son of the Rev. William Boas, was born at Reading, Pa., in 1786. He was brought up to mercantile pursuits and came to Harrisburg in 1805, where he established himself in business. He served as a member of the Borough Council, and was commissioned by Governor Snyder, Feb. 6, 1809, prothonotary and clerk of the Courts of Quarter Sessions, and died while in office, on the 8th of October, 1815. Mr. Boas married Sarah, daughter of Jacob Dick, of Reading. They had five sons, William D., Jacob D., John, Augustus F., and Daniel D.

AARON BOMBAUGH.

Aaron Bombaugh, son of Abraham Bombaugh and Catharine Reehm, was born Feb. 12, 1803, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated at the private schools of the town, and at the old Academy. He was placed early in youth to the trade of a hatter with Jacob Shoemaker, of Harrisburg, and at his majority went to Philadelphia for instructions as a finisher, and while there became a member of the "Association of Journeymen Hatters," being entered March 2, 1824. He returned to his native town and established himself in business, which he followed several years, until he was obliged to relinquish it, owing to impaired health, which had been affected by the dyes used in coloring the felt. He then assumed charge of his father's extensive limestone quarry, conducting that business with marked success. Like his father and grandfather before him, Mr. Bombaugh took a prominent part in municipal affairs, and frequently served in the Borough Council. From 1838 to 1844 he served as treasurer of the county of Dauphin, a position he filled efficiently and acceptably. He was one of the first advocates for the establishment of a lunatic hospital by the State for the insane poor of the commonwealth, and greatly aided Miss Dix in her efforts to secure State assistance for the inauguration of those noble charities which have so distinguished Pennsylvania. He was one of the first trustees of the institution located at Harrisburg. Having several farms near the city, the latter years of his life were passed in their management. He died at Harrisburg on the 13th of December, 1877, in the seventy-fifth year of his age. He was an early Abolitionist, as the anti-slavery men were denominated, a decided anti-Mason in the days of that crusade, and with well-defined and positive convictions was ready to encounter any amount of obloquy in their defense. During the Rebellion he devoted his time and means to the care and comfort of the Pennsylvania soldiers in camp and hospital. He was the last survivor of the Unitarian Society established by the Rev. Mr. Kay, and which, from successive deaths and lack of fresh accessions, melted away many years since.

Mr. Bombaugh was twice married,—first, on May 3, 1827, to Mira Lloyd, daughter of Joseph Lloyd, an attorney-at-law, of Philadelphia, born there in 1809, and died Jan. 1, 1853, at Harrisburg, and their children were Dr. Charles Carroll, now of Baltimore, Md.; Lavinia, married Gilliard Dock, of Harrisburg; Alexander, d. s. p.; Catharine, married Junius B. Kaufman, a lawyer, of Lancaster, Pa.; and Julia, married Dr. Grafton, of Baltimore. Of these only Dr. C. C. Bombaugh and Mrs. Kaufman are living. Mr. Bombaugh married, secondly, Julia Duncan, of Duncan's Island, who survives.

ABRAHAM BOMBAUGH.

Abraham Bombaugh, son of Conrad Bombaugh and Esther Zell, was born in 1770 in Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received a fair German education, and entered mercantile life, subsequently, however, turning his attention to farming. His father, being a man of considerable influence in the young town, gave Abraham prominence, and being a gentleman of energy and activity, apart from his business tact, he was not long in winning his way to popular favor. As early as 1808 he was a member of the Town Council, and for a period of twenty-five years thereafter held a position therein. In 1809 he was chief burgess of the borough, and later on in life, from 1828 to 1831, elected to the same office. He was one of the county commissioners from 1832 to 1835, and for one or two terms was a director of the poor. Mr. Bombaugh died April 23, 1844, at Harrisburg. He married, March 18, 1802, Catharine Reehm, born July 14, 1770, died March 22, 1855. They had Aaron, married Mira Lloyd, of Philadelphia; Catharine, d. s. p.; and Sarah, married David Hummel.

CONRAD BOMBAUGH.

Conrad Bombaugh, son of George Bombaugh, was born at Middletown, Pa., about 1750. He was a millwright by profession, and established the first mill at Standing Stone, now Huntingdon. About the commencement of the Revolution he located at Highspire, and when the county of Dauphin was organized, in 1785, we find him a resident of the new town. He was a prominent citizen of Harrisburg, was the senior burgess of the borough during the Whiskey Insurrection, and signed the address to Gen. Washington on passing through Harrisburg westward. He died in April, 1821, aged seventy-one; married Catharine Zell, and they had one child, Abraham.

REV. JACOB BOMBERGER.

Jacob Bomberger, son of John Bomberger and Mary Bauman, was born in 1744 in Warwick township, Lancaster Co., Pa. He received the rudiments of a German education, and was brought up on his father's farm. During the Provincial era he served as an officer in the Second Battalion of the Pennsylvania troops under Gens. Forbes and Bouquet. During the Revolution he was some time in service, but turning his attention to religion he began to study such theological works as were within his reach. After the peace of 1783 he went into the Western country, and for many years missionated among the Indians in the Northwest. During the war of 1812-14, well advanced in life, he returned to Pennsylvania and remained with his friends. He died near Harrisburg, on the 4th of August, 1829, at the age of eighty-five, and was buried in Sherer's burying-ground. The labors of Mr. Bomberger for many years were of that self-sacrificing spirit and devotedness which proved that others there were beside the zealous Jesuit and the faithful Moravian, whose religious fervor and Christ-like example stand out as shining lights in the galaxy of the followers of the doctrines and teachings of Jesus of Nazareth.

JOHN F. BOWMAN.

John F. Bowman was born in Lancaster County, Pa., May 10, 1771. His father was a farmer, residing on Pequa Creek, not far from Strasburg. John F. was brought up as a millwright, but subsequently entered mercantile pursuits. In 1809 he removed to Halifax, where he was a merchant from that period to 1830, when, believing a larger sphere of trade was opened for him, he went to Millersburg, where he successfully continued in business until his death, which occurred on the 6th of November, 1835. Mr. Bowman first married, in 1794, a daughter of Isaac Ferree, whose farm adjoined that of his father. By this marriage they had the following children: Eliza, Maria, George, and Josiah (married Elizabeth Rutter). Mr. Bowman married, secondly, in 1805, Frances Crossen, daughter of John Crossen. They had issue as follows: John J. (married Margaret Sallade), Levi, Louisa, Isaac, Mary E. (married Rev. C. W. Jackson), Lucinda (married Dr. Hiram Rutherford), Jacob, Emeline, and Benjamin. His second wife, Frances Crossen, born Aug. 13, 1786; died Sept. 30, 1846, and lies interred beside her husband in the old Methodist graveyard at Millersburg.

John F. Bowman was one of the representative men of the "Upper End," enjoyed a reputation for uprightness and honesty, and highly esteemed by those who knew him. Genial, yet quiet and unobtrusive, he never sought or would accept any local or public office.

CAPT. ADAM BOYD.

Adam Boyd, the son of John Boyd and Elizabeth Young, was a native of Northampton County, Pa., born in 1746. His ancestors were of that sturdy and fearless race who, after winning religious liberty at home, braved the perils of the ocean and a life in the wilds of America, that they might establish civil and religious freedom in the New World. "In the tenth of Queen Anne," John Boyd and a younger brother, Rev. Adam Boyd, sons of Rev. Adam Boyd, Sr., left Scotland and landed at Philadelphia. John married there the year following, Jane Craig, daughter of Thomas Craig, and subsequently became (1728) one of the first immigrants to the "Irish Settlement," now Northampton County. His son, John, born in Philadelphia in 1716, married, in 1744, Elizabeth, daughter of Sir William Young, "an Ulster baronet." Their eldest son was Adam Boyd, the subject of this sketch.

He learned the trade of a carpenter, and was following that avocation when the war of the Revolution called to arms. He was an early associator, and when the State of Pennsylvania had formed its little navy for the protection of the ports on the Delaware, Lieut. Boyd received a commission therein. During the year 1776, and the early part of 1777, he was most of the time in command of the armed sloop "Burke," and rendered efficient service in the conflict between the Pennsylvania navy and the British ships "Roe-back" and "Liverpool" in May, 1776. Growing tired of that branch of the service, Lieut. Boyd requested to be discharged, that he might volunteer in the land forces. Being honorably dismissed the navy, he at once entered the army proper, holding the same rank therein. He was at the battles of Brandywine and Germantown, with two of his brothers, one of whom was killed in the latter engagement. Subsequently, Lieut. Boyd acted as "master of wagons," and as such remained with the army until after the surrender at Yorktown.

Returning to the home of his mother, near Newville, he married and came to Harrisburg. While passing through Harris' Ferry, in the spring of 1782, Mr. Boyd was struck with the immense advantages offered by the location of the proposed town, and subsequently purchased of the proprietor a lot on the corner of Second and Mulberry Streets. In 1784 he became a permanent resident. The dwelling-house erected by him in 1792 on lots 210 and 212 of the original plan of the borough, on Second below Mulberry, is yet in the ownership of his descendants.

Upon the incorporation of the borough of Harrisburg, in 1791, he was chosen a burgess, Dr. John Luther being the other. In 1792 he was elected treasurer of the county, and held the office until 1806, when he declined a re-election. In 1809, Mr. Boyd was elected a director of the poor, and during his term of office the county poor-house and mill were erected.

Mr. Boyd died on the 14th of May, 1814; was interred in the Presbyterian graveyard, but subsequently his remains were removed to the Harrisburg cemetery.

In private trusts Mr. Boyd was very frequently employed. His correspondence and accounts show precision and method, particularly the case with which he managed the estate of the younger William Maclay. In person he was five feet eight inches in height, a stout, healthy, florid man, dark brown hair and eyes. At fifty-two years of age he had no gray hairs. He is rated on the "Mill Purchase" at £23 2s., being the fourth highest assessment upon that curious record.

Mr. Boyd married, in 1784, Jeannette Macfarlane, of Big Spring, Cumberland County, daughter of Patrick and granddaughter of James Macfarlane, who came from Ireland to Pennsylvania in 1717. Mrs. Boyd died in early life at Harrisburg, leaving one child, a daughter Rosanna, who married Hugh Hamilton in 1807. This estimable lady lived until 1872, when she died, the oldest inhabitant of Harrisburg, having been born here in 1786.

GEORGE BOYER.

George Boyer, son of George Boyer (1760-1814) and Anna Maria (1760-1831), was born Sept. 16, 1781, near Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., Pa. He received a limited education, learned the trade of a tanner, and for a number of years carried on that enterprise at Harrisburg, where his father was "an early inhabitant." For a long time he kept the "Golden Lamb," a favorite hostelry in its day at the corner of Second and Locust Streets, which his father had established as early as 1792. Mr. Boyer was quite prominent in political affairs, served frequently in the old Borough Council, and was elected auditor of the county in 1827, serving three years. He was an energetic citizen, and popular. He died at Harrisburg Feb. 9, 1839, in his fifty-eighth year. Mr. Boyer was twice married, his first wife, Mary, born Oct. 6, 1786; died Dec. 10, 1808; his second wife, Mary, born Oct. 12, 1782; died Aug. 2, 1858.

JOHN H. BRIGGS.

John Hanna Briggs, son of Joseph Briggs and Caroline E. Hanna, was born in 1815, at Silver Spring, Cumberland Co., Pa. His ancestors were of English descent, and early settlers in Pennsylvania. He received a classical education, and was a graduate of Rutgers College, New Jersey. Returning to Harrisburg, where his parents had made their home, he began the study of law with James McCormick, then one of the leading lawyers at the capital, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar April 18, 1837, and at once entered upon a successful practice of his profession. Mr. Briggs took a prominent interest in municipal affairs, was nine years a member of Borough Council, of which body he was eight years president. He was a director of the old Harrisburg Bank, of the Harrisburg Bridge Company, and president of the First National Bank of Harrisburg at the time of his death, which took place March 29, 1872, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. "He had gained," says Rev. Dr. Robinson, "the reputation of a wise and able counselor, and an untarnished name. He was a most upright citizen, useful, patriotic, and public-spirited. He was a true friend, generous and forbearing. His social qualities and gentlemanly bearing surrounding him with friends." Mr. Briggs married Juliann Tod, daughter of Judge John Tod and Mary R. Hanna.

CAPT. JOHN BRISBAN.

John Brisban, a native of County Tyrone, Ireland, was born Dec. 25, 1730. With an elder brother he came to America at the outset of the French and Indian war. He was a soldier in that sanguinary struggle for French supremacy in America, and held a lieutenant's commission in the English army. He was a part of the time in Canada, and was with Gen. Wolfe on the Plains of Abraham. For those services he received a grant from George III. of two thousand acres of land in Virginia. He subsequently settled in Lancaster County. He early espoused the cause of the Colonies, and receiving a commission as captain in the Second (Col. St. Clair's) Pennsylvania Battalion, Jan. 5, 1776, raised a company mostly in the upper part of then Lancaster County, now Dauphin and Lebanon, which was in active service in Canada. At the close of that arduous campaign he was transferred to the Third Regiment of the Pennsylvania Line, resigning in July, 1777. He subsequently returned to the service, and remained almost to the close of the Revolution, when he returned to his farm near "Bird-in-Hand," Lancaster County, and was appointed collector of military fines. He was, however, too kind-hearted to oppress the delinquents, consequently he became responsible to the government for the amount, which resulted in Capt. Brisban becoming poor and penniless. All the papers pertaining to his military services were sent to Washington for the purpose of securing a pension, but unfortunately lost. Capt. Brisban was twice married, and left issue by both. He died at the residence of his son-in-law, Sannel Rutherford, near Harrisburg, Pa., March 13, 1822, aged ninety-one years. He lies buried in Paxtang Church graveyard. Capt. Brisban was an ardent patriot, and a gentleman of generous impulses. He lived an eventful life, and died at a ripe old age, honored and respected by his fellow-citizens.

MERCER BROWN, M.D.

Mercer Brown was born near Westchester, Chester Co., Pa., April 22, 1795. After receiving a thorough academic education, he began the study of medicine under Dr. King, of Columbia. He graduated in 1816, and located at McCall's Ferry, at which point many persons at that time were being employed in the erection of the bridge over the Susquehanna, numbers of whom had been attacked by severe sickness. He subsequently removed to Wrightsville, where he remained several years, when he located in Middletown, and, until his death, which took place Feb. 19, 1871, he was regarded as the head of the medical profession there. Dr. Brown was long a prominent actor in local and State politics. He was a candidate for Congress at one time, but, his party being in the minority in the district, he was defeated. As a citizen he was highly respected and beloved. Dr. Brown married Rebecca Wolfy, daughter of Jacob Wolfy, an early settler at Middletown. She died April 2, 1861.

PETER BRUA.

Peter Brua, the son of John Peter Brua, was a native of Berks County, Pa., where he was born in 1771. He learned the trade of a carpenter, and came to Harrisburg about 1792. He served as director of the poor from 1813 to 1821; was a member of the Borough Council in 1824, 1826, and 1829; commissioned county treasurer Jan. 7, 1824, and was one of the county commissioners from 1827 to 1829. While in the latter office he was a prime mover in establishing the Lancasterian system of education, which preceded that of the common schools. Mr. Brua was a gentleman of sound practical sense, honest and upright, and highly honored in the community. He died at Harrisburg on the 1st of January, 1842, in his seventy-first year. He married Catharine Rupley, of Cumberland County, Pa., who died on the 19th of January, 1833, aged sixty years. They had six children,—Margaret, married Hon. Simon Cameron; Lucretia, married Jacob Hoyer; Mary, married Isaac McCord; Catharine, married Andrew Keefer; Jacob, who went as private in the Cameron Guards to Mexico, and died at Tampico, a few hours after receiving his commission as a lieutenant in the United States army; and John Peter, who was a paymaster during the late civil war and now on the retired list of the United States army.

JOHN JACOB BUCHER.

John Jacob Bucher, born Jan. 1, 1764, was the eldest child of Rev. John Conrad Bucher, an officer of the Provincial service, and stationed at Carlisle. The father had been successively promoted from ensign to lieutenant, adjutant, and captain; but finally exchanging the military for the ecclesiastical, he became chaplain. In 1768 the father resigned and moved to Lebanon, Pa., where he accepted the pastorate of the German Reformed congregation. Here, at the age of fourteen, Jacob Bucher began to learn the trade of a hatter with Michael Krebs, father of the distinguished Rev. John M. Krebs, lately of New York City. Whatever of education Jacob obtained must have been derived from his accomplished father, and by self-tuition, as evidenced by his "copy-book," still preserved and now ninety-six years old!

After his freedom from apprenticeship he visited some maternal uncles "out West." Starting on his trip via Harrisburg, in 1785, John Harris wanted him, as a hat-maker, to locate in his "town," which was as yet no town. Jacob, not being able to see it, went his way, and during his sojourn attended an Indian council on the spot where Cincinnati stands to-day. Having the ague during three out of four years on the lower Ohio, he returned to Lebanon in 1789. But his paternal relatives at Shaffhausen, Switzerland, induced him to visit them, and off he went by packet from Philadelphia to Amsterdam. He was absent about a year, and returning, located at Harrisburg.

In March, 1792, Jacob married Susannah Horter, a maiden scarce eighteen, and he built the house No. 103 South Front Street as a home. His hatter-shop stood at No. 3, near Market Street. About 1804 he moved to the corner building, which the Bucher family still occupies, after three-fourths of a century, a longer time perhaps than any other continuous residence in the town. Jacob Bucher had two sons, the late Judge John Conrad, of Harrisburg, and Hon. George H., now residing at Mechanicsburg. His daughters married, respectively, William Ayres, Esq., of Harrisburg; Robert Allen, Esq., of Philadelphia; Hon. Joseph Lawrence, of Washington Co., Pa.; and Robert Bryson, Esq., now of Harrisburg.

The public life of Jacob Bucher began with his election as coroner in 1796; appointed by Governor Mifflin a justice of the peace in 1798; elected to the House of Representatives in 1803, and re-elected for the sessions of 1805-6 and 1807-8. In 1810 he was appointed chairman of the commission to erect the State buildings, preparatory to removal of the capital from Lancaster to Harrisburg. Edward Crouch, of Dauphin County, and John Dorsey, of Philadelphia, were his coadjutors, but he being the resident commissioner, the bulk of superintendence naturally devolved upon him.

In 1812 he was nominated by the Democratic party for Congress, but the Federalists carried the district. He was sent again to the Legislature in 1814 and the session following.

In 1818, Governor Findlay appointed him an associate judge for Dauphin County, which position he held nine years, until his death, Oct. 16, 1827, aged nearly sixty-four. It is a coincidence worth noting that his son, John Conrad, occupied the same office also for twelve years prior to his death, Oct. 21, 1852.

The trusts which Jacob Bucher filled of a more private character were those which designate him as a man enjoying the confidence of his fellow-citizens, and in the church a member above reproach. From his judicious management of the State buildings, or some other reason, he became the common treasurer or financier of the town. *

HON. JOHN C. BUCHER.

John Conrad Bucher, the son of Jacob Bucher and Susannah Horter, was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 28, 1792. He bore the ancestral name of his father's family. He received such an education as the schools of the town afforded, and entered practical life in 1813, as a clerk in the old "Land Department" of Pennsylvania, under Gen. Andrew Porter and Richard T. Leech. In 1830 he was elected to the Twenty-second Congress from the district comprising Dauphin and Lebanon. In 1839 he was appointed by Governor Porter an associate judge of the county of Dauphin, which position he held for twelve years. He frequently served as a member of the Borough Council, and was a school director from the adoption of the common-school system until the day of his death. Few men have taken warmer and deeper interest in educational matters. He was also a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy, of (then) Franklin College at Lancaster, and of Marshall College at Mercersburg, and of the Theological Seminary of the Reformed Church. In the German Reformed Church, among the "fathers" of which his grandfather, the Rev. John Conrad Bucher, of Lebanon, was a distinguished minister, he was regarded as a devout and conspicuous man. He was well known in its ecclesiastical councils, having been frequently a member of Classis and Synod, where he took the lead among the laymen in debate, and was treasurer of the Board of

John C. Pugh

Domestic Missions, and of the Theological Seminary. For a long period he was an active member of the executive committee of the Harrisburg Bible Society, and president of the association at the time of his death. In private life he was amiable, "given to hospitality," and eminently just. His death was very sudden, having been found dead in bed on Sabbath morning, October 26, 1851, and occurred in his fifty-ninth year, just after returning from a church-meeting at Lancaster. Judge Bucher married, Jan. 17, 1820, Eleanor, daughter of Jacob Issett, of Huntingdon County, Pa., who survived her husband thirty years, dying at Harrisburg, March 6, 1881, at the age of eighty-three. They had John C., Susan (married Alexander Ray, of Washington City), Eleanor, and Eliza (married Richard H. Hummel). Mrs. Ray and Mrs. Hummel, both widows, alone survive.

GEORGE BUEHLER.

George Buehler, the son of Henry Buehler, a soldier of the Revolution, and Jane Trotter, was born near the town of Lebanon, Pa., in July, 1776. His parents were Moravians; they lie buried in Mount Hebron burying-ground, and were lifelong members of old Hebron Church. George received a good English and German education at the celebrated Moravian school at Litz, and was subsequently brought up to mercantile pursuits. He was commissioned by Governor Mifflin justice of the peace for Lebanon township Dec. 3, 1799. The year following, under the auspices of the Harrisburg and Presqu' Isle Land Company, he removed to Erie, and was appointed in August, 1801, by President Jefferson, collector of the Eighteenth Collection District of Pennsylvania. Mr. Buehler took a prominent part in the affairs connected with the early organization of Erie County. At his residence, on the 23 of April, 1803, that county was organized for judicial purposes. He was a member of the first Council of the town of Erie in 1806, and in 1808 and 1809 was borough Burgess. He was one of the first to aid in developing the Lake Erie trade, foreseeing at that early day the advantages of that magnificent port on the lakes. In 1811-12 he was a member of the Erie Light Infantry, Capt. Foster, which was in active service during a portion of that period. In 1813, owing probably to the war troubles on the frontiers, he came to Harrisburg and took charge of the "Golden Eagle." He died at Harrisburg on the 5th of August, 1816, aged forty years. Mr. Buehler married previous to removing to Erie, Maria, daughter of Peter Nagle, of Reading. She was born Dec. 25, 1779, and died at Harrisburg July 27, 1843; a lady of great amiability of character. Mr. Buehler was a man of sterling integrity, and his brief life was one of activity, enterprise, and industry. At Erie he stood high in the esteem of its citizens, and at Harrisburg his appreciation was none the less.

WILLIAM BUEHLER.

William Buehler, son of George Buehler and Maria Nagle, was born in 1808, at Erie, Pa. His father removed from Erie to Harrisburg in 1813, and died at the latter place in 1816. When a young man, the son went to Chambersburg, where he learned the mercantile trade. He subsequently removed to Philadelphia, where he was engaged as a merchant in the hardware business. He returned to Harrisburg about December, 1848, and took charge of the Buehler House, which had been conducted by the family since 1813. Here he remained several years, when he embarked in the insurance business, then comparatively in its infancy, and became State agent for the insurance company of North America. The result was the establishment of one of the largest insurance departments in the State, successfully and reliably carried on until his death. It was not alone in the business walks of life that Mr. Buehler was widely known and esteemed. For many years he was a prominent and active member of the Protestant Episcopal Church; was warden of St. Stephen's Church, and the superintendent of its Sunday-school for a long period. He represented his church in the different dioceses to which he belonged, and took an earnest part in all questions that arose therein relating to the extension and prosperity of the church. From the organization of the diocese of Central Pennsylvania until his decease, he had been the treasurer thereof, a most responsible position, and by his good judgment, liberality, and kindness, did much to advance the financial interests of the new diocese. He was identified with the successful establishment of the Home for the Friendless, and was a member and officer of the Harrisburg Benevolent Society, which has done so much to relieve the poor and needy of the city. In every organized effort for public charity he took an active part, contributing and counseling, and working with his own hands to promote good works in others. But his individual charities were the most characteristic of the man, for it was by these that "he established for himself a brotherhood with men which made his name blessed among them." He died suddenly at Harrisburg on Sunday morning, June 12, 1881, aged seventy-three years. Mr. Buehler married May 17, 1831, at Chambersburg, Pa., Henrietta R. Snyder, who survives. Their children were Anna (married Robert A. Lambert, LL.D., president of Lehigh University), Elizabeth (married, first, Charles Hammond, second, H. Stanley Goodwin), Catharine (married Capt. George Ramsey, United States Army), Dr. Henry B., William, and Edward.

COL. JAMES BURD.

James Burd, a Scot, was born at Ormiston, near Edinburgh, in 1726, son of Edward. He came to Philadelphia in 1747, married, 1748, Sarah, daughter of Edward Shippen, born 1730. Both died at Tinian, near Middletown, in Dauphin County, Pa. (Col. Burd in 1793, Mrs. Burd in 1784), and are buried in the graveyard at Middletown. Col. Burd resided from 1750 to 1753 at Shippensburg, as manager of the affairs of Mr. Shippen. About 1755 he came to Tinian, where he resided until his death. He entered the Provincial service (1755) as a commissioner with George Croghan, William Buchanan, and Adam Hoopes to lay out a road from "Harris' Ferry to the Ohio." He was then a captain; he is soon heard of as major, then lieutenant-colonel, and colonel in 1760. As there were but two regiments in service, his rank was a very prominent one. He fulfilled with great uprightness and punctuality all the public duties with which he was intrusted for quite twenty years. Then the stirring days of the Revolution came, and with it disaster to Burd as a public man. He seems to have entered heartily into the contest, but just when such experience as he had acquired would have been of the highest benefit, an unfortunate dispute about rank occurred; that, with insubordination in his command, and some criticism in the "Committee of Safety," caused him to resign his civil and military employments. His sons and son-in-law were good patriots, and a pretty thorough examination of the hasty conduct of Burd convinces us that he was, notwithstanding this affair, in accord with the leading patriots with whom he was surrounded. He was a man of fine form, hardy and healthy, an advanced and prosperous farmer, hospitable in his intercourse with his neighbors, and respected for his integrity as a civil officer from 1785, when Dauphin County was formed, until his death, in 1793. He died holding position as one of the county judges.

MICHAEL BURKE.

Michael Burke was born on the 29th of September, 1797, in Templetrathen, County Tipperary, Ireland. Having received a limited education, he left his native land in his eighteenth year for Newfoundland, where an uncle was extensively engaged in the fisheries off that coast. There he remained only a brief period, being eager to reach the United States. His first destination was Lockport, N. Y., where he secured a position as book-keeper for a prominent contractor. He here gained his first idea of a business which he subsequently successfully followed. In 1824 he secured a contract on the Erie Canal, and upon its completion went to Akron, Ohio, to construct a section of the canal at that place. From thence he came to Pennsylvania, this State being largely engaged in perfecting her system of internal improvements, and a wide field for Mr. Burke's business energies was open before him. Securing the contract for that portion of the Juniata division of the Pennsylvania Canal between Mexico and Lewistown in 1829, he fixed his permanent home at Harrisburg. Identifying himself with the business and welfare of the town of his adoption, he was chosen to the Borough Council, and in the establishment of the first system of water-works took an active and warm interest. During a portion of this period he was president of the legislative body of the town, and on several occasions became personally responsible for the payment of loans secured for the construction of the water-works. Upon the completion of the through transportation to Pittsburgh by the Pennsylvania Canal, Mr. Burke, with several others, commenced a packet-line from Philadelphia to the former place, he having his office at Harrisburg. He also became interested in the Portable Line, in which enterprise, however, he sustained a loss of thirty-five thousand dollars; but not discouraged, he continued in other business ventures. The first or pioneer blast-furnace erected at Harrisburg was by Mr. Burke and Governor Porter. It was erected along the line of the Pennsylvania Canal above State Street. While in successful operation several years, Mr. Burke withdrew from the firm, owing to his connection with several contracts on the various railroads then building in the State. He constructed portions of the Pennsylvania road between Harrisburg and Pittsburgh, and on the Northern Central between Harrisburg and York. He had contracts in Massachusetts and New Hampshire, and was also engaged in the construction of reservoirs, building one at Baltimore, Md., in 1860, and was engaged in the erection of one in Washington City at the time of his death. He died at Harrisburg on the 15th of August, 1864, in his sixty-seventh year. Few men have exhibited more public spirit than Mr. Burke, and during his entire residence at Harrisburg he was held in the highest esteem by his fellow-citizens, who admired his energy and remarkable business capacity. To those who knew him best he was kind, obliging, genial, and noble-hearted.

Mr. Burke married, on April 6, 1824, Mary A. Finley, of Lockport, N. Y., who survives. Their children have been: William (deceased), John Michael (deceased), George Washington, Josephine (married James Brady, second), Martina (married Edward P. Kearns), and Regina.

WILLIAM CALDER, SR.

William Calder, eldest child of John Calder and Naomi Norris, was born in Belair, Harford Co., Md., July 24, 1788. The father was a native of Scotland. William remained on the farm of his parents in Harford County until he was of age, when he removed to Baltimore, and soon thereafter to Lancaster, Pa. When the seat of government was removed from Lancaster to Harrisburg he came to the latter place, and resided there up to the time of his death.

In 1817 he married Mary Kirkwood, who was born in Armagh, Ireland, of Scotch-Irish parents, and emigrated to this country when seven years of age. Their children were John, Mary (wife of Wells Coverly), William, Matilda (wife of Charles A. Keller), and James. His wife died in 1858, and in 1860 he married Margaret C. Walmer, of Dauphin County, by whom he had no issue. He died March 5, 1861, and of his children none now survive him except the youngest, Rev. James Calder, D.D., of Harrisburg.

Immediately upon leaving Harford County, Mr. Calder became interested in lines of stage-coaches and the United States mail service, and for fifty years this was his chief business. Up to the time of the sale of the public works of Pennsylvania he was associated with Alexander Wilson, of Lewistown, Jacob Peters, of Philadelphia, Silas Moore, of Hollidaysburg, and other gentlemen in the "Pioneer," "Good Intent," and "Express" companies for the transportation of passengers and mails by cars and canal packet-boats. He never lost his fondness for farming and live-stock, and maintained several of the most fertile farms in Dauphin County. Enterprises for the development of the resources of the country and particularly the business of Harrisburg received his support. He built many houses, favored the introduction of manufactures, and at the time of his death possessed an ample fortune. *

WILLIAM CALDER.

John Calder (1749-1806) resided near Belair, Md. His eldest son, William (1788-1861), married Mary Kirkwood (1790-1858), who bore him children: John, Mary (wife of Wells Coverly, proprietor of the Coverly House, Harrisburg), William (subject of this sketch), Matilda (wife of Charles Keller), and Rev. James Calder (the youngest surviving in 1882).

William Calder was born July 31, 1821, and died July 19, 1880. He had limited education from books, being inducted into the stage-line business at the age of twelve years. At the age of sixteen his father put him in charge of the Philadelphia Packet Line from Columbia to Pittsburgh. In 1851 he assumed the management of his father's business, and in 1857 undertook the completion of the Lebanon Valley Railroad. In 1858 he became a member of the well-known banking firm of Cameron, Calder, Eby & Co., which afterwards became the First National Bank, of Harrisburg, of which Mr. Calder was chosen president. The same year he was elected a director of the Northern Central Railway, and was active in preserving Pennsylvania's interests in that corporation. At the breaking out of the rebellion he rendered the government important service through his large knowledge in the purchase of horses, and supplied the government with no less than forty-two thousand horses and sixty-seven thousand mules, establishing the price ($125 and $117.50) so low as to effect a very great saving to the government in this department. Mr. Calder was always foremost in the promotion of Harrisburg's industrial enterprises. He was one of the founders of the Harrisburg Car-Works, the Lochiel Rolling-Mills, the Harrisburg Cotton-Mills, Foundry and Machine-Works, the Fire-Brick Works, and the Pennsylvania Steel-Works.

In 1873 he was commissioned by Governor Hartranft a trustee of the Pennsylvania State Lunatic Hospital, and reappointed in 1876. In 1876 he was appointed by the same Governor a member of the commission to devise a plan for the government of cities, and in 1880, just prior to his death, he was elected a director of the Pennsylvania Institute for the Deaf and Dumb. For many years he ably officiated in the management of city affairs through its Councils. He was among the founders of the Harrisburg Hospital and the Grace Methodist Episcopal Church, of which he was an attendant. He was formerly a Whig, latterly a Republican, and influential in local and State politics, and one of the Presidential electors from this State in 1876.

Upon the occasion of President Lincoln's visit to Harrisburg, when a plot was laid to assassinate him on his return to Baltimore, Mr. Calder was selected to escort him safely to take another train from the one intended at first, and thus his enemies' designs were thwarted. His widow is Regina Camilla, daughter of Jacob and Catherine (Krause) Greenawalt. Their children are Edmund Kirkwood (died Dec. 31, 1862, aged thirteen years), William Jacob, Catharine Krause, Theodore Greenawalt, Regina, and Mary Kirkwood Calder. *

MAJOR BRUA CAMERON.

William Brua Cameron, son of Simon Cameron and Margaret Brua, was born Aug. 1, 1826, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a classical education, and graduated at Princeton College in 1847, studied law with James McCormick, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Jan. 23, 1849. He located at Middletown, managing certain business enterprises of his father. He was appointed major and paymaster in the United States army May 1, 1861; retired the 4th of November, 1863, on account of impaired health. Maj. Cameron died at Middletown, Jan. 13, 1864, and is buried in the cemetery at that place. He married, Oct. 18, 1852, Elizabeth Bastedo, daughter of Gilbert and Marian Bastedo, of Nelson, Province of Ontario, Canada. Mrs. Cameron, while on a visit to her old home in Canada, took ill, and died there in 1870. They had issue,—Marian Bastedo, married David Watts; Simon Brua, d. s. p.; and Janet.

JOHN CAMERON.

John Cameron, son of Charles Cameron and Martha Pfoutz, was born Feb. 8, 1797, in the village of Maytown, Lancaster Co., Pa. He received the ordinary education of the public schools of the town, and at an early age apprenticed to the trade of a tailor. He came to Harrisburg in 1816, where he started in business. Governor Shulze appointed him register and recorder of the county of Dauphin, Jan. 17, 1824. He was frequently chosen member of the Borough Council of Harrisburg. He subsequently engaged in merchandising, dealt largely in cattle, and became interested in the through stage lines. In 1837 he removed to Lancaster, retired from business, and died there May 7, 1841; buried at Harrisburg. Mr. Cameron was twice married,—first, to Catharine Hutman, daughter of Matthias Hutman, of Harrisburg, born Sept. 1, 1796, died Nov. 1, 1821; secondly, to Mary Shulze, of Myerstown, Lebanon Co., a sister of Governor John Andrew Shulze. He left a son and a daughter; the former died early, the latter became the wife of Dr. Muhlenberg, of Lancaster. Mr. Cameron was quiet and unobtrusive, an intelligent and enterprising business man.

JOHN CARSON.

John Carson, the son of John Carson and Sarah Dickey, was a native of Paxtang, born in 1758. His father was a settler on the Susquehanna as early as 1733, kept a store, and was a captain on the frontier in 1755-57. His mother was a daughter of Moses Dickey, who was quite prominent in pioneer times. He received a frontier education, which, among the Scotch-Irish settlers, was thorough, and was raised up on his father's farm. He was an early associator, and an officer during the Jersey campaign of 1776. From 1786 to 1791 he served as a member of the Assembly. Under the Constitution of 1790 he was commissioned an associate judge of the county, Aug. 17, 1791, an office which he filled acceptably and creditably until his sudden death from apoplexy on Friday, Oct. 10, 1817. His wife, Sarah Dickey, born in 1760, died March 2, 1823.

JONATHAN CHANDLER.

Jonathan Chandler was born in Beaver Valley, New Castle Co., Del., about eight miles from the city of Wilmington, in 1792. He was one of the sons of Jehu Harlin Chandler. His ancestors were Quakers, who came from England shortly after the arrival of William Penn, and settled in that part of Delaware and in the lower part of Chester County, Pa. The family became so prominently identified with Beaver Valley that in the early times it was known as Chandler's Hollow. Jonathan Chandler received the ordinary education within his reach in those primitive days. When quite a young man he left his Beaver Valley home and settled in the upper end of Chester County, near Sadsburyville, and carried on quite extensively for those days the business of blacksmithing, which he had learned in Delaware. On the 1st day of June, 1819, while living in Chester County, he married Mary Griffith, who was born at the Trappe, in Montgomery County, Pa., in 1793, but came to Chester County when a young woman. Mr. Chandler removed from Chester County to Harrisburg, arriving on the 11th day of August, 1823. Here he continued his business for some years, and became quite prominent in it in the preparation of iron used in the construction of locks and bridges on the Pennsylvania Canal, and in connection with the famous stage-lines of Slaymaker & Co. and the Good Intent Packet Line. His wife, Mary Griffith Chandler, died in Harrisburg on the 29th of July, 1837. In 1839 he married Julia Ann Mowrer, who had been reared in the family of George Prince. She was born in Sunbury, Northumberland Co., and died in Harrisburg, July 22, 1882. Jonathan Chandler died in Harrisburg, Jan. 6, 1847. His children by the first marriage were Benjamin Franklin, Jehu Harlin, Rachel Ann, Ellen Louisa, and William Griffith; by the second, Mary Elizabeth, Sarah, George Prince, and Julia Ann. Mr. Chandler took much interest in all that pertained to the prosperity and welfare of Harrisburg during his life here, was a man of fine social qualities and liberal views.

COL. ROBERT CLARK.

Robert Clark, son of Charles Clark and Ann Brownfield, was born Jan. 2, 1740, in Derry, Lancaster (now Londonderry) township, Dauphin Co. His father was one of the first settlers in the "Barrens of Derry," his first warrant bearing date April 3, 1734, for two hundred acres. In 1765 his wife, Ann Brownfield Clark, having died, 12th of April of that year he divided his land between his sons, Robert and Walter, and died a few years thereafter. Robert was brought up as a farmer, receiving the limited education of frontier times. During the French and Indian wars he was in active service, both as a private and an officer. He was with Col. Clayton on his march to Wyoming, and with Col. Bouquet in 1764. When the thunders of the Revolution rolled from the eastward he entered heartily into the contest. On the 11th of August, 1776, he was commissioned captain in the Flying Camp, and was in the Jersey campaign of that year. He was commissioned sub-lieutenant of Lancaster County, April 26, 1780, and May 4, 1781, appointed one of the auditors for paying the depreciation certificates at Lebanon. During the entire struggle for independence Col. Clark was active, energetic, and patriotic. He represented the county of Dauphin in the Assembly of the State from 1785 to 1788, having previously represented the county of Lancaster, when he declined a re-election. During the organization of the militia, after the Revolution, he was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Fourth Battalion of Dauphin County. About 1795 he removed to Chillisquaque, Northumberland Co., Pa. Although well up in years, his military ardor seems to have remained, and he was commissioned Aug. 2, 1800, captain of the Second Troop of cavalry, Second Brigade, Ninth Division, composed of the counties of Northumberland, Lycoming, and Luzerne. He died at Chillisquaque, Jan. 23, 1821, at the age of eighty-one years. Col. Clark's life was a long and eventful one, and he witnessed many changes in the affairs of the State and nation, and in which he had performed a prominent part. He was a man of influence in his native county, and his pious walk and conversation was none the less remarkable. He was one of the elders of Old Derry Church, an humble and consistent Christian. Col. Clark married, Aug. 20, 1765, Sarah Hutchison, born June 7, 1745, in Derry, died Aug. 19, 1820, daughter of John Hutchison, who died Sept. 6, 1765. Their children were, as taken from the family record in Col. Clark's own handwriting,—

"Charles Clark, our first born, was born Aug. 3, 1766.

"Our twin children were born July 6, 1768; one died when twenty-two hours old, and the other, Margaret, died Sept. 4, 1768.

"Our daughter, Ann, was born Oct. 3, 1769.

"Our daughter, Mary, was born Oct. 17, 1772, and died Feb. 4, 1773.

"Our daughter; Margaret, was born Dec. 26, 1773.

"Our son, John, was born June 6, 1776.

"Our son, Robert, was born Sept. 28, 1778.

"Our daughter, Mary, was born Sunday, March 25, 1781.

"Our daughter, Sarah, was born Feb. 9, 1786."

The remains of Col. Clark and his wife lie in Derry graveyard, now Montour County, Pa.

PHILIP CLINE.

Philip Cline, son of Philip Kline, was born in the District of Northern Liberties, Philadelphia, on the 14th of July, 1780. Receiving a preliminary English education in the schools of the city, he learned the trade of brick-maker, and located at Harrisburg about the year 1803, where he established brick-works and a pottery. Most of the brick used in the State capitol were furnished by him. During the second war with England he served as first lieutenant in Capt. Richard Knight's company, and on the latter's resignation at Baltimore was promoted to captain. For almost thirty years Capt. Cline filled the position of high constable of the borough of Harrisburg. He was a man of influence, and highly respected by his fellow-citizens. He died in the year 1850. Capt. Cline married about 1803, Hannah, daughter of Patrick Walters, a wagon-master in the Continental army of the Revolution. She died at Harrisburg, Aug. 18, 1830.

CAPT. JAMES COLLIER.

James Collier was born of Scotch-Irish parents, in what is now Swatara township, Dauphin Co., April 20, 1752, on the farm adjoining the village of Churchville on the east. He began his military career in 1776, as first lieutenant of Capt. John Reed's company of the "Flying Camp," was employed in many of the skirmishes around New York and up the Hudson; was at the battle of Long Island, and among those who covered the retreat. For bravery in this campaign he received a captain's commission, and for meritorious conduct at the battle of Brandywine, Gen.

Lafayette presented him with a sword and epaulets. During the last years of the war Capt. Collier was employed principally on the frontiers against the Indians, and achieved distinction as an Indian-fighter. In 1778 he built Fort Muncy, near which one of his soldiers, Peter Boal, lost his scalp, but survived the injury. Upon the return of peace, Capt. Collier retired to his farm, and was known as a quiet, peace-loving citizen. He was, however, in common with every other patriot of his day, a genuine hater of Tories. His feelings in this respect were the more bitter on account of the Tories of North Carolina having for years sought the life of his brother, Col. John Collier, who lived in that State and was an officer in the army. Failing in their attempts upon his life, they destroyed his property and burned his house. One of the leading spirits in this outrage was one Lytle, who had formerly been a resident of Paxtang, but had removed to North Carolina shortly before the war. Against this man Capt. Collier felt peculiarly aggrieved, and had frequently been heard to declare that if ever he "laid eyes on the rascal he would chastise him severely." One Sunday morning, some years after the war, the captain was sitting in his pew at Paxtang Church, awaiting the opening of the morning service, when a stranger entered, whom Collier immediately recognized to be Lytle the Tory. He was on a visit to some friends at Middletown and accompanied them to church. The sacredness of the place protected him for the time being, but when the congregation was dismissed the captain quietly provided himself with a stout section of a grape-vine, which he put to soak in a neighboring spring. At the conclusion of the afternoon service, when the congregation was about to separate, Collier armed himself with his grape-vine and rode up to Lytle, who had just mounted, and introduced himself as the brother of John Collier, of North Carolina, and explained that there was an unsettled account between Lytle and the Collier family which he proposed now to adjust, and immediately brought his grape-vine into requisition. The Tory ran his eye over the spectators, but seeing no sympathy in their countenances put spurs to his horse and galloped off, with the captain close beside him belaboring him at every jump. They passed many people jogging along on their way home from church, and among others one of the deacons and his wife. The deacon was silent, but the wife called out, "Lay it on, Jamie, lay it on!" The race was "neck and neck" for a quarter of a mile, when the Tory, who had the better horse, began to leave Collier behind, but not before the grape-vine was worn to a stump. This transaction met with general approval. There were, however, a few good people who deemed it a breach of the Sabbath and thought the captain should be sessioned. Complaint was therefore made to Rev. John Elder, pastor of the church, who replied in some such language as this: "Served him right; he had no business to come to my church.

I am, however, sorry it happened on the Lord's Day, but if I had witnessed it I should have told the captain to lay on." This opinion from the moderator of the session, although not delivered officially, settled the business, and Collier never was called to account. In 1791 he sold his farm in Swatara township and went to Northumberland County, Pa. On the 31st of May, 1814, he started with his family for Ross County, Ohio, where he arrived on the 9th of July. Here he purchased a farm and spent the remainder of his days. He died Jan. 3, 1844, at the great age of ninety-two, and was distinguished throughout life for his frankness, integrity, and manly independence. *

COL. JACOB COOKE.

Jacob Cooke, son of John Cooke, was born in Londonderry township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., in 1735. His father was an early emigrant from near Londonderry, Ireland, and was a gentleman of means and influence. The son received the best education afforded in the Scotch-Irish settlement, and was brought up to the life of a farmer. During the French and Indian war he served as an ensign in Col. Elder's ranging battalion, and commanded the first military company enrolled for the war for independence in Pennsylvania, "The Association of the Liberty Company in Lancaster County." This company was organized in April, 1775, and portions of the command were in active service during the campaigns of 1776 and 1777. Col. Cooke filled the office of sub-lieutenant of Lancaster County, assisting in the organization of troops. He was a justice of the peace many years, and served in the Assembly under the Constitution of 1776 from 1780 to 1785. He was an ardent patriot, a brave officer, and an influential citizen. He died in January, 1790, at his residence near the Round Top. He owned a large estate, especially in Northumberland County lands, and left at his death John, Mary (married John Lukens Wallis), Sarah (married Joseph Work), Elizabeth (married Charles Irvine), and Robert. The two latter resided on the Muncy farms. Col. William Cooke, of the Pennsylvania line, a gallant soldier of the Revolution, was a brother of Col. Jacob Cooke, and one of the administrators of his estate.

CAPT. JAMES COWDEN.

James Cowden, the fourth child of Matthew Cowden and Martha Johnson, was born in Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., on the 16th of June, 1737. James was brought up on his father's farm, enjoying, however, the advantages of that early education of those pioneer times, which among the Scotch-Irish settlers was remarkably comprehensive and ample. Apart from this he was well grounded in the tenets of the Westminster Confession, which among our pious ancestry formed a part of the instruction given to all.

Until the thunders of the Revolution rolled towards the Susquehanna, Mr. Cowden remained on the paternal acres, busily engaged in farming. At the outset he was a strong advocate for active defensive measures, and in favor of independence. He was one of the leading spirits at the meeting at Middletown, June 9, 1774, of which Col. James Burd was chairman, and whose action, in conjunction with those of Hanover, nerved the people of Lancaster in their patriotic resolves. Suiting the action to the word, Mr. Cowden and the young men of his neighborhood took measures towards raising a battalion of associators, of which Col. James Burd was in command, and a company of which was intrusted to Capt. Cowden. His company, although not belonging to the Pennsylvania line, was nevertheless in several campaigns, and did faithful service at Fort Washington, in the Jerseys, at Brandywine and Germantown, and in the war on the Northern and Western frontiers, defending them from the attacks of the savage Indian and treacherous Tory.

At the close of the war Capt. Cowden returned to his farm. Under the Constitution of 1790 he was appointed the justice of the peace for the district of Lower Paxtang, April 10, 1793, which he held up to the time he was commissioned by Governor Thomas Mifflin one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin, on the 2d of October, 1795, an office he filled acceptably and creditably. In 1809 was chosen Presidential elector, and was an ardent supporter of Madison.

Capt. Cowden married in 1777, Mary Crouch, a sister of Col. James Crouch, of the Revolution, a native of Virginia. She outlived her husband many years, and is buried in the graveyard of Paxtang Church.

Judge Cowden died at his farm in Paxtang very suddenly on Wednesday evening, Oct. 10, 1810, in the seventy-fourth year of his age.

COL. CORNELIUS COX.

Cornelius Cox, son of John Cox and Esther, his wife, was born about 1750, in the city of Philadelphia. His father was a native of England, a physician of prominence in Philadelphia, in which city he died about 1770. He laid out Estherton, on the Susquehanna, in 1765, supposing at the time it would become an important place. Dr. Cox was twice married,—first to Sarah, widow of William Edgell, of Philadelphia; second to Esther —, of the same place. We know nothing further, save that their son was the subject of this sketch. Cornelius Cox received a good education in his native city. Some time prior to the Revolution we find him at Estherton in management of the estate left him by his father. He early espoused the cause of the colonies, was present at the meeting at Middletown which passed the patriotic resolutions of June, 1774, and when the people were called to arms was commissioned major of Col. James Burd's battalion of Lancaster County associators. Was appointed assistant commissary of purchases, and also issuing commissary July 7, 1780. Until the close of the Revolution he was actively engaged, whether it was in the collecting of flour for the French fleet, the gathering of blankets for the half-clad army at Valley Forge, or the superintending of the construction of bateaux for the use of Gen. Sullivan in his expedition against the Six Nations. In 1792 he was chosen one of the State electors for President in favor of Gen. Washington. Governor Mifflin appointed him one of the associate justices of the courts of Dauphin County, but preferring quiet he declined the honor. He died Feb. 3, 1803, at Estherton, aged about fifty-three years. Col. Cox married Mary Forster, born 1767, died Aug. 2, 1810, daughter of John Forster and Catherine Dickey.

COL. RICHARD M. CRAIN.

Richard Moore Crain, the son of Joseph Crain and Mary Moore, daughter of Andrew Moore, was born November, 1777, in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received a fair education, and was brought up on his father's farm. He became quite prominent in public affairs the first decade of this century, and during the incumbency of Gen. Andrew Porter as surveyor-general of Pennsylvania Mr. Crain received the appointment of deputy secretary of the land office, a position he acceptably filled through all the changes of administration for forty years, until the advent of Governor Ritner, when he was displaced. He then retired to his farm in Cumberland County, from which district he was sent a delegate to the Constitutional Convention of 1837, in which he was a leading spirit. During the War of 1812-14 he commanded a company of volunteers from Harrisburg, and was subsequently commissioned colonel of the Pennsylvania militia. Col. Crain died at Harrisburg, on Friday, 17th of September, 1852, aged seventy-five years. He married Elizabeth Whitehill, daughter of Robert Whitehill and Eleanor Reed, born 1771, died Oct. 2, 1848. They had Dr. Joseph; Elizabeth, married Leopold Wykoff; Mary Adaline, married Alexander Dean; Eleanor, married William Wilson Rutherford; and Agnes, died unmarried.

COL. EDWARD CROUCH.

Edward Crouch, the son of James Crouch, an officer of the Revolution, and Hannah Brown, was born at Walnut Hill, in Paxtang, Nov. 9, 1764. He was a merchant by occupation. At the age of seventeen he enlisted in the army of the Revolution, and commanded a company in the Whiskey Insurrection in 1794. He served as a member of the House of Representatives from 1804 to 1806, and was a Presidential elector in 1813. Governor Snyder appointed him one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin April 16, 1813, but he resigned upon his election to the Thirteenth United States Congress. He died on the 2d of February, 1827, and is buried in Paxtang graveyard. "In private life he was an able and an honest man," wrote one of his contemporaries, and the record of his life shows him to have been a gentleman of uprightness of character, and as honorable as he was influential. Col. Crouch married Margaret Potter, born 1775, died Feb. 7, 1797, daughter of Gen. James Potter,¹ of the Revolution. Their only daughter married Benjamin Jordan, who succeeded to the estate of "Walnut Hill."

COL. JAMES CROUCH.

James Crouch was born about 1728, in Virginia. The Crouches were an old family who emigrated at an early day from England and settled in King and Queen County, near the court-house. James Crouch received a good education, came to Pennsylvania prior to 1757, purchasing about three thousand

He was prominent in the political agitation consequent upon the dispute with the mother-country. There was no meeting of the patriotic inhabitants of the then large county of Northumberland held without his presence and led by his advice. He was a colonel in 1775; appointed a brigadier-general April 5, 1777, with John Armstrong as first, John Cadwalader second, Samuel Meredith fourth. His services in the Pennsylvania campaign of 1777 were very distinguished. With the troops under his command, raised in the frontier counties, he obtained for Washington important information regarding the movements of the enemy, and with great vigilance gave all the annoyance possible to the foraging parties that were sent out of Philadelphia.

On the 11th of December, while the army under Washington were on their march to Valley Forge, after a portion of it had crossed the Schuylkill at Matson's Ford, it was found that the enemy under Cornwallis were in force on the other side. "They were not," writes Washington, "by Gen. Potter, with part of the Pennsylvania militia, who behaved with great bravery, and gave them every possible opposition till he was obliged to retreat from their superior numbers." In the spring of 1778, Washington wrote from Valley Forge, "If the state of Gen. Potter's affairs will admit of returning to the army, I shall be exceedingly glad to see him, as his activity and vigilance have been much wanted during the winter." In 1781 he was vice-president of the State, in 1782 commissioned a major-general, and in 1784 one of the Council of Censors, and was within a few votes of defeating for president the most distinguished man in the State, John Dickinson. He served in the field in his military capacity through the whole Revolution, and was trusted by all its leaders.—Washington, Greene, Pickering, Mifflin, and his fellow-brigadiers. His residence was in Penn's Valley, in the present Centre County, from 1772 to the time of his death, in November, 1789, at which moment he was one of the associate or bench justices of Northumberland County. He left one of the most extensive and valuable estates in Pennsylvania. His remains rest in the burial-ground at Brown's Mill, south of Chambersburg, in Franklin County.

Gen. Potter was married twice,—first, Elizabeth Catcarr, of Philadelphia. They had Elizabeth C., married James Poe, of Franklin County. Second wife, Mrs. Mary Patterson, widow of James Patterson, of Mifflin County, who died in April, 1785, near Middletown. They had James, "the judge," who married Mary Brown, of "Brown's Spring," Kishacoquillas Valley, Mifflin Co.; Mary, married first, George Riddle, secondly, William McClelland, of Northumberland County; John, died; Martha, married Andrew Gregg, of Centre County, subsequently United States senator; Margaret, married Edward Crouch, of "Walnut Hill," Dauphin Co.

acres of land in York County, where the town of Wrightsville now stands, on which he settled for a few years, but which he subsequently sold, and removed to then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he bought one thousand acres of land. He was a soldier of Quebec, being a sergeant in Capt. Matthew Smith's company of Paxtang volunteers. On his release from captivity he became an officer of the associators, and subsequently paymaster of the battalion. He served during the whole of the Revolutionary war with honor and distinction. He died at his residence, Walnut Hill, near Highspire, on the 24th of May, 1794, aged sixty-six years. Col. Crouch married, Sept. 22, 1757, Hannah Brown, born 1727, died May 24, 1787. Their children were Edward; Mary, married Col. James Cowden; Elizabeth, married Matthew Gilchrist, removed to Washington County, Pa.; and Hannah, married Roan McClure. Col. Crouch's papers, perchance the most valuable documents concerning the Revolution extant in this locality, were wantonly destroyed about ten years ago.

CAPT. JOHN DENTZEL.

John Dentzel, a native of Holland, on the Rhine, was born about 1745. He received a thorough university education, including law and medicine. A romantic attachment and marriage to a daughter of an illustrious family of the country caused him to come to America at the outset of the Revolution. He warmly espoused the cause of the colonies, and was in active service. Subsequent to the war he located at Harrisburg, where he became quite prominent. He seems to have practiced both law and medicine. In 1792 he was appointed one of the medical examiners for invalid pensioners; and he is denominated as "Lawyer Dentzel," who commanded a company during the Whisky Insurrection of 1794, although probably he was only a justice of the peace, an office he held at the time of his death. On the 8th of December, 1803, he accompanied the citizens of the town who had gone to escort the remains of their old comrade, Maj. Brooks, who had died at Elizabethtown; when a short distance, the bridle of Capt. Dentzel's horse broke, and that gentleman was thrown against a fence and almost instantly expired. He was an intrepid officer, a good citizen, and a polished gentleman. Mr. Dentzel was twice married; his first wife, Eve Dentzel, died March 18, 1795, "a lady much respected and admired." On the 10th of February, 1799, he married Jane Gilchrist, who survived her husband several years. By his first wife he had Mary, married Thomas Clyde, the parents of John J. Clyde, Esq.; Sarah, married James Kernan; Henry, who learned printing with John Wyeth, went to Norfolk, Va., was collector of the port there a number of years, married and left issue. By his second wife he had Raymond, who went to Armstrong County, married and left issue.

MAJ. JOHN SHELLY DETWEILER.

John Shelly Detweiler was born on the 18th of October, 1829, in Londonderry township, Dauphin Co., on a farm occupied by his father, David Detweiler, near what is now known as the Buck Lock, Pennsylvania Canal. His mother, Susan Detweiler, was a daughter of William Shelly, of Shelly's Island. When ten years old he attended the school in the neighborhood of his birthplace, and continued there until he was sixteen years old, when he came to Harrisburg and entered the printing-office of Theophilus Fenn, where he remained but a short time, and then went to Lancaster, entering the office of the Lancaster Examiner and Herald.

Leaving the Examiner office, Mr. Detweiler entered Franklin and Marshall College, at which institution he pursued a course of regular studies and graduated with high honor, after which he began the study of the law with Gen. George B. Ford, of Lancaster City, and was admitted to the bar of that county in 1850. He remained in Lancaster only a few months after his admission, and came to Harrisburg in the winter of that year, entering at once in the practice of the law here, in which profession he continued until the breaking out of the civil war.

At the organization of the Ninth Cavalry, Mr. Detweiler took an active part in securing the necessary companies to make up the regiment, and as captain of Company E was very prominent in securing a completed organization. He was commissioned captain Oct. 17, 1861. While on duty in Tennessee he was appointed on the staff of Gen. DuMont. On the 19th of March, 1863, Capt. Detweiler was appointed major of the regiment, and on the 2d of April of the same year he resigned his commission and returned to Harrisburg, when he was appointed United States recruiting officer at this point, which post he held until the close of the war. In 1864, Mr. Detweiler was appointed Deputy United States assessor of internal revenue under Charles J. Bruner, which office he held until it was abolished in 1871. In 1872 he was appointed by Judge Cadwallader register in bankruptcy, which office he held at the time of his death. In 1874, Mr. Detweiler was nominated and elected by the Republicans county solicitor for the term of three years.

Maj. Detweiler married Eunice Parke, daughter of Benjamin Parke, of Harrisburg, and they had three children who survived their father. He died at Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 16, 1878. *

REV. WILLIAM R. DEWITT, D.D.

William Radcliff DeWitt, the son of John DeWitt and Katharine Van Vliet, was born at Pauding's Manor, Dutchess Co., N. Y., on the 25th of February, 1792. His ancestors were among the first immigrants from Holland to New Netherlands, in 1623. His early years were spent in commercial pursuits, but about 1810 he turned his attention to the sacred ministry. He studied with Dr. Alexander Proudfit, of Salem, N. Y., and entered Washington Academy. The War of 1812 interrupting his studies, he volunteered in the regiment of Col. Rice, and was in service at Lake Champlain at the time of McDonough's victory, Sept. 11, 1814. After the close of the war, in 1815, he entered Nassau Hall, Princeton, as a sophomore, but subsequently entered the senior class of Union College, Schenectady, where he graduated with distinction, completing his theological studies under Rev. Dr. John M. Mason, of New York. He munity he was greatly appreciated and respected by all classes. As a theologian he had few equals in the ministry, and although firm and decided in his views, he was liberal and catholic in spirit. His published writings were limited to twelve or thirteen pamphlets, the most popular of which was a small volume entitled "Her Price above Rubies." He preached many powerful discourses, a volume of which should certainly be preserved in permanent form.

GEORGE DOCK, M.D.

George Dock, second child of William Dock and Margaret Gilliard, was born 23d of May, 1823, at Harrisburg, Pa. Though of very delicate constitution, he was sent to school at an early age, and received a liberal education. In September, 1840, he entered the office of Professor William E. Horner, of the University of Pennsylvania, as a private student. He matriculated at the medical department of the University in the summer of 1841, attended the course of lectures at the Medical Institute, and having pursued the full course at the University, session of 1842, he was elected resident student in Blockley Hospital, entering upon his duties the 1st of May, where he faithfully served one year, gaining no little reputation as a thorough anatomist. In the spring of 1844 he graduated from the University of Pennsylvania. Returning to his home at Harrisburg, he assumed the duties of his profession. In the autumn of 1845, at the solicitation of Professor Horner, he removed to Philadelphia, and the winter following was engaged by the former as his private dissector at the University. During the war with Mexico he was tendered the position of assistant surgeon, Second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, but his health prevented its acceptance. In January, 1847, he was elected physician to the Dauphin County almshouse, where he served one year. Advised to take a sea-voyage for the benefit of his health, in October, 1849, he sailed for Europe, and while there visited the different hospitals of Paris and London. On his return he resumed the practice of his profession. For a period of thirteen years he was a member of the board of trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, in 1854 elected a member of the Academy of Natural Sciences of Philadelphia, while in July following Pennsylvania College conferred on him the honorary degree of Master of Arts. On the 17th of March, 1856, he was appointed Professor of Surgery in the Philadelphia College of Medicine, which he at first declined, but subsequently, by great persuasion, accepted the position. During the winter following, his health becoming seriously impaired, he was compelled to withdraw from all active professional duties. In 1860 he made a second visit to Europe, and upon his return quietly settled down in his office, regaining a handsome practice in his speciality,—diseases of the eye. In 1861 he was commissioned surgeon of the Sixteenth Regiment was licensed to preach by the Presbytery of New York April 23, 1818. In the fall of that year he came to Harrisburg by invitation, and was called to the pastorate of the Presbyterian Church Oct. 5, 1818. He was received by the Presbytery of Carlisle April 13, 1819, but not ordained until the 26th of October, that year. Dr. DeWitt received the degree of A.M. in course from Union College, and in 1838 the University of Pennsylvania conferred on him the title of Doctor of Divinity. From 1854 to 1860 he held the office of State librarian, appointed by Governors Bigler and Pollock. In 1854 he felt the necessity of taking a colleague, Rev. T. H. Robinson, D.D., the present minister. He died at Harrisburg, Dec. 23, 1867, in his seventy-sixth year. Dr. DeWitt was twice married, his first wife being Julia A. Woodhull, daughter of Rev. Nathan Woodhull, of Newtown, L. I. His second wife was Mary Elizabeth Wallace, daughter of William Wallace, of Harrisburg, who survived her husband. During a ministry of nearly fifty years in Harrisburg, Dr. DeWitt enjoyed the confidence of all his ministerial brethren. In the com-

Pennsylvania Volunteers, subsequently placed on the board of medical examiners to pass on the qualifications of candidates for appointment on the medical staff of the Pennsylvania forces in the army. From this time forward until 1868 his health was fair, but subsequently became seriously impaired, until at last he was obliged to relinquish entirely the duties of his profession. On the 10th of August, 1874, he was suddenly taken with a hemorrhage of the lungs, but not until the 17th of August, 1875, did the messenger come, and the spirit of George Dock pass from its frail tenement. Had he possessed the physical strength, most of the brilliant suggestions of his gifted and active mind would have been carried out to a successful result. He had by nature a strongly-marked, bold, original, positive, and incisive mind. As it was, he was never idle. He made his mark in the profession he so dearly loved and highly honored. Few men were more greatly esteemed, for he was to all gentle and kind and courteous. Dr. Dock married, July 30, 1844, Clara S. Rehrer, daughter of Col. Thomas J. Rehrer, of Harrisburg, who, with one daughter, survive.

WILLIAM DOCK.

William Dock, the son of Philip Dock¹ and Elizabeth Killian, was born in East Earl township, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 3d of February, 1793. In 1800 his parents removed to Newville, Cumberland Co., where they resided until their death. His early education was limited. At the age of seventeen he went to Carlisle, where he was brought up to merchandising. In 1813 he removed to the Susquehanna opposite Harrisburg, where he kept the public ferry one year; the subsequent spring coming to Harrisburg. In 1814, he took charge of the Harrisburg ferry, then controlled by the county of Dauphin. In 1816 he was appointed collector of tolls eastern end of the Harrisburg bridge, which position he filled five years. He entered into the mercantile chandlery trade in 1822, which he successfully continued until 1845, when he entirely relinquished business. In March, 1842, he was appointed one of the associate judges of Dauphin County. In 1849 he received the nomination by the Democracy for Congress in the Fourteenth District, then composed of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill Counties. The judge made a good canvass, but his party were in the minority. In 1851 he was chairman of the State convention which nominated William Bigler for Governor; had repeatedly been a delegate to the Lutheran Synod; and in 1856 appointed a trustee of Pennsylvania College. He served as a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy twenty years, and was actively connected with several business enterprises. Judge Dock died at Harrisburg Aug. 4, 1868. He married in 1818 Margaret Gilliard, of Middletown, who died May 30, 1862, in her sixty-eighth year. They had children, William Gilliard, Dr. George, Gilliard, and William, of whom Gilliard alone survives.

PHILIP DOUGHERTY.

Philip Dougherty, son of Dennis Dougherty and Catharine Maginty, was born on the 24th of March, 1806, near Middletown, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father came to America from Ireland about 1805, and settled in Derry township, not far from Middletown, where he died about 1824. His wife (née Catharine Maginty), whom he married in Ireland, died about 1845, in Harrisburg. Their children were Mary (wife of Hugh Dougherty) and John, both born in Ireland, Philip (the subject of this sketch), James, Catharine (wife of Edward Sweeny), Dennis, Charles, Hugh, and Daniel Dougherty. From the age of eighteen Philip Dougherty was busily occupied as a contractor on canals and railroads, and was largely engaged in the construction of important public works, such as the Pennsylvania Canal, the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, Delaware and Raritan Canal, Union Canal, Lehigh Canal, Northern Central Railroad, New York and Erie Railroad, Pennsylvania Railroad, Camden and Amboy Railroad, and the Dauphin and Susquehanna Railroad. He continued in the business until February, 1853, when he was chosen president of the Mechanics' Bank of Harrisburg, organized at that time, a position which he filled until his death, which occurred at Harrisburg Feb. 3, 1865, in his fifty-ninth year. He was also a director of the Northern Central Railroad, the Middletown Bank, and the Harrisburg Gas Company, of which he was one of the founders. Mr. Dougherty was very successful in business, combining great energy and force of character with quick perception, sound judgment, and strict integrity. He dispensed a liberal hospitality to his many friends, and enjoyed the respect and confidence of his fellow-citizens. Of a warm and generous nature, his feelings, impulses, and actions were of an elevated character, and his friendship permanent, strong, and useful. He was ever ready to aid the deserving and relieve the unfortunate, and in all respects was a valued member of the community. Mr. Dougherty married, June 10, 1833, at New Brunswick, N. J., Mary W., daughter of John Clark and Rebecca Whiteside. Mrs. Dougherty was born in 1813, and now (1883) resides in Harrisburg. Their children who reached maturity were James Dennis, who graduated at Georgetown College, class of 1857, was a lawyer by profession, and a captain of artillery during the Rebellion, and colonel on the staff of Governor Packer, of Pennsylvania, and died April 2, 1878; William E., for many years engaged in the banking business in Harrisburg, and now resident clerk of the United States Senate at Washington, D. C.; and Mary F., wife of Bernard J. McGrann, contractor and banker, of Lancaster, Pa. *

¹ Philip Dock, a soldier of the Revolution, was born Aug. 2, 1757, in East Earl township, Lancaster Co., Pa.; died at Newville, Cumberland Co., Pa., July 15, 1830. He married Elizabeth Killian, born in East Earl township Aug. 27, 1763; she died at Newville Feb. 7, 1848, and there buried. There were children, among others, as follows: Elizabeth, married John Dean; removed to Ohio, where their descendants reside. Susan, married Jacob Bigler; they were the parents of Governor John Bigler, of California, and Governor William Bigler, of Pennsylvania. Amelia, married George Gray, and left issue: Jacob, married Eliza Kinsecker Ott, and left issue: William, married Margaret Gilliard. Philip, d. s. p.

JOHN DOWNEY.

John Downey, the son of John and Sarah Downey, was born at Germantown, Pa., in the year 1770. He received a classical education in the old academy there, and in 1795 located at Harrisburg, where he opened a Latin and grammar school. At this period, in a letter to Governor Thomas Mifflin, he proposed a "Plan of Education," remarkably foreshadowing the present common-school system, and which has placed him in the front rank of early American educators. He was for many years a justice of the peace, and served as town clerk for a long time. He was the first cashier of the Harrisburg Bank, largely instrumental in securing the erection of the bridge over the Susquehanna, and one of the corporators of the Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike Company; was a member of the Legislature in 1817-18, and filled other positions of honor and profit. He died at Harrisburg on the 21st of July, 1827, and the Oracle speaks of him as "a useful magistrate and a pious man." He wrote much for the press, and a series of articles published in the Dauphin Guardian, entitled "Simon Easy Papers," were from his pen,—sparkling with wit; they are worth a permanent setting, as a valuable contribution to literature.

Mr. Downey married, June 5, 1798, Alice Ann Beatty, daughter of James Beatty, Esq., one of the first settlers at Harrisburg. She died in Ashland County, Ohio, May 14, 1841. Their adopted daughter, Eleanor Downey, married Hon. Daniel Kilgore, of Ohio.

JACOB R. EBY.

Jacob Rupley Eby, the son of Ephraim C. Eby (1783-1838) and Susannah Rupley (1784-1844), was born Nov. 18, 1816, at Columbia, Lancaster Co., Pa. His father, born near Lancaster, was a miller by occupation, and belonged to the Mennonites,—“never went to law and never voted.” He had seven children. Ephraim C. Eby died at Middletown, owning at the time the mill at Highspire. Jacob R. was brought up to the business of his father until the age of fifteen, in the mean time enjoying the advantages of the education afforded by the pay-schools of that day. He learned the trade of a carpenter. After serving his apprenticeship he took a trip south, working at his trade; returning, however, at the end of ten months, when he entered mercantile life. While thus engaged, Messrs. Cameron, Lauman & Clark, who were building the improvements at Wrightsville, known as the Tide-water Canal and Columbia Dam, offered him a position which he accepted. This gave him an insight into the building of public works, when his industry, integrity, and capacity attracted the favorable notice of a prominent lumber merchant of Middletown, who gave him an interest in his business simply on account of his superior qualifications and without requiring the investment of capital. He retained this valuable position for six years, when he disposed of his interest to advantage, and with his brother E. C. Eby purchased the stock and good-will of the grocery and forwarding business of John H. Brant, on one of the best sites in this city. The business subsequently was conducted by himself and sons. Mr. Eby was largely interested in many of the industrial establishments of the city, being a stockholder and director of the Harrisburg Car- and Machine- and Foundry-works. He was president for several years of the First National Bank and likewise of the State Agricultural Society. He was at the time of his death a prison-inspector, which position he had held for many years. He died Feb. 11, 1883, at Harrisburg, in his sixty-seventh year. Mr. Eby was married in 1843 to Elizabeth Gross, who still survives. They had three children, Maurice, William Howard, and Fannie.

MAJOR OLIVER EDWARDS.

Oliver Edwards, third son of Abraham Edwards and Martha Greenfield, was born Oct. 24, 1824. His parents were natives of Baltimore, where they married, removed to Pittsburgh, and subsequently to Harrisburg about 1819. Oliver's education in the schools was limited, but his mind being active and inquiring, he read much and studied at night after the work of the day was over, thus becoming very well self-educated, and developed into a man of considerable attainments. When young he learned the trade of bootmaking with his father; later in life he was selected as a school-teacher under the common-school system, and proved to be one of the most successful ever employed in the Harrisburg schools, as numbers of young men of the present day can testify. Mr. Edwards was much afflicted with asthma and unable to do military duty, but in order to render some service during the war he became the agent for the reception and distribution of the Dauphin County Relief Fund for the support of those whose husbands, fathers, and sons were in the army. It was a very onerous duty, and he performed it faithfully and well, declining any remuneration whatever for his services. In 1860 he was elected one of the first aldermen of the city of Harrisburg. Upon the election of Gen. A. S. Roumfort as mayor of the city he appointed Mr. Edwards as committing magistrate and chief clerk in the mayor's office. He was elected to succeed Gen. Roumfort, and was inaugurated mayor of the city in March, 1866. He was subsequently elected an alderman of the Fourth Ward in 1872, which position he occupied up until the time of his death, which occurred in Harrisburg on the 13th day of October, 1874. Mr. Edwards was an active man, of quick perception, fine social qualities, and possessed of much useful information. The Rev. George F. Stelling, of the Fourth Street Lutheran Church, preached a very able funeral sermon shortly after his death in relation to Mr. Edwards' religious experience. On the 7th of August, 1851, he married Rachel Ann Chandler, daughter of Jonathan Chandler and Mary Griffith. The marriage took place in Harrisburg, where his wife was born, on the 13th of August, 1830, and died therein on the 5th of July, 1865. Two daughters survive the parents,—Mary Griffith and Rachel Louisa (married Daniel A. Musser).

JACOB ELDER.

Jacob Elder, eldest son of John Elder and Elizabeth Awl, and grandson of Rev. John Elder, was born in Paxtang in 1780. He received a thorough English and classical education, learned the art of printing at Lancaster, and in 1802 commenced the publication of the Dauphin Guardian, one of the most influential newspapers published in the early days of Harrisburg, as it was the first Democratic English newspaper there. In 1815 he prepared and published "A History of the Late War," and was the author of a preliminary work on the history of the United States. Under his arduous literary labors Mr. Elder's health failed him, and he died at Harrisburg in October, 1816, at the early age of thirty-six years. He never married. His entire life was an active and busy one, and he exerted a great influence in the times he lived.

COL. JOSHUA ELDER.

Joshua Elder, second son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Baker, was born in Paxtang township (now Dauphin County), Pa., on the 9th of March, 1744/5. He was a farmer by occupation. During the frontier troubles of 1763-64 he was in active military service. When the Revolution broke out he was a leader on the patriot side, and appointed one of the sub-lieutenants of Lancaster County, as also a justice of the peace, serving until the close of the war. He was a prominent advocate for the formation of the county of Dauphin, and under the Constitution of 1790 was commissioned by Governor Mifflin one of the associate judges of the courts, Aug. 17, 1791. The appointment, however, of Sheriff Clunnie to the bench on the resignation of David Harris, who had removed to Baltimore, so incensed him that he peremptorily resigned. He was appointed by Governor McKean prothonotary Jan. 5, 1800, a position he filled by re-appointment until Feb. 6, 1809. In March, 1810, he was elected Burgess of the borough of Harrisburg. He died at his residence in Paxtang on the 5th of December, 1820. Judge Elder was twice married,—first, to Mary McAllister, who died Nov. 21, 1792; secondly, to Sarah McAllister, who died Dec. 6, 1807.

COL. ROBERT ELDER.

Robert Elder, eldest son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Baker, was born June 11, 1742, in Paxtang. He was educated at the academy in Chester County, and was destined by his father for the ministry. His inclinations, and the breaking out of the French and Indian war, when the boy enlisted with his father as a ranger on the frontiers, determined otherwise. With his Scotch-Irish neighbors he entered heartily into the contest for independence, and throughout the war of the Revolution was in the field or engaged in organizing the associators, of which he was colonel, succeeding Col. Burd in the command of the companies raised in Paxtang. At the close of the conflict he continued his occupation of farming, avoiding public office, preferring the quiet of domestic life. He died Sept. 29, 1818, in Paxtang, aged seventy-six years. Col. Elder married Mary J. Thompson, of Derry; she was born Oct. 19, 1750, and died Aug. 18, 1813.

JOHN ELDER, JR.

John Elder, Jr., son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Simpson, was born Aug. 3, 1757, in Paxtang. He was educated under Joseph Hutchinson, a celebrated teacher in his day, and gave special attention to land surveying. He was a farmer. At the commencement of the Revolution, although a youth of eighteen, he was enrolled among the associators, and was an ensign in Col. Burd's battalion. On the 18th of April, 1780, he was appointed deputy-surveyor, and for several years filled that position. He was elected sheriff of the county of Dauphin in 1794, serving from the 19th of November, that year, until Oct. 17, 1797. Like the majority of persons who have filled that responsible office in this locality, he came out of it the poorer. Capt. Elder died at his residence in Paxtang, April 27, 1811, in his fifty-fourth year.

SAMUEL ELDER.

Samuel Elder, son of Rev. John Elder and Mary Simpson, was born Feb. 27, 1772, in Paxtang. He was educated at the schools of Joseph Hutchinson and Joseph Allen, and followed farming in his early years. He was a soldier of the Whiskey Insurrection, and held a position in the military establishment of 1798. He filled the office of sheriff of Dauphin County from Oct. 23, 1800, to Oct. 21, 1803, which, as in the case of his brother John, financially crippled him. Mr. Elder died at Harrisburg on the 26th of September, 1815, aged forty-three years. In paying brief tribute to his memory the newspapers of the day speak in the warmest terms of his faithfulness as a public officer, his prominence as a citizen, and the upright character of his entire life, passing away in the vigor of manhood. Mr. Elder married, March 7, 1793, Margaret Espy.

REV. JOHN ELDER.

John Elder, second son of Robert and Eleanor Elder, was born Jan. 26, 1706, in the city of Edinburgh, Scotland. He received a classical education, and graduated from the University at Edinburgh. He subsequently studied divinity, and in 1732 was licensed to preach the gospel. His father, who had removed from Scotland and settled near Lough Neagh, in County Antrim, Ireland, subsequently emigrated to America and settled in the Province of Pennsylvania, in then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. Four or five years later the son followed the footsteps of his parents and friends and came to America.

Coming as a regularly licensed minister, he was received by New Castle Presbytery, having brought credentials to that body, afterwards into Donegal Presbytery on the 5th of October, 1737. Paxtang congregation having separated from that of Derry in 1735, and Rev. Mr. Bertram adhering to the latter, left that of Paxtang vacant, and they were unanimous in giving Rev. John Elder a call. This he accepted on the 12th of April, 1738, and on the 22d of November following he was ordained and installed, the Rev. — Black presiding.

The early years of Mr. Elder's ministry was not one of ease, for in the second year the Whitefield excitement took a wide spread over the Presbyterian Church. He preached against this religious furor, or the "great revival," as it was termed, and for this he was accused to the Presbytery of propagating "false doctrine." That body cleared him, however, in December, 1740; "but the separation was made," says Webster, "soon after, and the conjunct Presbyters answered the supplications sent to them the next summer, by sending Campbell and Rowland to those who forsook him. He signed the protest. His support being reduced, he took charge of the 'Old Side' portion of the Derry congregation." Following closely upon these ecclesiastical troubles came the French and Indian war. Associations were formed throughout the Province of Pennsylvania for the defense of the frontiers, and the congregations of Mr. Elder were prompt to embody themselves. Their minister became their leader,—their captain,—and they were trained as rangers. He superintended the discipline of his men, and his mounted rangers became widely known as the "Paxtang Boys." During two summers at least, every man who attended Paxtang Church carried his rifle with him, and their minister took his.

Subsequently he was advanced to the dignity of colonel by the Provincial authorities, the date of his commission being July 11, 1763. He had command of the block-houses and stockades on the frontiers extending from Easton to the Susquehanna. The Governor in tendering this appointment expressly stated that nothing more would be expected of him than the general oversight. "His justification," says Webster, "lies in the crisis of affairs. . . . Bay at York, Steele at Conococheagne, and Griffith at New Castle, with Burton and Thompson the church missionaries at Carlisle, headed companies and were actively engaged." During the latter part of the summer of 1763, many murders were committed in Paxtang, culminating in the destruction of the Indians on Conestoga Manor, and at Lancaster. Although the men composing the company of Paxtang men who exterminated the murderous savages referred to belonged to his obedient and faithful rangers, it has never been proved that the Rev. Mr. Elder had previous knowledge of the plot formed, although the Quaker pamphleteers of the day charged him with aiding and abetting the destruction of the Indians.

When the deed was done and the Quaker authorities seemed determined to proceed to extreme lengths with the participants, and denounced the frontiersmen as "riotous and murderous Irish Presbyterians," he took sides with the border inhabitants, and sought to condone the deed. His letters published in connection with the history of that transaction, prove him to have been a man judicious, firm, and decided. During the controversy which ensued he was the author of one of the pamphlets,—"Letter from a Gentleman in one of the Back Counties to a Friend in Philadelphia."

He was relieved from his command by the Governor of the Province, who directed that Maj. Asher Clayton take charge of the military establishment. Peace, however, was restored, not only in civil affairs but in the church. The union of the Synods brought the Rev. John Elder into the same Presbytery with Messrs. John Roan, Robert Smith, and George Duffield, they being at first in a minority, but rapidly settling the vacancies with New Side men. By the leave of Synod the Rev. Mr. Elder joined the Second Philadelphia Presbytery May 19, 1768, and on the formation of the General Assembly, became a member of Carlisle Presbytery.

"The fever-heat of the 'New Lights' soon abated; one after another of these religious fanatics returned; their churches rotted down; they live only in memory;" while by the death of the Rev. Mr. Roan, all dissensions were healed, and Paxtang and Derry were once more reunited. Mr. Elder was often heard to say "that among the many blessings bestowed upon him by the Giver of all Good, the return of these people to his churches again during his lifetime was among the greatest. He humbled himself before Almighty God for his merciful guidance through these severe trials, and that now his sore afflictions were healed by heavenly Love."

Foremost in opposition to the tyrannical rule of Great Britain, and in demanding their rights, were the descendants of those who had fled their own country for liberty's sake, and such were the members of Parson Elder's congregations. Too old to take up the sword, the minister of Paxtang and Derry assisted in raising the quota of troops allotted to his county, and was on the Committee of Safety for his section. In 1775 he delivered a powerful sermon on behalf of independence and the duty of his congregation in the crisis.

At the time the British army overrun New Jersey, driving before them the fragments of our discouraged, naked, and half-starved troops, and without any previous arrangement, the Rev. Mr. Elder went on Sunday as usual to Paxtang Church. The hour arrived for church-service, when, instead of a sermon, he began a short and hasty prayer to the Throne of Grace; then called upon the patriotism of all effective men present, and exhorted them to aid in the support of liberty's cause and the defense of the country. In less than thirty minutes a company of volunteers was formed. Col. Robert Elder, the parson's eldest son, was chosen captain. They marched next day, though in winter; his son John, at sixteen years, was among the first. His son Joshua, sub-lieutenant of Lancaster County, could not quit the service he was employed in, but sent a substitute.

Until his death, for the period of fifty-six years, he continued the faithful minister of the congregations over which he had been placed in the prime of his youthful vigor, passing the age not generally allotted to man,—that of fourscore and six years. On the 17th of July, A.D. 1792, he laid by the armor of this earthly life, putting on that of immortality. His death was deeply lamented far and wide. Not one of all those who had welcomed him to his early field of labor survived him.

Charles Miner, the historian of Wyoming, gives this opinion of Rev. John Elder: "I am greatly struck with the evidences of learning, talent, and spirit displayed by him. He was beyond doubt the most extraordinary man of interior Pennsylvania. I hope some one may draw up a full memoir of his life, and a narrative, well digested, of his times. . . . He was a very extraordinary man, of most extensive influence, full of activity and enterprise, learned, pious, and a ready writer. I take him to have been of the old Cameronian blood. Had his lot been cast in New England he would have been a leader of the Puritans." He had, with one who well remembered the old minister, "a good and very handsome face. His features were regular,—no one prominent,—good complexion, with blue eyes. . . . He was a portly, long, straight man, over six feet in height, large frame and body, with rather heavy legs. . . . He did not talk broad Scotch, and spoke much as we do now, but grammatically."

His remains quietly repose amid the scenes of his earthly labors in the burying-ground of old Paxtang Church, by the side of those who loved and revered him. Over his dust a marble slab bears the inscription dictated by his friend and neighbor, William Maclay, first United States Senator from Pennsylvania. (See record of Paxtang Church.) Rev. John Elder was twice married, first to Mary Baker, daughter of Joshua Baker, of Lancaster, who was armorer under George II. of England, and they had four children. He married, secondly, Mary Simpson, daughter of Thomas Simpson, of Paxtang, and sister of Gen. Michael Simpson, of Revolutionary memory; and by this marriage there were eleven children.

THOMAS ELDER.

Thomas Elder, son of Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang, and Mary Simpson, was born Jan. 30, 1767, in Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. (now Dauphin Co.), Pa. He received a good English and classical education, especially under Joseph Hutchinson, a celebrated teacher in his day. He subsequently attended the academy at Philadelphia, where he graduated. Studied law with Gen. John A. Hanna, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the August term, 1791. He at once began the practice of a profession in which he became distinguished, and which he followed with great success for upwards of forty years. In the words of Hamilton Alricks, Esq., who presented the resolutions of the Dauphin County bar, which were adopted on the occasion of his decease, Mr. Elder "was eminent as a safe and sagacious counselor, a laborious and indefatigable lawyer." During the Whiskey Insurrection he volunteered as a private in Capt. Dentzel's company, which marched to the westward, preferring the ranks to that of a commissioned office which his company offered him. He subsequently held the office of lieutenant-colonel of the militia, and was frequently designated by the title of colonel. As a citizen in the early years of the borough of Harrisburg, Mr. Elder possessed public spirit and enterprise in advance of his contemporaries generally. He was the prominent and leading spirit in organizing a company to erect the Harrisburg bridge, the first constructed over the Susquehanna, and for many years the longest in the Union. Upon its permanent organization, he was unanimously elected the president, which office he held by annual re-election of the directors until his resignation in June, 1846. He was chosen president of the Harrisburg Bank in June, 1816, which office he held until his death. Governor Hiester appointed him attorney-general of the commonwealth, a position he filled with marked ability from Dec. 20, 1820, to Dec. 18, 1823, but he ever after positively refused to accept office, although he took a deep and active interest for many years in the political affairs of the State and nation. He was blessed with a physical constitution which enabled him to accomplish an extraordinary amount of labor without diminishing the elasticity of his spirits or the vigor of his mind. He lived to the advanced age of over eighty-six years, dying April 29, 1853, at Harrisburg. Mr. Elder was twice married. First to Catharine Cox, daughter of Col. Cornelius Cox, of Estherton; second, to Elizabeth Shippen Jones, daughter of Robert Strettel

Jones, of Philadelphia, and had issue by both marriages.

AMOS ELLMAKER.

Amos Ellmaker, the son of Nathaniel Ellmaker, was born in New Holland, Lancaster Co., Pa., on the 2d of February, 1787. He graduated at Yale College, and after completing his law studies at the celebrated law-school under Judge Reeves, at Litchfield, Conn., he came to Harrisburg, and continued his studies under Thomas Elder, and was subsequently admitted to the bar at the December term, 1808. He was commissioned deputy attorney-general for the county of Dauphin, Jan. 13, 1809, serving until 1812, and represented Dauphin County in the Legislature from 1812 to 1814. He was appointed by Governor Snyder president judge of this judicial district, July 3, 1815. In 1814 he accompanied the volunteers to Baltimore as an aid to Gen. Forster. On the 30th of December, 1816, he resigned, to accept the position of attorney-general of the State, serving to 1819. In June, 1821, he removed to Lancaster, resuming the practice of his profession. He was the anti-Masonic candidate for Vice-President of the United States in 1832. Judge Ellmaker died at Lancaster on the 28th of November, 1851. He married June 13, 1816, Mary R. Elder, daughter of Thomas Elder and Catharine Cox, of Harrisburg, who survives. "Mr. Ellmaker," says Mr. Harris in his "Reminiscences," "was reported to be a good lawyer, and his addresses to the jury when at the bar were clear, distinct, and argumentative." As a gentleman, he possessed in an eminent degree those characteristics which distinguish men of rare endowment. He was well informed, and of a lively social disposition, and in all the relations and positions of life was a model worthy of imitation.

REV. JOHN MICHAEL ENTERLINE.

John Michael Enterline was a native of the Palatinate, Germany, where he was born in 1726. He was educated at the University of Leipsic, and ordained a minister in 1751. He emigrated to America about 1760, but to what locality is not known. He became pastor of what subsequently was organized as St. John's congregation, near Berrysburg, having settled in that neighborhood towards the close of the Revolution. He was a faithful minister of the gospel, and labored strenuously in his calling. He died in March, 1800, aged seventy-four years, leaving a wife, Anna Barbara, and children,—John Michael, John Paul, Daniel, Anna Mary, married Adam Lenker, and Elizabeth, married Henry Wirth. Many of his descendants are more or less prominent citizens of the "Upper End."

PROFESSOR JAMES P. ESPY.

James (Pollard) Espy, the son of James Espy, was born in Westmoreland County, Pa., May 9, 1786. He was the youngest of ten children, and the seventh son. His father was a native of Hanover township, Dauphin Co., and had settled in Western Pennsylvania as early as 1780, removing about 1790 to the State of Kentucky, when the subject of our sketch was in his fourth year. His thirst for knowledge was from his childhood insatiable, and his means being limited, he began, while yet in his teens, teaching during a portion of each year to pay for the instruction received in the Transylvania University, Lexington, where he graduated at the age of twenty-one. The following year he was invited to Cumberland, Md., to take charge of a classical academy at that place, then newly endowed by the Legislature. His zeal for instructing the young was such that he soon made it a well-known institution, to which students came from every part of the country. In the mean time he studied law, went to Bedford, and was admitted to the bar there, subsequently going to Xenia, Ohio, whether his father had previously removed, where he practiced law four years. His profession did not seem to accord with the literary and scientific tendencies of his mind, and he accepted in 1817 a call to the classical department of the Franklin Institute, Philadelphia, and that city became his home for twenty years. During this period he published several pamphlets reviewing and rejecting the theories of storms and currents which prevailed, and these attracted the notice of the scientists of America. Professor Espy, having formed his own theory, brought it practically to the test of many storms. In 1841 he published his great work, "The Philosophy of Storms." Prior to its publication in this form the new theory had caused a sensation in the principal cities of England and France, and Professor Espy was invited to visit Europe and compare his results with those which had been reached by Redfield, Forbes, Pouillet, Fournet, and others. He accordingly visited Europe, and in September, 1840, the British Association appointed a day to entertain the professor's statement, which was made in the presence of Professor Forbes, Mr. Redfield, Sir John Herschel, Sir David Brewster, and other eminent naturalists. The discussion which followed was one of the most interesting ever reported in the journals of the Association.

In the Academy of Sciences at Paris the interest was equally great, and a committee consisting of Arago and Pouillet was appointed to report upon Espy's observations and theory. They were satisfied of the importance of the theory at once, and so reported. It was in the debate which took place in the Academy at this time that Arago said, "France has its Cuvier, England its Newton, America its Espy." On his return from this satisfactory visit Professor Espy was appointed corresponding member of the Smithsonian Institute. In 1843 he was employed by the War Department, in the Washington Observatory, to prosecute his investigations and collate the reports from the different observers throughout the country.

Several quarto volumes of this matter were published by the department. The remainder of his life was spent at the national capital, although his vacation days were enjoyed at Harrisburg amid the society of endeared friends. On the 17th of January, 1860, while on a visit to Cincinnati, Professor Espy was stricken with paralysis, from which he died on the 24th of the same month. His remains rest in the Espy burial lot in the Harrisburg Cemetery. He married, at the age of thirty-seven, Margaret Pollard, of Cumberland, Md., born Sept. 28, 1795, whose maiden name for some fancied reason he assumed, and was ever afterward known as James Pollard Espy. She died May 30, 1850, and is buried by the side of her husband at Harrisburg. They left no issue.

GEN. JACOB EYSTER.

Jacob Eyster, eldest son of George Eyster and Margaret Slagle, was born three miles west of Hanover, in what is now Adams County, Pa., June 8, 1782. He was a descendant of John Jacob Eyster, a native of the kingdom of Würtemberg, Germany, who emigrated to America between 1717 and 1727. Christian Eyster, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, was born in Germany in 1710. The family settled first at Oley, in Berks County; from thence Christian removed, in 1736, to York County. The eldest son of Christian was Elias, born in 1734, who lived until almost a centenarian. His eldest son, George, born June 6, 1757, was a farmer and tanner, a soldier of the Revolution, captured at Fort Washington, and confined for some time on board the British prison-ships. He married, in 1780, Margaret, daughter of Jacob Slagle and sister of Col. Henry Slagle, of the Revolution. About 1783 they removed to near Hunterstown, within five miles of Gettysburg, where their son Jacob passed his youth and early manhood. When first enrolled among the militia of Adams County he was appointed first sergeant, rose to captain, and then major, and in 1814 appointed by Governor Snyder brigadier-general Second Brigade, Fifth Division, Pennsylvania militia. During the invasion of Maryland by the British that year he was employed by the Secretary of War (Armstrong) and the Governor of Pennsylvania in distributing and forwarding arms and supplies to the militia who were called into service. In 1811 he removed to Gettysburg and engaged in mercantile pursuits. In 1818 he was a candidate for the House of Representatives, defeated by sixty-two votes, while the remainder of the Democratic ticket fell from three hundred to fourteen hundred behind. The year following (1819) he was nominated State senator for an unexpired term, elected, and subsequently for a full term. Previous to the nomination of Governor Shulze, Gen. Eyster was spoken of as a gubernatorial candidate. In 1822 he removed to Harrisburg, and in 1824 he resigned his seat in the Senate and was appointed deputy surveyor-general, an office he retained for fifteen years. He afterwards became cashier of a bank at Hagerstown, Md., but after a year's absence returned to Harrisburg, where he passed the remainder of his life. He died there on the 24th of March, 1858. He married, in 1810, Mary Middlecoff, of Adams County, who died at Harrisburg, March 24, 1867, at the age of seventy-five years. They had issue: Jacob M., Juliana (married Professor M. Jacobs, of Gettysburg), David A., Rev. William F., Alfred E., and Louisa C.

OBED FAHNESTOCK.

Obed Fahnestock, third son of Peter Fahnestock and Elizabeth Bolthouser, and grandson of Diedrich Fahnestock, who came to America as early as 1726, and settled at Ephrata about 1749, was born Feb. 25, 1770, at Ephrata, Lancaster Co., Pa. He was brought up to mercantile pursuits, and came to Harrisburg about 1795, where he entered into business. He seems to have been a man of considerable intelligence and prominence, as almost thirty years of his life were spent in office. He was coroner from Nov. 3, 1802, to Nov. 3, 1805; director of the poor from 1811 to 1813; one of the associate judges of the county from Nov. 12, 1813, to July 30, 1818, appointed by Governor Snyder, when, owing to his dislike of Samuel D. Franks, who had been appointed president judge of the courts, he resigned; was Burgess of the borough 1820 and 1821, and was frequently a member of the Council. He served as prothonotary from Jan. 17, 1824, to Jan. 29, 1830. Judge Fahnestock died at Harrisburg, March 2, 1840, aged seventy years. He married, April 19, 1796, Anna Maria Gessell, born Jan. 9, 1777; died Dec. 3, 1844.

CONRAD FAHNESTOCK.

Conrad Fahnestock, son of Peter Fahnestock and Elizabeth Bolthouser, was born at Ephrata, Lancaster Co., Pa., in 1763. He received a fair education at the German school there, and learned the art of printing with the Ephrata brethren. He came to Harrisburg in 1791, and engaged with his brother Obed in merchandising. Subsequently he entered into partnership with Benjamin Mayer in the publication of the Morgenrothe, or "Dutch Aurora," as it was commonly called. Under the infamous alien and sedition act of the administration of the elder Adams, Messrs. Mayer & Fahnestock were arrested by United States officers and thrown into prison, but promptly released on bail. They were never tried. Shortly afterwards Mr. Fahnestock retired from the printing business and entered the mercantile trade at Middletown, where he died on the 30th of September, 1803. The Oracle speaks of him as "an industrious, honest, and valuable member of society."

JOHN FAGER.

John Fager, son of John Jacob Fager and Rosanna Lutz, was born June 10, 1768, in Oley township, Berks Co., Pa. His grandfather, John Henry Fager, born in 1714, in Germany, married Susanna M. Leuter, and emigrated to America, settling in Oley township, Berks Co., where he died in 1778. His son, John Jacob, born 1738, in the Palatinate, died in 1815, at Harrisburg, married Rosanna Lutz, born 1739; died 1802. Their son, John, learned the trade of a hatter in Reading, and came to Harrisburg about 1790, where for a number of years he carried on the business. He was one of the founders of the Evangelical

JOHN H. FAGER, M.D.

John Henry Fager, son of John Fager and Sarah Cleckner, was born in the year 1806, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received careful training and a good education. He read medicine with Dr. Martin Luther, one of the more prominent of the early physicians at Harrisburg, and attended medical lectures at the University of Pennsylvania. In 1829 he began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg, which he continued until his death, a period of forty-three years. In 1840, his attention being called to the homœopathic system, the doctor commenced the study of the new theory, and afterwards adopted it in his practice.

Mr H. Fager

Lutheran Church at Harrisburg in 1795; served as commissioner of the county of Dauphin, and for a number of years was a member of the Town Council. After retiring from active business, late in life, he was the collector of tolls at the east end of the Harrisburg bridge. He died at Harrisburg on the 10th of May, 1848, lacking one month of being eighty years of age. Mr. Fager married Sarah Cleckner, born 1772, died 1844, at Harrisburg, daughter of Frederick Cleckner, Sr., one of the first settlers at Harrisburg. They had ten children, of whom reached mature years were Sarah, married George Adams, of Harrisburg; Catharine, married Frederick Kelker, of Harrisburg; Samuel, George C., and John H.

He was quite a successful physician, and enjoyed the confidence of the community. Apart from his professional life, Dr. Fager was a valued citizen. For thirty-three years he was a member of the school board, during most of which period he was secretary or treasurer; for several terms a member of the Borough Council, and for fifty years an active worker in the Sunday-school of the First Lutheran Church. He died Aug. 18, 1872, aged sixty-five years. Dr. Fager was twice married,—first, to Eliza Jones (1810–1834), and had Albert J., who served as first lieutenant in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and now an alderman of the city of Harrisburg. He married, secondly, Mary H. Buffington, daughter of John Buffington and Isabella Fulton, and they had Dr. Charles B. (see biographical sketch), Ella E., Bella F., Annie M., and Dr. John H.

CAPT. GEORGE W. FENN.

George Washington Fenn was born at East Canaan, Litchfield Co., Conn., on the 20th of March, 1845. His father's name was Benjamin Sedgwick Fenn, and his mother's maiden name was Sarah Scranton, of East Guilford, New Haven Co., Conn. George died at Harrisburg, July 29, 1866, aged twenty-one years, four months, and nine days. He married Annie E. Roberts, daughter of Joseph Roberts, of Harrisburg, Pa., Aug. 28, 1864. He finished his education at the Lancaster, Pa., high school; was a good mathematician, good grammarian, and had some knowledge of Latin. He was an apt scholar, and could master almost any study in a short time. He was for some time employed in the printing-office of his uncle, Theo. Fenn, Esq., acting in the capacity of reporter of local news. He removed with his uncle to Harrisburg in 1859, and was employed as a reporter in the State Senate. He raised a volunteer company in Harrisburg in 1864, called the Verbeke Guards, which was attached to the Two Hundred and Tenth Regiment, commanded by Col. J. Wesley Aul. He and part of his company were taken prisoners by Early's men in the Shenandoah Valley. The rebels stripped him of part of his clothing, and traveled him barefooted to Lynchburg or Staunton, but he eventually escaped and returned home before the end of the war, and was assigned to the Provost-Marshal's Department, holding court-martials, etc. After the war he, with Samuel B. Coles, established a printing-office in Lykens, from which they issued the Upper Dauphin Register, an office afterwards purchased by his brother, Samuel M. Fenn, altering the name to Lykens Register, and continued ever since.

COL. PHILIP FETTERHOFF.

Philip Fetterhoff, son of Frederick Fetterhoff and Susanna Heckert, was a native of Lancaster County, Pa., born Sept. 2, 1788. His father removed to Upper Paxtang township prior to 1806, and established a mill in what is now Jackson township. He was brought up to the occupation of his father. He commanded a company from his neighborhood which marched to the defense of Baltimore in 1814. After his return he was chosen colonel of one of the militia battalions. He was elected coroner of the county, serving from Oct. 24, 1821, to Nov. 20, 1824, and filled a number of local offices. Col. Fetterhoff died at his residence in Jackson township on the 4th of September, 1833. He married, in 1811, Eve Bayer, and left four children.

GOVERNOR WILLIAM FINDLAY.

William Findlay, the second son of Samuel Findlay and Jane Smith, was born near Mercersburg, Franklin Co., Pa., June 20, 1768. His progenitor, beyond whom he never traced his lineage, was Adjt. Brown, as he was called, who took part in the famous siege of Derry, and afterwards emigrated to America with his daughter Elizabeth. The daughter married Samuel Findlay, of Philadelphia. A son by this marriage settled, about 1756, in Cumberland (now Franklin) County, Pa. In the year 1765 he married Jane Smith, a daughter of William Smith. She died in her thirty-fifth year, the mother of eight boys, six of whom survived her. The subject of this sketch was the second of this family of sons. The Scotch-Irish settlers appreciated the importance of a good education. A knowledge of the common English branches they deemed indispensable for all their children, while one son in a family at least, if it could be accomplished by any reasonable sacrifice, received a classical education. William, in his boyhood, displayed that activity of mind and thirst for knowledge which were the characteristics of his manhood. His leisure hours were devoted to reading such books as were accessible. His instruction was, however, such as could be obtained in the schools of the neighborhood. The meagre advantages afforded him were studiously improved, and the natural activity of his mind and his ambition to excel enabled him to make substantial acquirements.

On the 7th of December, 1791, he was married to Nancy Irwin, daughter of Archibald Irwin, of Franklin County, and commenced life as a farmer on a portion of his father's estate which, at the death of his father, in 1799, he inherited.

He was a political disciple and a great admirer of Mr. Jefferson. The first office which he ever held was a military one, that of brigade inspector of militia, requiring more of business capacity than knowledge of tactics. To the veterans of the Revolutionary war it was given to become generals and colonels. In the autumn of 1797, that immediately succeeding the inauguration of John Adams as President of the United States, at a time when the only newspaper published in Franklin County was the organ of the Federalists, with its columns strictly closed against the Republicans, Mr. Findlay was elected a member of the House of Representatives of the State Legislature, which then sat in Philadelphia. He was again elected to the House in 1803. Mr. Jefferson had succeeded Mr. Adams in the Presidency, and the Republicans were in the ascendant in both national and State governments. The capital had, by the act of April 3, 1799, been temporarily established at Lancaster. Mr. Findlay, at this session, proposed that it should be permanently established at Harrisburg. The proposition then failed; but it was eventually carried, and in 1812 the removal was effected. He proved himself a leading member, and one of the most useful in the House, being placed in the most responsible positions. When the act to revise the judiciary system was before the House, Mr. Findlay offered additional sections, providing that a plaintiff might file a statement of his cause of action, instead of a declaration; for reference of matters in dispute to arbitration; that proceedings should not be set aside for informality; that pleadings might be amended, and amicable actions and judgments entered without the agency of an attorney.

GOVERNOR WILLIAM FINDLAY.

These provisions were not then adopted, but they afterwards became and still are a part of the statute law. The object aimed at by their mover was doubtless to enable parties to conduct their own cases in court without professional assistance. This the enactments have failed to accomplish; but they have been of great advantage to attorneys themselves, enabling them to cure their own errors and omissions, to which they as well as the unlearned are liable.

On the 13th of January, 1807, Mr. Findlay was elected State treasurer, whereupon he resigned his seat in the House. From that date until the 2d of December, 1817, when he resigned to assume the duties of chief magistrate, a period of nearly eleven years, he was annually re-elected by the Legislature to that office, in several instances unaniously, and always by a strong majority, not uncommonly being supported by members politically opposed to him. During nearly four years of this time the United States were at war with England, and the resources of the country were severely taxed.

In 1817, Mr. Findlay was nominated by the Republicans as their candidate for Governor. Gen. Joseph Hiester was selected by a disaffected branch of the Republican party, styled Old School men, to oppose him, who was supported also by the Federalists. The result was a triumph for Findlay, who was elected by a majority of over seven thousand votes.

In 1820, Governor Findlay again received the unanimous nomination of the Republicans for reelection, and Joseph Hiester was nominated, as before, by the Republicans of the Old School, and was supported by the Federalists en masse. Under the Constitution of 1790 the patronage of the Executive was immense. To him was given the power of appointing, with few exceptions, every State and county officer. This power, considered so dangerous that, by the Constitution of 1838 and subsequent amendments, the Executive has been stripped of it almost entirely, was, in fact, dangerous only to the Governor himself. For while he might attach one person to him by making an appointment, the score or two who were disappointed became, if not active political opponents, at least lukewarm friends. Many trained and skillful politicians had been alienated from the support of Governor Findlay by their inability to share or control patronage. The result was the election of his opponent.

At the general elections of 1821 the Republicans regained ascendancy in the Legislature. At the session of 1821-22, while Governor Findlay was quietly spending the winter with a friend and relative in Franklin County, he received notice that he had been elected to the Senate of the United States for the full term of six years from the preceding 4th of March. He immediately set out for the capital, where he took his seat, and served the entire term with distinguished ability. While he was in the Senate two of his brothers, Col. John Findlay, of Chambersburg, and Gen. James Findlay, of Cincinnati, Ohio, were members of the national House of Representatives. After the expiration of his senatorial term he was appointed by President Jackson treasurer of the United States Mint at Philadelphia. This office he held until the accession of Gen. Harrison to the Presidency, when, unwilling, at his advanced age, to be longer burdened with its cares and responsibilities, he resigned. The remainder of his life was spent in retirement with the family of his son-in-law, Governor Shunk, at whose residence, in Harrisburg, he died on the 12th of November, 1846, in the seventy-ninth year of his age.

In person Governor Findlay was tall, with fair complexion and dark-brown hair. He had a vigorous constitution and a cheerful disposition. He was affable and courteous in his address, fond of conversation, but did not monopolize it. He understood and practiced the habits of a good listener. He exhibited great tact in drawing out the reserved and taciturn, and enabling them to figure well in conversation by giving rein to their hobbies. He possessed a remarkably tenacious memory of names and faces. After a long separation, he could recognize and call by name a person with whom he had had but a short and casual interview. His acquaintance was probably more extensive and his personal friends more numerous than those of almost any other public man of his day.

 ISAAC S. FINNEY.

Isaac S. Finney, son of George Washington Finney and Elsie Smith, was born Sept. 6, 1835, at Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa. He entered the navy as third assistant engineer in 1859, and joined the "Mystic," which was detailed for duty on the coast of Africa. On the 25th of November, 1861, he was promoted to the rank of second assistant engineer. He afterward joined the "Tuscarora," and was present during the engagement at Fort Fisher, and while engaged in the pursuit of the "Alabama," and remained on her till 1864, when he was promoted to the rank of first assistant engineer and ordered to shore duty; but this only lasted for a few days, for on the 23d of June he was ordered to join the frigate "Susquehanna," belonging to the North Atlantic squadron, and remained on her till the 25th of June, 1866, when he went on shore duty at the Philadelphia and Portsmouth navy-yards for a brief period of time. On the 25th of May, 1867, he joined the "Minnesota," and remained on her till the 31st of January, 1868. On the 26th of January, 1870, he joined the frigate "Colorado," fitting out for the Asiatic squadron, and remained on her till she went out of commission on the 25th of March, 1873. Upon his return he obtained his promotion to chief engineer. During the "Virginus" excitement, and when a war with Spain appeared probable, he voluntarily relinquished the agreeable position he held of superintendent of the construction of government machinery at Newburgh, on the Hudson, to join his old ship the "Colorado." From the evil effects of his six months' sojourn on that vessel off the coast of Cuba and Key West he never recovered, and died at Brooklyn, N. Y., on the 19th of November, 1874. He was interred in the family burial lot in the Harrisburg Cemetery.

GEORGE FISHER.

George Fisher, the son of John and Catharine Fisher, influential Quakers of Philadelphia, was born in that city Feb. 10, 1732. His father purchasing a large tract of land on the Swatara, conveyed it to the son in 1754, and on which he settled about the same year. Foreseeing the advantages, George Fisher, in 1775, laid out a town on the highest portion of his farm, naming it Middletown. He married, in 1755, Hannah, daughter of Jonas Chamberlain, of Sadsbury township, Lancaster Co., Pa., by whom he had three children,—John, George, and Hannah. Mr. Fisher died Feb. 21, 1777. By will he devised to his son John the homestead, and to his son George the plantation at the mouth of the Swatara, his daughter receiving, in lieu of land, eight hundred pounds. John Fisher became a physician, and George Fisher a lawyer of considerable reputation at the Dauphin County bar. The latter was the father of Judge Fisher, of York.

R. JACKSON FLEMING.

Robert Jackson Fleming, the son of Samuel Fleming and Sarah Becket, was born Nov. 16, 1803, in Hanover township, Washington Co., Pa. He received an academical education, and while yet a young man became a teacher and lecturer on English grammar and on music, and took a trip to the then West, lecturing on his favorite topic. In 1834 he established the coach-making business on an extensive scale at Harrisburg, and continued it with success until his entire establishment was destroyed by fire June 15, 1865. He did not resume it. He built at his shop the first eight-wheel passenger-car which ran on the Pennsylvania Railroad, between Columbia and Philadelphia, also the first on the Williamsport and Elmira Railroad, taking it up the canal on a flat-boat. He was appointed notary public in 1861, and held the office until his death, for years doing the business of the Harrisburg National Bank in this official capacity. He died at Harrisburg, Dec. 2, 1874, in the seventy-second year of his age. He was deservedly honored in his adopted city as an upright and enterprising citizen, a man of intelligent and high moral character, and in the Presbyterian Church of which he was a lifelong member he was one of its elders for twenty years. Mr. Fleming married in 1845, Sarah Ann Poor, of McConnellsville, Ohio, and left one son, Samuel W.

JAMES FLEMING, M.D.

James Fleming, son of Samuel Fleming and Sarah Becket, was born June 25, 1810, in Washington County, Pa. In 1812 his parents removed to Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa., where his early years were passed. His boyhood was marked by a laudable ambition to excel in his studies, and the influence of his mother in this direction had its good effect not only during his youth, but throughout his life. Thrown upon his own resources at the age of eighteen, he resolved to educate himself by alternately acting as teacher and pupil, and pursued this course for seven years, thereby becoming conversant with the higher mathematics, the ancient languages, and French. Much of his time was passed in the States of Kentucky and Ohio. About 1835 he commenced the study of medicine, and graduated at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, in March, 1838. For four years he practiced his profession, but finding the duties too arduous for his slender constitution, his attention was drawn to the science of dental surgery, then comparatively in its infancy. Observing the necessity for good operators in this field, he went to Philadelphia and acquired a thorough knowledge of that specialty. Returning to Harrisburg, he met with deserved and well-marked success. During the remainder of his life he was a frequent contributor to both medical and dental journals, and occasionally to the newspaper press. He was a member of the Pennsylvania Association of Dental Surgeons and of the American Society, and one of the original advocates of the establishment of a dental college at Philadelphia, in which he was subsequently tendered a professorship, but declined. He was twice the recipient of the honorary degree of Doctor of Dental Surgery. He was a director of the Harrisburg National Bank, president of the board of school directors, and an elder of the First Presbyterian Church. He died at Harrisburg, Jan. 30, 1875, in his sixty-fifth year. Dr. Fleming married, in 1852, Jeannette Street, daughter of Col. Thaddeus Street and Martha Davenport Reynolds, of Cheshire, Conn., a lineal descendant of Rev. John Davenport, the founder of New Haven. Her maternal grandmother, Martha Davenport, was a descendant of Oliver Wolcott, a signer of the Declaration of Independence. Their children were Helen Street, married Daniel P. Bruner, a lawyer and civil engineer, and William Reynolds.

ROBERT FLEMING.

Robert Fleming, the fourth son of Robert Fleming and Jane Jackson, was born in Chester County, Pa., June 6, 1756. His parents were natives of Argyleshire, Scotland, who subsequently removed to Ireland, and from thence emigrated to America, about 1746, settling near Flemington, Chester Co. Prior to the Revolution they located within the limits of the "New Purchase," on the West Branch of the Susquehanna, but during the "Great Runaway," in 1778, they sought refuge among some friends in now Dauphin County. About 1784 they removed to Hanover township, Washington Co., Pa., locating on Harmon's Creek, where they resided at the time of their death, Robert Fleming at ninety-six and his wife at ninety-four. Robert Fleming, the subject of this notice, remained in Dauphin County; purchased land in Hanover township, on which he resided during his lifetime. On the 6th of February, 1783, he married Margaret, daughter of John Wright. He was one of the founders of the Harrisburg Bank, and instrumental in the erection of the Harrisburg bridge. He was an officer in the volunteer force of 1812, and filled acceptably various local offices. He was an elder in the Hanover Church during the ministrations of Rev. James Snodgrass. He died Feb. 4, 1817, and his wife Dec. 12, 1813, aged fifty-nine years.

JOHN FORD.

John Ford, son of Peter Ford and Rebecca Shipe, was born in the town of York, Pa., Jan. 5, 1780. His father was a silversmith, and an emigrant from England, and was an officer in one of the associated battalions of York County, serving in the war for independence. John received a fair English education, learned the trade of his father, and also that of a gunsmith. He came to Harrisburg in 1801, and established himself in business, which he continued quite successfully up to within a few years of his death. He was appointed State armorer in 1817, and superintendent of the arsenal at Harrisburg, an office he filled many years. He died at Harrisburg, Jan. 31, 1862, at the age of eighty-two years. He was a man of enterprise and ingenuity, scrupulously honest and upright. Mr. Ford married, in 1803, Mary Schnevely, of Cumberland County, Pa., born June 12, 1781; died Dec. 25, 1830. They had children as follows: George (married Catharine, daughter of George Stehley), Julianna (married John Wetzel), Maria (married Samuel Sloan), Charles, Susan (married George Welker), Eliza (married, first, Louis Shuler; second, Samuel Brenizer), Catharine (married George Balsley), and William.

tion" of 1794, and was on that expedition as an aid to Gen. Murray. He subsequently read law with Gen. Hanna, but never applied for admission, turning his attention to mercantile pursuits, in which he was very successful. During the military era of the government prior to the war of 1812 he was colonel of State militia, and in 1814, when the troops from Pennsylvania marched to the defense of the beleaguered city of Baltimore, he was placed in command of a brigade of volunteers. For his gallant services in that campaign the thanks of the general commanding were tendered in special orders. He served in the State Senate from 1814 to 1818. Gen. Forster was cashier of the Harrisburg Bank for a period of at least sixteen years, established the Bank of Lewistown, and in 1840 was cashier of the Exchange Bank of Pittsburgh. He subsequently became president of the branch bank at Hollidays-

Gen. Forster

GEN. JOHN FORSTER.

John Forster, the son of John Forster and Catharine Dickey, daughter of Moses Dickey, was born in Paxtang township, Lancaster Co., now Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 17th of September, 1777. He received a good education, and was at Princeton when a call was made by President Washington for volunteers to march to Western Pennsylvania to put down the so-called "Whiskey Insurrec-burg, but in a few years retired from all business pursuits and returned to his home at Harrisburg. He died there on the 28th of May, 1863, at the advanced age of almost eighty-six years. Gen. Forster was faithful, honest, and upright in all his business connections, and a good financier.

Gen. Forster married, first, Mary Elder, daughter of John Elder, and granddaughter of Rev. John Elder, of Paxtang, and their children were John, Joshua, Catharine, married Henry Antes; Rev. Thomas, of Mount Clement, Mich.; William, of Lancaster County; and Theodore, of St. Louis, Mo., a representative man of that metropolis. He married, secondly, Margaret Snodgrass, daughter of Benjamin Law, of Mifflin, Pa., and widow of Rev. James H. Stewart,¹ a Presbyterian clergyman of the Kishacoquillas Valley. Their children were Benjamin L., a lawyer of Harrisburg; Margaret S., married Maj. Edwin Vose Sumner, U.S.A., son of Gen. Sumner, of Fort Robinson, N. Y.; Ellen Rutherford, married George C. Bent, of Harrisburg; and Mary Elizabeth, married James Edward Cann, paymaster U.S.A.

THOMAS FORSTER, ESQ.

Thomas Forster (1st) was a native of County Antrim, Ireland, of Scotch parentage, born in 1696. He emigrated to America at an early period, and was among the first who took up land in what is now Paxtang township. He was a gentleman of means, had received a good education, and was for many years one of the Provincial magistrates. He was removed late in life, on account of his refusal to oust some squatters on Proprietary lands. He was a prominent personage on the then frontiers of the Province in civil affairs, and much interested in the establishment of Paxtang Church, to which he donated a valuable tract of land. During the Indian troubles he greatly assisted in preparing for the defense of the border settlements, and his name appears frequently in the voluminous correspondence preserved in the archives of the State. He died in Paxtang, 25th of July, 1772, aged seventy-six years, and is buried in the old church graveyard. Mr. Forster was never married; the principal part of his estate went to his brother John and nephew Thomas Forster, the latter named for him.

COL. THOMAS FORSTER.

Thomas Forster (2d), the son of John Forster, brother of Thomas Forster, Esq., and Catherine Dickey, was born in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 16th of May, 1762. He received a good education and was brought up as a surveyor. During the latter part of the Revolution was in arms for the defense of the frontiers. In 1794, during the so-called Whiskey Insurrection, he served as colonel of one of the volunteer regiments in that expedition. He was one of the associate judges of Dauphin County, appointed Oct. 26, 1793, by Governor Mifflin, resigning Dec. 3, 1798, having been elected one of the representatives of the State Legislature that year. At the close of 1799 or early in 1800, as the agent of the Harrisburg and Presqu' Isle Land Company, he permanently removed to Erie. In the affairs incident to the early settlement of that town and the organization of that county he took a prominent part. He was one of the first street commissioners of the town, president of the Erie and Waterford Turnpike Company, one of the directors of the first library company and its librarian, and captain of the first military company formed at Erie, and which, in 1812, was in service at Buffalo, Capt. Forster being promoted brigade inspector. In 1823 he was appointed by Governor Schulze one of the commissioners to explore the route for the Erie extension of the Pennsylvania Canal, and in 1827 was chairman of the meeting organizing St. Paul's Episcopal Church. In 1823 he was appointed by President Adams collector of the port at Erie, and successively commissioned by Presidents Jefferson, Madison, J. Q. Adams, and Jackson, filling the office until his death, which occurred at Erie, June 29, 1836. Col. Forster married, Oct. 5, 1786, Sarah Pettit Montgomery, daughter of the Rev. Joseph Montgomery, a member of the Confederated Congress. She died at Erie, July 27, 1808.

JOHN FOX.

John Fox, son of John Fox and Ann Margaret Rupert, was born June 10, 1780, near Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the country schools of the neighborhood, and a farmer by occupation. He became quite prominent and influential in the political affairs of the county, and served as a member of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania from 1831 to 1833. He filled the office of sheriff from Oct. 14, 1833, to Oct. 21, 1836, and again from Oct. 19, 1839, to Oct. 24, 1842. Apart from these positions of trust and honor, he served his neighbors in the various township offices with fidelity. He died at his residence in Hummelstown, July 19, 1853, aged seventy-three years. He was a representative man, not only of his family but of the county, a faithful officer, of strict integrity, upright and conscientious in all his relations with his fellow-men.

GOVERNOR JOHN W. GEARY.

John White Geary, the son of Richard Geary and Margaret White, was born Dec. 30, 1819, near Mount Pleasant, Westmoreland Co., Pa. The father was of Scotch-Irish ancestry, a native of Franklin County, and a man of education, refined tastes, and superior moral excellence. His mother was born in Washington County, Md. They removed to Westmoreland County soon after their marriage, where Richard Geary engaged at first in the manufacture of iron, which proving unsuccessful, he resorted to teaching, a profession he pursued the remainder of his life. The son turned to commercial pursuits, but convinced by a short experience in a wholesale house in Pittsburgh that this would not prove to him a satisfactory sphere of life, he yielded to his natural predilections for mathematics, and applied himself to the study of civil engineering. Having mastered the principles of that profession, he commenced the study of the law, in the belief that it would increase the chances of a successful career, and was admitted to the bar, though intending to adopt engineering as his fixed vocation. With this end in view he went to Kentucky, where he was engaged, partly in the employ of the commonwealth and partly in that of the Green River Railroad Company, to make a survey of several important lines of public works. His success in the Southwest opened the way to advancement in his native State, and he soon after became assistant superintendent and engineer of the

GOVERNOR JOHN W. GEARY.

Allegheny Portage Railroad. While occupied with the duties of this position, in the month of May, 1846, President Polk sent a message to Congress, informing that body that "war existed with this country by the act of Mexico," and asking for men and money to enable him to maintain the rights and vindicate the honor of the government. The burst of enthusiasm was instantaneous and general, and Geary was among the first who responded to the call for volunteers, in a short time raising a company in Cambria County, to which he gave the name of American Highlanders. At Pittsburgh, his command was incorporated with the Second Pennsylvania Regiment, commanded by Col. Roberts, of which he was immediately elected lieutenant-colonel. The regiment joined the army of General Scott at Vera Cruz, and served with conspicuous gallantry in Quitman's division during the memorable advance upon the Mexican capital. Lieut.-Col. Geary's first experience of actual war was in the partial though spirited action of the Pass of La Hoya. In the storming of Chapultepec he was wounded, and in the assault upon the immediate defenses of the city, at the Garita de Belen, he again led his regiment with so much judgment, coolness, and intrepidity that upon the capture he was assigned to the command of the great citadel, as a mark of Quitman's appreciation of his services. From the time when the army entered the valley of Mexico, Col. Roberts was disqualified for duty by sickness, and the command of the regiment devolved upon the lieutenant-colonel. Shortly after the surrender of the capital, Col. Roberts died, and Lieut.-Col. Geary was elected to succeed him.

On the 22d of January, 1849, President Polk, in grateful recognition of his services in the Mexican war, appointed Col. Geary postmaster of San Francisco and mail agent for the Pacific coast, with authority to create post-offices, appoint postmasters, establish mail routes, and make contracts for carrying the mails throughout California. Having received his commission, on the 1st of February, in company with his wife and child, sailed from New York for the Pacific coast. On the 1st of April he landed safely at San Francisco, and entered at once upon the discharge of his duties. For a time he was obliged to content himself with the rudest accommodations, and to perform his work under many disadvantages. But here, as in all previous situations, his methodical turn and practical tact soon enabled him to improvise all needful facilities, and brought the labors of the office under an easy and expeditious management.

The intelligent and obliging dispatch with which Col. Geary had discharged his duties as postmaster and mail agent so won the confidence and esteem of the people of San Francisco, that when the time arrived for the election of town officers he was unanimously chosen first alcalde, though there were ten different tickets submitted to the choice of the voters. Shortly afterwards this mark of appreciation on the part of the citizens was followed by another equally flattering on the part of the military governor of the Territory, Brig.-Gen. Riley, who appointed him judge of first instance. These offices were of Mexican origin, and they imposed onerous and important duties. The alcalde was sheriff, probate judge, recorder, notary public, and coroner. The court of first instance exercised both civil and criminal jurisdiction throughout the city, and besides this adjudicated all those cases arising under the port regulations which usually fall within the cognizance of courts of admiralty. At the close of his first term he was re-elected, receiving all but four votes of the whole number cast, and continued in office until the Mexican institutions were superseded by the American forms of municipal government.

In a vote upon the first city charter and for officers to serve thereunder, May 1, 1850, Judge Geary was elected first mayor of San Francisco by a large majority. As mayor, he rendered valuable service in perfecting the municipal organization, in restraining the tendency to extravagant expenditure of the public funds, sustaining the city's credit by judicious management of its finances, and by an honest disposal of the public property saved to the corporation many millions of dollars.

Owing to the failing health of his wife, Col. Geary, on the 1st of February, 1852, sailed from San Francisco, intending to go back and remain permanently in California, but the death of the former and other circumstances unforeseen caused him to change his purpose, and gave a new direction to his whole course of life. After having spent about three years in retirement, and had in a measure brought the condition of his farm into conformity with his own ideal of what such an estate should be, President Pierce invited him to Washington for the purpose of tendering to him the Governorship of Utah, which, after due acknowledgment of the compliment, he respectfully declined.

Not the government of Utah but of Kansas was the great problem of Mr. Pierce's administration. A bloody civil strife was being waged in that Territory, and the political state of the whole country was convulsed on the subject of its affairs. One Governor had been removed for refusing to conform strictly to the Federal policy in regard to slavery, and another was preparing to flee from the Territory through fear of assassination. In view of the pressing exigency, the thoughts of the President reverted to Col. Geary, and after consultation in July he was appointed Governor of Kansas, and proceeded immediately to his new field of labor, arriving at Fort Leavenworth on the 9th of September, 1856. His administration extended only from that date to March, 1857.

Governor Geary was at his farm in Westmoreland when the sound of the Rebellion's first gun broke upon the ear of the nation. Early on the morning following the eventful day he drove his farm-wagon to the neighboring village, and there first heard the news of the assault upon Fort Sumter. In less than an hour after reading the telegram he had opened an office for the enlistment of volunteers. As soon as he could communicate with the President he tendered his services, and was immediately commissioned colonel, with authority to raise a regiment for the defense of the Union. In the course of a few weeks he received applications from sixty-six companies, soliciting permission to join his command. On account of the numerous and urgent appeals he was permitted to increase his regiment to sixteen companies, with one battery of six guns, making the full complement to consist of fifteen hundred and fifty-one officers and men. The artillery company was that which subsequently became so celebrated as Knapp's Battery. Of Gen. Geary's services during the Rebellion we shall not refer further than to say they were brilliant, and gave him honor few enjoyed, and when the war closed he had reached the rank of major-general.

When, in the spring of 1866, the Republican leaders began to consider the important question of selecting a candidate for the chief magistracy of the State, it soon became apparent that the name of Gen. Geary was everywhere received with favor. His ripe experience in the conduct of civil affairs and his distinguished services in the field commended him alike to the gratitude of the popular heart and the sanction of the popular judgment. After a very spirited canvass he was elected over his competitor, Hiester Clymer, by a majority of over seventeen thousand votes, and was inaugurated on the 15th of January, 1867.

Governor Geary was elected to a second term, which he filled with acknowledged ability. A few weeks after his successor in office was inaugurated he died suddenly while sitting at the breakfast-table. The entire city and State were shocked by the unexpected event. The Legislature, then in session, at once adopted measures for the funeral obsequies at the State's expense. To no former Executive had ever such a distinction been accorded, and every respect that could be shown was paid to his memory. He was buried at Harrisburg, and over his grave the State he loved so well and served so faithfully erected a monument of bronze creditable to the great commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

Governor Geary married, on the 12th of February, 1843, Margaret Ann Logan, daughter of James R. Logan, of Westmoreland County. Three sons were the issue of this marriage, one of whom died in infancy, another, Edward R., killed in the battle of Wauhatchie, and the other, William, a graduate of West Point and lieutenant in the United States army. Mrs. Geary died on the 28th of February, 1853, and in November, 1858, Governor Geary was married to Mrs. Mary C. Henderson, daughter of Robert R. Church, of Cumberland County. After Governor Geary's death his widow married Dr. H. Earnest Goodman, of Philadelphia.

MOSES GILLMOR.

Moses Gillmor was born in the township of Burt, parish of Templemore, county of Donegal, six miles from the city of Londonderry, province of Ulster, Ireland, about the year 1749. Until his seventeenth year he remained in Ireland, when he came with an uncle to America, settling in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. Prior to the Revolution he returned to Ireland on business connected with his father's estate, but the breaking out of the war delayed his return until about 1783. The next year, November, 1784, according to Parson Elder's marriage record, he married Isabel Wallace, third daughter of Robert and Mary Wallace, of Hanover. Upon the laying out of the town of Harrisburg in 1785, Mr. Gillmor purchased a lot on Market Square, built a house, and established himself in the mercantile business, which he successfully carried on a number of years. He was quite prominent in local political affairs, and in the church of which he was one of the founders—the First Presbyterian—he was an elder for thirty-four years. Mr. Gillmor died at Harrisburg, June 10, 1825, aged seventy-six years, and with his wife, Isabel (born in 1755, died Sept. 16, 1828), is buried in Paxtang Church graveyard. Their children were Thomas, born 1785, died 1793; Mary, born 1787, died 1793; William, born 1789, died Aug. 28, 1856; Robert, born 1791, died Nov. 13, 1867; Margaret, born 1793, died 1839.

COL. CHRISTIAN GLEIM.

Christian Gleim, fourth son of George Christian Gleim and Anna Maria Mathias, was born Jan. 10, 1780. He received a fair education and subsequently went to Philadelphia, where he entered the printing-office of Ezra Bailey, serving with Duane, Binns, Marshall, Wynkoop, and others who became men of note. He next went to Richmond, Va., and thence to Baltimore. There he married Martha Henry, daughter of John Henry. In 1812, Mr. Gleim settled in Harrisburg, and was appointed printer of the Senate Journal in English. He served as ensign of Capt. Thomas Walker's company, and returned as paymaster United States volunteers. In October, 1821, he was elected sheriff of Dauphin County, serving three years. In 1830, Col. Gleim removed to Pittsburgh, where he resided until his death, which occurred Sept. 21, 1861. Col. Gleim was an enterprising and prominent citizen of this locality sixty or seventy years ago. He was a highly-cultivated Christian gentleman.

COL. ALEXANDER GRAYDON.

Alexander Graydon (1st), born 1714, at Longford, Ireland, was brought under the care of his maternal grandfather in Dublin, and was designed for the pulpit. He received a suitable education therefor, to which having added many of the accomplishments at that time in fashion, he became afterwards distinguished in Philadelphia, both as a scholar and a gentleman. He emigrated to America in 1730, settling in Philadelphia, where he entered mercantile life. About 1740 he removed to Bristol, Bucks Co. Here, notwithstanding his Quaker surroundings, he was greatly esteemed and respected—nay, honored and revered—for his many excellent qualities of head and heart. Among the officers first enrolled for the defense of the Province of Pennsylvania we find the name of Alexander Graydon, as captain of a Bucks County company, in 1747, and subsequently as colonel of the county regiment. After the defeat of Braddock, when it was found necessary to raise troops for defensive operations against the marauding Indians, Col. Graydon was offered the position of field-officer in the Provincial corps, but declined the appointment. He died at Bristol in March, 1761, aged forty-seven years. He was "a man of unquestionable probity, and there was also much of attraction in his character." He was twice married,—first to a Miss Emerson, prior to his coming to America, and they had two children; second, in 1750, to Rachel Marks (see biographical sketch), and left four children,—Alexander, Rachel (married Dr. Andrew Forrest), Andrew, and William, concerning all of whom we shall make mention.

CAPT. ALEXANDER GRAYDON.

Alexander Graydon (the younger), son of Alexander Graydon and Rachel Marks, was born April 10, 1752 (N. S.), at Bristol, Bucks Co., Pa. At the age of six years he was sent to Philadelphia to the care of his maternal grandfather, and put to the school of David James Dove, an Englishman, and much celebrated in his day as a teacher. He was afterwards entered at the academy now the University of Pennsylvania, where he was placed in charge of the Rev. Mr. Kinnesley, teacher of English and Professor of Oratory. In 1761 he entered the Latin school of John Beverage. At the age of sixteen he left college, and some eighteen months after commenced the study of law with his uncle, Edward Biddle, Esq., of Philadelphia. In 1773 he was, on account of impaired health, sent by the latter to York, to the care of Samuel Johnson, prothonotary of the county and a lawyer of some prominence, where he remained about six months, when he returned to his home at Philadelphia. The study of law was continued, at the suggestion of his uncle, with James Allen, second son of William Allen, then chief justice of Pennsylvania. About the time when he should have been admitted to the bar the war of the Revolution opened, and, imbued with the military ardor and patriotic spirit of the hour, he received the appointment and was commissioned captain Jan. 5, 1776, of Col. John Shee's (Third Pennsylvania) battalion. Of his services, his being taken prisoner at the capture of Fort Mifflin, on the Hudson, Nov. 16, 1776, and of his being released on parole, we can only refer to his "Memoirs." He was exchanged in April, 1778. Having lost his rank by reason of his capture and parole, he did not again enter the service. His mother having removed to Reading during the occupancy of Philadelphia by the British, thither Alexander went, and being admitted to the bar of Berks County, began the practice of his profession. Upon the organization of the new county of Dauphin in 1785, through the influence of Gen. Mifflin, Mr. Graydon was appointed by the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania prothonotary of the county. He removed there, and performed the duties of his office in a manner alike creditable to himself and advantageous to the public.

During the Whiskey Insurrection of 1794, when Gen. Washington reached Harrisburg, the address of the burgeses was from the facile pen of Mr. Graydon, while upon the accession of John Adams to the Presidency, the letter of the citizens of the county to that functionary shows his elegant diction. Upon the election of Governor Thomas McKean, he was suddenly displaced from office. He then retired to a small farm near the borough, where he continued to reside until the year 1816, when he removed to Philadelphia with the intention of engaging in literary pursuits, and, with a view to the increase of a very restricted income, of entering upon the business of a publisher. Ere he could mature the plans, however, he yielded to the mandate which all must obey, and closed this life on the 2d day of May, 1818.

Mr. Graydon was twice married,—first to — Wood, sister of Lieut.-Col. Joseph Wood, of Col. Arthur St. Clair's (Second Pennsylvania) battalion of the Revolution, who died at Harrisburg in 1794. His second wife was Theodosia Pettit, daughter of Col. Charles Pettit, of Philadelphia, who survived her husband eighteen years. He had no children by either marriage. Mr. Graydon was ardently attached to literature and to literary pursuits. He was a frequent and acceptable contributor to the Portfolio in its palmiest days of popularity and influence. These contributions, which, for the most part, were modestly denominated "Notes of a Desultory Reader," contain his opinions of the authors whose works he had read, accompanied with occasional critiques upon their style, and all invariably written in a strain of candor and ease, affording indubitable evidence of the elevation and purity of his own sentiments, and of an enlarged, well-disciplined, and highly-cultivated mind. These articles, with others written from time to time for the press, of which a memoranda list is in existence, deserve to be collected in a volume and printed. In 1811 he published at Harrisburg "Memoirs of a Life chiefly passed in Pennsylvania within the last Sixty Years, with Occasional Remarks upon the General Occurrences, Character, and Spirit of that Eventful Period." In 1822, John Galt, of Edinburgh, well known for his valuable contributions to English literature, caused its republication in that city, to which he prefixed a dedication to the American envoy then resident near the Court of St. James. In this dedication he says of the "Memoirs:" "It is remarkable that a production so rich in the various excellences of style, description, and impartiality should not have been known to the collectors of American books in this country, especially as it is, perhaps, the best personal narrative that has yet appeared relative to the history of that great conflict which terminated in establishing the independence of the United States. The candor with respect to public occurrences which it displays, the views of manners in Pennsylvania prior to the memorable era of 1776, and the incidental sketches of historical characters with which it is enriched cannot fail to render the volume a valuable addition to the stock of general knowledge, and will probably obtain for the author no mean place among those who have added permanent lustre to the English language." In 1846, John S. Littell, of Philadelphia, edited the work, with notes, index, etc., which was printed in an octavo of five hundred pages, changing the title to "Memoirs of His Own Times, with Reminiscences of the Men and Events of the Revolution," by Alexander Graydon. Of this edition many copies were issued, and it too has become rare.

WILLIAM GRAYDON.

William Graydon, the son of Alexander Graydon and Rachel Marks, was born near Bristol, Bucks Co., Pa., Sept. 4, 1759. He was educated in Philadelphia, and studied law under Edward Biddle, of that city. He came to Harrisburg upon the organization of the county of Dauphin, and began the practice of his profession, being admitted at the May term, 1786. He was the first notary public, commissioned Sept. 2, 1791, and a leading man in the borough during the "mill-dam troubles" of 1794-95. He was many years a member of the Town Council and president thereof, and subsequently one of the burgesses. He was the author of "Forms of Conveyancing" (in two volumes), "The Justice's Assistant," and edited "An Abridgment of the Laws of the United States" in 1802. Mr. Graydon was prominent in the organization of the First Presbyterian Church, and for many years an elder thereof. He died at Harrisburg, on the 13th of October, 1840, in the eighty-second year of his age. "Mr. Graydon," says Rev. Dr. Robinson, "was a man of fine literary tastes, was highly esteemed as a gentleman of the old school, in his manners refined, courteous, of unblemished integrity in the many trusts committed to him, of high and honorable principles, and in the church and walks of Christian life a man of true piety and deep devotion." H. Murray Graydon, of this city, and Dr. William Graydon, of Dauphin, are his sons.

COL. TIMOTHY GREEN.

Timothy Green, son of Robert Green, was born about 1733, in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. His father, of Scotch ancestry, came from the north of Ireland about 1725, locating near the Kittochintny Mountains on Manada Creek. The first record we have of the son is subsequent to Braddock's defeat, when the frontier settlers were threatened with extermination by the marauding savages. Timothy Green assisted in organizing a company, and for at least seven years was chiefly in active service in protecting the settlers from the fury of the blood-thirsty Indian. In the Bouquet expedition he commanded a company of Provincial troops. For his services at this time the Proprietaries granted him large tracts of land in Buffalo Valley and on Bald Eagle Creek. At the outset of the Revolution Capt. Green became an earnest advocate for independence, and the Hanover resolutions of June 4, 1774, passed unanimously by the meeting of which he was chairman, show that he was intensely patriotic. He was one of the Committee of Safety of the Province which met Nov. 22, 1774, in Lancaster, and issued hand-bills to the import that "agreeable to the resolves and recommendations of the American Continental Congress that the freeholders and others qualified to vote for representatives in Assembly choose by ballot sixty persons for a Committee of Observation to observe the conduct of all persons towards the actions of the General Congress; the committee, when elected, to divide the country into districts and appoint members of the committee to superintend each district, and any six so appointed to be a quorum, etc." Election was held on Thursday, 15th December, 1774, and among others Timothy Green was elected from Hanover. This body of men were in correspondence with Joseph Reed, Charles Thompson, George Clymer, John Benezet, Samuel Meredith, Thomas Mifflin, etc., of Philadelphia, and others. They met at Lancaster again, April 27, 1775, when notice was taken of Gen. Gage's attack upon the inhabitants of Massachusetts Bay, and a general meeting called for the 1st of May at Lancaster. Subsequently he organized the Hanover Battalion of Associators, most of the men being experienced riflemen, of which he became colonel. The command was in active service.

Upon the erection of the county of Dauphin, Col. Green was the oldest justice of the peace in commission, and under the Constitution of 1776 he was presiding justice of the courts. He continued therein until under the Constitution of 1790, which required the presiding judge "to be learned in the law," Judge Atlee was appointed.

After his retirement Judge Green returned to his quiet farm at the mouth of Stony Creek, where he had erected a mill and other improvements. He died there on the 27th of February, 1812, and lies buried in the quiet graveyard on the hill back of the borough of Dauphin. Hon. Innis Green was his son.

INNIS GREEN.

Innis Green, the eldest son of Col. Timothy Green and Mary Innis, was born in Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa., March 25, 1776. His early years were spent on his father's farm, but he received a tolerably fair English education, an essential in the Scotch-Irish settlements. His father, who built a mill at the mouth of Stony Creek about 1790, dying in 1812, Innis took charge of it. He was appointed one of the associate judges of Dauphin County by Governor Findlay, Aug. 10, 1818, resigning Oct. 23, 1827, having been elected to the National House of Representatives. He served during the Twentieth and Twenty-first Congresses. Governor Wolf, Jan. 26, 1832, reappointed him associate judge, a position he held at the time of his death, which occurred on the 4th of August, 1839. His remains lie interred in the cemetery at Dauphin. Judge Green laid out the town (which for many years went by the names of Port Lyon and Greensburg) about the year 1826. He married in 1804, Rebecca Murray, daughter of Col. John Murray, of the Revolution.

JACOB M. HALDEMAN.

Honeste Gaspard Haldimand (Caspar Haldeman), of Thun, Switzerland, became a citizen of Yverdun, Canton de Vaud, in 1671. His grandson Jacob, born Oct. 7, 1722, in the Canton of Neufchatel, died Dec. 31, 1784, in Rapho township, Lancaster Co., Pa., where he settled on first coming to this country, and purchased a considerable tract of land. He was a member of the Committee of Safety for his adopted shire on the breaking out of the war of the Revolution.

Jacob Haldeman's near relative was the noted British general, Sir Frederick Haldimand, K.B., who served with distinction in the armies of Sardinia and Prussia, entered the military service of King George II. in 1754, was appointed lieutenant-colonel of the Sixtieth Regiment Royal Americans, 1756. In 1776 he was commissioned a general in America, and subsequently commander-in-chief of His Majesty's forces as Governor of the Province of Quebec, where he received the honor of knighthood, May 19, 1778. A tablet has been erected to the memory of Gen. Haldimand in Westminster Abbey, in the chapel of Henry VII. A niece of Sir Frederick was Jane Haldimand, Mrs. Dr. Alexander Marcet, a distinguished woman, and the first writer to attempt to popularize science by the publication of her "Conversations on Chemistry, Natural Philosophy, Botany, Mineralogy, Language, and Political Economy." Of this last work Macaulay said, "Every girl who has read Mrs. Marcet's little dialogues on political economy could teach Montague or Walpole many lessons in finance," and Faraday gleaned his first knowledge of science from the book which heads the list.

Jacob Haldeman's son John (1753-1832) settled at Locust Grove, Lancaster Co., Pa. John's fourth son, Henry Haldeman, was the father of the distinguished Samuel Stehman Haldeman, LL.D., Professor of Comparative Philology in the University of Pennsylvania.

John Haldeman was an enterprising and influential citizen. He was a large land-owner, and engaged largely in business pursuits, in partnership with Robert Ralston, of Philadelphia, in the China trade, and he was a member of the Bingham Court and First General Assembly of Pennsylvania. He resided at Locust Grove until late in life, when he removed to Columbia, in the same county, where both himself and wife died.

Jacob M. Haldeman, second son of John and Mary (Breneman) Haldeman, obtained a good English and German education under the private instruction of an English officer, and seemingly inherited practical ideas from his father. At the age of nineteen he was sent on horseback by his father to Pittsburgh, making his journey through many Indian settlements, to purchase flour to send down the river in flat-boats to New Orleans.

About 1806, assisted by his father, he purchased the water-power and forge at the mouth of Yellow Breeches Creek and established himself in the iron business. He added a rolling- and slitting-mill, and by his energy and industry soon became one of the foremost iron manufacturers in the State. His superior iron found steady market, and upon the establishment of the arsenal at Harper's Ferry he supplied the government with iron, especially during the war of 1812-14, which he forwarded across the South Mountain on muleback to the Ferry, where it was manufactured into guns, many of which may be seen to-day, stamped 1812. At that time he founded Haldemanstown, now called New Cumberland, at the junction of the creek and river, and it may be here remarked that it had been one of the points in question in the Congress at New York as the proposed site of the national capital, and he also built a saw-mill and grist-mill at the same place.

Following the war of 1812, during the depression, he invested largely in farms and real estate, and engaged in the management of the same, a business so varied and large as to require his constant attention, and he managed it all without the aid of an assistant or clerk. In 1830 he removed to Harrisburg and purchased a residence built by Stephen A. Hills, architect of the capitol building, on Front Street, on the bank of the Susquehanna, where he continued to reside until his death. His connection with the Harrisburg Bank and the Harrisburg Bridge Company as president, with the Harrisburg Car Company as one of its founders and a director, and with the Dauphin Deposit Bank as one of its founders made his name familiar in business and financial circles during his residence here, and made him known to the community as a man of sterling integrity, discretion, and superior business ability. He was never solicitous of public place or the emoluments of office, and led a strictly business life. As a citizen, he was independent in his political views, was an attendant of the Presbyterian Church, and a contributor to all worthy local enterprises.

His wife, Eliza E., daughter of Samuel Jacobs and Sarah Templin, and granddaughter of Richard Jacobs, of Wales, was born June 13, 1789, at Mount Hope Furnace, Lancaster Co., Pa. She survives in 1883, and occupies the homestead in Harrisburg, and although in her ninety-fifth year of age, she retains to a remarkable degree her faculties, and dictated many of the facts for this sketch. Mrs. Haldeman is a member of the Presbyterian Church. Their children are Sara Jacobs, widow of the late William W. Haly, of Cork, Ireland, a distinguished lawyer of Philadelphia, and author of "Troubat & Haly's Practice," resides at the homestead in Harrisburg. Mary Ewing was the wife of Robert J. Ross, a banker of Harrisburg, and died in 1873. Caroline Jacobs, Elizabeth Templin, and Anne died young. John, born Sept. 19, 1821, died in Denver, Col., July 13, 1865. Jacob S., born Oct. 13, 1823, for many years president of the State Agricultural Society, ex-member of the State Legislature, and ex-Minister to Sweden, resides in Harrisburg. Susan Frances, wife of Dr. Mortimer O'Connor, a graduate of the Dublin schools of medicine, and formerly a surgeon in the British service, and Richard Jacobs Haldeman, born May 19, 1831, educated at Yale, Heidelberg, Germany, and Berlin, was editor and proprietor of the Harrisburg Patriot for several years, and the founder of the Harrisburg Daily Patriot, and member of Congress for two terms. *

HENRY HALL, M.D.

Henry Hall, son of Elihu Hall and Catharine Orrick, was born in Cecil County, Md., in 1772. His ancestor, Richard Hall, of Mount Welcome, was one of the earliest settlers at the Head of the Elk. Henry studied medicine, and came to Harrisburg in 1794, where, as was usual with our early physicians, he kept an "apothecary-shop." Dr. Hall's was "on the bank next to Mr. Elder's tavern." He was quite a successful practitioner, but died early, closing his young life on the 30th of May, 1808. Dr. Hall married, April 26, 1800, Hester, daughter of Hon. William Maclay, and left four children. Mrs. Hall was a highly-intelligent woman; she died at Harrisburg.

REV. WILLIAM M. HALL.

William Maclay Hall, eldest son of Dr. Henry Hall and Hester Maclay, daughter of Hon. William Maclay, was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Feb. 16, 1801. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy and Princeton College; studied law with Francis R. Shunk, and admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the April term, 1822. He began the practice of law at Lewistown, and became one of the most brilliant advocates in the Juniata Valley. Subsequently, imbued with the conviction that it was his duty to enter the ministry, he abandoned the law, studied theology at the Allegheny Seminary, and was licensed to preach by the Pittsburgh Presbytery. He was stationed at Milroy, Mifflin Co., Pa., but, owing to partial failure of health, was appointed agent of the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions at Philadelphia. At this period he was connected with the New School Assembly, but afterwards transferred his relations to the Old School and joined the Presbytery of Carlisle. After acting some years as agent of the General Assembly, Board of Foreign Missions, he accepted a call to the Presbyterian Church at Bedford, Pa., where he labored until declining health compelled him to relinquish his charge. He died at Bedford, Aug. 28, 1851, where he was interred, but in 1878 his remains were removed to the cemetery at Harrisburg. The Rev. Mr. Hall married Ellen C. Williams, daughter of Robert Williams and granddaughter of Rev. Joshua Williams, born 1805, in Centre County, Pa.; died Jan. 23, 1878, at Harrisburg. Their children were Henry, William Maclay, George, Catharine, Louis W., Mary, and Nellie.

HUGH HAMILTON.

Hugh Hamilton, the son of John Hamilton and Margaret Alexander, was born at "Fermanagh," now in Juniata County, Pa., on the 30th of June, 1785. He received a careful preparatory education, and with his brother John was sent to Dickinson College, where he graduated. He studied law under Thomas Elder, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in 1805. At the time of his admission to the bar Judge Henry had ordered the prothonotary to issue commissions on parchment. Accordingly the descendants of the young lawyer have his commission "on parchment," issued 21st of June, 1805, signed by "Joshua Elder, Pro'thy, by order of the Court," with the seal of the county attached. In 1808, Mr. Hamilton edited and published The Times at Lancaster, and upon the removal of the seat of government to Harrisburg, with William Gillmor, The Harrisburg Chronicle, the leading and influential newspaper at the State capital for twenty years. The Chronicle was the first paper in Pennsylvania which gave full and systematic legislative reports. He died at Harrisburg, on the 3d of September, 1836, aged fifty-one years. Mr. Hamilton married, Jan. 6, 1807, Rosanna, daughter of Adam Boyd and Jeannette MacFarlane, born Dec. 1, 1789, died April 17, 1872. They are both buried in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Mr. Hamilton was a vigorous and polished writer, and his editorials were models of elegant composition. For a quarter of a century he wielded considerable political influence through his newspaper. He was an active and enterprising citizen, twice chief Burgess of the corporation of Harrisburg, frequently a member of Council, and highly esteemed in social intercourse.

T. ALLEN HAMILTON.

Thomas Allen Hamilton, son of Hugh Hamilton (1785-1836) and Rosanna Boyd (1786-1872), was born Feb. 14, 1818, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a good education, and learned the trade of a printer in his father's office, at which he worked until he received the appointment of an assistant engineer on the State canals under Col. James Worrall, but he abandoned both avocations in order to join a brother in a business, which they successfully prosecuted until his death. He served as a member of the City Councils of Harrisburg a longer continuous period than any other citizen has ever done, being elected for about twenty years in succession, generally without serious opposition, although many epochs of great public excitement intervened to produce fierce and close political contests. His neighbors never failed to ascertain his political opinions, yet, whether voting for or against him, they always rejoiced to know that he was their representative and the leader of the municipal legislature. In the language of a contemporary, "Mr. Hamilton, in his intercourse with his fellow-citizens, was courteous to all, liberal to the poor, positive in opinion, methodical in business, reticent, deliberate, but prompt in judgment." His integrity was never impeached in public or private transactions. He died unmarried Dec. 14, 1874, at Harrisburg, in the same house in which he was born.

JOHN W. HAMMOND, M.D.

John Wesley Hammond, son of Rezin Hammond and Nancy Lee, was born in Anne Arundel County, Md., in 1804. His grandfather, Maj.-Gen. John Hammond, of the British army, came to Maryland in 1764 and purchased a large tract of land in Anne Arundel, and there the father, Col. Rezin Hammond, was born. Young Hammond received his education mainly from private tutors up to the time of studying medicine. He graduated in medicine at the University of Maryland in 1825. In 1832, Dr. Hammond located in Somerset County, Pa., but in 1834 removed to Williamsport (now Monongahela City), Washington Co., Pa., where he continued the practice of his profession. On the election of Governor Ritner, he was appointed, in 1836, chief clerk in the auditor-general's office, and removed to Harrisburg. He held this position through several administrations, and was afterwards for a number of years cashier of the State treasury. In 1853 he removed to Philadelphia, where he died in 1879, at the age of seventy-five. Dr. Hammond married, in 1826, Sarah, daughter of Jonathan Pinkney, Esq. of Annapolis, Md., and a niece of William Pinkney, the distinguished lawyer, senator, and diplomatist. They had children,—Rev. J. Pinkney; Dr. William A., formerly surgeon-general United States army, now of New York City; Elizabeth Pinkney, Charles Elliot, and Nathaniel Hobart. Of these the first two and last-named are living. Dr. Hammond was held in the highest esteem by his fellow-citizens for his urbanity, integrity, and intellectual ability.

GEN. JOHN A. HANNA.

John André Hanna, son of Rev. John Hanna and Mary McCrea, was born about 1761, at Flemington, N. J. He received a good classical education under his father, who was a most excellent tutor. He served in the war of the Revolution. Towards its close came to Pennsylvania and studied law with Stephen Chambers, of Lancaster, whose acquaintance he had made in the army, and was admitted to the bar of Lancaster County at November session, 1783. He located at Harrisburg upon the formation of the county of Dauphin, and was among the first lawyers admitted there. He took a deep interest in early municipal affairs, and there was little transpiring looking to the welfare and development of the new town in which Mr. Hanna did not take part. His marriage with a daughter of John Harris, the founder, brought him into unusual prominence. He represented the county in the Legislature, and in 1795 elected to the United States Congress, a position he filled up to the time of his death by successive re-election. During the Whiskey Insurrection he was a brigadier-general of the Pennsylvania troops, in command of the Second Brigade, Second Division. In 1800, Governor McKean commissioned him a major-general of the Third Division of the militia forces of the State. He died at Harrisburg on the 13th of July, 1805, aged forty-four years, and is buried in the cemetery there. Gen. Hanna married Mary Harris, daughter of John Harris and Mary Reed, who died Aug. 20, 1851, in the eighty-first year of her age. They had nine children: Esther Harris, d. s. p.; Eleanor (1st), d. s. p.; Sarah Eaton, married Richard T. Jacobs; Henrietta, died unmarried; Caroline Elizabeth, married Joseph Briggs; Frances Harris, married John Carson McAllister; Juliann C., married John Fisher; Mary Reed, married Hon. John Tod; and Eleanor (2d), d. s. p.

MAJOR DAVID HARRIS.

David Harris, youngest son of John Harris and Elizabeth McClure, was born at Harris' Ferry, Feb. 24, 1754. He received a good education, and was a student under the Rev. Dr. Allison. At the time of the breaking out of the Revolution he was in Baltimore, but he volunteered in Col. William Thompson's Pennsylvania Battalion of Riflemen, and subsequently was commissioned paymaster thereof. He served in different positions until the close of the war, when he returned to Baltimore, and married Miss Crocket, of that city. After the death of his father, being one of the executors of the estate, he came to Harrisburg, and was appointed by his old companion-in-arms, Governor Mifflin, one of the associate judges of Dauphin County, Aug. 17, 1791. This position he resigned on the 20th of February following to accept an appointment in the Bank of the United States. Upon the establishment of the office of discount and deposit in Baltimore, he accepted the cashiership thereof. Maj. Harris died in that city on the 16th of November, 1809, at the age of fifty-five years.

DAVID HARRIS.

David Harris, son of Robert Harris and Elizabeth Ewing, was born March 17, 1796, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received his education in the schools of the town and at the Harrisburg Academy. At the age of eighteen he went to Philadelphia, where he was engaged in mercantile pursuits several years, when he returned to Harrisburg and established himself in the general transportation business in connection with the canal, and subsequently in merchandising. For many years he was clerk of the Borough and City Councils, was a justice of the peace under the borough charter, and one of the first aldermen elected under the city charter. In 1814, Mr. Harris marched to Baltimore—the youngest man who carried a musket—with the Harrisburg Volunteers, and was among the last survivors of that band of brave men. Upon his retirement from Councils he lived in quiet retirement, his great age rendering it impossible for him to participate in any active business. He was a man of strict integrity, and lived a quiet and correct life, doing what he had to do faithfully, beloved and respected by his friends and neighbors. He died on the 14th of March, 1880, at Harrisburg. Mr. Harris married Elizabeth Latimer, a descendant of Archbishop Latimer.

ROBERT HARRIS.

Robert Harris, son of the founder, John Harris, and of Mary Reed, daughter of Adam Reed, Esq., of Hanover, was born at Harris' Ferry on the 5th of September, 1768. He was brought up as a farmer, and resided in the early part of his life in the log and frame building on Paxtang Street, now used as a public school. His farm extended from the dwelling-house down the river to about the present location of Hanna Street, and thence out over the bluff, including the ground occupied by the Catholic Cemetery, containing about one hundred acres.

By the death of his father, in 1791, much of the business affairs of the family was early intrusted to him. He was possessed of considerable public spirit, aiding in the establishment of various enterprises, including the bridge over the Susquehanna, the Harrisburg Bank, and the Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike road, in the first two of which he was a director and perhaps also in the last. Mr. Harris was appointed to various public trusts. He was one of the State commissioners to survey and lay off a route for the turnpike from Chambersburg to Pittsburgh, also for improving the Susquehanna, in the course of which the commissioners descended the river below McCall's Ferry. When the Assembly of the State decided to remove the seat of government to Harrisburg, Mr. Harris was selected as one of the commissioners for fixing the location of the capitol buildings preparatory to the removal.

During the mill-dam troubles, in 1795, Mr. Harris was one of the party of prominent citizens who finally tore down the Landis dam, the site of which was in the lower part of the city, and to which was attributed much of the sickness then prevailing here. He was one of the first to rush into the water, and it was said that he was then laboring under an ague chill, but never afterwards had a return of it.

During the War of 1812-14, Mr. Harris was appointed paymaster of the troops which marched to

ROBERT HARRIS.

Baltimore, and acted as such at York, where the soldiers were discharged.

He was elected to Congress and took his seat in 1823, and by a re-election served therein until the 4th of March, 1827. On one of the occasions he brought home with him a picture, made before the days of daguerreotyping, of the celebrated John Randolph, of Virginia, representing him on the floor of the House of Representatives enveloped in a large coat, extending his long, lank arms and his bony finger as he pointed it at Henry Clay and others in the course of his impassioned and sarcastic harangue.

Mr. Harris served in Congress during the Presidency of John Quincy Adams, and of course knew him. When Gen. Taylor, as President, was in Harrisburg, Mr. Harris was appointed to deliver the address of welcome on the part of the citizens. During the subsequent intercourse with Gen. Taylor he observed to him that he had dined with all of the preceding Presidents. He was married in Philadelphia in the spring of 1791, during the Presidency of Gen. Washington, and dined at his table, and there or elsewhere with Adams, Jefferson, Madison, and probably Mr. Monroe. He was intimately acquainted with Gen. Harrison when a lieutenant in the army, had entertained him at his house in Harrisburg, and was invited to dine with him during his brief term as President. He was on friendly terms with John C. Calhoun, and was well acquainted with Gen. Jackson.

After the State capital was removed to Harrisburg, the residence of Mr. Harris, who had in 1805 purchased the Harris mansion from his brother David, and from that period occupied it, was the centre of attraction at the seat of government. He entertained many of the prominent men of the State and of the Legislature. At his house might have been seen Governor Findlay, Samuel D. Ingham, Thomas Sergeant, William J. Duane, Governor Wolf, and various other persons of distinction, including Isaac Weaver, of Greene County, Speaker of the Senate from 1817 to 1821, a gentleman of marked presence, and who, Mr. Harris said, more resembled Gen. Washington than any other man he had ever seen. During the Presidency of Gen. Washington, Mr. Harris, then a young man, accompanied the party on board the "Clermont," the steamboat of John Fitch, when that vessel made its trial trip on the Delaware.

The first prothonotary of Dauphin County was Alexander Graydon, and the first register Andrew Forrest, both sent from Philadelphia by Governor Mifflin, with whom they had served as fellow-officers in the war of the Revolution. Governor McKean for some reason refused to reappoint Mr. Forrest, and tendered the appointment to Mr. Harris. He, however, recommended the retention of Mr. Forrest, but Governor McKean informed him that if he did not accept the office he would appoint some one else. He accordingly accepted it, but, it is said, divided the fees with Mr. Forrest for some time, and perhaps until his death.

Until the close of his long life Mr. Harris was quite active in body and mind. He died at Harrisburg on the 3d day of September, 1851, being within two days of fourscore and three years of age. His remains repose in the beautiful cemetery now within the bounds of our city by the Susquehanna. His warm and lifelong friend, Rev. William R. DeWitt, D.D., delivered the funeral discourse, which we recollect well of hearing, in which he paid a most glowing tribute to the memory of Robert Harris. He died not unwillingly in the faith and hope of a Christian, and in the respect and kind regard of his fellow-citizens.

Mr. Harris married in Philadelphia, May 12, 1791, Elizabeth Ewing, daughter of the Rev. John Ewing, D.D., provost of the University of Pennsylvania. Mrs. Harris was born in Philadelphia, Dec. 2, 1772, died at Harrisburg, April 27, 1835, and is there buried.

GEORGE WASHINGTON HARRIS.

George Washington Harris was born June 23, 1798, in the old ferry-house, now the location of Harris Park school-house. He was a son of Robert Harris, who was a son of John Harris, the founder of the city of Harrisburg, and grandson of John Harris, the first settler. His mother was Elizabeth Ewing, daughter of the celebrated Rev. John Ewing, D.D., provost of the University of Pennsylvania. Mr. Harris' early education was received at the old Harrisburg Academy and the select schools of the day. Subsequently he went to Dickinson, Jefferson, and the University of Pennsylvania, graduating at the latter institution. He studied law, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in 1820. He remained at Harrisburg several years, during a portion of which period he served as deputy attorney-general for the county of Dauphin. He afterwards removed to Philadelphia and entered into law partnership with Calvin Blythe. He returned to Harrisburg and resumed his place at the Dauphin County bar, and was appointed reporter of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, publishing a series of volumes of reports. For a number of years he filled the position of secretary to the Library Committee of the United States Senate. Mr. Harris recently edited the journal of Mr. Maclay, one of the first United States senators from Pennsylvania. He died at Harrisburg Sunday morning, Aug. 13, 1882. Mr. Harris married Elizabeth Mary, daughter of Dr. Henry Hall and Hester Maclay, daughter of Senator Maclay, his wife surviving him at near fourscore.

SAMUEL W. HAYS.

Samuel Wallace Hays, eldest son of John Hays and Martha Wallace, was born Oct. 30, 1799, at Newville, Cumberland Co., Pa. He received the education so freely given by the Scotch-Irish to their children. He came to Harrisburg in 1821, where he resided until 1825, when he went to Philadelphia, returning to the former place in 1828, which from that period became his permanent home. Mr. Hays then began business, which he successfully carried on until a few years prior to his death. He died May 18, 1855, at Harrisburg, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He was an earnest, laborious worker in his church (Presbyterian), of which he was one of the ruling elders from 1840 to his decease. For a period of twenty-seven years he was superintendent of the first infant Sunday-school, which he organized in 1828 in Harrisburg, and only relinquished its care when failing health compelled him to give up his charge. The Rev. Dr. Robinson bears this testimony of him: "I remember him as a quiet, modest man and patient sufferer. The little I knew of him endeared him to me. . . . He was a warm friend and lover of the young, kind and genial in his intercourse with them, and an admirable teacher." Mr. Hays married Margaret Moore, of Locust Grove, Mifflin Co., Pa. She died in 1851. They left an only child, Isabella M.

WILLIAM W. HAYS.

William Wallace Hays, son of William Patton and Rosanna Keller, was born Oct. 23, 1836, in Harrisburg. He received his preparatory education in the public schools and Harrisburg Academy, entered the sophomore class of Jefferson College, Cannonsburg, in 1853, graduating in 1856. He then went to Texas, where he remained two years, teaching in Victoria and Goliad. After returning North he began the study of law with Robert A. Lamberton, Esq., and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Dec. 6, 1859. He began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg, continuing it until his appointment by Governor Curtin, in 1861, as chief clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. On May 1, 1866, he was appointed Deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth, discharging the duties of that office until the close of Governor Curtin's administration. He then resumed his profession of the law, and in connection with it served as clerk to the board of claims from January to June, 1868. In October following, having been nominated by the Republicans of the city of Harrisburg, he was elected mayor thereof, the duties of which office he entered upon Jan. 11, 1869. His health, however, soon began to fail him, and he died in office March 31, 1870, in his thirty-fourth year. "Mr. Hays was truly a Christian gentleman, he thought more of right than he did of life. His nature was of that intensity which inspires men to die for the truth, while his convictions on all subjects relating to the ordinary and extraordinary affairs of life, here and hereafter, were governed by the strongest principles of religion and justice." Mr. Hays married, March 5, 1861, Mary S. Day, of Wooster, Ohio, and had four children,—William and Jessie Wallace, who are dead, and Mary Winifred and Martha Wallace, now residing with their mother in Wooster, Ohio.

JOHN E. HELLER.

John E. Heller was born in 1834, in Rush township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His early education was more or less limited, for at the age of thirteen we find him an apprentice to the art of printing in the office of the American, at Sunbury, Pa., where he remained until he was twenty years of age. Afterwards, for several years, he was foreman in the office of the Miners' Journal, Pottsville. He then began the study of law, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 30, 1865, and began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg. His life of labor was comparatively brief, however, for he died rather suddenly at the residence of his father, in Rush township, Jan. 30, 1866, aged thirty-two years. His remains were interred in the Rush Church graveyard. "Mr. Heller," wrote the editor of the Sunbury American, who knew him well, "was a young man of exemplary conduct and good character, and with industry and good business habits he had a bright future before him."

JAMES HENDERSON, M.D.

James Henderson, son of Dr. William Henderson, was born in the year 1827, in Dauphin County, Pa. He received a good academical education, studied medicine with his father at Hummelstown, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1856. He began the practice of medicine at Philadelphia, subsequently went to Plymouth, Ohio, but his father dying in 1859, he returned to Hummelstown. During the war for the Union he was captain of Company C, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was at the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville, being wounded at the latter. He was a brave officer, and was held in high esteem by his fellow-officers and the men of his company. He afterwards went into service as assistant surgeon of the Two Hundred and First Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and after the war resumed his profession at Hummelstown. His practice became quite extensive, but his health subsequently failed him, and he died of consumption on Thursday, April 12, 1880, at Hummelstown.

FREDERICK HEISELY.

Frederick Heisely was a native of Lancaster County, Pa., where he was born Oct. 17, 1759. He learned the trade of clock- and-mathematical instrument-maker with a Mr. Hoff, of Lancaster town. During the Revolution Mr. Heisely served in one of the associated battalions, and was in service during the Jersey campaign of 1776. About 1783 he removed to Frederick, Md., where he established himself in business. In 1812 he came to Harrisburg, and took a prominent part in the affairs of the borough, filling the offices of assistant burgess and Town Council. He was treasurer of the county of Dauphin from 1827 to 1829. He died at Harrisburg March 12, 1843, and is there buried. Mr. Heisely married, Nov. 6, 1783, Catharine Juliana Hoff, of Lancaster, born Sept. 15, 1763; died Dec. 3, 1839. Their children were: Justina Margaret, born July 3, 1785, died at Harrisburg, unmarried; Sophia, born Sept. 21, 1787, married George Rigney, of Frederick, Md., and left issue; George J., born Nov. 29, 1789, married Anna Maria Kurtz; Frederick Augustus, born July 3, 1792, married Catharine Hoffman, removed to Pittsburgh, where they died; John, born Nov. 30, 1794; Catharine, born April 22, 1797, married Jacob Keller, died at Frederick, Md.; and Caroline, born Feb. 9, 1800.

GEORGE J. HEISELY.

George J. Heisely, son of Frederick Heisely and Catharine Juliana Hoff, was born Nov. 29, 1789, at Frederick, Md. He learned silver-smithing with his father, and at the end of his apprenticeship went to Lancaster, where he remained nine months under instructions. He then established himself in business at Harrisburg, which he successfully carried on, making the manufacture of surveyors' compasses and town-clocks a specialty. His father, shortly after removing to Harrisburg, entered into business with him. George J. Heisely was acknowledged to be unsurpassed for his skill in making surveyors' instruments, many of which were used in all parts of the country. In 1814, as a private in Capt. Thomas Walker's company, he marched to Baltimore for the defense of that city, and was one of the last survivors of that famous military organization. In 1863, when Pennsylvania was invaded by the Confederate army under Lee, he enlisted as a private in Capt. Charles Carson's Company of Home Guards. In the early days of the borough he was burgess of the town, and frequently served as member of the Municipal Council. He died at Harrisburg on the 27th of June, 1880, in his ninety-first year. He married Anna M. Kurtz, daughter of Benjamin Kurtz, of Harrisburg. Of his children, Kurtz, the only son, died in the prime of his early manhood unmarried. His daughters were Caroline (married Leander N. Ott), Louisa C. (married Walter F. Fahnestock) Anne M. (married Daniel Eppley), and Elizabeth (married Dr. Charles C. Bombaugh).

COL. DANIEL HERR.

Daniel Herr was born on the 14th of December, 1795, at Hagerstown, Md. His ancestors were among the first settlers in Lancaster County, Pa., from whence the family name has become wide-spread. Daniel learned the trade of a house-carpenter, an occupation he pursued several years. During the late war with Great Britain he was lieutenant-colonel of a volunteer regiment in active service. In later life he followed hotel-keeping. He kept the Tremont House at Philadelphia, the Mansion House at Reading, and that famous hostelry, Herr's Hotel, now the Lochiel, at Harrisburg. He was a prominent member of the Masonic fraternity, and during the Anti-Masonic crusade never swerved from his allegiance to the fraternity, being Master of his lodge from 1835 to 1838, inclusive. He was a man pure in purpose, amiable, kind, and generous-hearted, yet firm and decided as to opinions and duty. He died at Harrisburg, sincerely regretted, on the 11th of July, 1857, in his sixty-second year. Col. Herr married, Feb. 15, 1820, in Gettysburg, Pa., Sarah Gilbert, daughter of Boise Gilbert and Susanna Fox, born Feb. 14, 1801, and died April 13, 1880, at Harrisburg. Their children were George Isaiah, d. s. p.; John Davenport, married Jane Nancy Sutton; Margaret Ann, married, first, Peter Nagle Coleman, second, George Leonard; Amelia Matilda, married John Peter Hassler; Andrew Jackson; Jacob Gilbert, married Mary Taylor; Susanna, married Dr. Jacob G. Wiestling; Sarah Isabella, married George Z. Kunkel; Daniel B.; William Henry Harrison, d. s. p.; Mary Elizabeth, married Charles Lipps; Louisa Irene, married Charles A. Bannvart.

REV. DANIEL HERTZ.

Daniel Hertz, son of Ludwig and Rosanna Hertz, was born April 23, 1796, in Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received a limited education, but early in life was put to the printing business. Not agreeing with his health, he abandoned that art for the trade of bricklayer, which he learned with his brother. In the winter months he engaged in teaching school and application to study, and so continued until he was induced by his friend, Rev. Isaac Gerhart, to prepare for the ministry, under whom he began his preparatory studies, finishing them with the Rev. Dr. Helfenstein, of Philadelphia. He entered upon the duties of the ministry about 1821, and shortly after received and accepted a call to Ephrata. His charge then embraced several congregations, and his trial sermon was preached at Muddy Creek, in the same church in which he closed his labors, forty-five years and six months afterwards. His pastorate was a long and faithful one. He died Sept. 22, 1868, aged seventy-two years. In the language of a contemporary, the Rev. Hertz "was laborious and faithful in his ministry. He pursued his calling with almost unexampled devotion. He was systematic and conscientious, his manner and deportment high-toned and manly. Like his Heavenly Master, he went about doing good."

GEN. GABRIEL HIESTER.

Gabriel Hiester, Jr., son of Gabriel Hiester and Elizabeth Bausman, was born in Bern township, Berks Co., Pa., Jan. 5, 1779. He received a good English and German education, and his early years were spent on his father's farm. His father being an active politician, the son was early imbued with the same spirit. In 1809 he was appointed by Governor Snyder clerk of the courts of Berks County, and in 1811 prothonotary, holding these offices until 1817. During the war of 1812-14 he was brigade major, and served under Gen. Adams, of Berks County, during the campaign at Washington and Baltimore. Under appointment by Governor Findlay, he held the office of associate judge from 1819 to 1823. Governor Shulze appointed Judge Hiester surveyor-general, when he removed to Harrisburg. He held that position from May 11, 1824, to May 11, 1830. He was a Presidential elector in 1817, and again in 1821, casting his vote for James Monroe. About 1833 he erected the first rolling-mill in this neighborhood, at Fairview, on the Conedoguinet. He died there suddenly, Sept. 14, 1831, in his fifty-sixth year, and is buried in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Gen. Hiester married, May 12, 1803, Mary, daughter of Dr. John Otto, of Reading, who died at Estherton, Jan. 9, 1853. They had children,—Louisa; Harriet, married C. B. Bioren; Augustus O.; Gabriel; and Catharine, all of whom are deceased except Augustus O., of Estherton.

JOHN HOYT HICKOK.

John Hoyt Hickok, the eldest child of Jesse Hickok and Betsy Hoyt, was born at Wilton, Conn., Nov. 27, 1792. He was brought up on his father's farm, receiving the usual educational advantages of the time at the winter school and a few sessions at a neighboring academy. When about seventeen years of age he commenced teaching during the winter months, pursuing meanwhile, in connection therewith, his own studies, until finally, soon after attaining his majority, he selected and embarked in teaching as his life profession.

Mr. Hickok married, in 1814, Mary, daughter of Job Lockwood and Sarah Hickok, of Wilton. Mrs. Lockwood was a native of Wilton, and a daughter of Nathan Hickok and granddaughter of Nathaniel Hickok, who was, as is supposed, a cousin of the father of Jesse Hickok, so that John H. Hickok and his wife were distantly related by blood.

He spent some years teaching in Western New York, from whence he emigrated to Pennsylvania in 1823, teaching a select and boarding-school in Union County until 1828, when he removed to Lewistown, Mifflin Co., and took charge of the academy there, at that time a largely patronized and well-known institution, which, aided by a corps of teachers, he conducted successfully until 1836, Mrs. Hickok having the superintendence of the ladies' department of the school.

In 1836 he embarked in the book publishing business at Chambersburg, continuing in it until the spring of 1839, when he removed to Harrisburg, where he was engaged in teaching. He died there on Jan. 14, 1841, his death resulting from injuries received on the preceding 12th of December as he was attempting to step on the platform of a car on the Cumberland Valley Railroad at Front and Mulberry Streets, the train being in motion.

SAMUEL HILL.

Samuel Hill, the son of Arundel Hill, was born about 1760 in England. His ancestors belonged to one of the representative families of that country. He received a good English and classical education, and learned the trade of clock and watch maker in London. He came to America about 1785, and shortly afterward established himself in business at Harrisburg. He was a skilled and ingenious workman. He was quite prominent in the early affairs of the new town, and was among the first to jump into the water to tear down the obnoxious mill-dam in Paxtang Creek in 1795. He was a volunteer in Capt.

Reitzel's company on the expedition to the westward in 1794, and twice visited England on matters connected with his father's estate, then considered quite an undertaking; and what particularly distinguished his last visit was his reception by his fellow-citizens of Harrisburg on his return, which was an ovation, showing what a strong hold he had upon his friends in America. He died very suddenly while sitting in his chair on Monday evening, Nov. 6, 1809, aged forty-nine years, and the Oracle speaks of his loss to the community as "irreparable." Mr. Hill married Nancy Beatty, daughter of Capt. James Beatty, of Harrisburg. She died at Steubenville, Ohio.

SAMUEL HOLMAN.

Samuel Holman, son of Conrad Holman, Jr., and Rachel Guss, was born in Chester County, Pa., Jan. 11, 1793. Conrad Holman, Sr., the grandfather, was born in New Castle County, Del., in 1738, and died at the residence of his son in Perry County, Pa., in 1822. Conrad, Jr., born in Chester County in 1768, died in Perry County in 1841; he married Rachel, daughter of Charles Guss and Mary Shunk. Samuel learned the trade of house carpenter, and came to Harrisburg after his majority, where he successfully pursued his business, and was widely known as a builder and architect. Among the public works constructed under his supervision and according to plans were bridges over the Susquehanna at Clark's Ferry and Harrisburg, and over the Schuylkill River at Schuylkill Falls. He was the architect for the court-houses at Lewistown and Harrisburg. For several years he was supervisor of the public works between Columbia and Millerstown. He was a man of much energy of character in whatever business he engaged. During the War of 1812-14 he went as fifer in Capt. Walker's company, which marched to the defense of Baltimore, and in his old age served as a volunteer for the defense of Harrisburg when in 1863 it was threatened by Gen. Lee. He frequently was a member of the Borough Council, and took a deep interest in the prosperity of his adopted town. He died at Harrisburg, Sept. 28, 1863. Mr. Holman married in 1822, Sarah, daughter of Daniel Hertz and Elizabeth Kisner, born at Harrisburg, Dec. 5, 1800, and there died Oct. 22, 1863. They had five children living at the time of their death,—Ann Elizabeth (married Samuel Alteman), Rev. Samuel Augustus, William Simon, Mary Ellen (married Dr. A. L. Alstead), and Sarah Frances (married George A. Klugh).

COL. GEORGE R. HORTER.

George Reis Horter, son of Valentine Horter and Magdalena Reis, was born in 1784 at Germantown. His parents came to Harrisburg in May, 1785, and his early education was received in the "Latin Schools" of the new town. He learned the trade of a hatter with his brother-in-law, Jacob Bucher. When his brother-in-law, Henry Beader, was appointed register of the county, Mr. Horter served as his deputy. During the second war with Great Britain he was appointed third lieutenant of the Sixteenth Infantry, United States army, May 1, 1814, subsequently promoted captain for meritorious services, and served until peace was declared, when he resigned. He subsequently took a prominent part in the volunteer military organizations of his day. He was transcribing clerk of the Pennsylvania Senate a number of years. Col. Horter died at Harrisburg in March, 1830, aged about forty-six years. He never married. He was a prominent politician and active Freemason, and was held in high esteem by the citizens of his adopted town. It is related that on his return from a trip to New Orleans, about 1805, the bells of the town were rung in honor of his arrival, so highly was he respected for his geniality and social standing.

JACOB HOUSER.

Jacob Houser, the son of Daniel Houser and Anna Ebersole, was born in 1803, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather was an early settler from Switzerland, locating in then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co., now Swatara township, Dauphin Co. He served as a wagon-master during the war of the Revolution, and lived to an advanced age, dying in May, 1800, leaving a wife, Elizabeth, and children as follows:

- i. Jacob; m. Barbara ———, and removed to Bald Eagle Valley, Centre Co., Pa.
- ii. Martin; m. Anne ———, and settled in Allen township, Cumberland Co., Pa.
- iii. Anne; m. Jacob Good, of Swatara.
- iv. Daniel; m. Anna Ebersole; b. 1778; d. Aug. 29, 1849.
- v. John.
- vi. Elizabeth; m. Samuel Good.

Daniel Houser located at Harrisburg about 1800 and established a nailery. All the nails and spikes used in the construction of the old Harrisburg bridge were made by Mr. Houser and Mr. Allison. Daniel Houser had three children, John, Jacob, and Catharine (married Samuel Pool).

Jacob Houser received the ordinary education of the schools of the borough, and was apprenticed at an early age to coach-making. Completing his trade, in partnership with John A. Weir he carried on that business for several years. He subsequently, in connection with his brother John, who had entered mercantile life, went into the dry-goods business. Later he was in the hardware trade, in partnership with William H. Lochman. Mr. Houser filled a number of municipal and county offices, was a director of the Harrisburg Bank for many years, and always held in high esteem for his strict integrity and high moral character. He died March 9, 1881, at Harrisburg, in the seventy-eighth year of his age. He married

John Houser, the elder of the brothers, was a justice of the peace many years; died Oct. 22, 1860, aged fifty-nine years; married Mary Crabb, daughter of William Crabb, of Middletown, who died May 24, 1862, at Harrisburg, and they left several daughters and one son,—Elizabeth, Louisa (d. s. p.), Alice (married Alfred E. Eyster), and Daniel (married Susan Sponsler).

GEORGE HOYER.

George Hoyer, son of John Hoyer, was born in the year 1757, in York County, Pa. He learned the trade of carpenter, and in 1785 came to Harrisburg with his brother-in-law, Christian Kunkel, and began merchandising, in which he proved successful. He became quite prominent in the new town, and had the honor of being elected the first burgess of the borough. He served frequently as a member of the Town Council. He died May 25, 1841, at Harrisburg, aged eighty-four years, a gentleman of pure purpose and honorable integrity. Mr. Hoyer married, at York, Catharine Kunkel, born 1760, died July 27, 1835, at Harrisburg, and there buried. Of their children Jacob married Lucetta Brua, daughter of Peter Brua, and left descendants; Eliza, died 1881, unmarried; and Sarah, died 1869, unmarried.

FREDERICK HUMMEL.

Frederick Hummel was a native of the Pfalz, in Germany, born April 14, 1722. With some friends he came to America about 1738, and subsequently took up a large body of land where Hummelstown is located. In 1762, foreseeing the advantages, he laid out on a portion of his tract a town, which he named Frederickstown, but was changed upon his death to that now bestowed upon it. He donated land for the erection of the Lutheran and German Reformed Churches, and erected a school-house, directing that English branches should be taught therein. He was an active participant in the French and Indian war, and when the frontiers were setting an example to the people of the three original counties to prepare for resistance to British injustice he was chairman of the patriotic meeting of Derry, held at Hummelstown in June, 1774. He died at his residence on the 25th of June, 1775, aged fifty-three years. He was the ancestor of a large family, who can look with pride to the high-born zeal, energy, and patriotism of their progenitor. His remains, with those of his wife and children, are interred in the Lutheran Church graveyard at Hummelstown.

Very little is known of the ancestor, Frederick Hummel, but some insight into his character may be gained from the following advice to his children contained in his will: "After this I leave my Blessing to them all, and have God before you always, then the Lord and great Jehovah will Bless you now and for evermore, Amen."

COL. FREDERICK HUMMEL.

Frederick Hummel (3d), born Dec. 24, 1782, in Derry township, Dauphin Co., Pa., was the oldest son of David Hummel (1761-93) and Mary Toot (1764-1858). He was brought up as a farmer, receiving the limited education thus afforded in the country schools of the township. When but a stripling of eighteen, in company with his brothers, he offered his services to his country at the outset of the Revolution, and was in the campaign in the Jerseys and in and around Philadelphia in 1776 and 1777, and at the close of the war for independence was major in the battalion of associators. In the political affairs of the county he became quite prominent, and wielded considerable influence, owing to his great popularity. He was colonel of the militia, a position he held many years; served as justice of the peace several terms, and was commissioned by Governor Ritner an associate judge of the county April 5, 1837. He died at Hummelstown, Oct. 31, 1847, aged sixty-five years. Col. Hummel married Barbara Metzgar, daughter of Jacob Metzgar, of Derry, born Sept. 1, 1779, died Nov. 22, 1861, and with her husband buried in the old Lutheran churchyard at Hummelstown.

VALENTINE HUMMEL, Jr.

Valentine Hummel, son of Frederick Hummel (grandson of the founder of Hummelstown) and Susannah Hamaker, was born March 12, 1812, at Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. At the age of thirteen he was sent to Harrisburg, in care of his uncle, Judge Hummel, receiving the benefit of two years' English education in the schools of the borough. At the age of seventeen he was apprenticed to the printing business, with Jacob Babb, publisher of the German paper, the Morgenrothe. At the age of twenty-one Mr. Hummel was taken into partnership, and the firm of Babb, Hummel & Bigler were for many years printers for the State and publishers of the German Democratic organ, the Morgenrothe. In 1850, Mr. Hummel was elected register of wills and recorder of deeds for Danphin County, which office he creditably filled one term. He subsequently engaged in merchandising, in which he continued until a few years before his death. During the Rebellion, during the invasion of Pennsylvania, he was lieutenant of the Home Guard, Capt. Nevin. For several years he was deputy collector of internal revenue Fourteenth District, and for a long period collector of city taxes, and served in the board of school control. In the church (Zion's Lutheran) he took an active part, and was superintendent of its Sabbath-school until physical disability prevented him from performing the duties of its service. He died at Harrisburg, Thursday morning, Aug. 26, 1880. Mr. Hummel married Jane Nelson, and they had issue: William V., J. Frederick, and daughters married respectively Dr. Charles B. Fager, L. H. Kinneard, Sturgeon Child, and R. W. Bailey. In every position in life Mr. Hummel was zealous, conscientious, and upright.

VALENTINE HUMMEL.

Valentine Hummel, son of Frederick Hummel (2d) and Regina Ricker, was born Feb. 7, 1787, at Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. The education he received was quite limited, only such as was afforded by the country schools of the time. In 1806 he began as an apprentice to Philip Leebrick, of Hummelstown, to learn the trade of a saddler. In 1810 he went to Harrisburg, and forming a partnership with Michael Lebkicher, his old shopmate at Hummelstown, began the saddlery and harness-making business. Messrs. Hummel & Lebkicher subsequently engaged in merchandising, the running of saw- and grist-mills, the lumber trade, and the purchase of land both in the city of Harrisburg and on the Cumberland side of the Susquehanna, until the death of Mr. Lebkicher in 1854, when the survivor retired from all active business. Mr. Hummel was elected a representative of Dauphin County to the legislative session of 1822-23, and again in that of 1840. Governor Shulze appointed him one of the associate judges of the county, Nov. 12, 1827, a position he resigned March 20, 1837. Both in the Legislature and while upon the bench Judge Hummel served the public with the same fidelity and honesty of purpose as characterized him and made him remarkable in his private business. For one-third of a century he was a director of the public schools, and at the time of his death a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy. A great believer in humane treatment, he advocated, while a member of the school board, the total abolition of corporeal punishment, but without success. For many years he had been interested in the old Harrisburg Bank, had served as a director, and at the close of his life was president of that institution. He died at Harrisburg on the 4th of September, 1870, in his eighty-fourth year. His wife, Elizabeth Walborn, died Oct. 25, 1867, aged seventy years. Of Judge Hummel it may be said, he was a man of great temperateness of habit in all things, was economical and frugal, unostentatious, and enjoyed life in a calm, quiet, and rational manner.

PHILIP IRWIN.

Philip Irwin, son of Henry Irwin (died 1815) and Margaret Fisher (1777-1859), was born Aug. 30, 1815, in Lancaster County, Pa. His educational advantages were comprised in one or two winters at a country school. By self-application and industry, however, he became well informed, and with great activity and energy was generally successful in his enterprises. For many years he was engaged in building railroads, the scene of his operations being the Northern Central, Ohio and Mississippi, Erie, Lebanon Valley, Lake Shore, Michigan Southern, and other railroads. Although an active politician he never sought or held office, his business interests requiring all his time and attention. He died at Middletown on the 11th of December, 1878, aged sixty-three years. Mr. Irwin married Nov. 24, 1840, Anna Eliza Etter, daughter of George Etter and Nancy Shelly, who survives. Their children are Margaret, Ann, Mary Ellen, George Henry, Franklin Etter, Jenny Lind, Philip Etter, and Lillian.

CAPT. JOHN B. JOHNSON.

John Bucher Johnson, son of David Marshall Johnson and Susan Dorothy Bucher, was born Jan. 26, 1833, at Harrisburg, Pa. His father came from Beaver County, Pa., of which he was a native, and held a clerkship in the Land Department of the State, when he married the youngest daughter of Hon. Jacob Bucher, of Harrisburg. Young Johnson spent his boyhood at Harrisburg, and was a cadet at Capt. Partridge's Military School, but completed his education at Washington College, Pa., where he graduated in the class of 1852. He adopted civil engineering as his profession, and until 1861 was engaged in several of the public improvements in this State. At the breaking out of the Rebellion he entered the Eleventh Pennsylvania Regiment, Col. Jarrett, and was appointed captain of a company from Pittston. On May 14, 1861, he was appointed by the Secretary of War, Gen. Cameron, first lieutenant in the Sixth Cavalry of the Regular Army, and was subsequently made brevet major and lieutenant-colonel for meritorious service. He became captain by regular promotion Feb. 3, 1865. He served on the staff of Gen. Hancock at Baltimore and at New Orleans, and was afterwards assigned to several stations in Texas. In April, 1870, he was obliged to leave Texas on account of failing health, and returned to his home at Harrisburg, where he died June 24, 1871. Capt. Johnson was of handsome form and chivalrous bearing, upright, a true soldier, creditable to his family and country.

OVID F. JOHNSON.

Ovid F. Johnson was born in the valley of Wyoming, near the town of Wilkes-Barré, Pa., in the year 1807, and was descended from some of the early settlers of that historic locality. His paternal grandfather, the Rev. Jacob Johnson, was a superior linguist and man of rich education and culture, a graduate of Yale College, where he took his degree as early as 1740, with distinguished honor. In 1778 he was called from his home in Connecticut to reside in Wilkes-Barré. After that terrible event, the massacre of Wyoming, he assisted Col. Dennison with his advice and influence, in protecting the inhabitants that remained, and the original articles of capitulation were in the proper handwriting of Mr. Johnson. In quite a lengthy biography written of him in the year 1836, by the venerable writer and historian of Wyoming, Charles Miner, appears this: "When the Revolutionary war broke out, Mr. Johnson took his stand early and firmly in behalf of freedom. And through the whole contest he rendered the utmost service in his power, which from his learning, talents, and the respect he commanded, was very considerable. A son born while the animated discussions preceding the Revolution were going on and the elder Pitt was thundering his anathemas against ministers for their tyrannous conduct to the colonies, Mr. Johnson named Jehoiada Pitt. . . . Jehoiada is sometime since deceased, but a son of his with hereditary genius is winning his way to enviable distinction." This latter is the subject of this sketch. At the close of his early education in which he had as school and classmates many who afterwards rose to positions of eminence and distinction, he commenced the study of the law with John N. Conyngham, of Wilkes-Barré, afterwards Judge Conyngham. He was duly admitted to the bar and entered into the practice of the law at that place. In 1833 he removed to Harrisburg, and there married Jane Alricks, daughter of James Alricks and Martha Hamilton. In 1839, at the early age of thirty-two years his talent secured for him the appointment as attorney-general of Pennsylvania. In 1841, seeking a wider field for the practice of his profession, he removed to the city of Philadelphia. In 1842, his term of office having expired, he was re-appointed, and served through a second term until 1845.

As an orator, Mr. Johnson was brilliant; as a lawyer he had superior abilities, and somewhat of a wide-known reputation, being frequently employed to try cases in different States of the Union.

In personal appearance, Mr. Johnson was fine-looking, being six feet two or three inches in height, large and well developed in proportion. He died at Washington City, D.C., whether he had gone in the interest of a prominent legal claim, in the month of February, 1854. It may be here remarked that, in addition to Mr. Johnson's legal ability, he had a high reputation as a political writer. He was the author of the celebrated "Governor's Letters," published during the administration of Governor Ritner, and which purported to give the ludicrous side to the political characters then figuring in the politics of the State.

U. J. JONES.

Uriah James Jones was born at New Berlin, Union Co., Pa., in 1818. He learned the art of printing at New Berlin, Lewisburg, and Harrisburg. While a journeyman at the latter place he wrote and set up the novel of "Simon Girty the Outlaw," a book which is now very rare. In 1845, Mr. Jones went to Hollidaysburg, where he was engaged with O. A. Traugh in the publication of the Democratic Standard, and through its columns secured a national reputation for his witticisms. In 1850 he published the Keystone at Pittsburg, but the paper proving unsuccessful he resumed his place on the Standard the year following. During 1855-56 he wrote and published a "History of the Juniata Valley," the first historical work which gave a full record of the pioneer life of that locality, much of which was gathered from the lips of early settlers or their children. In 1859, Mr. Jones went to Lancaster as editor of the Express, and in 1860 removed to Harrisburg, where he took a position on the Patriot and Union. At the same time he was a regular correspondent for New York, Philadelphia, and Pittsburgh newspapers, and also a contributor of literary articles and sketches to the magazines. It may be mentioned that in 1859 he published a pamphlet "Advice to Travelers," which has furnished the material for several American guide-books. Mr. Jones was accidentally killed by the cars at the railroad depot, Harrisburg, Nov. 19, 1864. He married, in 1845, Margaret L. Traugh, of Hollidaysburg, who survives.

ANDREW J. JONES.

Andrew J. Jones, son of Robert Thomas Jones¹ and Margaret Williamson, was born, 1803, in County Donegal, Ireland. He received a fine English education, and early in life came to Harrisburg, where he learned merchandising with John Cameron. Subsequently, in partnership with his brother Samuel T., he entered into the mercantile business, which they successfully carried on for many years. Mr. Jones became quite prominent in political affairs, and in 1848, upon the election of Gen. Zachary Taylor to the Presidency, was appointed postmaster at Harrisburg, a position he acceptably filled four years. He died at Harrisburg Jan. 13, 1867, aged sixty-four years. Mr. Jones was thrice married, first, to Mary Ann Jones, daughter of Thomas Jones and Margary Donnelly, of Perry County, Pa. She died in March, 1843, and there was issue: Robert Thomas, d. s. p.; John Cameron (1833-56); and Samuel T. Second, to Susan B. Ayres, daughter of William Ayres and Mary Elizabeth Bucher, of Harrisburg. Third, to Sarah A. Buckman, of Burlington, N. J., and there was issue: Virginia R. and Andrew J.

¹ Robert Thomas Jones was a native of County Donegal, Ireland, emigrating to America in 1806. He married Margaret Williamson, a native of Ireland. They had issue:

- i. Mary Ann.
- ii. David S.
- iii. Margaret; m. Thomas E. Ellis.
- iv. Robert H.; m. Sarah Morrill Egte.
- v. Andrew J.
- vi. Samuel T.
- vii. Eliza; m. Rev. Francis H. Ritchie.

BENJAMIN JORDAN.

Benjamin Jordan, son of Thomas Jordan and Rachel Steele, was born July 19, 1779, on the ground where the town of Milton, Northumberland Co., Pa., is located. Thomas Jordan the first of his family was an emigrant from Scotland, coming to America prior to 1700, and settled in Cecil County, Md. He and his family were rigid Presbyterians, and attached themselves to Christianna Church, located just over the line in the State of Delaware. In the yard of that church the remains of four generations of the Jordan family rest. Thomas Jordan, father of Benjamin, was born near this old church prior to 1752, from whence he removed to Northumberland County, prior to the war of the Revolution. When the son was only a few weeks old the family were driven from their home by the marauding Indians, when they located in York County, where Thomas Jordan died. He married Rachel Steele, the eldest sister of Gen. Archibald and Gen. John Steele, of Revolutionary memory. In 1805 Benjamin Jordan removed to Lancaster, where he engaged himself in the business of bookseller with William Dickson, at the same time assisted in editing the Lancaster Intelligencer until 1808, when he was appointed weighmaster of the port of Philadelphia. In 1816 he resigned and came to Dauphin County, taking up his residence at Walnut Hill. Mr. Jordan represented the Dauphin district in the State Senate 1846-1850. He died at his residence May 24, 1861, in the eighty-second year of his age. Mr. Jordan married, Oct. 29, 1811, Mary Crouch, born Oct. 23, 1791, at Walnut Hill, Dauphin Co., Pa.; died Oct. 27, 1846, at the same place; daughter of Edward Crouch and Margaret Potter. They are both interred in old Paxtang Church graveyard.

ABRAHAM JURY.

Among the earliest settlers on the Wiconisco was Abraham Jury, or, as it is sometimes written, Shora. He was of French-Hnguenot descent, and emigrated from Switzerland about 1755. He located within the valley not far from the town of Millersburg. He was a farmer, and took up a large tract of land. In the Revolution he served during the campaign in the Jerseys, and subsequently on the frontiers, as did also his eldest son, Samuel. He died in August, 1785, leaving a wife, Catharine, and the following children: Samuel, Abraham, Mary, Magdalene, Margaret, Catharine, Susannah, Salome. Samuel, we presume, either removed from the valley or died early, for Abraham, Jr., seems to have come into possession of the old homestead. The latter died in November, 1805, leaving John, who was of age, and Jacob, Hannah, and Sally, minors.

GEN. JOHN KEAN.

Gen. John Kean was one of the earliest settlers of Harrisburg, one of the first judges of Dauphin County, a county commissioner for eight years, two terms State senator from Dauphin and Berks Counties, register-general of Pennsylvania, elector in 1800, voting for Mr. Jefferson for President, and for many years a justice of the peace at Harrisburg. He was the son of John Kean, born in Ireland, 1728, who came to America 1742, served as captain in the Revolution, died at Harrisburg, 1801, aged seventy-three. His wife, Mary Dunlap, was born 1721, died at Harrisburg, 1819, aged ninety-eight. The only son of this union was John, who was born in Philadelphia, Oct. 3, 1762. His father was located in Dauphin (then Lancaster) in 1775. In 1780, John, Jr., was called into service, and was with the army until after the taking of Yorktown. Upon his discharge he was placed with Mr. Clunie, a merchant, at Hummelstown, second sheriff of Dauphin County, at a salary of one hundred dollars a year and boarding. In this period he taught himself conveyancing and surveying. In 1785 he came to Harrisburg, as partner of Clunie.

In 1786 he married his first wife, Mary, daughter of Hon. Robert Whitehill, of Cumberland County. In 1787 he was elected a county commissioner. Having lost his first wife, he married in 1789, secondly, Jane, daughter of Capt. John Hamilton. In 1788 he was one of the members of "the Harrisburg Conference," held at "The Compass," the old ferry-house, at Paxtang and Vine Streets. He was one of the first managers of the library company, established in 1787; of the trustees of the Harrisburg Academy, 1788; treasurer of the Presbyterian congregation; chosen captain of our first volunteer company upon the resignation of Gen. Hanna, and president of the first fire company. In 1792 he was appointed a judge. In 1796 he purchased, "with John Elder, Jr., New Market Forge, about three miles from Palmyra, for twenty-two thousand dollars, and removed thence." A few years before he had been elected to the State Senate, and was re-elected in 1798, serving until 1802. In 1805 he was appointed by Governor McKean register-general, at a salary of $1333.33, serving for three years. He removed to Philadelphia in 1810, was a merchant there, returned to Harrisburg in 1813, was again appointed justice of the peace by Governor Snyder, and died Dec. 9, 1818, aged fifty-six years, one of the most active and influential of the early citizens of Harrisburg. He was brother-in-law by his marriages of Col. Richard M. Crain, Hugh Hamilton, Esq., James Alricks, Gen. Jacob Spangler, and Moses Maclean, Esq. He left no male descendants. Two of his daughters are living, residents of this city.

FREDERICK KELKER.

Frederick Kelker, son of Anthony Kelker and Mary Magdalena Meister, was born Oct. 29, 1780. His early education was extremely limited, and consisted in a few months' attendance at the parochial school on the churchyard of the Reformed Church at Lebanon. In May, 1801, he entered the store of Oves & Moore, and in March, 1805, removed to Harrisburg, where, in partnership with his former employers, he established in that town the first exclusively hardware-store. In 1811 he purchased the interest of his partners and became the sole owner. In 1823, his health failing, he relinquished business, and disposed of it to two of the young men who had been in his employ. He continued, however, to reside in the house in which he first settled until his decease. Through all that period he manifested great interest in the welfare of his successors in own quiet and unobtrusive way to the amelioration of the condition of the poor, sick, and friendless. In the vigor of manhood he filled many minor positions in the community in which he lived, always rejecting political preferment. For several terms he was a member and president of the Borough Council; was a director of the branch established by the Philadelphia Bank in Harrisburg, a director of the Harrisburg Bank, a director of the common schools when they were first established in Pennsylvania, and was ready at all times to co-operate with his fellow-citizens in all the benevolent enterprises of the day. In business, and there was perhaps no year in which a portion of his capital was not to a greater or less extent used by them whenever they desired it. He was remarkable for punctuality and integrity. A close observer of human nature and a safe counselor, being often appealed to by his fellow-citizens, calm and modest in his demeanor, he was not to be swerved from his purposes when he felt that he was in the line of duty. His habits of industry and economy led to the acquisition of a competency, and the latter half especially of his long life was devoted in his the church of which he was a member (the Reformed) he was prominent; presided at the meeting on the 17th of November, 1820, to establish the first Sunday-school in connection with the church, and active in the measures adopted for erecting the church building yet standing. He died at Harrisburg on the 12th of July, 1857, in the seventy-seventh year of his age. Mr. Kelker was twice married,—first to Lydia Chamberlain, daughter of Charles Chamberlain, of Philadelphia; second to Catharine Fager, daughter of John and Sarah Fager, of Harrisburg.

JOHN KELKER.

John Kelker, fourth son of Anthony Kelker and Mary Magdalena Meister, was born at Annville, Pa., June 12, 1776. He received a good education, or rather such as the country afforded during the Revolutionary era, and was brought up to mercantile pursuits, and learned the trade of a hatter. In 1812 he was elected sheriff of Dauphin County, and permanently removed to Harrisburg April 29, 1813. He was appointed deputy marshal for the county, and took the census thereof in 1830, and served as county treasurer from 1829 to 1832. Mr. Kelker was an officer of the Reformed Church, Harrisburg, and one of the building committee when the present church was erected. He died at Harrisburg on the 29th of April, 1859, at the age of eighty-three. "In social life," wrote a contemporary, "he was an example of urbane manners, of warm and genial friendship, of generous hospitality, and he was everywhere welcomed as a man of courteous and kind disposition." Mr. Kelker married, in 1798, Sabina, daughter of Henry Shantz and Sabina Meily, of Lebanon, who died at Harrisburg, Dec. 26, 1853, and had issue.

REV. EMANUEL KELLER.

Emanuel Keller, son of Peter Keller and Catharine Schaeffer, was born Sept. 30, 1801, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the schools and academy of the borough, and pursued his classical studies under the direction of his uncle, the Rev. Benjamin Keller. He subsequently entered Dickinson College, where he remained two years, when he began the study of theology with the Rev. Dr. Lochman, of Harrisburg. In 1826 he was licensed by the Lutheran Synod of Pennsylvania, and the same year began his ministerial labors at Manchester, Md. Thence he removed to Mechanicsburg, Pa., where he continued in the pastorate until a short period before his death, his enfeebled health obliging him to resign his charge. He died at Mechanicsburg on the 11th of April, 1837, in the thirty-sixth year of his age, and is buried in Triangle Spring Church graveyard. The Rev. Mr. Keller married, April 14, 1825, Sabina Seltzer, of Harrisburg. They had five children.

JOHN PETER KELLER.

John Peter Keller, son of Charles Andrew Keller and Judith Barbara Bigler, was born at Lancaster, Pa., Sept. 28, 1776. His ancestor belonged to one of the oldest families in Switzerland, and emigrated to America in 1735. John Peter learned the trade of a brass-founder, coming to Harrisburg in 1796. In 1801 he established himself in business as brass-founder and rope-maker, which proved successful, and afterwards in general merchandising. He was a member of the Borough Council almost continuously from 1810 to 1824, and was quite prominent and influential in the public affairs of his day. He was identified with nearly all the early enterprises of the town, such as the Harrisburg Bridge Company, Harrisburg and Middletown Turnpike Company, and at his death was the last survivor of the original board of directors of the Harrisburg Bank. He was a gentleman of thrift, industry, and indomitable energy, upright, honored, and respected by his fellow-citizens. He was no less decided and influential as a Christian, being one of the founders of the Lutheran Church in Harrisburg. He died at Harrisburg on the 1st of October, 1859, in the eighty-fourth year of his age. Mr. Keller was twice married. His first wife was Catharine Schaeffer, daughter of Rev. Frederick Schaeffer, D.D., of Lancaster, born Nov. 6, 1774, died Dec. 19, 1842, and by whom he had the following children: Frederick, George, Rev. Emanuel, Eliza, married James R. Boyd; Maria, married Lewis L. Plitt; Catharine, married James Gilliard; John Peter; Sophia, married Thomas Montgomery; William, Frederick George, Benjamin, Peter Charles, and Charles Andrew. His second wife was Mrs. Rachel Cochran, widow of William Cochran, formerly sheriff of the county, who survived him thirteen years.

MARTIN KENDIG.

Martin Kendig, son of John Kendig and Elizabeth Hill, was born in Sunbury, Northumberland Co., Pa., Dec. 31, 1797. After receiving a fair education he learned the trade of saddle- and harness-making at Harrisburg, and upon attaining his majority established the business at Middletown, carrying on, in company with his brother Daniel, the lumber trade. Subsequently the latter, with Judge Murray, erected a large saw-mill at the mouth of the Swatara, and established an extensive lumber trade. He served as one of the auditors of the county from 1826 to 1828, and represented Dauphin County in the Legislature from 1837 to 1839. Mr. Kendig died on his farm, adjoining Middletown, on the 28th day of May, 1850. He was thrice married, and left several children. Mr. Kendig was an enterprising citizen, and a gentleman of probity and worth, highly esteemed in the community, and influential in public affairs.

WILLIAM H. KEPNER.

William H. Kepner, son of Samuel and Sarah Kepner, was born in 1810, in Bern township, Berks Co., Pa. His father was a millwright, came to Harrisburg in 1823, and erected the first steam flour-mill in the neighborhood of Harrisburg. William H. adopted the occupation and trade of his father, and at the death of the latter continued the business, acquiring an extensive reputation in this and adjoining States for the superior quality of his millstones. For a period of twenty years Mr. Kepner filled various prominent positions in the municipal affairs of the borough and the city. He served several terms in the old Town Council, and upon the amendment of the borough charter was elected the councilman-at-large. He was elected the first mayor of the city of Harrisburg, an office he filled acceptably and well. He was at one time the Democratic candidate for associate judge of the county, and although his party were greatly in the minority, came within a small vote of an election. He was one of the organizers and president of the Harrisburg Fire Association. In all public positions he was faithful to his trust, and conscientiously exercised the authority reposed in his hands. In the city of his adoption he took a large and liberal interest in its growth and general prosperity. He died Jan. 18, 1871, at Harrisburg, aged sixty years. Mr. Kepner married, in 1842, Cassandra Loucks, daughter of George Loucks (1786-1849) and Susan Weltzhoffer (1795-1842), of York County, Pa., and their surviving children are George L. and Ida J., married O. P. Grove, of Harrisburg.

REV. WILLIAM KERR.

Rev. William Kerr was born in Bart township, Lancaster Co., Pa., Oct. 13, 1776. His father dying early, he was left to the tender care of a pious mother. After some years spent in the schools of the neighborhood, he was sent to Jefferson College, Canonsburg, where he graduated. For some years thereafter he was principal of an academy at Wilmington, Del. He subsequently placed himself under the care of the Presbytery of New Castle, and was shortly after ordained by that body. He preached in Harrisburg about the years 1804-5, and upon the resignation of the Rev. Mr. McFarquhar was sent to supply the pulpit of Old Donegal Church. In the fall of 1808 the congregation at Columbia made application to Mr. Kerr for part of his time; it was not, however, until the year following that he consented to give them a portion of his ministerial labors. He continued to be the stated supply there until the first Sunday in January, 1814, when he preached his farewell sermon. Mr. Kerr also preached at Marietta in addition to his charge at Donegal. He died in that town on the 22d of September, 1821, aged forty-five years, and is interred in Old Donegal Church graveyard. The Rev. Mr. Kerr married Mary Elder Wilson, daughter of James Wilson and Mary Elder, of Derry, born 1788, died Feb. 22, 1850, at Harrisburg, and their children were Mary, married Hermanus Alricks, of Harrisburg; William M., J. Wallace, James Wilson, and Martha, married Dr. Edward L. Orth, of Harrisburg. As a minister, there were few who stood higher in the estimation of his brethren in the Presbytery for his excellent Christian character and his worth as a preacher of the gospel, than the Rev. William Kerr.

CHRISTIAN KUNDEL.

Christian Kunkel, son of John Christian Kunkel, was born in the Palatinate, Germany, July 10, 1757.

His father arrived in Pennsylvania Sept. 23, 1766, subsequently locating at or near York. Christian was brought up to mercantile pursuits. In the war of the Revolution he was in Col. Slagle's battalion of associators, and was in active service during the campaign around Philadelphia in 1777. In 1786, in company with his brother-in-law, George Hoyer, he came to Harrisburg. Here he at once entered into business, which with his indomitable energy and industry proved highly successful. He was one of the prime movers and contributed towards the organization of the first German Church in Harrisburg. He was burgess of the borough in 1796, and frequently a member of the Council. He was elected, in 1809, one of the directors of the branch bank of Philadelphia at Harrisburg, and the same year appointed by Governor Snyder one of the commissioners for erecting a bridge over the Susquehanna. Mr. Kunkel's eventful and honored life closed at Harrisburg, Sept. 8, 1823. He was twice married. His first wife, Anna Catharine Hoyer, died Aug. 17, 1796, aged thirty-seven years. His second wife, who was Anna Maria Elizabeth Welshaur, of York County, died July 24, 1862, aged eighty-eight years. They are all buried in the Harrisburg cemetery. Mr. Kunkel had a large family. By his first wife he had George, John, Susannah, married David Hummel; Mary, married Peter Fahnestock, and Jacob. By his second wife there were Elizabeth, married John C. Barnitz; Benjamin, Catharine, married Joseph Ross; Sarah, married James Gilliard; Magdalena, Lydia, married John P. Keller; Rev. Christian Frederick, and Samuel.

JOHN C. KUNKEL.

John Christian Kunkel, son of George Kunkel and Catharine Ziegler, was born in the year 1816, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a liberal scientific and classical education in the schools at Gettysburg and at Jefferson College, Canonsburg, at which latter institution he graduated. After leaving college he entered Carlisle Law-School, under Judge Read, subsequently reading law with James McCormick, and admitted to the Dauphin County bar. After his admission to the bar he remained several years in the office with Mr. McCormick. He rapidly gained a large practice and a reputation which few members of the bar enjoy. He also became active in politics, and in the earnest and exciting campaign of 1844, when the young men of the nation had made Henry Clay, then in the zenith of his career, their standard-bearer, the best talent and the most brilliant eloquence that ever graced the American rostrum was called into requisition. Amid all the magnificent display and power of logic that of the young orator of Pennsylvania, as Mr. Kunkel was recognized, was conspicuous as well for force of argument as for grace of delivery. The same year he was elected to the Legislature, re-elected in 1845, and again in 1850. In 1851 he was elected to the State Senate, and was chosen Speaker of that body at the close of the first session of his term. As a legislator, Mr. Kunkel was prominent for the wisdom of his counsel as well as for the power of his eloquence. His services at the capital added greatly to his already wide reputation as a pure statesman and accomplished scholar.

In 1854 and again in 1856 he was elected to the United States Congress. During the four years he spent at Washington City he was regarded throughout the country as one of the ablest statesmen at the national capital. In 1858 he retired from public life and gave his exclusive attention to the practice of his profession, varying the course of his life by occasionally helping a friend in a political canvass, and wherever he went he was always the favorite of the people. In 1868 he was stricken down by paralysis, and he never fully regained his health, dying on Sunday, Oct. 16, 1870, at the age of fifty-four years. Perchance the loss of no member of the Dauphin County bar was so severely felt as that of Mr. Kunkel, if we are to judge of the glowing, sincere, and fraternal tributes paid to his memory by his brethren in the profession at the time of his death. Mr. Kunkel married Elizabeth Crain Rutherford, daughter of Dr. William Wilson Rutherford and Eleanor Crain, who, with two children, one of whom since deceased, survived.

BENJAMIN KURTZ.

Benjamin Kurtz, son of Rev. John Nicholas Kurtz, was born in Tulpehocken, Berks Co., about the year 1765. Under parental instruction he became a good classical scholar, and taught school several years. He came to Harrisburg about 1790, and was quite prominent in the new town. He was chosen town clerk in 1797, and subsequently elected coroner for the county, serving from Jan. 30, 1800, to Nov. 3, 1802. He represented Dauphin County in the Legislature from 1809 to 1812, and was greatly instrumental in securing the location of the seat of State government at Harrisburg. A man of indomitable energy and force of character, they were mainly exerted in the accomplishment of a purpose, which was at the time duly appreciated by his constituents. He died in 1839, at Harrisburg. Mr. Kurtz married Elizabeth Gardner, of York, Pa. Their children, all born at Harrisburg, were:

- i. Cassandra, married John Henning.
- ii. Anna Maria, married George J. Heisely, of Harrisburg.
- iii. John N., married Anna Murphy.
- iv. Rev. Dr. Benjamin, born 1795, died 1866, at Baltimore, Md.; married, first, Ann Barnett, of Hagerstown, Md.; second, Catharine Baker, of Winchester, Va.; third, Mary Calhoun, of Chambersburg, Pa.
- v. Henry, who removed to Kentucky, there married and died.
- vi. Emanuel, died at Bloody Run, Pa., unmarried.

vii. Louisa, married John De Pui, who was clerk of the Pennsylvania Senate several years, and died at Harrisburg in March, 1829, while holding that position; they left one daughter, Elizabeth.

viii. Caroline, married Andrew G. Miller, who removed from Gettysburg to Milwaukee, and became the first United States district judge of Wisconsin.

SAMUEL LAIRD.

Samuel Laird, the son of Samuel Laird (1732-1806) and Mary Young (1741-1833), daughter of James Young, was born at Carlisle, Pa., on the 15th of February, 1769. His father was for many years one of the Provincial magistrates of Cumberland County, and, under the Constitution of 1776, one of the justices of the courts. Mr. Laird received a classical education, studied law at Carlisle, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the September term, 1792. He located at Harrisburg, and soon secured a large and successful practice. In the early years of the borough he took a leading part in its local affairs, and was a prominent actor in the first decade of its history. He died at Harrisburg, Jan. 15, 1815, aged forty-five years. He married Elizabeth Montgomery, second daughter of the Rev. Joseph Montgomery, who died Oct. 12, 1814, aged forty-four. Their remains lie interred in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Mr. Laird was a good lawyer, a pleasant speaker, and a courteous, honorable gentleman of the old school.

SAMUEL LANDIS.

Samuel Landis, the son of Abraham Landis and Susannah Reiuoehl, was born at Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 22d of June, 1813. His father was a native of Berks County, and came to Dauphin County shortly after his marriage. His father dying while the son was only eleven years old, he was taken from school and put to merchandising, first at Halifax and afterwards at Harrisburg. With a limited education he applied himself to study, and when about twenty he taught school during the winter. About 1835 he purchased a store at Halifax, and was in continued mercantile business thirty years. In 1851 he removed to his farm near Halifax, but commissioned justice of the peace, April 10, 1855, he returned to the town. In 1801 he was elected associate judge of the county. From February, 1874, until his death, March 8, 1876, he was cashier of the Real Estate Bank at Harrisburg. Judge Landis married, June 22, 1836, Margaret Kinter, daughter of Isaac Kinter and Elizabeth Henry, of Rockville, who survives. In church matters he took a prominent part, held the position of recording steward of the Methodist Episcopal Church thirty years, was a member of the first Sunday-school organized at Halifax, of which for many years he was the superintendent. By his will he donated five hundred dollars for the benefit of the library. Judge Landis was a faithful and zealous Christian gentleman. He was a vice-president of the Dauphin County Historical Society at the time of his death.

PROFESSOR DAVID H. E. LAROSS.

David Henry Earnest LaRoss, the son of Rev. Joseph LaRoss and Elizabeth Earnest, was born Jan. 9, 1827, at Bloomsburg, Columbia Co., Pa. His father died when his son was an infant, and his mother, an exemplary woman, when he was eleven years of age. Thus early left an orphan, he was thrown upon his own resources for a livelihood. After varied employments he returned to Hummelstown with his maternal uncle, and shortly after apprenticed himself to the trade of cabinet-maker. After serving his time he began clerking at Harrisburg, where he remained several years, at the same time closely applying himself to study. He subsequently entered Lafayette College, Easton, where he remained two years, his limited means not permitting him to remain for graduation. He then began teaching as a profession. In 1860 he was first elected county superintendent of public schools, in which position he served until his death, except in 1872, when he was elected to a term of office by a vote of sixty-five out of ninety polled, yet, owing to some defect and objection by several boards of directors, the person who received the next highest number of votes was commissioned superintendent. He was, however, re-elected in 1875 and in 1878, and again in 1881, when his vote was almost unanimous. Professor LaRoss died at Hummelstown, Sunday, Oct. 22, 1882, in the fifty-sixth year of his age. He married, first, in 1853, Sarah A. Coil, of Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., Pa., who died in January, 1867, and there was issue: Joseph, John, Mary, Gertrude (married Eli Kline, of Allentown), Carroll, Robert, Sarah, and Eva. He next married Annie W. Breneman, of Elizabethtown, Pa., who died two years afterwards without issue. In 1872 he married Fannie Hummel, of Hummelstown, and there was issue: Fannie, Claude, and Edna.

WILLIAM LAUMAN.

William Lauman, the son of George and Elizabeth Lauman, early settlers at Middletown, was born in that borough on the 18th of June, 1772. He learned the trade of a hatter in Philadelphia, where he became acquainted with Elizabeth Meyers, and married her. He then returned to Middletown, where he carried on a successful business. He was chosen to the Legislature in 1827, serving two terms, having previously been county auditor, 1822 to 1825. Mr. Lauman kept the "stage office" near Centre Square, and on the 24th of December, 1829, succeeded John McCammon as postmaster, an office he held until his death, which occurred on the 13th of December, 1832. He was succeeded by his widow, who filled the position until June, 1834, when she removed from the borough. Mrs. Lauman died at Morgan's Corners, near Philadelphia, on the 4th of July, 1853. Her remains rest by those of her husband in the old Lutheran graveyard in Middletown. They had nine children, four of whom are living,—Eliza, widow of John Croll; Hannah, William M., and Edward J. The late Maj. George M. Lauman was one of their sons. Mr. Lauman was an industrious and enterprising citizen, hospitable, generous, and social.

SAMUEL M. LAWRENCE.

Samuel M. Lawrence, son of Joseph Lawrence and Maria Bucher, was born in Washington County, Pa., Dec. 14, 1835. His father's death occurring when he was six years old, his mother removed two years later to Harrisburg, her former home, where she continued to reside during the remainder of her life, and here Samuel received his principal education, although attending Jefferson College for a time. From boyhood he was a remarkable student, and had a perfect hunger for knowledge.

At an early age he adopted the profession of civil engineering, and was engaged in the survey of the Sunbury and Erie (now Philadelphia and Erie) Railroad, and continued on it until its completion in 1864. He was perfectly familiar with every part of the road, and had traveled it all on foot from Sunbury to Erie. He was one of the four original contractors who built the Oil Creek Railroad, and was also chief engineer of it. He was also engaged in the survey of the Warren and Franklin Railroad at the time of his death.

He was nominated by the Republican party in the counties of Clearfield, McKean, Jefferson, and Elk for the Legislature, and represented them in the session of 1860-61, thus spending this winter in Harrisburg, his old home. Not having a taste for politics, he declined further nominations.

He married, April 4, 1864, Hanna Green, of Germantown, Pa., daughter of Hon. John Green. He resided in Warren, Pa., the last three or four years of his life, dying there Oct. 17, 1864, in his twentieth year. He is buried at Harrisburg, in the cemetery where also lie his mother and brother, W. C. A. Lawrence.

Few men have had more devoted or a larger number of friends than the subject of this sketch, and few have left behind them kindlier memories than he.

WILLIAM C. A. LAWRENCE.

William Caldwell Anderson Lawrence, son of Joseph Lawrence and Maria Bucher, was born May 18, 1832, in Washington County, Pa. His grandfather, John Lawrence, of English birth, emigrated to America at an early day, and settled near Hunters-town, Adams Co., Pa. There he married Sarah Moffet, by whom he had ten children. John Lawrence died about 1786, and three years afterwards his widow removed with her family to Washington County, Pa., and settled on a farm lying upon the head-waters of Pigeon Creek. Of the sons of John Lawrence, John settled at Beaver, Pa.; twice represented the county in the Legislature, subsequently removing to Delaware County, Ohio, where he died. Samuel followed his brother to Beaver County, and located upon a farm; he was nine years prothonotary of the county, and twice elected to the State Assembly. He died about 1828. Joseph Lawrence, the youngest of the family, remained in Washington County; in 1818 was chosen to the Legislature, and served continuously until 1826, being Speaker of the House during the sessions of 1820 and 1822. In 1826 he was elected to Congress; in 1834 and 1835 returned to the Legislature, and in 1836 elected State treasurer. In 1838 he was a candidate for Congress, defeated by seventeen votes, but elected in 1840. He died in Washington City, April 17, 1842, and his remains were interred in the Congressional burying-ground. He was twice married. By his first wife, Rebecca Van Eman, there were Joseph, George V., Sarah, and Samuel. By his second wife, Maria Bucher, who died in 1861, there were John J., James K., William C. A., Samuel, and Susan. William Caldwell Anderson Lawrence was educated at Washington College, where he graduated in 1850; came to Harrisburg, and began the study of law with John C. Kunkel. He was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 31, 1853, and entered upon the practice of his profession at Harrisburg as law-partner of Mr. Kunkel. He was elected to the Legislature in 1857, 1858, and 1859, and was Speaker of the House of Representatives, sessions of 1859 and 1860. He died at Harrisburg, April 21, 1860. Mr. Lawrence was remarkable for genius of a rare order, and his success at the bar and in public life at the commencement of his career gave promise of a future of extraordinary brilliancy, frustrated by his early death.

REV. JOHN GEORGE LOCHMAN, D.D.

John George Lochman, son of Nicholas Lochman and Maria Schneider, was born at Philadelphia, Pa., Dec. 2, 1773. After proper preparation he entered the University of Pennsylvania, at which he graduated, and from which institution he subsequently received the doctorate. He studied theology under the direction of the celebrated Dr. Helmuth, a graduate of the University of Halle, and for many years Professor of German and Oriental Languages in the University of Pennsylvania. He was licensed to preach in 1794, and soon after accepted a call to Lebanon, where he remained twenty-one years. In 1815 he was elected pastor of the United Evangelical Lutheran congregations at Harrisburg, Middletown, and Shupp's, where he labored with great fidelity and the most satisfactory results. In 1817 he was president of the German Lutheran Synod of the United States.

Dr. Lochman's useful life terminated at Harrisburg on the 10th of July, 1825. The congregations in their appreciation of his services erected a handsome monument over his remains, which are interred on the southeast side of the church. His wife, Susanna Hoffman, died on the 27th of June, 1830, and is buried by his side. Their son, the Rev. Augustus Lochman, D.D., who succeeded his father at Harrisburg, is now the venerable minister at York. Dr. Lochman was an able and popular preacher, was held in high estimation by the church, and exercised an unbounded influence. He was the author of "The History, Doctrine, and Discipline of the Evangelical Lutheran Church," published in 1817, and several other works. Their children were Rev. Dr. August H. (of York, Pa.), William H., Louisa (married Rev. Rothrauff), Susan (died unmarried), Camilla B. (married William Keller), Emma (married John Heis, of Illinois), and Annie (married Frederick V. Beisel).

ANTHONY W. LOOMIS.

Anthony Wayne Loomis, eldest son of Ashbel Loomis and Mary Scott, was born April 11, 1806, at Alstead, N. H. The Loomis family in America is descended from Joseph Loomis, who emigrated from Braintree, County Essex, England, in 1638, and settled at Windsor, Conn. One of his descendants was Eleazer Loomis, who married Jemima Crandall and removed from Tolland, Conn., to Alstead, N. H., in 1788. He died March 17, 1822, and his wife in April, 1838, at Alstead. Their son, Ashbel Loomis, born Sept. 16, 1779, married Sarah Scott, daughter of Capt. William Scott, one of the first settlers of Petersborough, N. H. Capt. Scott was born in May, 1733, in Townsend, Mass.; served in the French and Indian war from 1756 to 1758 in Canada; was in the war of the Revolution, and after the peace of 1783 was a government surveyor on the Western lakes. He died in Litchfield, Sept. 19, 1796, from sickness caused by exposure in his surveying expeditions. Ashbel Loomis died Aug. 31, 1824, and his wife, Sarah Scott, Sept. 10, 1841. They had four children,—Anthony Wayne, William, Nancy (married Horace Hamblit), and Mary (married Lewis Slader). Anthony W. Loomis came to Pennsylvania in 1827, and began teaching. He first taught a writing-school at Liverpool, and next year at Harrisburg. He subsequently engaged in the lumber trade near the foot of Berry's Mountain (now the Wiconisco Canal site), and afterwards turned his attention to farming. In 1844 he established the Halifax Herald, which he edited and published about two years, when he began merchandising, lumbering and farming until his death, which occurred at Halifax, Aug. 4, 1864. He was an expert penman, having learned the art under the best masters in Boston, and for a third of a century was one of the leading business men in the region of Halifax. Mr. Loomis was twice married,—first, June 3, 1835, to Maria Brubaker, of Halifax, born March 5, 1814, died May 28, 1843, daughter of Joseph and Barbara Brubaker, and there was issue,—Albert Scott, Daniel Brubaker, Barbara Ann, and William Anthony; secondly, April 2, 1844, to Mary Murray, of Middletown, born March 14, 1818, daughter of Francis Murray and Margaret Snyder, and there was issue,—Francis Murray, Charles Cass, George Otis, Walter Jefferson, Sarah Margaret, and Mary Agnes.

JAMES McCAMMON, M.D.

James McCammon, of Scotch ancestry, was a native of the County Down, Ireland, born about 1778. He was educated at Edinburgh, and received his degree of Doctor of Medicine at the university of that city. He subsequently served two years in the London Hospital, under that celebrated physician, Dr. Fordyce. He came to the United States about 1804, and located at Newville, in Cumberland County, where he had a very general and extensive practice. In September, 1811, he removed to Middletown, where his brother John resided and was postmaster,—at that period a preferable field to the Cumberland Valley,—and was very successful. He died at Middletown on the 7th of November, 1815, and was buried in the old Presbyterian graveyard on High Street, in that borough. He left a wife and three children, who afterwards removed to Zanesville, Ohio. Dr. McCammon was a skillful surgeon, and ranked high in his profession. Socially he was agreeable in conversation and of refined manners.

JOHN McCAMMON.

John McCammon, of Middletown, was born in the county of Down, Ireland, about the year 1774, and emigrated to the United States when about seventeen years of age. He resided a short time in Chester County, from whence he came to Middletown, where he followed his trade of stone-mason. He married there, and afterwards kept the principal hotel and stage-office on Main Street, near Centre Square. When Gen. Lafayette, on his visit to America, in 1824-25, passed through Middletown on his way to Harrisburg, he and his escort dined at the house of Mr. McCammon. Mr. McCammon was appointed postmaster early in 1803, and continued to hold the office until Dec. 24, 1829, a period of nearly twenty-seven years. He died July 24, 1838, aged sixty-four years, and is buried in the old Presbyterian graveyard in Middletown. Two of Mr. McCammon's daughters have served lengthened terms as post-mistresses here,—Mrs. Catharine A. Stouch, from Feb. 17, 1849, to May 15, 1857, and Mrs. Rachel C. McKibbin, the present postmistress, who was first appointed April 5, 1867, and has received three appointments since, making in all a period of about forty-seven years for the family as postmasters. Mr. McCammon was a consistent member of the Paxtang Presbyterian Church. Two children are still living, viz., Mrs. R. C. McKibbin, of Middletown, and David C. McCammon, Esq., of Gettysburg.

JAMES McCORMICK.

James McCormick, son of William McCormick and Margery Bines, was born in 1801, near Silver Spring, Cumberland Co., Pa. When less than three years of age he lost his father by a fatal accident. Paternal care thus devolved upon his mother, a bright, determined woman, and by her his preparatory studies were carefully made, fitting him at an early age for Princeton College, where he graduated with reputation and began the study of law with Andrew Carothers, Esq., of Carlisle. He was admitted to the bar of Cumberland County in 1823, and to that of Dauphin County at the August term, 1825. He opened an office on Market Street, in a one-story frame house next to the Washington Hotel, then kept by Joseph Henzey. His was a most successful career, which never faltered as long as he was able to give his professional duties any attention, and, indeed, followed him after his retirement from all actual pursuits of it. Mr. McCormick served in Town Council, as good citizens should when called upon to perform a duty so useful and often very vexatious. He was president of that body, also of the Dauphin Deposit Bank, of the Harrisburg Cemetery, of the Harrisburg Bridge Company, and of the trustees of the Pine Street Presbyterian Church. In all these positions he was a cautious and able adviser. He uniformly declined candidature for office, as also offers of the higher honors of his profession. He died at Harrisburg Jan. 18, 1870, and is buried in the cemetery that owes so much of its elegance to his foresight and judicious counsel. Mr. McCormick married, in 1830, Eliza Buehler, only daughter of George Buehler and Maria Nagle, of Harrisburg, who survived her husband ten years. Upon his retirement he gave the powers of his active mind to the management of a large estate, consisting of furnaces, rolling-mills, grist-mills, and farms. All these interests were successful, and, notwithstanding his physical disability, conducted in a masterly and systematic manner.

REV. WILLIAM McFADDEN.

William McFadden was born May 3, 1804, in Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was of Scotch-Irish ancestors, who were among the earliest settlers in that locality. His advantages of education were exceedingly limited, and at his majority we find him a day-laborer on the Pennsylvania Canal, then in the course of construction. Under the religious teachings of the Rev. John Winebrenner, he became a convert to his faith. Leaving the work of the canal, he went to Harrisburg and worked at shoemaking with Jacob M. Awl, a local preacher of the Methodist Church. His early education having been neglected, he felt an earnest desire for study and self-improvement, and during his leisure hours was kindly cared for and instructed by the then wife of the Rev. Mr. Winebrenner, who took a warm interest in him. She encouraged the young student, and when others laughed at her for her cheerful labor bestowed upon the ardent but young and uneducated shoemaker, she, seeing the undeveloped talent, quietly remarked that "she thought he would yet make a preacher." Her expectations were more than realized in after-years, for McFadden not only became a preacher, but a powerful minister for good. After a residence of several years in Harrisburg, he removed to Mount Joy, Lancaster Co., and was early associated with the church organization in that place. He continued to work at his trade, but was not very successful. A friend, however, finding him to be an excellent workman, induced him to move into the business portion of the town, and his work was such as commended him to general patronage.

He began his work of the ministry by exhorting at prayer-meetings, assisting the preachers at protracted meetings, and his eloquence was such as to soon bring him into general notice. He applied for and received license from the East Pennsylvania Eldership, which met in Mechanicsburg in December, 1832, and in connection with the Rev. Jonathan Hawk, was appointed to the Dauphin Circuit. At the succeeding eldership he reported considerable progress on his field of labor, and the eldership appointed him, with Mr. Keller, to York County. From thence until within a few years of his death, when failing health obliged him to cease active labors, Elder McFadden was actively engaged in the work of the ministry. During the administration of Governor Pollock he was a messenger in the State Department, and there was a warm personal attachment between them, which lasted until Elder McFadden's death. While a resident of Lancaster County, he was for a year an active agent of the Bible Society. He died Jan. 30, 1874, and his remains lie near those of his former friend and associate, Rev. John Winebrenner, in the Harrisburg Cemetery. The Rev. Mr. McFadden was wonderfully gifted with the power of song, and the recollection of his clear, melodious voice is still fresh in the memory of many. His preaching was plain, practical, close, and searching. As a natural orator he had few superiors, and as a great revivalist who could appeal to the hearts of his hearers, and by his unstudied eloquence get them into sympathy with himself, he had few equals.

WILLIAM MACLAY.

William Maclay, son of Charles Maclay and Eleanor Query, was born July 20, 1737, in New Garden township, Chester Co., Pa. In 1742 his father removed to now Lurgan township, Franklin County, where his boyhood days were spent upon the paternal farm. When the French and Indian war broke out he was at Rev. John Blair's classical school in Chester County, and desiring to enter the service of the Province his tutor gave him a recommendation "as a judicious young man and a scholar," which secured him the appointment of ensign in the Pennsylvania Battalion. He was promoted lieutenant in the Third Battalion, Lieut.-Col. Hugh Mercer, May 7, 1758; accompanied Gen. Forbes' expedition that year, and especially distinguished himself at the battle of Loyalhanna. In Bouquet's expedition of 1763, he was in the fight of Bushy Run, while in the subsequent campaign of that gallant officer he was stationed with the greater portion of the Second Pennsylvania on the line of the stockade forts on the route to Fort Pitt as lieutenant commanding the company. For these services he participated in the Provincial grant of land to the officers connected therewith, located on the West Branch of the Susquehanna, and most of which he assisted in surveying. He studied law and was admitted to the York County bar April 28, 1760, but it is doubtful if he ever practiced his profession at that court, the continued Indian war, and his subsequent duties as surveyor, engrossing his entire time, although from a letter of John Penn's it would seem that he was afterwards admitted to the Cumberland County bar, and had acted for the prothonotary of that county. At the close of the French and Indian war he visited England, and had an interview with Thomas Penn, one of the Proprietaries, relative to the surveys in the middle and northern parts of the Province, and was the assistant of Surveyor Lukens on the frontiers.

In 1772 he laid out the town of Sunbury, and erected for himself a stone house, which was standing a few years since. Upon the organization of the county of Northumberland he was appointed prothonotary and clerk of the courts. He also acted as the representative of the Penn family, and took a prominent part in the so-called Pennamite war. In writing to the Secretary of the Province in April, 1773, he says, "If hell is justly considered as the rendezvous of rascals, we cannot entertain a doubt of Wioming being the place;" but much as he was prejudiced against the Connecticut settlers he foresees the future value of the land in that valley, and advises Penn not to sell his reservation there.

At the outset of the Revolution, although an officer of the Proprietary government, William Maclay took a prominent and active part in favor of independence, not only assisting in equipping and forwarding troops to the Continental army, but marched with the associators participating in the battles of Trenton and Princeton. During the Revolution he held the position of assistant commissary of purchases. In 1781 he was elected to the Assembly, and from that time forward he filled the various offices of member of the Supreme Executive Council, judge of the Courts of Common Pleas, deputy surveyor, and one of the commissioners for carrying into effect the act respecting the navigation of the Susquehanna River. About this period he visited England in the interest of the Penn family.

In January, 1789, he was elected to the United States Senate, taking his seat there as the first senator from Pennsylvania. He drew the short term, and his position terminated March 3, 1791, his colleague, Robert Morris, securing the long term. His election to this body raised him upon a higher plane of political activity, but contact with the Federal chiefs of the Senate only strengthened his political convictions, which, formed by long intercourse with the people of Middle Pennsylvania, were intensely Democratic. He began to differ with the opinions of President Washington very early in the session; he did not approve of the state and ceremony attendant upon the intercourse of the President with Congress, he flatly objected to the presence of the President in the Senate while business was being transacted, and in the Senate boldly spoke against his policy in the immediate presence of President Washington.

The New England historians, Hildreth and Goodrich, repute Thomas Jefferson as the "efficient promoter at the beginning and father and founder of the Democratic party." Contemporary records, however, show beyond the shadow of a doubt that this responsibility or honor, in whatever light it may be regarded, cannot be shifted from the shoulders or taken from the laurels of Pennsylvania statesmanship. Before Mr. Jefferson's return from Europe, William Maclay assumed an independent position, and in his short career of two years in the Senate propounded ideas and gathered about him elements to form the opposition which developed with the meeting of Congress at Philadelphia on the 24th of October, 1791, in a division of the people into two great parties, the Federalists and Democrats, when, for the first time, appeared an open and organized opposition to the administration.

The funding of the public debt, chartering the United States Bank, and other measures championed necessarily by the administration, whose duty it was to put the wheels of government in motion, engendered opposition. Mr. Maclay, to use his own language, "no one else presenting himself," fearlessly took the initiative, and with his blunt common sense (for he was not much of a speaker) and Democratic ideas took issue with the ablest advocate of the administration.

Notwithstanding the prestige of Gen. Washington, and the ability of the defenders of the administration on the floor of the Senate, such was the tact and resolution of Mr. Maclay that when, after his short service, he was retired the Senate and succeeded by James Ross, a pronounced Federalist, their impress was left in the distinctive lines of an opposition party, a party which, taking advantage of the warm feeling of our people towards the French upon the occasion of Jay's treaty with Great Britain in 1794, and of the unpopularity of the alien and sedition laws passed under the administration of President John Adams, in 1798, compassed the final overthrow of the Federal party in 1800.

While in the Senate Mr. Maclay preserved notes of its discussions both in open and secret sessions, with observations upon the social customs of the first statesmen of the republic, which have recently been published and edited by George Washington Harris. Upon his retirement, he resided permanently on his farm adjoining Harrisburg, where he erected the stone mansion for many years occupied by the Harrisburg Academy. In the year 1795 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and again elected in 1803. He was a Presidential elector in 1796, and from 1801 to 1803 one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin. He died at Harrisburg on the 16th of April, 1804, in the sixty-seventh year of his age, and was interred in old Paxtang Church graveyard. Mr. Harris, who edited his journal, gives us this summary of Mr. Maclay's character: "He was a man of strict integrity, of positive opinions, having implicit confidence in his own honesty and judgment, he was inclined to be suspicious of the integrity of others, whose sentiments or action in matters of importance differed from his own, and the journal to which reference has been made is evidence of the strength of his intellect." "In personal appearance Mr. Maclay is said to have been six feet three inches in height, and stout and muscular. His complexion was light, and his hair in middle age appears to have been brown and was worn tied behind or clubbed."

Mr. Maclay married, about 1769, Mary Harris, eldest daughter of John Harris, the founder of Harrisburg, and his wife Elizabeth McClure.

MORDECAI MCKINNEY.

Mordecai McKinney, son of Mordecai McKinney and Mary Chambers, daughter of Col. William Chambers, was born near Carlisle, Cumberland Co., Pa., in 1796. He was educated at Dickinson College, where he graduated quite young. He studied law under Judge Duncan, of Carlisle, completing his instruction at Harrisburg, being admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the May term, 1817. In 1821 he was appointed district attorney of Union County, serving three years. In 1824 he was chosen clerk to the county commissioners of Dauphin County, and Oct. 23, 1827, Governor Shulze appointed him one of the associate judges of the same county. Subsequently Judge McKinney turned his attention to the compilation of law books, and published "McKinney's Digest," "Our Government," "Pennsylvania Tax Laws," and other works of professional value. He died at Harrisburg on the 17th day of December, 1867, the result of injuries received from a street car three days previous. Mr. McKinney married Rachel Graydon, daughter of William Graydon, who died at Harrisburg April 12, 1856. The Rev. Dr. Robinson so accurately summarizes the characteristics of Judge McKinney's noble life that we cannot refrain from quoting him largely: "His life as a man and a citizen was completely transfused by his religion, sanctified and elevated by it. He was modest and unobtrusive in manners, free from all guile, a man of sterling honesty and conscientiousness. He was remarkably free from all taint of selfishness and all pride. Spending all his years in comparative poverty, no more contented, happy, and trusting man walked the streets of this city. As a citizen he was faithful to all obligations, a friend of all that was venerable and good, a defender of law, and a supporter of all that tended to the welfare of society. He was distinguished as a philanthropist. There was a nobleness about his loyalty to principle, to the cause of the poor, the oppressed, and the despised that might well command universal admiration."

REV. PIERCE MAHER.

Pierce Maher was a native of Ireland, born about 1813, and was educated at Maynooth College, where he graduated. He came to this country in 1836, and shortly after began the study of theology in Philadelphia, and subsequently appointed pastor of St. Patrick's Church, Harrisburg. Until the establishment of the bishopric of Harrisburg, for a period of thirty-two years, the Rev. Maher was the beloved and revered pastor of that church, and the writer of this sketch holds in his affection and memory the most pleasing recollection and warm friendship of that pious and devoted minister of the gospel of Christ. From Harrisburg he went to Norristown, where he remained until his death, which occurred on the 28th of December, 1873, at the age of sixty. Father Maher was a gentleman of extensive classical attainments, and had the reputation of being an earnest and faithful preacher and priest.

JOHN MEETCH.

John Meetch, the son of an Irish magistrate, was born in Enniskillen, county of Fermanagh, Ireland, in 1724. He received a good education. Marrying in opposition to his father, he came, with his wife, to America about 1752, landing at New York. From thence they went to the head-waters of the Susquehanna, finally passing down that river, locating on the north side of Peter's Mountain, thus being one of the early pioneers of that locality. In 1756 his family was driven off by the Indians, but returned when the settlers had organized for their own defense. In the French and Indian war Mr. Meetch took up arms in aid of the frontiers, and when the storm of the Revolution burst upon the country he was an active participant, being in Capt. John Reed's company during the Jersey campaign of 1776-77. Mr. Meetch died at his residence in 1794, his wife surviving him only a few years. They had five children who reached maturity,—Nancy, married John Cavet, went to Knoxville, Tenn., where she died at the age of ninety; Mary, married — Brown, removed to Westmoreland County; Rebecca, married — Dunlap, settled in Erie County; Elizabeth, married Robert Lyon, removed to Northumberland County; and John, who married, and remained on the homestead.

WILLIAM H. MILLER.

William Henry Miller was born in Landisburg, Perry Co., Pa., Feb. 28, 1829, and died in Harrisburg Sept. 12, 1870. His father, Hon. Jesse Miller, was one of the purest and wisest public men who has ever helped to make for Pennsylvania an honest history. He held many stations of high trust, filled them with diligence and ability, and came out of them all with spotless hands. He was member of Congress during Gen. Jackson's administration, first auditor of the United States treasury under President Van Buren, and he was appointed Secretary of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania under Governor Francis R. Shunk, at which time he removed from Washington, D. C., to Harrisburg, where he died in the month of August, 1850. William H. Miller's early life was characterized by an eagerness and thirst for knowledge, bright intellect, with all of that exquisite disposition to oblige, that benevolence in small things, which has been defined as the highest politeness, which made him in after-years the most charming and winning of companions. There was no taint of deceit in his composition, and he made friends as his days lengthened. He was graduated at Franklin and Marshall College, read law with Hermanus Alricks, an eminent member of the profession in Harrisburg, and was admitted to practice Nov. 18, 1846. Upon his appointment as prothonotary of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, in 1854, he took up his residence in Harrisburg, and served with ability in that capacity until 1863. He was for one term clerk of the State Senate, and for a number of years connected with the Harrisburg Patriot. In 1862 his popularity was evinced by his election to the Thirty-eighth Congress of the United States by the people of his district, in the face of a heavy party majority, where he served with high reputation. He died in his forty-second year, in the prime of a busy and useful life. In every position he performed his duty with zeal, faithfulness, and ability. He was a vigorous writer, a judicious counselor, and a fearless and eloquent advocate. The wronged and oppressed all found a defender in William H. Miller. He never stopped to calculate the consequences or count the fee when the humble and the weak appealed to him for counsel and assistance against powerful injustice. His views of the duties of a public man were pure and elevated, and he faithfully carried them out in practice. His scorn of the corrupt arts which prevail in modern legislation was intense and uncompromising, and his friendship warm and sincere. Every appeal to his bounty met a hearty response. Mr. Miller was one truly loved by his fellow-men. The rich sought his society, the poor his counsel and advice in their day of trouble, and they never appealed in vain.

He married Ellen, the eldest daughter of the late Christopher L. Ward, of Towanda, Pa., who, with one son, Jesse Miller, survives him. His father was born in Susquehanna County, Pa., in 1807, where his father was a pioneer settler, was a prominent lawyer, editor, and wealthy and influential citizen. He resided most of his life at Towanda, and a writer said of him, after his death, in 1870, "The summary of his virtues may be set down,—an industrious spirit, a ceaseless energy, a sound judgment, a generous hand, a liberal mind, and a most tender heart." He possessed the largest and most valuable private library in the State, comprising some fifteen thousand volumes, which has been, since his death, donated, by Mrs. Miller, to Lafayette College.

ANDREW MITCHEL.

Andrew Mitchel, a native of Dublin, Ireland, born Nov. 1, 1754, emigrated to America in 1774, on the eve of the Revolution. Espousing the cause of the colonies, he took position as an officer among the defenders of his adopted country. He was a gentleman of finished education and excellent moral training,—having been destined for a clerical life,—adopted teaching as an avocation, and in the dearth of preceptors after the peace of 1783, had gratifying success as an educator. He came to Harrisburg in 1791, and in June, 1795, married Margaret, the widow of Capt. John Hamilton. He was one of the burgesses of the borough in 1799, and served a number of years in the Town Council. Mr. Mitchel was an officer and early member of the Presbyterian Church, and greatly assisted in its first organization. He died Dec. 21, 1825, at his residence on Front Street, now Mrs. Dr. Rutherford's. His daughter, Jane Alexander, wife of Dr. Thomas Whiteside, was the only child who survived him.

REV. ANDREW D. MITCHELL.

Andrew Dinsmore Mitchell was born in York County, Pa., Feb. 2, 1824, and there he passed his early life. He graduated at Jefferson College in 1841, and afterwards spent some time in teaching. In 1844 he matriculated at Princeton Theological Seminary, where he prepared for the ministry. He came under the care of the Carlisle Presbytery in 1849 as a licentiate from the Donegal Presbytery, and at the same time calls were placed in his hands from the united charge of Paxtang and Derry. These he accepted, and in 1850 was ordained and installed pastor of that people, whom he acceptably served until 1874, when at his own request the pastoral relation was dissolved. Subsequently he declined certain positions that were in his offer, but in 1876 he accepted the appointment of post chaplain in the United States army by his friend, the Hon. J. D. Cameron, then Secretary of War. He spent five years at the military prison of Fort Leavenworth, Kan., and was transferred in the fall of 1881 to Fort Grant, Arizona, where he died on the 26th of March, 1882, aged fifty-eight years. Mr. Mitchell had also been the very acceptable stated clerk of the Carlisle Presbytery from 1857 to the year of his appointment as chaplain, 1876, when he resigned, and received the special commendation of the Presbytery for his very faithful services. He had been repeatedly sent by his Presbytery as a commissioner to the General Assembly, and in 1868 he was elected moderator of the Baltimore Synod, when the Carlisle Presbytery formed a part of that body. As a preacher he was clear, logical, and instructive, and as a presbyter regular in his attendance and eminently useful. He was very decided in his convictions, both theological and political; he was no less tolerant of the opinions of others, and was a warm friend of the union between the two branches of the Presbyterian Church. Mr. Mitchell married a daughter of Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling, of Middletown, Pa.

CHARLES MOWRY.

Charles Mowry was born in Litchfield, Providence Co., R. I., in 1777. He received a classical education, and came to Pennsylvania about 1800, and engaged in teaching. In 1808 he began the publication of the Temperate Zone, at Downingtown, Chester Co. This was subsequently changed to the American Republican, and Mr. Mowry continued its publication until 1821, when he came to Harrisburg in the interest of William Findlay, who was a candidate for Governor of Pennsylvania for a second term, and became editor of the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, previously the Harrisburg Republican. This paper he eventually disposed of to Gen. Simon Cameron, who had been associated with him as copartner in its management, in order that he might assume the duties of canal commissioner, to which he had been appointed by Governor Shulze. During his career as editor he acquired considerable celebrity as a political writer, and exercised a marked influence upon the policy of his party. He died at Harrisburg July 29, 1838. He married, March 31, 1812, Mary Richmond, daughter of George Richmond, of Sadsbury township, Chester Co. She died March 28, 1862, aged seventy-six years. They had six children,—three sons, since deceased, and three daughters,—Mary, married Samuel D. Young, and is a widow; Susan, married Hon. David Fleming; and Jane, unmarried.

CHARLES EDWARD MUENCH.

Charles Edward Muench, a native of Mettenheim, Wurtemberg, in the Palatinate of Chur Pfalz on the Rhine, Germany, was born Jan. 7, 1769. He was of Huguenot-French descent, his grandfather, Charles Frederick Beauvoir, fleeing France during the religious persecutions, and purchasing the "Muench Hoff," took his surname therefrom. Charles Edward, the younger, was early sent to Heidelberg, where he completed his theological studies. It was just at the commencement of the general war in Europe when, on the occasion of his home being invaded by the French army, he received and accepted a commission as captain of a company of hussars in the allied armies, in which service he was severely wounded by a pistol-ball in the leg, and a sabre cut on the left hand. He commanded the guard that conducted Lafayette to the prison at Olmutz. On the 8th of July, 1794, he was promoted quartermaster under Sir Francis, of Wiedlungen. On the very day of his promotion he married Margaretha Bieser. In 1798 he came to America, where he taught a German school successively at Shaefferstown, Lebanon Co., and Rehrersburg, Berks Co. In 1804 he removed to Lykens Valley, at the Hoffman Church school property; but discouraged somewhat at the wild appearance of the land, he went to Union County. Subsequently, in 1806, the congregation at Hoffman Church requested his return, when yielding thereto he once more entered upon the duties of his station. For a period of twenty-eight years he was a faithful teacher, and although not the ordained minister, yet very frequently conducted the religious services in Hoffman Church, and officiated on funeral occasions. He was greatly beloved by the people, and his death, which occurred on the 8th of January, 1833, occasioned sorrow in many a household. His beloved wife, Margaretha, died in the following year (1834), and their remains lie interred side by side in the graveyard of old Hoffman Church. The Rev. Muench was exceedingly expert with the pen, had a refined artistic taste as to drawing and designing, and in the ornamentation of books and inlaying of furniture. He was a musician of no ordinary ability, and was an adept in all those essentials characteristic of the home-culture of the Germans of the better class.

CAPT. JAMES MURRAY.

James Murray, son of William Murray, was born in Scotland about 1729. In 1768, James Murray took out a patent for the tract of land on which he resided, located in Upper Paxtang township, and then surveyed to him. In 1775 he was chosen a member of the Committee of Safety for his township, and on the 8th of November of that year took his place in the general committee for Lancaster County. On the 4th of July, 1776, at a military convention representing the fifty-three battalions of the associators, he was present as one of the captains for that county. The roll of his company is given in the Revolutionary history of the county. With John Rodgers and John Harris, on the 8th of July, 1776, by appointment of the Provincial Conference, he superintended the election held at Garber's Mill for the Sixth District of Lancaster County, to make a choice of delegates to the convention that assembled on the 15th of the month, and which framed the first constitution of the State. During that and the following year he was almost in constant active military service with his company. He commanded one of the companies of the Tenth Battalion, Lancaster County militia, and was with the expedition up the West Branch in 1779. The exposures to which Capt. Murray was subjected during the Revolutionary struggle brought on an attack of rheumatism, from which for many years prior to his death he was a constant sufferer. He died at his residence in Upper Paxtang on the 15th of March, 1804, aged seventy-five years. Capt. Murray married Rebecca McLean, a native of Scotland.

CAPT. JOHN MURRAY.

John Murray, son of William Murray, was a native of Scotland, born about 1731. In 1766 he took up a tract of land lying on the Susquehanna, immediately above his brother James' farm, which adjoined the present town of Dauphin. He commanded a rifle company, which in March, 1776, was attached to Col. Samuel Miles' battalion, and participated in the battles of Long Island, White Plains, Trenton, and Princeton. He was promoted to major April 18, 1777, and lieutenant-colonel of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment in 1780, serving until the disbanding of the army in 1783. He then returned to his family and farm. Governor Mifflin appointed him a justice of the peace Aug. 29, 1791, the only political office he ever held. He was an ardent Whig of the Revolution, and a brave officer. He died on the 3d of February, 1798, in his sixty-eighth year, and his remains rest in the cemetery near the borough of Dauphin. Col. Murray married, 29th of December, 1762, Margaret, daughter of Andrew and Rebecca Mayes. She died June 22, 1807, aged seventy-four years. They are both buried in the old cemetery at Dauphin.

ANTOINE NININGER.

Antoine Nininger was born in 1787, in the Province of Alsace, France. He entered the French army under Joseph Bonaparte, was taken prisoner and confined at Gibraltar six months, subsequently removed to Canada, from whence he made his escape. He came to Harrisburg about 1815, became a dealer in cattle, which business he carried on for twenty-five years, when he retired from active business. He died Aug. 22, 1866, at Harrisburg, aged seventy-nine years. Mr. Nininger was highly respected by his fellow-citizens for his uprightness of character and his integrity. He married, in 1820, Catharine May (born 1800 in the city of Philadelphia; died 1833 at Harrisburg), daughter of Bernhard and Agnes May, natives of Amsterdam, Holland. They had issue: William, John (married Catharine Kelker Ramsey), Agnes (married, first, Col. William Sanders, second, Joseph Kemp), James, Catharine, Bernhard, Antoine, Mary Jane, and Eliza, of whom Agnes alone survives.

HENRY ORTH.

Henry Orth, only son of Adam Orth and Catharine Kucher, was born in 1770 at Lebanon, Pa. He received a good English education, and was brought up in the iron business. At the death of his father he became the owner of New Market Forge, but being elected sheriff of the county of Dauphin, commissioned Oct. 17, 1797, like the vast majority who have followed him in that office, he became financially shipwrecked. In 1801 he was elected State senator, serving until 1804, when he positively declined further continuance in office. Governor Snyder appointed him flour inspector of the port of Philadelphia in January, 1809, but he resigned this office in April following, when he entered mercantile pursuits in Philadelphia. He remained in that city until the close of the late war with England, when he removed to Baltimore, and had there established a successful business as a merchant, when he suddenly died in 1816, at the age of forty-six. Mr. Orth married, in 1797, Rebecca Rahm (born November 22, 1773; died Dec. 31, 1842, at Harrisburg), daughter of Michael Rahm, of Derry, and left issue.

ADAM H. ORTH.

Adam Henry Orth, eldest son of Henry Orth and Rebecca Rahm, was born at Harrisburg in 1798. He studied law, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at the November term, 1822. He held the office of district attorney for Dauphin County in 1827 and 1828, and for several years, in addition to the duties of his profession, he was transcribing clerk of the House of Representatives. He died in Harrisburg on the 15th of October, 1833. He married, May 3, 1832, Elizabeth, daughter of John B. Cox, of Estherton, who survived her husband several years. Mr. Orth was a promising lawyer, a faithful officer, and was a gentleman refined and courteous.

EDWARD L. ORTH, M.D.

Edward Lawrence Orth, youngest son of Henry Orth and Rebecca Rahm, was born in 1813, at Baltimore, Md. His father dying while the son was in early life, the mother removed to her former home, Harrisburg, where the boy was carefully brought up. He received the education of the borough schools, and entered the Harrisburg Academy, where he pursued the higher branches. He subsequently began the study of medicine with his brother-in-law, Dr. Luther Reily, afterwards attending the lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution he graduated March 12, 1834. Locating at Harrisburg, he began the practice of his profession in partnership with Dr. Reily, which continued until the death of the latter. Few practitioners became as successful as these noted physicians were, and none at the capital were ever so deservedly popular. For seven years after the death of his lifelong friend, Dr. Orth continued his professional life, enjoying not only a large practice, but the confidence and love of his numerous patients. He died at Harrisburg on the 15th of April, 1861, in his forty-seventh year. As a physician, Dr. Orth was learned, skillful, self-sacrificing, sympathetic, and faithful. In the community he was greatly beloved for his unassuming, gentle, and gentlemanly demeanor. In the language of a contemporary, "he was a man of fine culture, a careful, attentive, and conscientious physician, quiet and unobtrusive in manner." For many years he was one of the trustees of the Presbyterian Church, was a director of the Harrisburg Bank, and served in the Borough Council. Dr. Orth married Martha Kerr, daughter of the Rev. William Kerr, of Donegal, and their children are Mary (married Jacob F. Seiler), Dr. Henry L. (a prominent surgeon of Harrisburg), and J. Wilson, of Pittsburgh.

WILLIAM PATTON, M.D.

William Patton, son of Thomas Patton and Eleanor Fleming, was born in 1775 in Derry township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received a good education, studied medicine under the elder Dr. William Simonton, and graduated at the University of Pennsylvania. He located at Hummelstown, and was in successful practice there at his death, which occurred the 30th of March, 1816. Dr. Patton married, March 24, 1808, Eleanor Kean, daughter of Gen. John Kean, of Harrisburg. After his decease she married Christian Spayd, of Hummelstown.

JAMES PEACOCK.

James Peacock, the eldest son of William Peacock and Mary McArthur, of Scotch-Irish ancestry, was born in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa., April 8, 1788. His education was in a great measure due to his mother's care and tuition, with self-application in after-years. At the age of fifteen he began to learn the printing business with Mr. Edward Cole, of Lewistown, where he remained until 1807, when he went to Lancaster to work on the Intelligencer. In 1809 he was employed by the celebrated John Binns, of Philadelphia, on book work, and subsequently by Mr. Dinnie on the Portfolio. While in the latter establishment he became intimate with quite a number of the litterati of that period, and concerning whom he has left some interesting "Reminiscences." In 1811, Mr. Peacock returned to Lancaster, and from thence came to Harrisburg, where, in December of that year, he started the Pennsylvania Republican, which he continued to publish for about eight or nine years, in the mean time being one of the printers to the Senate and House. In December, 1821, he was employed as an assistant clerk of the Senate, and in March, 1822, received the appointment of postmaster at Harrisburg in place of Mrs. Wright, who had recently deceased, an office he held under different national administrations until the 15th of November, 1846. In December, 1847, he removed to Philadelphia, where he became identified with the publication of the Evening Bulletin, The Sun, and Neal's Saturday Gazette, which he managed with all the tact and skill of his early years, relinquishing his labors only a brief time prior to his death. He died in the city of Philadelphia on the 23d of August, 1863, and is interred in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Mr. Peacock was twice married,—first, to Frances C., daughter of Matthias Slough and Mary Gibson, of Lancaster, who died Oct. 27, 1837; and, secondly, to Mrs. Louisa V. Sims, of Mount Holly, N. J., who died in 1869. Mr. Peacock was ever held in high esteem by the citizens of Harrisburg, whether as journalist, or his occupancy of the post-office for a quarter of a century. He always took an active part in public affairs, and was largely instrumental in organizing St. Stephen's Episcopal Church, in which there has been erected a tablet to his memory. He was a gentleman of dignified manners, of refined culture, and a sincere Christian.

HENRY PEPPER.

Henry Pepper, son of George Pepper and Susanna Bader, was born in the year 1789 in Paxtang. He received a fair education, turned his attention to book-keeping, and followed clerking for many years. In 1814 he was an officer in one of the companies of volunteers which marched to the defense of the beleaguered city of Baltimore. He was clerk to the county commissioners, and from 1848 to 1850 served as a member of that body. For many years he was an inspector of the Dauphin County prison, the secretary of the board, and an efficient officer. He was an alderman of the Second Ward of the city of Harrisburg at the time of his death, which occurred on the 9th of February, 1867, at the age of seventy-eight years. He was interred in old Paxtang Church graveyard. Mr. Pepper married late in life, and had no children.

GEN. ANDREW PORTER.¹

Robert Porter emigrated to America from Ireland in the year 1720. He came from what is known as the Isle of Bert, which is distant about nine miles from the city of Londonderry. He landed at Londonderry, New Hampshire, and soon afterwards purchased and settled on a farm in what is now Worcester township, Montgomery Co., Pa., about four miles distant from Norristown. He occupied this farm until the day of his death, which took place on the 14th of July, 1770, in the seventy-second year of his age. The records of the church show that in 1741 he was an elder of the Norristown Presbyterian Church. He reared a large family,—nine sons and five daughters. Some of his sons moved westward and southward. Those who stayed and those who went became generally farmers or tradesmen. The most successful and prominent of his sons was Andrew, born on his father's farm on the 24th of September, 1748. He seems to have shown a taste for reading the few books he could procure. At the age of eighteen or nineteen his father had determined on his learning the trade of a carpenter with an elder brother; but, after a few months' trial, he was declared to be too fond of books and of figures, and too little disposed to work to be useful as an apprentice. Believing that his aversion to labor and his fondness for books were such that he would never be successful as a farmer or mechanic, the father determined on fitting him for the occupation of a country schoolmaster. The boy was sent for a short time to Mr. Mennon's school, during which he made rapid improvement, especially in mathematics, and then opened a small school in the neighborhood of his father's residence.

In the spring of 1767 he removed to Philadelphia, and took charge of an English and mathematical school, which he conducted with much reputation until the spring of 1776, when, at his country's call, he bade farewell to these peaceful avocations to enter into her service. During his residence in Philadelphia, he had made much progress in his mathematical studies, and had become an accurate astronomer.

On the 19th of June, 1776, he was commissioned by Congress a captain of marines, and ordered on board the frigate "Effingham." At this time his school contained about one hundred scholars, and enabled him to support comfortably a family of five children who had recently lost their mother; but all considerations of family and self seem to have been lost in the cause of his country. Not finding among the marines an opportunity of rendering the service he desired, he was shortly after transferred to the artillery; a corps in which, from his previous studies, he was qualified to be more useful. He continued to serve as a captain of artillery until the 13th of March, 1782, when he was promoted to a majority, to rank as such from the 19th of April, 1781. He was subsequently promoted successively to the ranks of lieutenant-colonel, lieutenant-colonel commandant, and colonel of the Fourth (or Pennsylvania) Regiment of Artillery, which latter station he held at the disbanding of the army.

While in the army he was personally engaged in the cannonade at Trenton, and in the battles of Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown. In the last-mentioned action nearly all of his company were killed or taken prisoners, and in the first, he received on the field in person the commendation of General Washington for his conduct in the action. In the month of April, 1779, he was detached with his company to join General James Clinton's brigade in the operations under Gen. Sullivan against the Indians.

When the siege of Yorktown was determined on, Col. Porter was ordered to proceed to Philadelphia, and superintend the laboratory at which the various kinds of ammunition for that siege were prepared.

The grand object for which the American patriots had taken up arms having been accomplished by the peace of 1783, and the army having been disbanded, Col. Porter retired to private life, and to the cultivation of his farm. While thus employed, he performed for many of his neighbors the offices of executor, trustee, and guardian, and the papers and documents which yet remain show that he discharged these trusts with such exactness and fidelity that his acts passed without a question.

The trustees of the University of Pennsylvania tendered to him the Professorship of Mathematics in that institution, which he declined. He was subsequently appointed by the Supreme Executive Council of the State one of the commissioners for running, by astronomical observations, the lines between Pennsylvania and Virginia, and Pennsylvania and what is now Ohio. In this business he was engaged during the years 1784, 1785, 1786, and 1787. He shortly after retired to his farm in Norristown township, Montgomery Co., within a few miles of the place of his nativity, on which he continued to reside until the spring of 1809. In the year 1800 he was appointed, in conjunction with Gens. Irvine and Boude, to settle the controversies of the Pennsylvania claimants in the seventeen townships in the county of Luzerne, but resigned the situation in the next spring. In the same year he was appointed brigadier-general of the First Brigade, Second Division of Pennsylvania militia, and shortly after, on the removal of Gen. Peter Muhlenberg to Philadelphia, he was made major-general of the division.

In the month of April, 1809, Governor Snyder selected him to fill the office of Surveyor-General of Pennsylvania, which situation he held until his decease. He found the office in much disorder, remedied it, and brought order and system out of confusion.

During the years 1812 and 1813 he declined the positions of brigadier-general in the army, and Secretary of War of the United States, both of which were offered to him by President Madison, believing that his advanced age would prevent the execution of the duties of either situation with that efficiency which the public good and his own reputation required.

Andrew Porter was twice married, first, to Elizabeth McDowell, on the 10th of March, 1767, and after her death (which took place on the 9th of April, 1773), to Elizabeth Parker, on the 20th of May, 1777.

By his first marriage Gen. Porter had issue :

i. Robert, b. 10th of January, 1768; served in the latter part of the war of the Revolution as a lieutenant in an artillery company; was admitted to the bar on the 15th of May, 1789, and practiced law in Philadelphia successfully for many years; was appointed by Governor Snyder president judge of the Third Judicial District, composed of the counties of Berks, Lehigh, and Northampton; discharged the duties of this office for many years, and then resigned his commission and retired to private life; died at Brookville, Pa., on the 23d of June, 1842.

ii. Elizabeth, b. 27th of September, 1769. She married Robert Parker in 1790, and settled at Lexington, Ky., where she died in 1851. Her husband died in March, 1800.

iii. Mary, b. 12th of March, 1771. She married her cousin, Robert Porter, and settled in Kentucky, where she became the mother of four children,—Eliza, Andrew, Benjamin, and Caroline.

iv. and v. Andrew and William, twins, b. 9th of April, 1773. They both became merchants, Andrew, in New Orleans, where he died on the 11th of October, 1805, and William, in Baltimore, where he died on the 16th of November, 1835.

Gen. Porter by his second wife had,—

vi. Charlotte, b. 1st of February, 1778. She became the wife of Robert Brooke, Esq., of Philadelphia, and the mother of five sons and three daughters.

vii. Anna Maria, b. Jan. 1, 1781; d. in April, 1781.

viii. Alexander Parker, b. May 8, 1782; d. in August, 1782.

ix. John Ewing, b. May 11, 1784; studied the law in Philadelphia, in the office of his brother, Robert, and entered on the practice of his profession in April, 1805, in the counties of Chester and Montgomery. His fine appearance and address soon gave him a good position at the bar. Having entered into a matrimonial engagement, which was broken in a way that incurred the censure of his father, the father wrote sharply, and the son resented the interference deeply. The latter immediately changed his name to that of Parker (his mother's maiden name), and took a resolution, which he sternly kept, not to see his father again. He journeyed on horseback southward, and, arriving in North Carolina, changed his profession, and, after studying that of medicine, became a successful and useful physician. His death took place at Plymouth, in that State, on the 14th of November, 1819. He died unmarried.

x. Harriet, b. 19th of October, 1786. She became the second wife of Col. Thomas McKeen, for many years the president of the Easton Bank.

xi. David Rittenhouse, b. 31st of October, 1788.

xii. George Bryan, b. Feb. 9, 1791; having graduated at the law school at Litchfield, Conn., then enjoying a national reputation, he settled in Lancaster, Pa., and subsequently represented that county in the Legislature. In 1832, President Jackson appointed him Governor of the then Territory of Michigan, and having held that office for about two years, he died on the 18th of July, 1834. Andrew, the second son of George B. Porter, entered the army on the breaking out of the Mexican war. He became first lieutenant of a company of riflemen, and took part in the battles of Vera Cruz, Cerro Gordo, Contreras, Churubusco, and Chapultepec. After the city of Mexico had been taken he was made lieutenant-colonel by brevet for gallant meritorious conduct. In 1850, Gen. Scott spoke of him to the writer in terms of high praise for the part he had taken in these several battles. During the late civil war Col. Porter was appointed provost-marshal of Washington, and then provost-marshal-general of the Army of the Potomac. He took part in the battles of Yorktown, Williamsburg, Chickahominy, and the Seven Days' Battle under McClellan, in which some of the hardest fighting of the war was done. He had now risen to the rank of brigadier-general, but his health having become impaired by fatigue and exposure, he resigned his position in the army, and died in Europe, whither he had gone for the restoration of his health.

xiii. James Madison, b. Jan. 6, 1793; having been admitted to the bar on the 24th of April, 1813, he settled permanently in Easton in 1818, and for more than forty years practiced his profession as a lawyer throughout the eastern portion of Pennsylvania with eminent success. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention of 1838, and, having been proposed as president of that body, was defeated by the election of Hon. John Sergeant by a majority of one vote, but subsequently presided over the convention during Mr. Sergeant's absence as a member of Congress. He afterwards became president judge of the district composed of the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill, and while holding that office was appointed by President Tyler Secretary of War. On retiring from this position he resumed the practice of his profession, and was afterwards elected judge of the district which lies at the extreme north-eastern portion of the State. He resigned this office from ill health, and died at his home in Easton on the 11th of November, 1862. Andrew Parker, the second son of James M. Porter, having been educated at West Point, entered the cavalry service, and was first employed as a lieutenant during the Indian hostilities in the West. He subsequently became a captain in the commissary department. After the breaking out of the Rebellion he was appointed assistant commissary-general of the Army of the Potomac, under McClellan. Gen. Thomas, on being promoted to the command of the Army of the Southwest, solicited his appointment as commissary-general in that army, which was accordingly made. His death took place soon after the close of the war.

Gen. Andrew Porter died at Harrisburg on the 16th of November, 1813.

GOVERNOR DAVID R. PORTER.

David Rittenhouse Porter, the son of Andrew Porter and Elizabeth Parker, was born Oct. 31, 1788, near Norristown, Montgomery Co., Pa. He received his early education at an academy in Norristown, where the branches of a good English education, mathematics, and the elementary classical studies were successfully taught. With his brothers George and James he was here pursuing a course preparatory to entering Princeton College, when the buildings of that institution were destroyed by fire, and the purpose of a collegiate course was abandoned. When the father was appointed surveyor-general he took his son, David, with him to the seat of government as his assistant. While thus employed the son also studied law, with the intention of entering upon its practice at Harrisburg, but the labor and confinement of these double duties were too severe, and his health was so much impaired, as was thought, to preclude the possibility of his pursuing any sedentary employment. He decided, therefore, to seek more active occupation, and removed to the county of Huntingdon, where he engaged in the manufacture of iron.

The Messrs. Dorsey then owned that magnificent estate known as the Barree Forges. Mr. Porter was first employed by them for a year as a clerk, and during the following year was made manager of their works. Having thus acquired an acquaintance with the business, he embarked in it on his own account, in partnership with Edward Patton, on Spruce Creek, but so great was the depression into which all branches of manufactures fell for some years succeeding the War of 1812 that their enterprise was not successful. He continued, however, through life to take a deep interest in all that related to the business.

He was in 1819 elected a member of the Assembly from Huntingdon County, and was returned for the following year, having as a colleague John Scott, father of the present senator of the United States.

On retiring from the Legislature he was appointed by the Governor prothonotary and clerk of the several courts of Huntingdon County, and to these were afterwards added the offices of recorder of deeds and register of wills. There was then little business in these offices, and the pecuniary returns were meagre. He had in 1820 married Josephine, daughter of William McDermott, who had emigrated from Scotland for the purpose of manufacturing steel by a new process, and who was one of the pioneers in that art.

In 1836 he was elected a member of the State Senate from the district then composed of the counties of Huntingdon, Mifflin, Juniata, Perry, and Union. The soundness of his judgment and the readiness of his understanding made him an acknowledged leader.

In 1838, Mr. Porter was elected Governor of Pennsylvania, and in 1841 was re-elected by a majority almost four times as great as that given at his first election. His inauguration as Governor occurred on the 15th of January, 1839.

Governor Porter took much interest in the success of the system of common schools, then in its infancy, and having appointed Francis R. Shunk superintendent, devoted with him much time in resolving the numerous and difficult questions which then came up from the county officers for decision.

His efforts to sustain the credit of the State and to secure the payment of interest on the public debt drew upon him national attention, and were frequently noticed in Europe, where many of the obligations of the State were held. By his recommendation the act of 1840 was passed, requiring the interest on the State debt to be paid in specie or its equivalent. One of his last acts as Governor was the suppression of the riots which occurred in Philadelphia in 1844, and the courage and decision displayed on his taking command of the military in person were generally commended and long remembered by men of all parties. Both branches of the City Council, then opposed to his administration, honored him with an expression of their thanks, and a resolution unanimously passed by those bodies was presented to him in person, accompanied with an address by the mayor of the city.

Having completed, in 1845, the longest term as Governor allowed by the new Constitution, he retired from public life and returned to his favorite pursuit of making iron. The adaptation of anthracite coal to the manufacture of this metal was then almost unknown, and having given much reflection to the subject and made many practical experiments, he erected at Harrisburg, at a large cost, the first anthracite furnace built in that portion of the State.

He was for many years the friend of the late President Buchanan, and the correspondence which they maintained for a long period shows how frequently that statesman consulted him on questions of national interest and how greatly he relied upon his judgment. There was another public man with whom his intimacy was even closer, Gen. Sam Houston, of Texas, whose career as a military commander, an executive officer, and effective orator is yet fresh in the public recollection, to whom he made a visit just on the eve of the Rebellion.

Governor Porter returned to his home in Harrisburg, and contributed his influence to sustain the government in the fierce conflict which had commenced. He scouted the doctrine of secession. To encourage others he shouldered his musket at the age of more than seventy years, and with the young men of the town joined in military drill. He rejoiced greatly over the success of the Union arms.

During the winter of 1867, while attending at night a meeting of his church, he contracted a severe cold. While others regarded the attack as light, he believed that it would prove fatal, and began to prepare for the approaching change. During the succeeding summer he was able to walk out, but in the beginning of August his strength declined. With great composure and even cheerfulness he arranged several matters of business, and conversed calmly of his approaching end. On the 6th of August, surrounded by several children and a devoted wife, his hands having been folded on his breast, he thanked those about him for their kindness and dutifulness, and composed himself as if to fall asleep. As one and another passage of Scripture was repeated he expressed his assent, until the pulse became still and the aged heart ceased to beat. He had passed away as gently as a child falls to sleep in its mother's arms. The public business was, at the request of the Governor of the commonwealth, generally suspended. Large numbers of citizens came from every section of the State to pay to his memory the last sad tribute of their respect.

STACY POTTS.

Thomas Potts, the ancestor of Stacy Potts, was a Quaker who emigrated from England with his wife and children, in company with Mahlon Stacy and his family, in the ship "Shield," and landed at Burlington, N. J., in the winter of 1678, she being the first ship that went so far up the Delaware. Stacy was a leading man in the Society of Friends and in the government of West Jersey.

At Trenton, in 1731, Stacy Potts was born. He received a good education, and learned the trade of a tanner, a business which he successfully carried on at least up to the time of the Revolution.

Mr. Potts seems to have been a very enterprising and public-spirited citizen. In 1776, besides owning a tannery, he built the steel-works on Front Street, Trenton, and after the close of the Revolution was largely interested in the erection of a paper-mill in the same locality. This was prior to the publication of Collins' Bible. In December, 1788, it was advertised by its proprietors, Stacy Potts and John Reynolds, as "now nearly completed."

Mr. Potts took a warm interest in the invention of John Fitch, and was one of the company formed to assist that famous inventor in his experiments, and he, with others, were instrumental in obtaining for Fitch fourteen years' exclusive privilege on the Jersey side of the Delaware.

About this period Stacy Potts came to Harrisburg. It is difficult to divine what were his motives in leaving his native town where he was very popular, and with his ample competency remove to this then new town on the Susquehanna. His second marriage may perchance have had somewhat to do with his removal from Trenton. Coming to Harrisburg he made large purchases of land, and whether it was due to this fact or his agreeable manner, Stacy Potts became quite prominent, was chosen to the Legislature in 1791 and in 1792. During the mill-dam troubles of 1793-95, Mr. Potts was quite active, and was one of the committee of citizens who were willing to take upon themselves all responsibility accruing by the destruction of the obnoxious dam. He served as Burgess of the borough, and was a member of the Town Council. From 1799 to 1803 he again represented Dauphin County in the Legislature.

Mr. Potts' sudden departure from Harrisburg is really as inexplicable as his coming to it. He seems to have gone to Trenton about 1805.

Stacy Potts subsequently became mayor of Trenton, an office he held for several years. He died in that city April 28, 1816, in his eighty-fifth year.

Mr. Potts was thrice married. We have no knowledge as to his first wife. He married, about 1790, Miss Gardiner, of Philadelphia, a Presbyterian lady of superior intelligence. She died at Harrisburg in 1799. His third wife was Mrs. Mary Boyd, widow of John Boyd, of Harrisburg. She survived her husband many years; died at Harrisburg Sept. 25, 1844, aged eighty-four years. Mrs. Boyd was the daughter of George Williams, and had by her first husband James Rutherford and George Williams Boyd, the ancestors of the Boyd family of Harrisburg. Mr. Potts had issue by his first and second wife. Stacy, Jr., who married Polly, daughter of Leonard Sommers, of Harrisburg, was a lawyer of ability, and died at Philadelphia in 1831, aged fifty-three years; Rebecca, married George Sherman, editor of the Trenton Federalist; Anna, married William Potts, of Trenton; Stacy Gardiner, born at Harrisburg in November, 1799, became one of the justices of the Supreme Court of New Jersey, a position he held some years. He was a gentleman of prominence in public and private life, and died at Trenton in 1865.

JAMES PH. PUGLIA.

James Ph. Puglia came to Harrisburg about the beginning of this century as a physician and druggist, his place of business was on Front above Chestnut Street. He was probably of Spanish descent, and evidently of good education. He was master of Perseverance Lodge, A. Y. M., in the course of his residence; was of a pugnacious temper, being involved in a series of disputes with his lodge; a great Jeffersonian, in which cause his caustic pen overflowed with adjectives; venting himself at last in publishing an opposition to the Oracle of Dauphin, under the fiery title of The Phoenix of Harrisburg; the first, perhaps the only, issue was of Wednesday, Oct. 26, 1803; its motto,—

"I die to be born, my body and name
From ashes arisen shall revive in fame."

"Press work by Thomas Atkinson, printer." He also was author of two or three works, of no great circulation. After residing here some years, we find him "sworn interpreter" to the courts in Philadelphia, from 1812 to 1816, after which he passes beyond our present research.

THOMAS RAMSEY.

Thomas Ramsey was born near York, Pa., on the 15th of June, 1784. With a limited education acquired during his early years, he learned the trade of blacksmithing, at that period an important occupation. About 1806 he located at Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., and there carried on business. In 1814 he was a corporal of Capt. Moorhead's company of the First Regiment, Col. Kennedy, which marched to the defense of Baltimore. Mr. Ramsey died at Hummelstown on the 4th of May, 1826, at the age of forty-two years. He married Elizabeth Kelker, daughter of Henry Kelker and Elizabeth Greenawalt, of Lebanon, born Sept. 8, 1791, and died at Harrisburg 5th of February, 1858. Hon. Alexander Ramsey, former Secretary of War, is their son. Mr. Ramsey was an industrious, enterprising citizen, patriotic, generous, and held in great esteem by his fellow-citizens.

CHARLES C. RAWN.

Charles Coatesworth Rawn, the son of David Rawn and Elizabeth Cheyney, was born in the city of Washington in 1801. His grandparents, Caspar and Barbara Rahn (as the name was originally spelled), were natives of Germany, one of whose daughters, Elizabeth, was the mother of Governor Francis R. Shunk. Mr. Rawn's father dying when Charles was seven years of age, at Staunton, Va., his mother removed her family to her farm in Thornbury, Delaware Co., Pa. He was educated at the West Chester Academy, then in charge of that distinguished principal, Mr. Gause. In 1826 he came to Harrisburg and began the study of law with Francis R. Shunk, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Jan. 18, 1831. He at once commenced his career as a successful pleader, and up to the time of his death was considered one of the leading criminal lawyers at the Dauphin County bar. He was an earnest antagonist of human slavery, and during the days of the Fugitive Slave law was the eloquent pleader in behalf of the poor black. He died at Harrisburg on the 18th of December, 1865. Mr. Rawn married Frances, daughter of Joseph Clendennin and Elizabeth Slough, of Harrisburg, who survives.

THOMAS J. REHRER.

Thomas Jefferson Rehrer, only son of Godfried Rehrer and Eva Leiss, was born Nov. 8, 1797, near Rehrersburg, Berks Co., Pa. His grandfather Godfried Rehrer or Röher settled there at an early day. During the French and Indian war his residence was on the direct road to the frontier settlements. He married Magdalena Etchberger, and their son, Godfried Rehrer, born in 1769, represented Berks County in the Legislature in 1817, 1820, and 1823. Thomas J. received a good education, was brought up to a mercantile life, but subsequently retired to his farm. While engaged in farming he was elected a member of the Legislature, in which he served two terms. At the close of the last session he removed to Harrisburg, having accepted a clerkship in the land-office of the commonwealth. He remained in that department, with the exception of two intervals of three years each, until 1866, filling the position of deputy or chief clerk under the several organizations of the office. His long service there made him unusually familiar with the business, and its bearing on the land interest of the State, together with his faithful attention to the duties, was appreciated and recognized by all who had business to transact in the surveyor-general's office. He died Feb. 28, 1872, at Philadelphia. Mr. Rehrer married Salome Weiser, daughter of John Weiser and Elizabeth Anspach, born Jan. 3, 1799, on the Conrad Weiser farm, about twelve miles west of Reading. She died Oct. 30, 1842, at Harrisburg, and is there buried. Their children were: Clementine M., Clara S. (married Dr. George Dock, of Harrisburg), Miranda E. (married Lewis G. Osbourn, of Philadelphia), and Erasmus Godfrey.

LUTHER REILY, M.D.

Luther Reily, the seventh son of Capt. John Reily of the Revolution and Elizabeth Myers, was born Oct. 7, 1794, at Myerstown, Dauphin (now Lebanon) Co., Pa. On the death of his father he came to Harrisburg, and shortly after began the study of medicine with Dr. Martin Luther. In the War of 1812-14, he marched as a private in Capt. Richard M. Crain's company of volunteers to Baltimore, subsequently being detailed as assistant surgeon. At the close of the war he resumed the practice of medicine at Harrisburg, and subsequently was at the head of the profession there. Although not taking an active part in politics, he was more or less prominent in public affairs. He was elected to and served as member of the Twenty-fifth Congress. Dr. Reily died at Harrisburg on the 20th of February, 1854, deeply lamented by the community, who appreciated him as "the good doctor." His wife Rebecca, daughter of Henry Orth, survived her husband only a few months. Their children were Elizabeth (died unmarried), Emily (married Dr. George W. Porter), John W., Dr. George W., and Caroline.

REV. JOHN ROAN.

John Roan was born in Greenshaw, Ireland, on the 30th of April, 1717 (O. S.). He was brought up as a weaver, but began to study for the ministry early in life, and emigrated to Pennsylvania, sailing from Ireland on the 6th of July, 1739, landing the 3d of September following. He entered the "Log College," and taught school on the Neshaminy and in Chester County while pursuing his theological studies. He was licensed by the "New Side" Presbytery of New Castle, June 27, 1744. The following year (1745) he was settled over the united congregations of Derry, Paxtang, and Conewago, the latter having one-fifth of his time, and was ordained on the 16th of August, that year. The minutes of the Synod placed Roan in Donegal Presbytery, and "points of difficulty," says Webster, "continually arose." Towards the latter days of his ministry Mr. Roan missionated frequently on the south branch of the Potomac. He died on the 3d of October, 1775, and is interred at Derry Church graveyard. On his tombstone is this inscription:

"Beneath this stone | are deposited the Remains | of an able, faithful | courageous & successful | minister of Jesus Christ | The Rev'd John Roan | Pastor of Paxton, Derry & Mount Joy | Congregations | from the year 1745 | till Oct. 3, 1775 | when he exchanged | a Militant for a triumphant Life | in the 59th year of his Age."

The Rev. John Roan married Ann, daughter of James Cochran and Ann Rowan, of Chester County, born in 1722. She died on the 22d of April, 1788, in Upper Octorara, Chester Co.

EDMUND W. ROBERTS, M.D.

Edmund Wilson Roberts, youngest son of John Roberts, was born about 1806, at Washington, Pa. He was a graduate of Yale College. His brother, Dr. James Roberts, born in 1780, at Washington, first located at Harrisburg, subsequently removing to Peoria, Ill., where he died about 1834. While at Harrisburg, his younger brother, Edmund W., came there and studied medicine under his care, subsequently graduating from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania. He afterwards located at Harrisburg, and entered upon a successful career in the practice of his profession. He died at Harrisburg, Nov. 10, 1865, at the age of fifty-eight years. Dr. Roberts married Caroline Ross, daughter of Andrew Ross and Hannah Templin, of Washington City, and a sister of Robert J. Ross, of Harrisburg; she died Jan. 23, 1877, at Newburg, N. Y.; buried at Harrisburg. They had two children, Mary, died in 1867, at Harrisburg, married Rev. B. B. Leacock, D.D., of the Episcopal Church; Dr. Robert Ross, died April 4, 1875, at Harrisburg, at the age of thirty-seven, who rose to eminence in his profession, married — Foote, daughter of Judge Foote, of the State of New York, and they left two children.

COL. JOHN ROBERTS.

John Roberts was born in Roberts' Valley, Dauphin Co., in the year 1789. He received a good English education, and studied law under Thomas Elder, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar at February term, 1812, and commenced the practice of his profession at Harrisburg. He was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, serving during the sessions of 1827 to 1829, and was prothonotary and clerk of the Court of Quarter Sessions from Jan. 29, 1830, to Dec. 30, 1835. Mr. Roberts possessed an inexhaustible fund of legal and other information, but never excelled at the bar; his reputation was that of an elementary lawyer and a safe professional counselor. He was one of the best mathematicians in the country, and a skilled engineer. For many years he was the surveyor for the borough. He was a good musician, and his knowledge of pomology and botany was extensive. His life was a long and useful one. He died at Harrisburg in the month of February, 1873, aged eighty-three years.

REV. JOSEPH ROSS.

Joseph Ross, son of Dr. Joseph and Sophia Ross, was born July 14, 1798, at Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., Pa., where his boyhood was passed. At a proper age he went to Harrisburg to learn the mercantile business. Afterwards he engaged in said occupation in that place, and then moved to Middletown, where he continued keeping store till near the close of his life. In the year 1824 he became acquainted with Rev. John Winebrenner, who visited Middletown to preach the gospel, and under him became converted. At the first opportunity he identified himself with the Church of God, being one of the original members of that denomination at Middletown, where he continued to be one of its most active workers until his death. His name appears as a ruling elder in the journal of the Fourth Annual Eldership, held at Middletown, Dec. 25, 1833. He was licensed to preach at the Seventh Annual Eldership which convened at Churchtown, Cumberland Co., Nov. 5, 1836. At the time of his death, on the 26th of January, 1863, at Middletown, he was a member of the Board of Publication, and treasurer of the General Eldership, as well as treasurer of the East Pennsylvania Eldership. He traveled and labored in the ministry, at protracted and other meetings, "without money and without price," and was an eminently successful revival preacher. His liberality and benevolence were well known at home, and in all the churches. His warmth of heart and affection made him beloved by all his acquaintances. He was a strict disciplinarian, and a great lover of order. Besides, he carried his religion into his business, being scrupulously truthful and honest in all his dealings, loving justice and hating sin in every form. He was devotedly attached to the doctrines of the Church of God, fearlessly defended them, and worked actively to establish them.

ROBERT J. ROSS.

Robert James Ross, son of Andrew Ross, a native of Londonderry, Ireland, who came to America about 1800, and his wife, Hannah Templin, of Chester County, Pa., was born at Georgetown, D. C., in 1807. He received a good English and classical education, and was appointed by President John Quincy Adams midshipman in the United States navy, August, 1826, and subsequently promoted for meritorious conduct and services. Shortly after his marriage he resigned, and was appointed teller in the Branch Bank of Pennsylvania, at Harrisburg, then under the cashiership of James Lesley. In 1839 he was tendered the position of cashier in the Harrisburg Savings Institution, which he accepted, and when this corporation became the Dauphin Deposit Bank he remained its cashier until his death. Mr. Ross died at Harrisburg the 6th of October, 1861. He was enterprising and successful in business, and stood high in financial circles. He married, in 1833, Mary E., daughter of Jacob M. Haldeman and Eliza Ewing Jacobs, who died at Harrisburg in 1873, aged fifty-nine years. They had children,—Jacob H. (d. s. p.), Andrew, Jacob Haldeman, Eliza, Hannah (married Col. Reno, United States army), Roberta (married J. Wilson Orth), and Robert. Of these, Andrew, residing in York County, Pa., is the sole survivor.

REV. JACOB ROOP.

Jacob Roop, son of Jacob Roop, Sr., was born March 1, 1782, in Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father settled in the township during the war of the Revolution. The son received the meagre education given by the Mennonites to their children, which extended only to the elementary branches. His early life and the greater portion of his manhood were passed on the farm and in the blacksmith-shop, which latter he carried on forty years. In his thirty-third year he entered the ministry of the United Brethren in Christ, and the first twenty-three years of his ministerial life were spent at various points in Ohio, Virginia, Maryland, and Pennsylvania. During these years he was the active and zealous co-laborer with Otterbein, Behm, Getting, Newcomer, Neidig, Erb, and other fathers of that denomination. In his fifty-sixth year he commenced for the first time to travel a circuit, and traveled as an active itinerant seventeen years, when meeting with a severe injury, the remainder of his life he was an invalid. He died in Lower Swatara township on the 2d of December, 1875, aged ninety-three years. Mr. Roop was thrice married (his first wife being Fanny Witmer), all of whom he survived.

LEVI RUTHERFORD, M.D.

Levi Rutherford, the eldest son of John Rutherford and Jane Meader, was born in Paxtang in the year 1826. After the death of his father, in 1832, he was taken by his uncle, William Rutherford, in whose family he remained until he attained his majority. He received a liberal education, and read medicine under Dr. W. W. Rutherford, of Harrisburg, graduating at the University of Pennsylvania in March, 1849. He at once began the practice of medicine at New Cumberland, which promised bright, but his health failing, he was compelled to relinquish the duties of his profession. He returned home, and undertook the superintendence of the farm, hoping thereby to re-establish his health. This proved futile, for he gradually failed, and he died at Harrisburg on the 8th of February, 1851. Intelligent, amiable, and upright, Dr. Levi Rutherford's young life left a rosetinted memory in many households.

COL. WILLIAM RUTHERFORD.

William Rutherford, the youngest son of Capt. John Rutherford, of the Revolution, and Margaret Park, was born in Paxtang, Aug. 4, 1776. He received a fair education, and was brought up as a farmer. Born amid the thunders of the Revolution, he inherited the military spirit of his father, and became quite prominent as an officer, serving in all the grades from a lieutenant up to that of a commission of colonel, which office he declined. In 1816 he was elected a director of the poor, and served as a member of the House of Representatives from 1819 to 1821, and again from 1829 to 1831. Col. Rutherford was one of the most influential men of his day in the county of Dauphin, and a representative man thereof. He died at his residence, near Harrisburg, on the 17th of January, 1850, in his seventy-fourth year. Col. Rutherford married, March 17, 1801, Sarah Swan, daughter of William Swan, who died June 18, 1852, aged seventy-three years. They are both buried in old Paxtang Church graveyard.

SIMON SALLADE.

Simon Sallade was born near Gratz, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the 7th of March, 1785. His father, John Sallade, of French Huguenot descent, was a native of Bosel on the Rhine, born in March, 1739, emigrated, with other members of his family, to America at an early period, and was among the first settlers on the Wisconsin. He died at the age of eighty-eight years, in November, 1827, being blind about ten years before his death. He married, on the 8th of February, 1771, Margaret Everhart, daughter of George Everhart, born in Berks County in 1747, and concerning whom we have the following incident: Upon the Indian incursions on the east side of the Susquehanna, subsequent to the defeat of Braddock, in the fall of 1755, she was taken captive by the savage ma-raiders, near what is now Pine Grove, Schuylkill Co. She was an unwilling witness to the scenes of murder and atrocity, when the merciless Indians tomahawked and scalped her parents, brothers, and sisters, and beheld the home of her birth illuminating by its red glare the midnight sky, while only she of all her friends was left,—and she a prisoner with the cruel and bloodthirsty savage. Doubtless, there was some attractiveness of person or piteousness of appeal which saved her life. Of the wearisome years of her captivity among the Indians west of the Ohio we have little knowledge. It was not, however, until the power of the French on the "Beautiful River" was broken by the courage and skill of Gen. Forbes that the little prisoner was rescued and returned to her friends in Berks County. She lived to a ripe old age. John Sallade had five sons and two daughters, Simon being next to the youngest. Simon Sallade, owing to the want of schools in those early days in the valley, was obliged to depend upon the educational instruction given by his parents, but being an apt scholar, it was not long before he masterèd the main branches in a good education. He was a great reader, and, although books were few in those days, he read and re-read those falling into his hands. Later in life, towards manhood's years, he acquired considerable knowledge by the aid of a teacher, whom he and some young men of his neighborhood employed for that purpose. He was quite a performer on the violin, and being of a social nature, he was often the centre and life of the many winter-evening gatherings of that time.

Mr. Sallade was a millwright by trade, acquiring much of his proficiency in that vocation from an apprenticeship to Jacob Berkstresser, of Bellefonte. Many of the old mills within thirty or forty miles of his home were of his designing, and in fact the workmanship of his hands. A self-made man, energetic, social, and industrious, he became in time one of the most popular men of the Upper End.

His constant contact with the people of all classes in social life or business relations resulted in his taking a warm interest in political affairs. Although a politician, he was such for the advancement of the public good. He was a Democrat of the old school, and when named for office, he appealed to the people instead of party for support. He was four times elected to the Pennsylvania House of Representatives. First, in the years 1819 and 1820, at the age of thirty-four years; next, in 1836-37, at the age of fifty-one years; and again, in 1853, when he was in his sixty-ninth year. Each time the Whigs were largely in the majority in Dauphin County, yet always when put in nomination by the Democratic party, Mr. Sallade, save in one instance, was elected. This defeat was due in part to a letter written at the time to Charles C. Rawn, Esq., chairman of the temperance committee, in which he announced his opposition to the passage of the Maine liquor law.

During his term in the Legislature he was the author of what was generally known as "Wiconisco Feeder Bill." To his zeal and tact that important legislation for the "Upper End" of Dauphin County owes its passage. Through this outlet the Lykens Valley coal-fields were first developed. He was the superintendent for the construction of the Wiconisco Canal, and held the appointment through the canal commissioners.

Simon Sallade died at the old homestead, near Elizabethville, on the 8th of November, 1854, and is interred in the village graveyard at that place. His wife was Jane Woodside, daughter of John Woodside, of Lykens Valley. She died Sept. 3, 1854, and is buried in the same graveyard.

JAMES SAVAGE.

James Savage was born in North Wales, Feb. 25, 1823, and died in Cimmaron, New Mexico, Nov. 10, 1881, where he was superintending a mine for his brother, Col. E. G. Savage. He emigrated to America with his parents, who settled in Minersville, where he learned the trade of a machinist. In 1849 he came to Wiconisco to put up the engine for the Lykens Valley breaker, which he ran a year, and then went to California. There he stayed two years, and returned in 1852, and accepted a position under the Short Mountain Coal Company. He hoisted the first car of coal ever taken out of the Wiconisco mines. In 1855 or 1856 he became superintendent of the Lykens Coal Company, under George E. Hoffman. In 1861 he went to California again, where he remained until 1865, when he returned and located at Gilberton, Schuylkill Co., in charge of the Gilberton Coal Company. In 1867, with Col. E. G. Savage and Benjamin Kaufman, under the firm-name of Savage, Brother & Kaufman, he leased a tract of coal land of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad, developed what is now known as "Brookside Colliery," and established the operation as a successful one. Then they sold it to George S. Repplier & Co. He was subsequently its superintendent, and afterwards in various enterprises in Tremont for ten years. He may justly be regarded as the pioneer of the Wiconisco coal-mines.

MAJOR OLIVER W. SEES.

Oliver Washington Sees was born in the city of Philadelphia, on the 27th of October, 1835. He was the second son of David Sees and Ann Fell Edwards. His parents had removed from Harrisburg to Philadelphia in 1832, but returned to their old home on the first day of January, 1839. Oliver Sees did not have the advantages of a liberal education. When quite young, about twelve years of age, he became a messenger-boy in the first magnetic telegraph-office that was opened in Harrisburg after the wonderful discovery by Professor Morse, the office being under the management of David Brooks. The latter became very much interested in his bright-eyed, youthful messenger, and under his special care and teaching Oliver rapidly developed into an operator, and finally became one of the most expert and accomplished in the business. He was one of the first to learn to read messages by sound. His interest was so great in the success of the laying of the Atlantic cable that when the news reached Harrisburg of its final accomplishment, he was chiefly instrumental in getting up a very enthusiastic demonstration to celebrate that event. Mr. Sees' knowledge and special fitness in his business were so marked that on the 23d day of December, 1861, Governor Curtin appointed him chief of telegraph, with the rank of major, and shortly afterwards added that of chief of transportation, two very important positions during the war. The duties of these combined offices he discharged with signal ability and entire satisfaction. In connection with this arduous work the general government intrusted Maj. Sees with the key to the secret service cipher, used in the transmission of the most vital and important messages by the general government, in relation to matters at that critical period, and which could only be deciphered through a knowledge of this key. About this period he was appointed by Maj.-Gen. D. N. Couch, who was directing military operations at this point, on his staff, and mustered into the United States service. Immediately after the battle of Gettysburg, Governor Curtin ordered Maj. Sees to the battle-field to assist in caring for the dead and wounded Pennsylvania soldiers who fell on that memorable occasion, a duty he performed well. On his way back to Harrisburg he was taken very sick at Carlisle, and died in this city on the 30th day of September, 1863, before he was twenty-eight.

The following is an extract from the report of Col. M. S. Quay to Governor Andrew G. Curtin. Col. Quay was the successor of Maj. Sees as chief of transportation:

"The invasion of the State, in June, 1863, by the army of Gen. Lee, and your call for the militia forces which immediately followed, occasioned a large influx of business of pressing importance, which occupied the chief of the department, Maj. Sees, and his clerical force for weeks.

"The United States having assumed the payment of the expenses of the transportation of the militia, Maj. Sees was placed temporarily in their service, and assigned a position on the staff of Maj.-Gen. Couch, commanding the Department of the Susquehanna. He was relieved by Gen. Couch, at his own request, and was immediately afterwards ordered to Gettysburg by you to look after our dead and wounded.

"The extraordinary labors he found necessary during this period, extending at times through successive days and nights, with the exposure and fatigue sustained at Gettysburg, undoubtedly produced the illness through which your administration lost a faithful and competent officer, and his family a husband and father who was their only support."

Maj. Sees was married to Caroline, daughter of Charles Buehler and Sarah Hoover, at Harrisburg, on the 22d day of September, 1857; the widow and one daughter, Caroline, survive him. *

CAPT. WILLIAM E. SEES.

William Edwards Sees was born in Harrisburg, Feb. 3, 1832. He was the oldest son of David Sees and Ann Fell Edwards. His education was received in the common schools of his native place, and early in life commenced to learn the business of coach-trimming with his father, who was a skilled workman, and became in time a good mechanic. He was a member and an officer of the old Friendship Fire Company, of Harrisburg, noted for his efficiency and daring, and twice came very near losing his life in endeavoring to save the property of others, once at a fire in the United States Hotel and again at the cotton-factory.

When the war for the Union broke out, he enlisted as a private in the three months' service. In 1862 he was commissioned captain in the new Eleventh Pennsylvania, three years' service, but his health failing him, he was discharged on surgeon's certificate of disability.

On the 19th of April, 1855, he married Mary Catharine Kunke, of the city of Baltimore, Md. She died on the 27th of February, 1856, leaving one son, David Sees. On the 13th of September, 1857, he married Mary Elizabeth Chandler, daughter of Jonathan Chandler and Julia Ann Mowrer.

Capt. Sees died Oct. 5, 1865, of consumption, contracted in the army, leaving one daughter by the second marriage, Catharine. The Rev. Charles A. Hay, D.D., pastor of Zion's Lutheran Church, published a memoir of Capt. Sees, detailing his religious life and experience, which is quite interesting.

CHRISTIAN SEILER, M.D.

Dr. Christian Seiler, the second son of Christian Seiler and Elizabeth Wolfarth, was born Nov. 24, 1804, in South Hanover township, within a few miles of Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received the rudiments of education, principally German, at the village school in Hummelstown, the English language at that date being spoken by few families of the neighborhood. His father removing to Harrisburg in 1821, the son was sent to the Harrisburg Academy, while that institution was under the care of Mr. Hamilton and Mr. Todd. He was of an inquiring turn of mind, an attentive student, and received not only a good English education, but acquired a knowledge of Latin and Greek. At an early day he had a predilection for military life, and in the year 1823 was elected captain of a juvenile infantry company in Harrisburg. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Cornelius Luther, a young physician of great promise, who died at Harrisburg in 1827, afterwards completing his studies with Dr. Samuel Agnew. He then attended the lectures at Jefferson Medical College, Philadelphia, where he graduated in March, 1828. Shortly after he commenced the practice of his profession at Halifax and vicinity, where his knowledge of the German language gave him great advantage. His practice extended through Upper Paxtang and Mifflin townships, in fact through all that section of country lying west of Peter's Mountain. He was succeeding well; but having married about this time, he concluded to remove to Williamsport, and for a while abandoned his profession for the mercantile business. The former had more charms for him, and after practicing a year or two at Williamsport he returned to Harrisburg, where he soon secured an extensive practice, which he retained until his death. In 1844 he was elected brigadier-general of the militia, after which he was more familiarly addressed. At the outset of the war with Mexico he offered his services, and was within a few votes of obtaining the command of a regiment of volunteers.

In politics, Dr. Seiler was a Democrat, and was several times nominated for the Legislature, and thrice for Congress, but although his party was in a hopeless minority, it was only through strenuous exertions that he was defeated. For nearly a quarter of a century he served as a director of the public schools of the borough of Harrisburg, and took a warm interest in educational matters. Up to about 1859, Dr. Seiler enjoyed excellent health, but at that time symptoms of disease of the heart manifested themselves, and he was obliged to forego much of the fatigue incident to his large country practice, in the which he was greatly relieved by his son, Robert H., who had studied medicine under his father, and graduated at Jefferson College in 1860. He was a man of uncommon endurance, and too frequently he yielded to the request of his patients. In February, 1873, after a long ride in the country, where he was detained longer than perhaps prudent, he was seized with a chill, and pneumonia developed itself. From this attack he never recovered, dying on the 11th of February, 1873, at the age of sixty-nine. Dr. Seiler married, on the 26th of March, 1833, Mary Hayes, daughter of William Hayes, Esq., of Lewisburg, Pa. She survived her husband only five years, dying at Harrisburg, in 1878. They had two children who reached maturity.—Dr. Robert H., who died in 1876, and Frank S., died Dec. 20, 1879.

JEREMIAH SEILER, M.D.

Jeremiah Seiler, son of Jacob Seiler and Christiana Fireoved, was born June 27, 1818, in Middlesex township, Cumberland Co., Pa. His early education was that received in the public schools of the country, but he applied himself closely to study and soon fitted himself for entering upon his life-work. He entered the office of Dr. Van Huff, of Mechanicsburg, and subsequently that of Dr. W. W. Dale, under whose instructions he pursued the course of study outlined as preparatory to his attending medical lectures, from which he did at the University of Maryland, from which institution he graduated in March, 1843. He immediately began the practice of his profession, locating in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., where he continued until the year 1866, when he removed to Harrisburg. He was the first in his profession to administer chloroform in the practice of surgery west of Philadelphia. He was also one of the first of the interior physicians who in 1850, when typhoid fever made its appearance in the rural sections, to comprehend its nature and successfully control its fatal effects. He was elected to the Legislature as a member of the House from Dauphin County in 1866, serving for two years. The characteristics which were peculiar to the man as a physician marked his action as a legislator. He was studious and deliberate in all that he did and said, with a natural frankness and unaffected modesty which never fail as manifestations in the character of a truly honest man. While a member he served on the Committees of Divorce, Accounts, Passenger Railways, and Chairman of that of the State Library. With the close of the last session of his official position he resumed his professional duties, and was actively engaged therein at Harrisburg, where he died after a brief illness on the 16th of November, 1878, at the age of sixty years. Dr. Seiler married, March 19, 1842, Anna Elizabeth Stigleman, daughter of John and Rachel Stigleman, of Cumberland County, and their children were Rev. Galen W., missionary in India; Dr. John P., one of the consulting physicians to the City Hospital, Harrisburg; and Clara A.

WILLIAM SHAMMO.

William Shammo, son of John Shammo (1784-1868) and Sarah Reinoehl (1786-1870), was born March 13, 1819, at Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received the limited education afforded by the village school during the winter months, and from his early years assisted his father, who was a merchant, thereby making himself thoroughly familiar with mercantile transactions. He was engaged in business many years at Halifax, and was successful in a marked degree. He was accepted as a safe counselor and sure guide in financial matters, and from the time of its organization, in 1870, was cashier of the Halifax Bank. He served as a member of the Borough Council and other positions of trust. He died at Halifax, Feb. 14, 1883, aged almost sixty-four years. As another has justly said, "He was a man of unimpeachable integrity, honest, of generous impulses, high-minded, and honorable;" he was in very fact a valuable citizen, and highly esteemed in the community in which he lived. Mr. Shammo married, Dec. 29, 1856, Catharine R. Beam, daughter of John and Mary Beam, of Halifax, and their children were Estelle, Byron A., Minnie L., Carrie M., Rosabelle, Myra A. (d. s. p.), and Bertha A.

MICHAEL SHEAFER.

Michael Sheaffer, son of George Sheaffer, was born Dec. 1, 1803, at Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa. For some years he resided in Harrisburg, and when quite a young man he married Susan Cloud, of Lancaster County, and made his home in that county a few years. They had issue: Adaline (married Rev. C. A. Wyeth), Henry J., John M. (a civil engineer, who died at Selena, Alabama, Aug. 11, 1871), Mary L. (married Theodore D. Irish), Harriet Matilda (married Joseph Davidson), Lucetta (died June 9, 1837), Anne Eliza (married John Thompson), George T. (died Nov. 4, 1867, at Ashland), and Benjamin Ingersoll. In 1831-32, the Lykens Valley Coal Company was organized, and commenced operations at what was then called "Bear Gap" (now Wiconisco). The company built a large log frame house, and Michael Sheaffer moved into it for the purpose of boarding the workmen and entertaining the members of the company. At that time the Upper End (now Lykens, Wiconisco, and Williamstown) was one vast wilderness, with a few log huts scattered around. He resided in this place up to the date of his death, Nov. 30, 1849, taking an active part in the development of the coal region. He was one of the contractors in the building of the Lykens Valley Railroad, also in the building of the aqueduct and other improvements at the mouth of the Wiconisco Canal feeder. After the first railroad was built from the Gap to Millersburg, he had the contract for the delivery of the coal, floating it across the river to Mount Patrick on the Pennsylvania Canal. His wife, Susan Sheaffer, who was a most estimable Christian woman, died at Harrisburg, Pa., on the 17th February, 1876. The remains of both rest in the cemetery at Harrisburg, Pa.

DANIEL SHEESLEY.

Daniel Sheesley, son of Daniel Sheesley and Mary Elizabeth Reigle, was born Sept. 16, 1815, in Lykens township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His education was quite limited. He came to Harrisburg at the age of twelve, and in its vicinity his life was passed. For many years he was engaged in the milling business, was an auctioneer, and trucker. He served one term as director of the poor, and was one of the directors of schools for Swatara township for a long period. He died at Harrisburg on the 21st of June, 1880, in his sixty-fifth year. He was a very pleasant and agreeable companion, extremely sociable and kind. Mr. Sheesley married, in 1837, Sarah Rissing, daughter of Lewis and Mary Rissing, and their children are William (present sheriff of the county of Dauphin), Mary (married Peter Reel), Sarah, Elizabeth (married John H. Tattall), Daniel, Lonisa (married Joseph E. Rhoads), Samuel, John, George Lewis, Catharine L., and Margaret J.

CAPT. JOSEPH SHERER.

Joseph Sherer, the son of Samuel Sherer, was a native of the north of Ireland, born in 1731. His parents came to America in 1734, locating in Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He was the recipient of an ordinary English education, and brought up as a farmer. During the French and Indian war he served as a non-commissioned officer, doing duty on the then frontiers. At the commencement of the Revolution he commanded a company in Col. Burd's battalion of associators, whose farms adjoined at Tinian, now Highspire. Capt. Sherer was a member of the Lancaster County Committee, and a member of the first Constitutional Convention of the State, which met at Philadelphia July 15, 1776. While in attendance on this body he took ill, returned home, and died on the 1st or 2d of December following. His remains were interred in the burying-ground of Paxtang Church, of which he was a member. He married, Feb. 6, 1759, Mary McClure; had eight children, as follows: Mary, married Samuel Cochran; Samuel, John, Jean, Richard, Joseph, William, and Catharine. Capt. Sherer was a man of influence on the frontiers prior to the Revolution, brave, energetic, and spirited.

JOHN SHOCH.

John Shoch, of German ancestry, was born in the city of Philadelphia on the 27th of March, 1763. In 1792 he located at Harrisburg, engaging in active business pursuits. During the "mill-dam troubles" of 1794-95, Mr. Shoch took a prominent part, and was on the committee to confer with the owners and abate the nuisance. For a long time he was a member of the Town Council, borough supervisor, and at one time burgess. He was director of the poor and county commissioner, serving the usual terms, when he was chosen treasurer of the county, an office he filled acceptably from 1812 to 1815. In 1810 he was appointed by act of the Assembly, with Robert Harris, of Harrisburg, Gen. Adamson Tannehill, William McCandless, of Pittsburgh, and Nathau Beach, of Beach Grove, Luzerne Co., one of the commissioners to survey what was then termed the northern and southern routes from Harrisburg to Pittsburgh, to ascertain the most practicable and preferable one for a turnpike-road. Both routes were duly surveyed with the aid of James Maginnis as surveyor, with Alexander Officer and John C. Bucher as chain-carriers. The commissioners reported in favor of the southern route, but when the Legislature met they thought it best to charter companies enough to turnpike both, and the result was a spirit of improvement by internal communication that gridironed and sandwiched the western part of Pennsylvania, and involved so many enterprising people financially that in 1821, during Governor Hiester's administration, an act of the Legislature called "The Improvement Bill" was enacted for their relief. Mr. Shoch labored hard and successfully for the removal of the seat of government to Harrisburg, for the erection of the bridge over the Susquehanna, the establishment of the Harrisburg Bank, of which he was one of its first directors, and the Harrisburg Academy, being a trustee for many years. Mr. Shoch retired from business about 1825. He died at Harrisburg Tuesday, Aug. 31, 1841. He married, in 1792, Salôme Gilbert, of Philadelphia. She died at Harrisburg, Oct. 13, 1828. They are both buried in the Harrisburg Cemetery. Of their children one survives, Col. Samuel Shoch, of Columbia. Mr. Shoch always took a deep interest in the affairs of the town and county, and was highly esteemed by his fellow-citizens as a strictly honest and upright gentleman.

DAVID SHOPE, M.D.

David Shope, son of Jacob Shope and — Hart, was born July 25, 1808, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather, Andrew Schopp (or Shope), emigrated from the Palatinate, Germany, to America, arriving at Philadelphia Oct. 22, 1754, on the ship "Halifax" from Rotterdam. He settled in then Lancaster County, married, and was in service during the French and Indian war, afterwards permanently locating in what is now Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa., on a tract of land in possession of his great-grandson. He had sons Bernhard, Jacob, and Adam. The first married, removed to Centre County, Pa., where his descendants now reside. Jacob and Adam divided the farm, the former of whom subsequently disposed of his, the latter dying on the old homestead at the age of ninety-one years. Jacob Shope, who lived to the age of eighty-seven, married a Miss Hart, and they had issue, — Abraham, Jacob, Bernhard, David, Barbara, Mary, Elizabeth, and Catharine. David, the subject of our sketch, worked on his father's farm until the age of sixteen, receiving such educational advantages as the country schools then afforded. He was afterwards sent to a select school in Cumberland County, and also that taught by Mr. Cummings at Brown's school-house on the Jonestown road. He taught school several terms, and at the age of nineteen began the study of medicine with Dr. Markley, of Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., and after the latter's death with his successor, Dr. Veasy. In October, 1832, he located in Hummelstown, where he continued in the successful practice of his profession until his decease, which occurred on the 2d of December, 1842, at the age of thirty-four years, and is buried in the Hummelstown Cemetery. Few practitioners stood higher in the confidence and esteem of the community in which he lived than Dr. David Shope. He never married.

GOVERNOR FRANCIS R. SHUNK.

Francis Rawn Shunk, the son of John Shunk and Elizabeth Rawn, was born Aug. 7, 1788, at the Trappe, Montgomery Co., Pa. His father was the son of Francis Shunk, who emigrated to America from the Palatinate, on the Rhine, in Germany, about the year 1715. His mother was the daughter of Casper and Barbara Rawn, also emigrants from the Palatinate. The mother of Francis Rawn Shunk was a woman distinguished for her kindness and affection, and the son ever spoke of her in terms of the most devoted attachment, and cherished her memory with filial piety. Her influence no doubt was greatly felt in the formation of his early character and its subsequent development. His father was a man of strong and stern mind, yet naturally facetious, and fond of indulging in this propensity.

The parents of Francis R. were not able to furnish the means or spare his time to secure in the ordinary way even the rudiments of an education. Much of his childhood and youth was devoted to manual labor. At the early age of fifteen he became a teacher, and soon after the instructor of the school at the village where he was born. From that time until 1812 he seems to have been employed as a teacher during the few months of the year the school continued, and the rest of the time as a laborer in the pursuits of agriculture. The intervals of toil were devoted to the improvement of his mind in every useful branch of study. In 1812 he was selected by Andrew Porter, then surveyor-general under the administration of Governor Snyder, to fill a clerkship in his department. While thus employed he commenced and prosecuted the study of the law with Thomas Elder, of Harrisburg. In 1814 he marched as a private, with many of his fellow-townsmen, to the defense of Baltimore. Soon after he was chosen first assistant, and then the principal clerk of the House of Representatives, and for many years performed with great fidelity the arduous duties of that office. He was subsequently elected secretary of the board of canal commissioners, and served in that capacity during a period when the condition of our public improvements called for the most constant and strenuous efforts on the part of the commissioners, and rendered the situation of their secretary anything but a sinecure. In 1839 he was chosen by Governor Porter Secretary of the Commonwealth. On retiring from that office he removed to Pittsburgh, and engaged in the practice of the law. In 1844 he was called from his retirement by the voice of the people of the commonwealth to fill the highest office in their gift. He so conducted his administration as their chief executive that he received from them the highest expression of their confidence and regard by being re-elected with an increased majority, and that too against an opposing candidate of the most estimable character, whose exalted virtues and worth were acknowledged by all.

But he had scarcely entered upon the duties of his second term before he became the victim of a disease which in its early progress excited apprehensions in the minds of his friends that it might prove fatal. The Governor himself, though conscious that his disease was deep-seated, yet seemed to cherish with confidence the hope that the vigor of his constitution and the skill of his physicians would eventually restore him to health. It was not until the morning of the 9th of July, 1848, when a severe and copious hemorrhage from the lungs took place, that he gave up entirely the hope of life and felt that his days were indeed numbered. Upon that day, being Sunday, he wrote his letter of resignation,—the last public act of his life.

GOVERNOR FRANCIS R. SHUNK.

His professional attainments, especially in the more abstract principles of law, were large, and as a counselor he had few superiors. But he shrunk from the personal collision its practice in the courts involved, and retired from the bar to engage in employments and studies more congenial with his taste.

His administration as the chief magistrate of this commonwealth shows that he was no novice in the great and fundamental principles of government. His state papers indicate that he had deeply studied the questions of policy involving the great interests of Pennsylvania and the country at large, that he had looked at their remote as well as immediate consequences, and contemplated their influence on the progress and advancement of the entire community under the fostering care of our free institutions as well as their adaptation to the mere accumulation of gain. The opinions which these papers contain commend themselves to our attention, not only for the candor with which they are expressed, but for the reasons by which they are sustained.

Our common-school system had a deep hold on the affections of his heart. He knew it had many imperfections, particularly as it was carried into operation in some of the rural districts; he knew it was not accomplishing all that was desirable, but he believed it would yet work its way into the confidence of the people, and be itself the most efficient means of curing many of its defects. He rejoiced in the good it had effected, and with a generous enthusiasm exulted in the good it would effect.

We should do signal injustice to the character of Governor Shunk and omit one of the most important elements of his success in life if we did not refer to his moral as well as intellectual culture. He was a sincere, honest, upright man, pure in his private morals, and no less so in his public character. The political principles and policy avowed in his state papers were sincerely entertained. They were not set forth, as some who knew him not and did not agree with him may erroneously suppose, to please the popular taste. He never courted popular favor at the expense of sincerity and truth. The proverbial honesty of Governor Shunk was one principal cause of his popularity, both in public and private life. There were multitudes who did not properly estimate his intellectual worth, who did not adopt many of his political views, or did not belong to his political party, who yet believed him to be an honest, upright man in whom they could confide, and on that account gave him their support.

JAMES F. SHUNK.

James Findlay Shunk, youngest son of Governor Francis R. Shunk, was born April 18, 1836. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy, and at the University of Virginia, at which latter institution he attended a course of lectures on the science of law. Perchance the best education he received, and that which fitted him peculiarly for the profession of journalism, which he adopted, was the literary training he obtained by extensive reading and close study of the best English authors, and by a careful and rigid observance of language and style. He wrote the raciest English that flowed from the pen of any writer for the press in Pennsylvania. His power of sarcasm was immense, though he lacked that of invective. Many of his articles which appeared in print were attributed to some of the most eminent men of the country, and others often obtained the credit which of right belonged to him, so modest, unobtrusive, and even sensitive was he in regard to any publicity of his name as that of the author of the articles alluded to. He died quite young, being not yet thirty-eight years of age, as brilliant a journalist as ever held a pen, with intellect fully ripened, and a wide field before him for the exercise of his peculiar talents. He died at Harrisburg on the 20th of January, 1874. Mr. Shunk married a daughter of Judge Jeremiah S. Black, of York, who, with one child, survived.

DAVID SIMON.

David Simon, son of John Barnard Simon, was born about 1776 in the city of Philadelphia. His father was a native of Hesse-Cassel, Germany, and was an officer in the British provincial service. He came to America prior to the Revolution, and took up his abode in Philadelphia. He was twice married. As to his first wife we have no knowledge; his second wife being Maria Margaret Loehman, a sister of the Rev. John George Lochman, D.D., of the Lutheran Church. David Simon received a good education, and graduated at the College of Philadelphia, now the University of Pennsylvania. A fine classical scholar, he began teaching as a profession in Philadelphia. Being a good musician, for many years he was the organist of St. Paul's Church, of Philadelphia. He subsequently taught school at Baltimore, Harrisburg, and Easton, at which latter place he died in 1830. Mr. Simon married Elizabeth Ireton, born 1780 near Mount Holly, N. J., died 1853 at Harrisburg, Pa. They had children as follows: Margaret Lochman, married Henry Barton, of Lancaster; John Barnard, of Harrisburg; Washington J., a prominent homœopathic physician of Philadelphia, who died in 1881; James Kemp, of Philadelphia; and Eliza, unmarried, who resides at Lancaster.

COL. SENECA G. SIMMONS.

Seneca G. Simmons was a native of Windsor, Vt., where he was born Dec. 27, 1808. He entered West Point, graduated therefrom in 1834, and was assigned to the Seventh United States Infantry. He served in the Florida and Mexican wars with marked credit, and properly promoted therefor. At the time of the breaking out of the Rebellion, in 1861, Capt. Simmons was at his home in Harrisburg laboring under a severe injury. Upon the organization of the famous Reserve Corps he was chosen colonel of the Fifth Regiment. For his conduct in the autumn campaign of 1861 he was promoted major of the Fourth United States Infantry. During the Peninsular campaign of 1862, under Gen. McClellan, while leading the First Brigade of the Reserves, at Charles City Cross-Roads, June 20th, he fell in the thickest of the fight, breathing his last upon the field of honor. His remains were buried beneath a large tree, but being unmarked were not distinguished among the thousand who sleep their last sleep on the Chickahominy. The loss of Col. Simmons was greatly lamented. He was a gallant and brave officer, and had he been spared he would have done valiant service in the cause of the Union.

REV. ASHBEL GREEN SIMONTON.

Ashbel Green Simonton, youngest son of Dr. William Simonton and Martha Snodgrass, was born Jan. 20, 1833. His classical education began in the Harrisburg Academy, under the tuition of the Rev. Mahlon Long. After two years' preparatory study he entered the College of New Jersey, from which he graduated in 1852, his scholarship and acquirements being of the first rank. In the autumn of the same year he went to the South with his brother James and took charge of an academy for boys in Starkville,

A. G. Lincoln

Miss., where he taught with much success for eighteen months. In July, 1854, he returned to Harrisburg and entered upon the study of the law. In the spring of 1855 he decided upon a theological course, and for this purpose prepared himself for entering the theological seminary at Princeton, which he did in September of that year. He was licensed to preach by Carlisle Presbytery, which met at Greencastle on the 14th of April, 1858. He had decided upon a missionary life, and after consultation and application to the Presbyterian Board of Foreign Missions, was ordered to Brazil. He was ordained by the Presbytery of Carlisle, at Harrisburg, April 14, 1859, and on the 19th of June following sailed from Baltimore in the merchant ship "Banshee" for Rio Janeiro. He arrived at the latter place on the 12th of August, and at once entered upon his field of labor. In November, 1864, he took the lead in the establishment of the Imprensa Evangelica, a semi-monthly newspaper for the dissemination of religious information among the people of Brazil. Although the demands made upon him of an editorial character were severe, in addition to preaching thrice per week in Portuguese and generally once in English—the latter to the English Americans living at Rio—yet they were met con amore. Having acquired facility in the use of the language, he composed with great ease and pleasure to himself. Educated Brazilians acknowledged their surprise at the elegance and force with which he wrote in their native tongue, and his leading articles in the Imprensa were characterized by great ability, clearness, and comprehension of the subjects treated. The paper continued to be with him a favorite means of spreading the truth among the native population of Brazil. In the spring of 1862 he returned to the United States, married Helen Murdock, daughter of William Murdock, of Baltimore, Md., on the 19th of March, 1863, and sailed for Brazil May 23, 1863, reaching the harbor of Rio on the 16th of July. His wife died after a short illness on the 28th of July, 1864, which to a missionary in a foreign land was an incalculable loss. It was indeed a severe affliction. But there was a duty to perform, and he labored zealously for the Master. Towards the close of March, 1865, he made a missionary tour into the province of São Paulo, returning to his post in Rio early in May.

The news of Lee's surrender, of the suppression of the Great Rebellion, and of the assassination of President Lincoln, reached that city in quick succession. When there was no longer a doubt that the last-mentioned sad event had occurred, he was requested to preach a sermon to the American residents on the occasion, which was delivered at a special service on May 21, 1865, to the largest assembly of his countrymen ever convened at Rio. The discourse was remarkable for its breadth of view, its philosophical tone, its enlightened and ardent patriotism, and for the force and eloquence with which it sets forth the duty of trust in God under the overwhelming calamity that had fallen upon our beloved country. Near the close of 1865 the Presbytery of Rio de Janeiro was organized at São Paulo, that being the mission station of his brother-in-law, Rev. A. L. Blackford. It was soon perceived that his overtaxed energies had begun to give way under the gradual approaches of the disease which forever ended his earthly activities. Unable to continue his labors, he left Rio for the home of his sister, at São Paulo, the last week in November, 1867. No relief came, and after a brief illness he died on the 9th of December following. He was buried on the same day from the little church of São Paulo, two Englishmen and two Americans officiating as pall-bearers, addresses being made in Portuguese by Rev. Mr. Blackford and Rev. Emanuel Pires, singing the hymn,—

"Fallamos do mundo feliz."
("We speak of the land of the blest.")

A large procession was formed, proceeding to the Protestant cemetery, where "upon a hillside overlooking the city of São Paulo, toward the plain where Brazil's cry of independence was first uttered and still echoes," they laid the faithful missionary to his final resting-place. The Rev. Mr. Simonton possessed a clear, penetrating intellect, a sound and discriminating judgment. His manner in public was quiet, unaffected, dignified, and self-possessed. In the relations of private life he was frank, genial, social, affectionate, and noble-hearted.

WILLIAM SIMONTON, M.D.

William Simonton, the elder, was born in County Antrim, Ireland, in 1755. He was brought to this country at the age of ten by his uncle, the Rev. John Simonton, pastor of the Great Valley Presbyterian Church, in Chester County, Pa. Under the direction of this uncle he received his academic and professional education. Soon after completing his medical course he entered upon the practice of his profession, but at what place is unknown. On the 17th of November, 1777, he was married to Jane Wiggins, daughter of John Wiggins, Sr., of Paxtang, his uncle performing the ceremony. In 1784 he purchased a tract of land called "Antigua," containing one hundred and eighty-two acres, situated in West Hanover township, from Joseph Hutchinson. Upon this farm he resided all his life. Dr. Simonton died on the 24th of April, 1800, at the early age of forty-five. All the traditions that have reached us concerning his standard as a physician, a man, and a Christian, are highly favorable. A fitting testimonial to his life, labors, and character was prepared by the Rev. James Snodgrass, pastor of Hanover Church, and delivered on the occasion of his funeral. His remains, with those of his wife, are interred in old Hanover graveyard.

WILLIAM SIMONTON, M.D.

William Simonton, third son of Dr. William Simonton and Jane Wiggins, was born in West Hanover, Dauphin Co., Pa., in the year 1788. At the death of his father he was only twelve years of age. His early education was received under the direction of his mother, and consisted of the branches usually taught in the country schools of that period. As he was inclined to the medical profession, he studied Latin under the tuition of the Rev. James R. Sharon, pastor of Derry and Paxtang Churches. After the usual preliminary instruction under a private preceptor, he studied medicine with Dr. Meyrick, of Middletown, afterwards attending lectures of the Medical Department, University of Pennsylvania, in Philadelphia, from which he received the degree of M.D. In the distribution of property resulting from his father's death, the farm "Antigua" was equally divided between him and his brother, John W. Simonton. The latter occupied the homestead until his death, in 1824, which occurred a few days previous to the death of his mother. After the erection of the necessary buildings in 1818, he took possession of his new home, where the remainder of his life was spent. While his time was devoted to the practice of medicine, the farming operations were carried on under his superintendence.

Dr. Simonton always took an interest in political affairs, and was accustomed to act with the Whigs in opposition to the Democrats, who had retained possession of the national government from the election of Andrew Jackson, in 1824. He was elected county auditor in 1823, serving three years, and in 1838 he was nominated as a candidate for Congress from the district then composed of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon, and was elected by a large majority. He was re-elected in 1840. During the extra session of Congress, held in the summer of 1841, Dr. Simonton's health gave way. Having been accustomed to an active life and to exercise on horseback, strict attention to public business, with confinement to the atmosphere of Washington during the heated term, so prostrated him physically that he was unable to attend regularly upon the sessions of 1842 and 1843. He never fully recovered his health, though he resumed his medical practice, which was continued nearly three years after the close of his congressional career.

Dr. Simonton died May 17, 1846, in Hanover. He married Martha Davis Snodgrass, daughter of the Rev. James Snodgrass, who died in April, 1862. Both are interred in the old Hanover Church graveyard.

In person, Dr. Simonton was five feet eleven inches in height, of good presence and proportions, with regular features and very black hair, which retained its color to the last. He was a modest, diffident man, but of a genial and friendly disposition. For some years previous to his death he was an elder of the Derry Church, and while in Washington a member of the Congressional prayer-meeting. He was a decided Presbyterian in his faith, and even took a deep interest in the affairs of the denomination to which he belonged. He was a strict observer of the Sabbath and of the services of the sanctuary. He maintained family worship, and was careful to give his children a religious training. He acquired a good reputation as a physician, and for many years had an extensive country practice.

CAPT. JOHN SIMPSON.

John Simpson, son of James and Mary Simpson, was born in Newtown or Buckingham township, Bucks County, Pa., about 1744. His parents went South, and were residing in North Carolina in 1783, and in Georgia in 1791. He learned blacksmithing, and in 1763 settled on the Susquehanna, in what was then Upper Paxtang township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co. On the 15th of August, 1775, he was commissioned second lieutenant of Capt. James Murray's company in the Fourth Battalion of associators of Lancaster County. On the 28th of January, 1777, Lieut. Col. Cornelius Cox, of the battalion, ordered him to remain in the "Continental smithshop" at Bristol. He served during the greater part of the Revolution, towards its close in command of a company of militia, when he returned to his farm. In the spring of 1793 he removed to Huntingdon, Pa., where he died on the 3d of February, 1807, in his sixty-third year. Capt. Simpson married, May 7, 1776, Margaret Murray, daughter of Capt. James Murray.

JOHN A. SMULL.

John Augustus Smull, the second son of John Smull and Harriet Pauli, was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Sept. 1, 1832. Mr. Smull's parents came to Harrisburg shortly after their marriage, and there all their children were born. The death of John's father, in 1841, left his widowed mother dependent upon her own exertions and those of her eldest son, Le Van, who was then in his fourteenth year. An acquaintance with a number of members of the Legislature emboldened her to secure a position for him which would, in some measure, aid in her maintenance. Le Van was appointed page to the Speaker, the first one known to the legislative body.

In the spring of 1848, John was tendered the appointment of a midshipman in the United States navy, and would have accepted the position but for the opposition of his mother. Shortly after he concluded to learn the art of printing, and apprenticed himself at the Telegraph, then under the editorial supervision of Theo. Fenn, Esq., a noted journalist at that day. On the 14th day of April, 1849, Le Van Smull died, and the vacant position of page was secured for his brother John, then in his seventeenth year. In 1861 the office of resident clerk was created. The duties of this position were multiform, not only during the session of the Legislature, but in the recess. With an energy and industry most remarkable, affairs in this department were so systematically arranged that everything went as clock-work. He could tell everything relating to legislation, the progress of each bill, and to all inquiries would give the most satisfactory replies, his memory being unusually retentive. During the closing days of the session he was ready for all queries as to the status of every species of legislation before the House, so familiar did he make himself with whatever appertained to the business of the Assembly.

For a number of years Matthias' and Ziegler's Manuals were the guide-books of legislative practice. In 1867, Mr. Smull enlarged the ordinary Directory and Rules of the General Assembly by the compilation of the "Legislative Hand-Book," which has been published annually the past ten years as a State document. Twelve volumes were edited by Mr. Smull, carefully revised year by year, that for 1881 and for 1883 being edited by his brother, William P. Smull. "Smull's Hand-Book" has always been considered one of the most valuable of the State documents, and full sets of them are considered "rarities." A vademecum of information relative to the official life of the commonwealth, it is the book of reference for all knowledge thereof. The work has been imitated in other States, and even by the national government, but none of them can be compared to "Smull's Hand-Book" in usefulness. The necessities of legislation required the compilation of the work, and it is this necessity which perpetuates the labors of the lamented editor.

The duties of Mr. Smull's official position did by no means prevent him from taking an active interest in every public enterprise, and the citizens of his native town hold him in grateful remembrance for the energy he displayed in contributing to the advancement of its industrial and business enterprises. He was largely instrumental in the erection of the City Passenger Railway, of which he was director and secretary from the date of its organization. He was secretary of the Harrisburg Cemetery Association, and president of the Harrisburg Brick and Tile Company. He was largely interested in several land and building associations, the Harrisburg Car-Works, Farmers' Bank, and a member of the Fort Hunter road commission. He served many years as one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison, and was the efficient secretary of the board; was vice-president of the Pennsylvania Agricultural Society, in the management of which he took an active part, being a working member of committees at all annual exhibitions the past fifteen years. The foregoing were only a few of the enterprises and institutions in which Mr. Smull was prominent. Others equally as important found in him an able advocate and friend.

On Wednesday, the 9th of July, 1879, he left home for Asbury Park, in the hope to recuperate his lost energies, with the intention of stopping over at Philadelphia until Thursday noon. The day and night were exceedingly warm, and whatever may have been the cause, the next morning he was found dead in his bed. The announcement of the death of John A. Smull was received with sorrow at Harrisburg and elsewhere, for, as Col. McClure fitly said in his editorial, "many a good and prominent citizen of Pennsylvania could have been better spared than John A. Smull, and his sudden death will carry grief to every part of the State." So widely known was he that not a newspaper in the commonwealth but had some tender expressions of regret over his death.

On Saturday evening, July 12, 1879, the funeral services were conducted in the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, Harrisburg, the Rev. William C. Catell, D.D., president of Lafayette College, preaching the funeral discourse. At the grave the Knight Templar burial service was read. At the following session of the Legislature memorial services were held, and several eulogistic addresses were delivered concerning the deceased parliamentarian, and the House of Representatives unanimously ordered a memorial volume to be published comprising a biography of Mr. Smull, and the proceedings had in that body relating thereto. Mr. Smull never married, and at his death his estate went to a cousin, who died shortly after, and to his brother, William Paul Smull.

GEORGE SMULLER.

George Smuller, son of John Smuller (1780-1840) and Susanna Shirtz (1782-1864), was born Oct. 7, 1805, at Jonestown, Lebanon Co., Pa. He acquired a fair English education in the schools of his day, and in early life followed the occupation of a tailor. He subsequently became extensively engaged in the lumber business with the Union Canal Company, and a contractor in the public works of the State. He was afterwards appointed collector of tolls in the Union Canal at Middletown, a position he filled many years, resigning in 1857, when he was elected president of the Middletown Bank. As first officer of that institution, Mr. Smuller won for himself the highest confidence in the community, which he retained down to the close of his busy and active life. He died at Middletown, on the 19th of August, 1882, aged almost seventy-seven years. Few men stood higher in any community than he. His life was characterized by great goodness of heart and true nobleness of soul, which won for him the love and esteem of his fellow-men and neighbors. Mr. Smuller married Caroline Fisher, daughter of Dr. Karl and Mary Fisher, of Middletown, born 1805, at Middletown, died Jan. 5, 1870. Their children were Lehman, d. s. p.; Mary; Elizabeth, married George F. Mish, M.D.; Annie G., married Henry J. Meily; Ellen, married David G. Swartz, of Chicago; and Caroline.

REV. JAMES SNODGRASS.

James Snodgrass, the son of Benjamin Snodgrass, was born near Doylestown, Bucks Co., Pa., July 23, 1763. His grandfather came from the north of Ireland about the year 1700, locating in Bucks County, Pa. He graduated at the University of Pennsylvania in 1783, and was for a brief time a tutor therein. He studied theology under direction of the Rev. Nathaniel Irwin, then pastor of the church at Neshaminy, and was licensed to preach the gospel by the Presbytery of Philadelphia in December, 1785. After preaching about a year and a half in destitute places in the central and northern part of New York, on the 16th of October, 1787, he accepted the call of the Hanover congregation of May previous, and until his ordination on the 13th of May, 1788, he gave his attention to that church. At his installation there were present of the Presbytery of Carlisle the revered and honored ministers Revs. John Elder, John Hoge, John Linn, John Craighead, Robert Cooper, and Samuel Waugh. His pastorate extended over a period of fifty-eight years, and he was the last who ministered at Hanover. His death occurred July 2, 1846, and he lies interred in old Hanover Church graveyard. The Rev. Snodgrass was twice married. His first wife, Martha, born Nov. 12, 1760, died Dec. 20, 1828; his second wife, Nancy, born in 1770, died Jan. 24, 1839, and are both interred in the same graveyard.

REV. JAMES SNODGRASS.

CHARLES A. SNYDER.

Charles Albright Snyder, son of Simon Snyder and Catharine Michael, was born May 29, 1799, at Selinsgrove, Pa. His grandfather, Simon Snyder, was an emigrant from Moravia, while his mother's father was Eberhart Michael, a prominent personage in the early history of Lancaster County. Charles A. was educated by private tutors, and early in life began contracting. In 1837 he was one of a partnership in the building of the West Feliciana Railroad in Mississippi and Louisiana. For several years he was a clerk in the prothonotary's office at Sunbury and afterwards at Harrisburg. In the latter part of his life he was a justice of the peace, alderman, United States commissioner, and a notary public. He died at Harrisburg on the 8th of November, 1868, aged sixty-nine years. Mr. Snyder was a good land-lawyer and had a very extensive knowledge of land titles in Pennsylvania, and was often sought by prominent members of the bar in consultation on such subjects. He owned considerable bodies of coal land, which have now become valuable, but which he was compelled to part with because of the slowness of internal improvements; was interested in the copper- and nickel-mines of Lancaster, Pa., and Connecticut; developed the first cannel-coal mines in Missouri; was pioneer in such early enterprises, which always turned out disastrous at the time, but as the country improved, and modern appliances and new inventions came in vogue turned out well. In fact, he was too far in advance of the times. Mr. Snyder married, in 1828, Barbara Keller, daughter of John Keller, and their children were Catharine (married B. F. Etter), Edward, Eugene, Mary, Emma (married Dr. George H. Markley), Charles, Simon, and John Keller, the two latter deceased.

REV. HENRY G. STECHER.

Henry G. Stecher, son of George Stecher, was born July 16, 1792, near Easton, Northampton Co., Pa. Received an academical and collegiate education; and began the study of theology at Easton. He was ordained pastor of the Lutheran Church at Logansville, York Co., Pa., in 1819, and served that congregation faithfully until 1830, when he accepted a call to the church at Hummelstown. His charge included other congregations, and he was as energetic in his devotion to the wants of his widely-scattered flocks as he was earnest in his expounding of religious truths. He was well educated, a profound theologian, and of an exceeding amiableness of character. In April, 1854, he resigned his charge, owing to advancing years and physical inability. From that point until the close of his life he resided at Hummelstown, surrounded by all the charms of the domestic circle of a good man. He died there on the 20th of April, 1870. Rev. Mr. Stecher married Juliana Fouse, daughter of George Fouse, and who survives in her eighty-sixth year. They had children as follows: Mary Ann (died at seventeen); Adeline (married Henry L. Hummel, of Hummelstown); Julianna (died 1881; married David Zacharias, of Reading, and left issue); Amanda (married John Fisher, of Middletown); Albert (married Rebecca Groom, of York County); Theodore A. (was educated at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, with the intention of entering the ministry; about 1860 went into the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company at Altoona, under Engineer Herman Haupt; subsequently transferred to general ticket agent at Philadelphia, which position he filled creditably until his death in 1880, which took place at Ardmore, near Philadelphia); George (married Bell Haines, of Philadelphia), Sarah (d. s. p.); Caroline; Frank B.

DAVID UMBERGER, M.D.

David Umberger, son of John Umberger and Margaret Elizabeth Wenrick, was born Dec. 26, 1796, in Lower Paxtang township. His early life was passed in the mercantile business at Harrisburg, where he subsequently studied medicine with Dr. Martin Luther. He attended medical lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated in 1823. He commenced the practice of medicine the same year at Elizabethtown, Lancaster Co., thence to Dauphin County in 1827, to Lebanon County in 1837, and in 1845 returned to his native county, locating at Linglestown, where he successfully pursued his profession until old age prevented. In 1842, Dr. Umberger was the Democratic candidate for Congress in the district composed of the counties of Dauphin, Lebanon, and Schuylkill, and although defeated, his party being in a minority, received a vote especially gratifying. He died at the residence of his son in Dauphin, on the 29th of July, 1874. Dr. Umberger married March, 1823, Juliet Roberts, born 1804, died Dec. 6, 1862, daughter of John Roberts, of Washington County, Pa., and sister of Dr. Edmund W. Roberts, of Harrisburg.

JAMES C. VERBEKE, M.D.

James C. Verbeke was born in Holland, in the year 1785. His father was a native of that country, and his mother was born in Yorkshire, England. The son was educated for the ministry, but afterwards studied medicine at the University at Leyden, where the two degrees, Doctor of Medicine and of Pharmacy, were conferred upon him. After finishing his course he entered the French army as physician, and through the efforts of his father was assigned to the regiment commanded by Col. Lehmanowsky, a friend and acquaintance, with the request that he should have a watchful care over him. The doctor remained with the regiment in all its memorable campaigns, being always employed in the provisional military hospitals, performing the duties of the two branches of the profession only, as persons were not allowed to practice more than such as was inseparable from the other, so that each might thoroughly understand his calling, and be enabled to gain a livelihood. In consequence of this condition of things he never was on the field of battle, but was always engaged in administering to the sick. Even at the battle of Waterloo, when the hospital was taken and retaken six times in one day by the English and French, he saw nothing of the fight. After that sanguinary and decisive conflict, when the star of Napoleon had set, he entered the Dutch navy as a physician, on board a man-of-war, where he remained two years, and then resigned. Afterwards being detected in a plot, in which Col. Lehmanowsky was engaged also, to carry off Napoleon from St. Helena, they had to flee the country, when he was helped by friends to reach England, and was engaged by the celebrated Scotch navigator, John Arrowsmith, as physician on board his vessel, then about making a trip to America, which landed at Philadelphia in 1817. The port physician, Dr. Perkins, after examining his letters of references and his diploma, immediately gave him a situation as clerk in his drug-store. Miss Gertrude Kemmelar, having come to America to visit a brother, and landing at Philadelphia, she chanced to call at the drug-store, on Second Street, near Callowhill, with a prescription, when, both coming from the same country, and the doctor being addressed in his own language, an acquaintance was formed, and in 1818 they were married at the house of John Dillinger, a friend, with whose family Miss Kemmelar stopped. In the year 1819 they removed to Harrisburg, where the doctor opened a drug-store on Market Square, in the house of John Norton, and practiced medicine in the country and all the surrounding towns, traveling as far as Halifax, Middletown, and other places, on horseback, through which he became universally known by every one, some of the oldest inhabitants still remembering him. After a few years of practice, he relinquished it, to enter into other business, and was successful in gaining a considerable estate. Mrs. Verbeke died in 1855, and Dr. Verbeke in 1856, leaving two children, William K. and Margaretta Dillinger, married Theophilus Fenn. *

CAPT. THOMAS WALKER.

Thomas Walker, son of James Walker and Barbara McArthur, was born in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa., about 1780. He was brought up a farmer, learned surveying, and was deputy surveyor of the county of Dauphin from October, 1804, to April 20, 1809. About the year 1810 he removed to Harrisburg and began merchandising. He was captain of the "Harrisburg Volunteers" who in 1814 marched to the defense of Baltimore. He was appointed by Governor Hiester prothonotary of the county March 10, 1821, which he held until Jan. 17, 1824. He was elected sheriff the latter year, commissioned Oct. 18, 1824. He died on the 19th of March, 1843, in the sixty-fourth year of his age, and is buried in Paxtang Church graveyard. Capt. Walker was an ardent patriot, a popular officer, and an active, enterprising citizen.

CAPT. BENJAMIN WALLACE.

The families of Wallace who settled in the Swatara region of Pennsylvania emigrated from County Antrim, province of Ulster, Ireland, and made location on Swatara, Manada, Beaver, and Bow Creeks between the years 1738 and 1743. The ancestor of Benjamin Wallace was James, who married before he emigrated (1737-38), and located on the Swatara. He was driven from his home by the Indians in 1756. In 1759 he was again upon his farm, as appears by his receipts for taxes. Benjamin was born in 1738, at the time of the raid about eighteen years of age, and as his father's refuge was "the Irish settlements near the Delaware," his son formed such acquaintance there as led him to choose two of his three wives from the daughters of his father's friends. He married first, in 1741, Letitia, who was daughter of John, who was son of James Ralston and Mary Cummock, of Northampton County. She dying, left one child, Mary Wallace, who married James B. Wilson, of Hanover. They removed to Erie about 1800. She died there in 1844, at the age of eighty-three. Capt. Wallace married secondly, in 1767, Elizabeth, daughter of John Culbertson and Ann McNair. When the Revolution occurred, Mr. Wallace entered with the spirit of his race. He held a command in the battle of Long Island, was taken prisoner at Fort Washington in November, 1776, captive for nearly a year, when he was exchanged and returned to his family. In December, 1777, he makes application for the discharge of his brother, Michael Wallace, who had been "put under guard" for the reason that he had obtained "a warrant for a substitute in Boyd's battalion for abuse." The Supreme Executive Council granted the application and discharged his brother. In what this "abuse" consisted we are not informed. We do not further hear of him in public or private life until 1780, when he was appointed a magistrate. In the affairs of the Hanover Church, on Bow Creek, he appears to have taken a deep interest, as his name is found upon nearly all the papers relating to it from 1783 to 1792. In 1785, upon the formation of Dauphin County, he was appointed one of the judges. He retained this station until the adoption of the Constitution of 1790, when the mode of constituting courts was changed. He, however, continued in the commission of the peace until his death.

Judge Wallace died Dec. 8, 1803, and is buried in Hanover graveyard on Bow Creek. He was taught the trade of wheelwright. The fathers of one hundred years ago never omitted training their sons in some useful avocation.

REV. BENJAMIN J. WALLACE, D.D.

Benjamin John Wallace, son of William Wallace, son of Benjamin and Eleanor Maclay, daughter of William Maclay, was born at Harrisburg, January, 1810. His father dying when he was only six years of age, he was left to the care of an amiable and excellent mother, whose early training fitted him for the position he occupied with so much success in his maturity. When of suitable age he became a pupil in the Harrisburg Academy. That institution was then in charge of able instructors. The culture he received at this school fitted him for admission to the United States Military Academy at West Point, where he was rapidly gaining a foremost place, when his heart convinced him that a higher avocation was to be his calling. He left West Point, was prepared for Princeton College and the ministry of the Presbyterian Church, under the care of Rev. John Hutchinson, of Millintown, a former tutor in the Harrisburg Academy. After graduating with high honor he was licensed to preach, and was called at once to a Western charge. The degree of Doctor of Divinity was conferred upon him by his alma mater. His elegance as a writer and eloquence as a speaker soon brought him into great prominence in his denomination and in all religious circles, so that when the Presbyterian Quarterly, the organ of the "New School," was projected he was at once selected as its editor. His brilliance of style gave character to this publication, and as long as he lived it was a prosperous and popular publication. Mr. Wallace was pastor of churches in Pittsburgh, York, at other points, president and professor of Delaware College, at Newark, in that State.

Unfortunately for his fame as an author, his literary productions are scattered throughout the ephemeral publications of his time. It need not be repeated that both as speaker and writer he was captivating and graceful, of fine stature and polished address, in society one of the most entertaining of a long roll of able men, whose cultivated minds directed the thoughts of the generation of which Dr. Wallace was so distinguished an ornament.

He married, at Pittsburgh, Nov. 5, 1852, Sarah Cochran, daughter of George Cochran (of Richard). Dr. Wallace died in Philadelphia in 1862, at the age of fifty-two years, and was buried there. His widow survived until 1869, when she died at Pittsburgh.

GEN. JAMES WALLACE.

James Wallace, son of Robert and Mary Wallace, was born in 1750, in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) County, Pa. He received a good English and classical education at Philadelphia; but at the death of his father remained upon the ancestral farm in Hanover, where he resided until the close of his active and busy life. In the war for independence, he was a member of Capt. William Brown's company, in actual service during the vigorous campaigns in and around Philadelphia and in the Jerseys. In 1779 he commanded a company of rangers for frontier service, and at the close of the war was major of a battalion of associators. In the subsequent military organizations, as directed by the State and national governments, he rose to be brigadier-general of the militia, and is thus distinguished. He served as one of the commissioners of the county from 1799 to 1801; was elected to the House of Representatives of the State Assembly, serving from 1806 to 1810. He was chosen to the Fourteenth, Fifteenth, and Sixteenth Congresses of the United States, and was distinguished in that body, not so much for his eloquence in debate, but for his practical common sense and remarkable executive ability. Having served six years faithfully, to the regret of his constituents he declined a renomination, and retired to the quiet of farm life, where he spent the evening of his days.

Gen. Wallace died Dec. 17, 1823, in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., and is interred in old Hanover Church graveyard.

JOSEPH WALLACE.

Joseph Wallace, son of James Wallace and Rachel Elder, was born 29th March, 1786, in now Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He received a good English education, and about the year 1809 or 1810 we find him the manager of New Market Forge, Lebanon Co., for John Elder; subsequently employed at Hope Furnace, Lancaster Co. He removed to Harrisburg prior to 1812, and with Joshua Elder entered into mercantile life; afterwards in business alone for many years. In the War of 1812-14 he volunteered with the Harrisburg Artillerists, and marched as far as York. His itinerancy we have given elsewhere, it being the only one preserved us. He served in the Borough Council, and was borough treasurer a long term of years. He was quite prominent as an anti-Mason, having been chairman of the State Committee during the Ritner campaign, and afterwards appointed deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth under that administration. For many years he was secretary and treasurer of the Harrisburg Bridge Company, of the Middletown Turnpike Company, and Peter's Mountain Turnpike Company. Mr. Wallace died at Harrisburg, Feb. 22, 1867, in the eighty-first year of his age. He was a gentleman of high moral character and worth, greatly esteemed in the community, and ever enjoyed their confidence and respect. Mr. Wallace married, May 28, 1816, Sarah Evans Cummins (born Jan. 16, 1787, in Centre County, Pa., died Aug. 21, 1858, at Harrisburg), daughter of Joseph Cummins and Sarah Evans, and they had six children.

WILLIAM WALLACE.

William Wallace, the eldest son of Benjamin Wallace and Elizabeth Culbertson, was born in Hanover township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa., in October, 1768. He received a classical education, graduated at Dickinson College, studied law at Harrisburg under Galbraith Patterson, and was admitted to the bar at the June term, 1792. He became interested in the Harrisburg and Presque' Isle Land Company, and about 1800 removed to Erie, in the affairs of which place and in the organization of the county he took an active and leading part. About 1810 he returned to Harrisburg, and partly resumed his profession. Besides being a member of the bar he was a partner of his brother-in-law, John Lyon, at Pennsylvania Furnace. He was nominated by the Federalists for Congress in 1813, but was defeated. He was elected the first president of the old Harrisburg Bank, and was Burgess of the borough at his death, which occurred on Tuesday, May 28, 1816. His remains are interred in Paxtang Church graveyard. Although actively engaged in business, it did not destroy his social life. To his friends his house was always open. None of these were more welcome than his brethren of the legal profession. In those days there was a good deal of circuit-traveling by lawyers. Members of the Lancaster and Carlisle bars practiced at Harrisburg as well as at their homes. Many of these were frequent visitors at Mr. Wallace's house. Chief among these was Chief Justice Gibson. He and Mr. Wallace had become friends when the latter was a student at Dickinson College, and their friendship continued until his death. He was a polite, urbane man, of slight frame and precise address. Mr. Wallace was twice married, first, in 1803, to Rachel Forrest, daughter of Dr. Andrew Forrest, of Harrisburg; she died at Erie in 1804. He married, secondly, in 1806, Eleanor Maclay, daughter of Hon. William Maclay, who died at Harrisburg in 1823. Mrs. Eleanor Maclay Wallace was a woman of fine talents and great force of character. As a young lady, she had gone with her father to the capital, and acted as his private secretary. While she enjoyed society, she was more deeply interested in the political questions which came before the first Congress for settlement. It was in harmony with those early tastes that after her marriage she read more than one elementary work in her husband's legal library. She was a woman of profound piety, of fine social qualities, and of notable gifts and attainments of mind.

REV. BEVERLY R. WAUGH, A.M.

Beverly Roberts Waugh, son of Right Rev. Beverly Waugh, of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and Catharine Bushby, was born at Liberty, Md., July 16, 1824. He received a thorough English and classical education, and entered Dickinson College, where he graduated. His alma mater subsequently conferred upon him the degree of A.M. Mr. Waugh was licensed to preach by the Baltimore Conference, but accepted the position of Professor of Mathematics and English Literature in the Baltimore Female College, an institution then in the full tide of success. In 1853 the trustees of the Pennsylvania Female College at Harrisburg secured him as principal of that institution, in which position he labored faithfully and successfully to the day of his death. It was not alone in the capacity of teacher that Mr. Waugh devoted his energies and talents, but his labors were varied, incessant, faithful, in season and out of season, for the good of humanity. His devoted Christian life-work ended on the 24th of March, 1861, in his thirty-seventh year. He married, in 1853, Sarah S., daughter of George Beatty, Esq., of Harrisburg, who, with a daughter (Eliza B., married Charles A. Kunke), survive. Mr. Waugh published several discourses.

JAMES W. WEIR.

James Wallace Weir, youngest son of Samuel Weir and Mary Wallace, was born Aug. 9, 1805, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a good education, excelled as a scholar, and his taste for study and reading drew him towards the printing-office. He learned the art with John S. Wiestling, and after his apprenticeship spent some time in the printing-house of the Messrs. Johnson, of Philadelphia. On the 26th of November, 1833, having been chosen teller of the Harrisburg Bank, he accepted that position, holding it until Oct. 30, 1844, when he was chosen cashier of the bank. When the institution became a national bank in 1874, he was unanimously elected its cashier, which office he held until his death, which occurred at Harrisburg on Thursday, March 14, 1878, having been connected with the bank for over forty-four years. As a bank officer and a financier he gained an enviable distinction for his uniform courtesy, for unimpeachable integrity, and for ability of the highest order. Few bankers in the commonwealth can present a record equal to his in years of service, in successful administration of affairs through financial trouble, and for such rigid honesty. But not alone as a banker was he distinguished. He was gifted with rare social qualities and a graceful wit, which made him one of the most companionable of men. In movements for the reformation of society he was always foremost, not only giving his time and labor, but contributing freely of his means to the accomplishment of what he thought a philanthropic purpose. To the poor and lowly he was always a kind and true friend, and his charities, though not ostentatious, were made with a free and open hand. His literary taste and ability were of high order, and he frequently wrote for the press; was the author of several religious tracts, published by the American Sunday-School Union. In 1838 appeared a small volume, "Manual of Prayer," which was published with an introduction by Rev. Albert Barnes, of Philadelphia. In 1854 "The Closet Companion" appeared, and passed through several editions. In the Presbyterian Church, of which he was many years an elder, as in every walk and pursuit in life, he was active, energetic, consistent, pure in character, and lofty in purpose.

JOHN A. WEIR.

John Andrew Weir, second son of Samuel Weir (1744-1820) and Mary Wallace (1765-1836), was born at Harrisburg, Pa., Jan. 10, 1802. He was educated in the private schools of the town and at the Harrisburg Academy. He learned coach-making, and subsequently went into the hardware business, which he continued a number of years, afterwards connecting with it the drug trade, taking into partnership his nephew, D. W. Gross. During the administration of Governor Ritner he served as a clerk in the office of the Secretary of the Commonwealth. In 1840 he was elected prothonotary of Dauphin County, a position he filled two terms (six years). While serving in this office he was chosen a director of the Harrisburg Bank, and afterwards became teller in that institution, in which capacity he continued until 1880. While performing these duties, he was treasurer of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg from its first establishment in 1850 to 1880. For nearly fifty years he was an elder in the First Presbyterian Church of Harrisburg, and took a warm interest in the promotion of the Sunday-school system. He was one of the first, firmest, and influential friends of the anti-slavery cause in Dauphin County. Mr. Weir died at Harrisburg, Oct. 10, 1881; he was twice married, first to Catharine Wiestling, second to Mary Matilda Fahnestock, having issue by each wife. Mr. Weir was universally esteemed by the citizens of his native city. No man had a more unullied reputation or a purer personal record. "Uprightness, benevolence, energy, geniality, courage in duty, fidelity in earth's various relations, all sanctified and adorned by the Christian religion, eminently marked his well-rounded character."

CAPT. SAMUEL WEIR.

Samuel Weir, the eldest son of James Weir, was born near Ballymoney, County Antrim, Ireland, Sept. 29, 1744. He came to America in 1775, and located in the township of Derry, Dauphin Co., Pa. A year subsequently we find him in the army of the Revolution as lieutenant of infantry, rendering important service at Trenton, Princeton, Brandywine, and Germantown. At the close of the war he removed to a farm he purchased near Harrisburg, but shortly after, in 1787, began merchandising in that town, and became one of the most prominent business men of the borough. He assisted in organizing the Presbyterian Church at Harrisburg, and was one of its first ruling elders. He died at Harrisburg on the 15th of August, 1820. He was twice married. By his first wife he had James, who died young; and by his second wife he had Samuel (who removed to South Carolina), John, Andrew, and James Wallace. Mr. Weir, says Rev. Dr. Robinson, "was always esteemed to be a man of probity and honor. In the church he was very active, and greatly devoted to its interests."

ADAM WEISE.

Adam Weise, son of John George and Eve Weise, was born Dec. 23, 1751, in New Goshenhoppen, Philadelphia (now Montgomery) Co., Pa. His parents soon afterwards removed to Heidelberg township, Berks Co. He received the limited education of frontier times, and learned the trade of a blacksmith. On the 2d of February, 1772, he married Margaret Elizabeth Wingard, of Heidelberg township, Berks Co., and the following year removed to Hagerstown, Md. At the breaking out of the Revolution he entered the service as sergeant in the Maryland cavalry. In 1782, Mr. Weise removed to Upper Paxtang township, and settled on the Wiconisco Creek, on the road now leading from Cross-Roads to Berrysburg. In 1788 he left the valley and located in Bethel township, Berks Co., but about 1796 returned to his old place on the Wiconisco. In 1802 he took up his residence in Millersburg, having previously been appointed by Governor Mifflin a justice of the peace, an office he held over thirty-four years. He erected the third house in the town, and a blacksmith-shop. His first wife dying March 29, 1828, Mr. Weise married in August following Mrs. Mary Kuehly, of Union County, who died on the 10th of September, 1820. In December, that year, he married his third wife, Mrs. Catharine Patton, who survived her husband thirty years. Squire Weise died Oct. 5, 1833, in his eighty-second year, and was interred in David's Reformed Church graveyard. His descendants are scattered over most of the States west of the Alleghenies. Mr. Weise was a faithful officer, and a good citizen.

PETER WENRICK.

Peter Wenrick, son of Francis Wenrick and Elizabeth Greiger, was born in 1773, near Linglestown, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father's family came from Germany and settled in what is now Lebanon County, Francis Wenrick subsequently removing to near Linglestown, where most of his family were born. Francis Wenrick was a soldier of the Revolution, had been at Brandywine and Germantown, and on the frontiers against the Indians subsequent to the massacre of Wyoming. He died about 1785, and with his wife Elizabeth Greiger (died February, 1797) was buried in Wenrick's Church graveyard. He had beside sons (Peter and Philip) several daughters. Peter Wenrick received a comparatively limited education, brought up on his father's farm, which he continued to occupy until his election to the sheriffalty, when he removed to Harrisburg. He served in that office from Oct. 19, 1818, to Oct. 16, 1821, and was always considered a faithful and efficient officer. He died at Harrisburg, Feb. 27, 1825, in the fifty-second year of his age. Mr. Wenrick married, Feb. 2, 1796, Susannah Umberger, daughter of John Umberger, and their children were John, Peter, Samuel, Francis, David, Joseph, Mary (married — Sheaffer), Elizabeth (married — Minshall), Susannah (married — Sloan), Sarah (married — Scott), and Rebecca (married — Umberger).

GEORGE WHITEHILL.

George Whitehill, the son of John Whitehill, was born in Donegal township, Lancaster Co., in the year 1760. His father purchased land in Paxtang prior to the Revolution and removed thither. He received a good education, and entered mercantile pursuits. He began the hardware business at Harrisburg about 1800, and was quite successful. He was appointed by Governor Snyder one of the associate judges of the county of Dauphin, Oct. 20, 1817, but on the 30th of July, 1818, with his colleague, Obed Fahnestock, resigned, owing to the commissioning of Judge Franks as president of the court by Governor Findlay that year. Judge Whitehill died at Harrisburg on the 7th of January, 1821. His wife, Abigail, born in 1762, died April 12, 1825. They are both buried in Paxtang Church graveyard.

CAPT. MICHAEL WHITLEY.

Michael Whitley was born in 1730, in the North of Ireland. He came to America when a young man, and settled in what was then Paxtang township, Lancaster Co. He was a farmer by occupation, and was in good circumstances when the war of the Revolution aroused the war-eagles on the Susquehanna. He raised a company of associators for Col. Robert Elder's battalion, and was in active service in the Jersey campaign of 1776, and the battles of Brandywine and Germantown. On the 6th of December, 1777, he was severely wounded in a skirmish at Chestnut Hill, taken prisoner, and died a few days thereafter at Philadelphia. Capt. Whitley was a brave and gallant officer, and the commendations of his superior officers show how highly he was esteemed. He left a wife, Martha, who died in Paxtang, Nov. 11, 1813, aged about ninety years, and children as follows: Michael, born 1758; died Jan. 14, 1843; a soldier of the Revolution, "passed through a long life, a highly respected and beloved citizen." William married, and had Michael, married Jean Simonton; and John, removed to Lewisburg, Union Co., Pa. Sarah, Elizabeth, married John Ward, of Paxtang, and had Michael; Sarah, married Robert Simmons; — married Dr. Price; Amelia; and Mary, married — Storms. Mary, died unmarried. Jean, died unmarried. Margery (Martha), married — McKinley.

SAMUEL C. WIESTLING, M.D.

Samuel Christopher Wiestling was born at Oschatz, in the Canton or District of Meisichen, on the 4th of June, 1760, during a visit of his mother to her parents. The home of his parents was Colba, on the river Saale, in Lower Saxony. Inasmuch as the military law of Prussia required all Prussian officers and citizens to have the name of every child recorded in the church-book of the town wherein it was born, this was done in his case. The record was also made in the military canton-book or soldiers' roll of Oschatz. He was baptized soon after, his sponsors being Samuel Ludwig Goldman, Christopher Henry Ahren, and Mrs. Catherine Elizabeth Wiestling, all residents of Colba. His parents were Christopher Martin Wiestling and Dorothea Elizabeth (Goldman) Wiestling. His father, who held the office of secretary of Colba, and was widely known, died in 1769. The widow afterwards married Michael Horst, a justice of the peace, of Acken, on the river Elba, in whom Samuel found a kind parent; was sent to school, and carefully educated. Subsequently, being influenced and guided by the counsel of his preceptors, Herr Ruprecht and his brother-in-law, the Honorable Inspector Gehring, his step-father persuaded him to study theology, and through the recommendation of those mentioned he was received into the Hallische Weisenhaus. But this life was irksome to him, and unsuited to the natural bent of his mind, and, becoming discontented, he returned to his home at Colba.

In April, 1774, he was placed under the instruction of the State Surgeon and "Land Physician," Dr. Unger, but the doctor having died on the 1st of May, 1776, he with a good recommendation went to Halle and put himself under the care and tuition of Field-Surgeon Ollenroth, with whom he remained until 1778. This gentleman very kindly secured for him regular college privileges, under Professors Mäkel, Nestsy, Dr. Younghaus, and others. As war broke out about this time between the Emperor Joseph and King Frederick II.—the bone of contention being Bayern,—and a part of the Prussian army being stationed in Alsace, under Prince Henry, he was recommended by his principal for the position of lazar-surgeon, and was accordingly examined and appointed on June 3, 1778.

On July the 1st, the army marched to Dresden, and the field hospital was removed to Thorgan. In the beginning of October he was taken sick, in consequence of which he obtained leave to return home. On recovering his health, in November, he went to Halle and resumed his studies under the professors already named until the year 1779, when he went to Dresden for the purpose of continuing his studies in anatomy in the then existing preparatory institute, under the care of the Elector's counselor, Pietenchen. Here the branches of anatomy, physiology, physics, materia medica, chemistry, pathology, and therapeutics were as thoroughly taught by Dr. Hoffrath and Professors Meiden and Thomriane as they were in Halle; but botany was neglected, though surgery was also thoroughly taught by the general surgeon, Wilde. In the spring of 1780 he went to Berlin to prosecute, under the Berlin State accoucheur, Dr. Hagan, his studies in obstetrics, which he had already commenced at Halle, under Catenius, Loesicke, Schmucker, and Thedus. He remained during the summer in a private college of medicine, chirurgery, and anatomy.

In October of the same year he returned to Dresden, to visit the preparatory school of anatomy. In April of the following year he went to Amsterdam, to visit John Herman Osterdyke, who had been his intimate friend in Halle, and who was now a doctor of medicine in Amsterdam. This afforded him an opportunity to visit the Land and Sea Hospital located there, and also the Amsterdam College of Medicine and Surgery, of which Dr. Herman Gerhard Osterdyke, the father of his friend, was the president. Through the kindness of the general surgeon of the hospital, the Hon. B. Hasson, he had free access to the Gast-Huys. His friend going to Halle to hold his "Inaugural Disputations," in order to the promoting, under the supervision of Dr. Leopold Osterdyke, and at his earnest persuasion he gladly accompanied him. He remained in Halle until April, 1782, when he returned to Amsterdam, where he attended the Hospital and College of Medicine and Surgery until June of 1782, when he was appointed to a position as navy doctor and surgeon, he having passed a creditable examination before the Committee of the Honorable Board of Admiralty.

At this time an expedition started out from the Netherlands to America, under the ambassador from Holland, with two ships laden with linen, a frigate, and a cutter. He was ordered to duty on this expedition as navy surgeon. He set sail on June 4, 1783, with a favoring wind. His record says, "We left Texel, and on Oct. 4, 1783, we reached the port of Chester on the Delaware, in Delaware County and State of Pennsylvania. The voyage was not all smooth sailing, as we encountered high winds and rough seas. Indeed, on one occasion one of the vessels came very near swamping and emptying us all out into the sea. However, with hard work, good management, and the interposition of a kind Providence we kept above water and arrived safely on terra firma."

As it was obligatory upon all students and artisans in Germany to travel and see the world before they could pursue the practice of their chosen profession or trade, our young doctor concluded to see something of the New World before returning. He accordingly left the vessel in company with a friend by the name of Godfrey Fritchey, and started on foot on a tour of observation. They traversed Middle Pennsylvania, which was not then, as now, "the garden spot of the world," but was sparsely settled, and the whole country deeply impressed with the desolation and devastation consequent upon the Revolutionary war. Visions of the "home beyond the sea," however, beckoned them to return, and they turned their footsteps towards Philadelphia with a view of finding a vessel to carry them home.

At the Trappe, in Montgomery County, in Pennsylvania, they fell in with a gentleman by the name of Messemor or Minsker, who was proprietor of an inn at that place, who, learning that the subject of this sketch was a thoroughly-educated German physician, succeeded in persuading him to tarry with him, as he had a sick wife, who had been bedridden for a long time, and upon whom he had expended quite a sum of money to physicians, to little or no purpose. This was an episode in his life that shaped his destiny for the future. This man offered to pay him twenty dollars in hand, with his boarding for self and friend, and find the medicine. He regarded this a good and advantageous offer, under the peculiar circumstances, and accepted it. The case was a serious and obstinate one, and although it baffled others, he was entirely successful, and this fortunate turn of affairs afterwards proved to be the foundation of a large and paying practice at the Trappe. About 1785 he married Miss Anna Maria Bucher, and his friend Fritchey married a sister.

About the year 1792 or 1793 he, with his family and that of his father-in-law, removed to Dauphin County, locating on farms along the Blue Mountain, on the road leading from the Susquehanna River to Linglestown. His new home was about two miles from the river and five miles from the city of Harrisburg, in now Susquehanna township. Here he continued in pursuit of his profession (while his wife superintended the farm) until the spring of 1811, when they removed to the town of Harrisburg, where his practice greatly increased until the year 1817, when he was stricken with paralysis, which terminated his medical career. He died April 20, 1823, in the sixty-third year of his age, thus ending a life of active usefulness, respected by all who knew him. He left eleven descendants,—seven sons and four daughters. Two of his sons—Samuel C. Wiestling and Joshua M. Wiestling—were in the profession when he died, and one studied medicine after his death, to wit, Benjamin J., who is still in practice in Middletown, Dauphin Co., Pa. The children who survived him were: John S. Wiestling, Anna Maria (intermarried with Abraham Gross), Samuel C. Wiestling, M.D., Rev. Jacob H. Wiestling, Eliz. Dorothy (intermarried with Norman Callender), Joshua Martin Wiestling, M.D., Frederick Wiestling, Sarah (intermarried with Rev. Henry Wagner), Benjamin Wiestling, M.D., George P. Wiestling, and Catharine (intermarried with John A. Weir). *

JOSHUA M. WIESTLING.

Joshua Martin Wiestling, son of Dr. Samuel Christopher Wiestling, Sr., and his wife, Anna Maria Bucher, was born on the 28th day of February, A.D. 1797, on his father's farm, at the foot of the Kittochtinny or Blue Mountains, about five miles from Harrisburg, in Susquehanna township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was baptized at Shoop's Church, in Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., by the Rev. Christian H. Kurtz. In the year 1811, being then of the age of fourteen years, he moved with his parents into the town of Harrisburg, where he continued to reside until his death. Although afforded but limited facilities of acquiring an education by attending the schools of that period, yet, having the advantage of the instructions of his father, who was a man of thorough education and culture, and being himself an indefatigable student, reading and studying whenever and however the opportunity presented. He grew to manhood with his naturally fine mental endowments admirably cultivated, and liberally developed. Of studious habits and love of knowledge, these characteristics adhered to him throughout his life. A man of original thinking powers, and possessed of mental capacity of a high order, he gave, notwithstanding an extensive and laborious medical practice, diligent investigation to all the leading questions of the day, and careful study in the wide and diversified field of general knowledge. He was consequently upon all the leading subjects of information a natural scholar, and throughout his whole life was recognized by his fellow-townsmen as in the front rank of general knowledge and a man of very general powers. His special field of usefulness, however, was that of medicine. In his preparation for his profession, his preceptors were his father, Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Sr., and an elder brother, Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Jr., both thoroughly educated physicians of skill and wide experience. He attended the course of medical lectures of the University of Pennsylvania. His father becoming disabled to continue in active practice, by reason of a paralytic stroke in the year 1817, he succeeded him in his profession, first in partnership with his brother, Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Jr., which continued for a few years, and subsequently alone. This was about the year 1821 or 1822. Acquiring a large and extensive practice, both in town and country, he prosecuted the duties of his profession with a degree of faithful devotion and judicious skill, which won for him the admiration and high regard of the medical fraternity and the unlimited confidence of the whole community.

In his religious convictions Dr. Wiestling was well grounded and faithful. While yet a young man he was confirmed into full membership of the Salem Reformed Church, of Chestnut Street, Harrisburg, and in the study and interpretation of Holy Writ relied implicitly upon the teaching and doctrine of the Heidelberg Catechism, the symbol and standard of Reformed faith, and in it he unwaveringly lived and confidently died, cherishing its principles and truths with tenacious fidelity.

In politics Dr. Joshua Wiestling was, as parties were then divided, an ardent Whig, being a great admirer of Henry Clay, and a firm advocate of a protective tariff for the fostering of our diversified resources and industries. In political contests he took a lively interest, and was active and efficient during campaigns, and for a year or more he was the chairman of the Dauphin County Whig Committee, and issued a published address to the voters of the county, in which he discussed the views of the day with logical force and statesmanlike ability.

In stature he was about six feet in height, broad-shouldered, of large head, erect in carriage, full-chested, rather stout in figure and person, and dignified in appearance. He was of a cheerful disposition, affable in his manners, generous in his impulses, of sympathetic and benevolent habits, unselfish and forbearing, and, as a consequence, he was popular throughout his life.

As a practicing physician he had among his students of medicine his younger brother, Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling (who settled in Middletown), Dr. Theodore Hale, and Dr. Jacob G. Wiestling. While engaged in the active duties of his practice, and apparently in the midst of excellent health, Dr. Wiestling died suddenly of apoplexy at his home in Harrisburg, on Sunday, the 15th day of January, A.D. 1854, in the fifty-seventh year of his age. His contemporaries in the practice of medicine in Harrisburg, in their action upon his death, paid this grateful tribute to his memory and worth:

"That in the sudden removal of our worthy brother from his enlarged sphere of usefulness, the profession of medicine loses one of its most zealous votaries, the community at large one of its most able physicians, and the borough of Harrisburg one of its most esteemed and respected citizens. That his moral worth and social qualities in the walks of private life were such as to elicit the esteem and commend the admiration of all those privilege it was to know him."

Dr. Wiestling was married on the 22d day of January, 1824, to Catharine Youse, daughter of George Youse, of Harrisburg.

Dr. Wiestling left surviving him his widow, who died within seven weeks afterwards, six children, to wit: Mary Ellen (intermarried with T. T. Worth, Esq., of Lebanon), Dr. Jacob G. Wiestling (intermarried with Susanna Herr, daughter of Daniel Herr), Catharine (married, first, to James D. Bartholomew, d. s. p., and, second, S. G. Lewis, deceased, with issue), Annie E. Wiestling, Joshua Martin Wiestling (married Georgianna Hoover, of Gettysburg, Pa.), and Julia A. Wiestling (married C. Penrose Sherk, of Lebanon). *

GEORGE P. WIESTLING.

George P. Wiestling, son of Dr. Samuel C. Wiestling, Sr., and Anna Maria Bucher, was born May 4, 1808, in Paxtang (now Susquehanna) township, Dauphin Co., Pa. A few years after, his father located at Harrisburg, where he practiced his profession, and where he died. George P. was educated in the schools of the borough and the Harrisburg Academy. He learned the art of printing with his brother, John S. Wiestling, who edited and published the Pennsylvania Intelligencer. He afterwards worked as a compositor in the different newspaper offices at the State capital. About the year 1842 he established himself in the wood and coal trade, in which he continued down through life, being one of the first to engage in it. For a period of fifty years he was leader of the Reformed Church choir. Having a love for music, and being endowed with fine talents in that direction, he took special delight in their cultivation. He was an active member of the church with which he so long identified himself as its musical leader, and for forty-four years an elder. He was faithful to every trust, honest and upright in all his dealings with the world, earnest and sincere in every good work, and his memory will remain green in the hearts of those who honor him. Mr. Wiestling died at Harrisburg, May 31, 1883, in his seventy-sixth year. He married Margaret Berryhill, daughter of Samuel Berryhill, and their children who survive are Col. George B., of Mont Alto, Franklin Co.; Edward, of Franklin County; Anna Mary, and Ellen.

REV. JACOB H. WIESTLING.

Jacob H. Wiestling, son of Samuel C. Wiestling and Anna Maria Bucher, was born in 1793 in Montgomery County, Pa. He was educated at Harrisburg, studied theology under the Rev. ——— there, and was licensed by the Reformed Synod to preach the gospel in 1812, and about the same time received and accepted a call to Hanover, York Co., Pa., which included three congregations in his charge. Owing to some difficulty with reference to the Manchester congregation, he stood disconnected from the Synod for some years. In 1821 application to that body was made in his behalf, and in the following year he was received. Several other congregations were added to his charge, and his field of labor consisted of five congregations, in which he continued to preach to the end of his life. He died at Hanover, in the year 1826, at the age of thirty-three years, and is buried in the graveyard connected with the Reformed Church at that place. Mr. Wiestling was a man of talent and more than ordinary pulpit abilities. He was conscientious and faithful in the discharge of all his public and private duties, and his piety and moral deportment were of an undoubted and unexceptionable character. Respected and esteemed by the community generally, he was especially beloved by the people of his own charge, among whom he labored with much acceptance.

JOHN PETER WILLIARD.

John Peter Williard was a native of Switzerland, born in 1745. He came to America as a soldier in the British service, but shortly after landing effected his escape. He then volunteered in the cause of the Colonies, and was with other deserters stationed on the Indian frontier or as guard of prisoners of war. At the close of the Revolution he took up a tract of land in Lykens township, called "Amsterdam," where he settled, began farming, and subsequently married. He died in 1821, at the age of seventy-six. His wife died the following year (1822), aged seventy-seven. They left the following family: Adam, who came into possession of the homestead. His children, Joseph, John A., Henry B., and Adam, Jr.,

REV. JOHN WINEBRENNER, V.D.M.

then divided the farm. Part of it yet remains in possession of the descendants. Samuel remained in the valley, a farmer and had a large family; Anna Maria married John Philip Umboltz.

CAPT. JAMES WILSON, OF DERRY.

James Wilson, son of Moses and Jean Wilson, was born June 3, 1755, in Derry township, Lancaster (now Dauphin) Co., Pa. He received the best education the country schools then afforded, and spent some time at the college of Philadelphia. He had just returned to the quiet of frontier farm life when the war of the Revolution opened, and in which he took a prominent part. He was an officer in the associated battalions, and was in at least three active campaigns,—that of the Jerseys in 1776, at Brandywine and Germantown in 1777, and on the frontiers against the British and their allies, the Tories and Indians of New York, in 1779. He was a justice of the peace a long time. In 1788 and 1789 he served as one of the commissioners of the county of Dauphin, from 1798 to 1803 represented the county in the State Legislature, and filled other positions of honor and trust. He, however, preferred the quiet of an agricultural life to political office, and it was on his farm that he passed the greater number of his days. He died on the 17th of April, 1835, at fourscore. Mr. Wilson married May 18, 1784, Mary Elder, daughter of Rev. John Elder and Mary Simpson. She was born Jan. 12, 1760, in Paxtang, and died Jan. 31, 1843, at Harrisburg, but with her husband is buried in old Derry Church graveyard. Their daughter, Mary Wilson, married Rev. William Kerr, pastor of Donegal Church.

THOMAS WILSON.

Thomas Wilson, of Scotch-Irish parentage, was born at Philadelphia about 1768. He learned the trade of a printer, was a gentleman of considerable literary attainments, and wrote freely on the subjects of his time for the leading newspapers of his native city. In 1811 he removed to Baltimore, where he conducted a newspaper. In the defense of that city, when attacked by the British in 1814, he enlisted as a private in Capt. James McConkey's company of the Twenty-seventh Regiment of Maryland Volunteers, commanded by Lieut.-Col. Kennedy Long. In 1816, Mr. Wilson returned to Philadelphia, where he became foreman on Mr. Duane's newspaper, The Aurora, contributing also to its columns. He died at Philadelphia about 1828. He married Lydia Oakford, of English parentage, who survived her husband several years. Mr. Wilson was the author of a number of works, the names of only two, however, coming to our knowledge,—“The Biography of the Principal American Military and Naval Heroes, comprehending details of their achievements during the Revolutionary and late Wars,” two vols., published by John Low, 130 Cherry Street, New York, 1821; “The Picture of Philadelphia for 1824,” published by Thomas Town, 38 Chestnut Street, Philadelphia.

THOMAS L. WILSON.

Thomas Low Wilson, the son of Thomas Wilson and Lydia Oakford, was born in Philadelphia, Pa., on the 26th of March, 1800. He learned the art of printing with his father, who was a prominent craftsman in his day. In 1811 his parents removed to Baltimore, where in the defense of that city both father and son enlisted as privates in Capt. James McConkey's company, Twenty-seventh Maryland Regiment. In 1816 the family returned to Philadelphia, where both Wilsons worked on Mr. Duane's Aurora. Subsequently the son went to Washington City to work on the National Intelligencer. In 1828 he published the Intelligencer, Petersburg, Va., where in connection he printed the Lynchburg Democrat in 1837. In 1838, on the recommendation of the veteran editor, Ritchie, he came to Harrisburg as editor of The Reporter, to combat the errors of the Anti-Masonic party. Upon the return of the Democracy to power Mr. Wilson was chosen secretary to the board of canal commissioners, a position he occupied almost uninterruptedly until the abolishment of the canal department in 1859. He served during this period one year as collector of tolls at Middletown, and one year as deputy Secretary of the Commonwealth at the close of Governor Porter's administration. He died at Harrisburg on the 28th of February, 1861. Mr. Wilson married on the 6th of May, 1824, Julianna Margaretta Bender, of Washington City, who survives in her eighty-third year. A gentleman prominent in public affairs thus summarizes the character of Mr. Wilson: “He was an honest man, one of that stern, inflexible, and unbending old-school integrity, which made him die a poor man rather than become a party to unholy plunder from the coffers of the Commonwealth.”

REV. JOHN WINEBRENNER, V.D.M.

John Winebrenner was born in Frederick County, Md., March 24, 1797. He was partly educated at the Glades school in Frederick, and partly at Dickinson College, Carlisle. He studied for the ministry under the Rev. Mr. Helfenstein, in Philadelphia, and was ordained by the Potomac Synod of the Reformed Church in September, 1820, at Hagerstown. That year he was called to the Salem Church at Harrisburg, at the same time ministering to Shoop's, Wenrick's, and the Freiden's churches in the neighborhood. It was during his pastorate that the present church edifice, Third and Chestnut Streets, Harrisburg, was erected. Mr. Winebrenner ministered there from Oct. 22, 1820, to March 23, 1823, when, owing to his religious views on revivals, Sunday-schools, anti-slavery, and the temperance movement, with the allowing of non-ordained persons to preach in his pulpit, becoming obnoxious to his congregation, a separation took place. In a number of pamphlets he issued, Mr. Winebrenner vigorously defended his principles from the attacks made right and left by his opponents; and he did not cease therefore to "preach the world." Subsequently his energies were devoted to the establishment of a new denomination, called by him the Church of God, but known in early years as Winebrennarians. He met with remarkable success, and although but fifty years have passed since the Rev. John Winebrenner promulgated the doctrines of baptism by immersion and the washing of feet, the ministers of that church number probably five hundred, and the membership well on to sixty thousand. Mr. Winebrenner was the author of a number of religious and controversial works, those on "Regeneration," "Brief Views of the Church of God," and a volume of "Practical and Doctrinal Sermons" being the more important. He edited for several years the Gospel Publisher, now the Church Advocate. In the early years of his ministry he was an uncompromising opponent of human slavery. The Rev. Mr. Winebrenner died at Harrisburg, on the 12th of September, 1860, at the age of sixty-three. Over his remains, in the Harrisburg cemetery, the denomination have erected a handsome monument.

NICHOLAS B. WOOD.

Nicholas Baylies Wood, son of James Wood, was a native of Vermont, born April 2, 1792. He was well educated, and came to Harrisburg about 1809, teaching school in the neighborhood. He subsequently took charge of the school of Abiathar Hopkins, who had entered into law partnership with Francis R. Shunk. In the mean time he studied under Mr. Hopkins, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in October, 1818, and soon acquired an extensive practice. He was appointed by Governor Shulze deputy attorney-general for Dauphin County, January, 1824, serving until January, 1827. Mr. Wood died at Harrisburg, Saturday, Sept. 1, 1832, aged thirty-nine years. He was a gentleman of fine abilities, and enjoyed the esteem and confidence of his fellow-citizens. He married, Dec. 5, 1822, Catharine, daughter of Henry Beader, Esq., who survives; and their children were Henry Beader, a lawyer, residing in New Jersey; Alpheus, married and residing in England; and America, married Maj. Henry Sheafer, of Harrisburg.

GOVERNOR GEORGE WOLF.

George Wolf, the son of — Wolf, was born Aug. 12, 1777, in Allen township, Northampton Co., Pa. His father was an emigrant from the Alsatian provinces, Germany. He left two sons,—Philip and George,—who inherited the vigor, good sense, and integrity of the father. George was educated at a classical school established in Northampton County by a society formed for the purpose, which was presided over by Robert Andrews, A.M., a graduate of Trinity College, Dublin. He here acquired a good knowledge of the Latin and Greek languages, and of the sciences usually pursued in a liberal education. Leaving this school, he for a time had the charge of his father's farm, and also acted as principal of the academy in his native township. He soon after entered the prothonotary's office of Northampton County as clerk, and at the same time studied law under the direction of the Hon. John Ross. He early espoused the political principles of Mr. Jefferson, and in 1799 advocated the election of Thomas McKean Governor, the latter being at that time affiliated with the Republicans. When Mr. Jefferson became President he appointed Mr. Wolf postmaster at Easton. Afterwards Governor McKean appointed him clerk of the Orphans' Court of the county, which position he held until 1809. In 1814 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and the year following was a candidate for the Senate, but defeated on account of a division of the party and the formation of a double ticket.

GOVERNOR GEORGE WOLF.

In 1824 he was elected a member of the United States House of Representatives, and was re-elected for the two succeeding terms, having no opposition in the first two elections, and being returned in the latter by a very large majority. While in Congress he acquired the reputation of a hard worker and a conscientious, upright member. He was a pronounced friend to American industry, and labored and voted for those measures which would best protect and foster it and build up the prosperity of the country.

In 1829 he was nominated as candidate for Governor, and was triumphantly elected. He was not an aspirant for the office of Governor. He received the nomination without knowing that any considerable strength in the nominating convention was in his favor. But when the will of the people was declared he abandoned a lucrative practice at the Northampton court and devoted himself unreservedly to the duties of chief magistrate. The State had embarked in gigantic schemes of public improvements designed to connect the Eastern waters with the Western,— traversing that formidable barrier, the Allegheny range,—and the rivers of the centre with Lake Erie and the streams from the north. When he took his seat in the gubernatorial chair he found these works projected and in various stages of progress. An immense debt had been contracted, and before these expenditures could be made to realize anything the sum must be doubled and quadrupled. The finances were in a deplorable condition. The credit of the State was at so low an ebb that capitalists were unwilling to place their money in the hands of the commonwealth. In this emergency it became necessary to resort to a compulsory loan from the banks whose charters required them to lend to the State. It was at this period that Governor Wolf came into office. The outlook was most gloomy, and to a Governor who should have figured to himself a rule of ease and enjoyment would have afforded little promise. There were two courses for him to pursue, either break down the system of improvements, throw away the most of what had been expended, and allow the State to languish on with paralyzed industry, or by a bold and vastly expensive policy finish what had been begun, even with the certainty of contracting an enormous debt for future generations to liquidate. He resolutely took the responsibility of the latter course, and he had no sooner come to the executive chair than he addressed to the Legislature, in his message, a recommendation for the vigorous prosecution of the public works, and the adoption of a system of taxation by which adequate funds would be realized for regularly paying the interest on past loans and such as in the future might be negotiated. The independent attitude assumed by the Governor had a magical effect. The caviller was silenced, and the popular will secured.

The most substantial and enduring merit of Governor Wolf was evinced in his advocacy of a system of popular education, and to him is largely due the honor of its adoption. In compliance with the judicious recommendation of the Governor, "by great industry, assiduity, and perseverance a mass of valuable information was obtained, which unfolded a fund of knowledge in relation to the advantages, the utility, the cheapness, in short, the decided preference which a system of common schools, of general interest, and sustained and encouraged by the public bounty, maintained over every other plan of education of a private or partial character." Being thus provided, a bill was drawn embodying what were believed to be the best features of those systems which had been most successful in other States, and at the session of 1834 it "passed both branches of the Legislature with a unanimity," says the Governor, "rarely equaled, perhaps never surpassed, in the annals of legislation." It was a consummation for which he had long and earnestly labored, and must have been a source of gratification and a subject of gratulation through life that his administration was graced with an event of such momentous import. There were still troubles to be encountered in putting it into successful operation, and great labors were required of his successors in preserving the principle intact. But the Rubicon was passed, the system was inaugurated, and, thanks to the labors of wise men and the care of an overruling Providence, the banner then thrown to the breeze has never been furled.

The Governor was a candidate for a third term, but a division having arisen in the party by which he had been supported, and a third candidate in the person of Henry A. Muhlenberg being presented, the vote was divided and Wolf was defeated. In the following year he was appointed by Gen. Jackson to one of the most responsible positions in the government, that of first comptroller of the Treasury of the United States. For two years he discharged the duties of this office most acceptably, and at the end of that period he was appointed by President Van Buren collector of the port of Philadelphia. On the 11th of March, 1840, he died very suddenly, while yet in the vigor of manhood, greatly lamented, in the sixty-third year of his age. His remains rest in the cemetery at Harrisburg. His only daughter became the wife of Henry Buehler, of Harrisburg, and their children were George Wolf Buehler and Mary, the wife of Rev. Thomas H. Robinson, D.D.

THOMAS WORLEY.

Thomas Worley, son of Daniel Worley, was born Jan. 7, 1799, near Hanover, York Co., Pa. He was descended from Francis Worley, one of the first settlers west of the Susquehanna, in what is now York County, and who took a prominent part in the events of that section of the Province of Pennsylvania. Thomas Worley had slight opportunities for education, receiving, however, that which the schools of his native village afforded and the night schools of Harrisburg. He came to the latter place at the age of fifteen, where he learned the trade of wagon-maker and wheelwright. He established himself in business, and during the era when the transportation between the Eastern cities and Pittsburgh was carried on in wagons his business was quite extensive. Not anxious for political preferment, he was, nevertheless, elected a director of the poor for the county of Dauphin, and filled several municipal offices with ability and faithfulness. He was a man of good habits, of sterling integrity, and of great perseverance in the pursuit of what he deemed right, and perchance no man in his sphere of life ever exercised a greater or a better influence over the neighbors and friends with whom he was associated. He died at Harrisburg, on the 18th of April, 1868, aged sixty-nine years. Mr. Worley married, about 1825, Mary Uhler, born Oct. 26, 1800, in Dauphin County, Pa., died Oct. 2, 1878, at Harrisburg, daughter of John Uhler, "one of the most amiable of women." Their children were Susannah, Rev. Daniel, Frederick Uhler, Solomon, Thomas, Richard Fulton, and William.

MAJOR JOHN WRIGHT.

John Wright was a native of Ireland, born about 1745. He came to America in early life, and located in New Jersey, where he probably taught school until the opening of the war of the Revolution. He held the position of a quartermaster in the New Jersey troops during the struggle for independence, and at the close of the conflict settled at Paterson, in that State, from which place he removed to Harrisburg, about the year 1797, and opened, on the 10th of August of that year, "an English school in the German school-house" there. On the removal of John Wyeth as postmaster by President Adams in 1798, Maj. Wright was appointed to that office. This he took charge of in connection with his school, holding the office until his death, which occurred on the 4th of January, 1814. He married, at Trenton, N. J., Aug. 14, 1778, Rose Chambers, daughter of Alexander Chambers, one of the leading merchants of that town during the last half of last century. Her mother, Elizabeth Chambers, was one of the matrons who received Washington at the bridge at Trenton on the 21st of April, 1789. Mrs. Wright was one of Harrisburg's most estimable women, and on the death of her husband succeeded to the post-office, which she retained until her death, in March, 1822. Maj. Wright was an ardent patriot, an excellent teacher, a faithful officer, an active, energetic citizen, and one of the leaders of public opinion seventy and eighty years ago.

JOHN WYETH.

John Wyeth, son of Ebenezer Wyeth and Mary Winship, was born March 31, 1770, at Cambridge, Mass. He was at an early age apprenticed to the printing business, and on reaching his majority was induced to go to San Domingo, to superintend a large printing establishment. While there the insurrection of the blacks occurred, and all that he had acquired was lost. It was with great difficulty that he even succeeded in escaping from the island, and then only by the connivance of a friend, one of the officers who assisted in searching the vessels about leaving the port. Dressed as a common sailor, and working among them, he eluded their vigilance, and subsequently reached Philadelphia. In relating to his friends the incidents of that rebellion, one of the most cruel and vindictive the world ever knew, there was one which seemed ever to rise up as a present vision instead of a past reality. It was the execution of two of the leading rebels who had been captured. They were broken upon the wheel, and afterwards, when the machinery stopped, left in that condition to die. In this state one of them asked for a pinch of snuff but no one seemed willing to grant this boon to the culprit, when Mr. Wyeth, borrowing a snuff-box, went and held pinch after pinch to the nose of the unfortunate criminal. Arriving at Philadelphia, he worked some time in the different printing establishments there, and in 1792 went to Harrisburg, where, in connection with John W. Allen, he purchased the paper started the previous year by Maj. Eli Lewis, and commenced the publication of the Oracle of Dauphin, a newspaper he successfully carried on until November, 1827. Mr. Wyeth's paper supported the Federal views of that great party during the whole course of its existence. Its columns were open, nevertheless, to the communications of all. In those days, before the principles of Republican rule were fully digested, many a nervous essay was put forth on either side of the question by able men of both parties. He was appointed postmaster of Harrisburg in October, 1793, under the administration of President Washington, of which he was a strenuous advocate and admirer. He was removed in July, 1798, by Mr. Adams' postmaster-general, on account of the incompatibility of the office of postmaster and the editor of a newspaper.

In connection with his newspaper, Mr. Wyeth established a book-store and a publishing-house, from which he issued a large number of books, the most notable of which were an early "History of the United States of America," Graydon's "Memoirs," and a music-book compiled by himself. The circulation of the latter for that early day was wonderful, its several editions aggregating one hundred and twenty thousand copies. To this he supplemented a second part, intended especially for the Methodist Church, of which there were published about twenty-five thousand. He was one of Harrisburg's most energetic citizens, and was deeply interested in its prosperity and welfare. He caused the construction of several valuable improvements, which remain as evidences of his enterprising spirit and good judgment. He was one of the earliest friends of the Harrisburg academy, and served as trustee, of which body he was also president. Upon his retirement from publisher he removed to Philadelphia, where he died Jan. 23, 1858, at the advanced age of eighty-eight years. His life thus prolonged was marked by affability and cheerfulness, and his philosophy was of a practical character. He was exceedingly industrious, and whilst in business could always find something for his hands to do. And in later life, when the concerns of his printing-office were transferred to younger hands, he knew how to divide his time between his reading and his social pleasures.

Mr. Wyeth was twice married,—first to Louisa Weiss, daughter of Lewis and Mary Weiss,¹ of Phila-

¹ Lewis Weiss, born Dec. 28, 1717, in Berlin, Prussia, studied conveyancing, and emigrated to America, landing at Philadelphia on the 13th of December, 1755, where he opened an office on Arch Street, between Fourth and Fifth. He was one of the founders of the German Society of Philadelphia, of which he was president. He was a Moravian, and delphia. She was the mother of all his children, and died in 1822. He married secondly, in 1826, Lydia Allen, of Philadelphia.

JOSIAH C. YOUNG.

Josiah Carothers Young, son of Daniel H. Young and Sarah Duncan, was born April 17, 1821, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the common schools of the borough, and learned the trade of a carpenter, which occupation he followed several years. He subsequently taught school, and at the time of his death was a teacher in the public schools of Harrisburg. For a long period he was engaged in mercantile pursuits at Dauphin and Harrisburg. From 1860 to 1868 he was prothonotary and clerk of the courts of Dauphin County, a position he filled with great acceptability. He died at Harrisburg, April 1, 1881, aged almost sixty years. He was a faithful and conscientious public officer, an honored and respected citizen, while in the Methodist Church, of which body he was an ordained local preacher, highly esteemed as a sincere and devout laborer. Mr. Young married Sept. 21, 1843, Catharine Mary Kinter, daughter of George and Elizabeth Kinter, who survives, and their children were William N., John W., George C., Charles W., Albert H., Charles C., and William L., of whom John W. and William L. survive.

COL. GEORGE ZIEGLER.

George Ziegler, the son of George Ziegler, a native of the Palatinate, was born in Lancaster County, Pa., July 3, 1768. He was brought up to mercantile pursuits, came to Harrisburg in 1795, and began merchandising, in which he was quite successful. In his early life he took an important part in public affairs. He was frequently a member of the Borough Council, was lieutenant-colonel of the Sixty-sixth Regiment, Pennsylvania Militia, in 1807, and coroner from Jan. 12, 1809, to Dec. 18, 1811. Col. Ziegler died at Harrisburg, Aug. 28, 1845, aged seventy-seven years. His wife, Elizabeth, born Dec. 6, 1777, died Jan. 2, 1853. They left three daughters, Catharine, married George Kunkel; Mary, married Rev. John P. Hecht; and Elizabeth, married Rev. Frederick Rothrock. Col. Ziegler was an estimable citizen, a gentleman of sterling integrity and worth.

GEORGE ZINN.

George Zinn, son of John Jacob Zinn and Catharine Greenawalt, was born April 6, 1810, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received a fair English education in the schools of the borough, and early in life began to learn the trade of tanning with his father, who had established a large business in the town many years previous, and to which the son eventually succeeded and successfully carried on for over thirty years. He served in several local offices, and in whatever trusts confided was faithful. He died at Harrisburg on the 21st of January, 1878, in his sixty-eighth year. He was a gentleman of considerable force of character, of strict integrity, of amiable manners, and was deservedly held in high esteem by his fellow-citizens. Mr. Zinn married, April 19, 1836, Anna Margareta Miller, daughter of John Jacob Miller and Elizabeth Beader, who survives. They had Mary, married William H. Eckels, paymaster U. S. A.; John and George, of Philadelphia; Amy, married George Smith; Catharine and Charles, died young; and Margey, married Dr. Ross Swartz.

ROBERT AUCHMUTY, M.D.

Robert Auchmuty, the son of Samuel Auchmuty, was born near Sunbury, Northumberland Co., Pa., in the year 1785. He was descended from an old Celtic family of Scotland. Robert Auchmuty, the first of the American family of that name, an eminent lawyer, was in practice at Boston, Mass., as early as 1719. He died in 1750, leaving several children. Among these, Robert, who in 1767 became judge of the Court of Admiralty at Boston; Samuel, who was rector of Trinity Church, New York City; and Arthur Gates. The latter came to Pennsylvania as early as 1765, and located in then Lancaster County. In that year we find him commissioned as an Indian trader, "with permission to trade with the natives at Penn's Creek, Shamokin, and such other forts as may by his Majesty or the Provincial authorities be established." He first settled at the mouth of Penn's Creek, on the Isle of Que, and from thence removed to the opposite side of the Susquehanna, a few miles below Fort Augusta, in what is now Lower Augusta township, Northumberland Co. During the war of the Revolution, Samuel Auchmuty, one of his sons and father of the doctor, entered the patriot army, and was in service from the winter at Valley Forge until the close of the war. The veteran's remains rest in the old burial-ground at Millersburg unmarked, and the spot unknown. Dr. Robert Auchmuty received a good education, studied medicine, and began the practice of his profession at Millersburg about 1830-31. Apart from the duties of his profession he served many years as a justice of the peace, being first commissioned by Governor Ritner. He was an enterprising, active citizen, and a warm advocate of the common-school system, when that noble measure was adopted, and was a gentleman beloved and respected by his fellow-citizens. He died at Millersburg in 1849, at the age of sixty-four, and is buried in the new cemetery at that place. He was the father of S. P. Auchmuty, of Millersburg.

acted as an attorney for that denomination prior to 1782, and was a judge of the Court of Common Pleas in 1786. He died Oct. 22, 1796, at Philadelphia. One of his daughters married George Kilne, of Carlisle; another, John Wyeth, of Harrisburg, both printers and editors.

JACOB AWL, OF PAXTANG.

Jacob Awl was born Aug. 6, 1727, in the north of Ireland. He learned the trade of a tanner, was a man of means when he came to America, and settled at an early date in Paxtang, near his relative, John Harris, of Harris' Ferry, where he took up a large tract of land which he improved, erected a tannery, and on which he lived to the time of his death. He became a prominent personage in Paxtang, was an ensign and lieutenant in Col. John Elder's battalion of rangers in the frontier wars of 1756 to 1764, and at the outset of the war for independence, aided by his counsel and his purse in organizing the associated battalions of Lancaster County, which did such effective service in the Revolution. When the new county of Dauphin was erected, Mr. Awl was appointed one of the commissioners in the act relating thereto, and John Harris afterwards appointed him one of the trustees or commissioners for the public grounds ceded by him at the laying out of the town of Harrisburg for public uses. He was a representative man, influential and potential in the county, yet preferred domestic retirement to the struggle of office; and when he was offered the nomination for representative in the General Assembly, he positively declined. He died at his residence in Paxtang, Sept. 26, 1793, at the age of sixty-six years. Mr. Awl married Sarah Sturgeon, born Sept. 1, 1739; died June, 1809.

JOHN W. COWDEN.

John Wallace Cowden, son of Matthew Benjamin Cowden and Mary Wallace, was born Aug. 29, 1817, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father was long in public life, and for years was an associate judge of the county. John Wallace was brought up as a farmer, but as he grew to maturer years his attention was turned to surveying, and he came to Harrisburg, where his latter days were passed as a practical surveyor, and where he died on the 22d of July, 1872. He was, writes a contemporary, "an unobtrusive, modest, and estimable citizen, successful in his business, trustworthy in all the relations of life, and a sincere and earnest Christian." Mr. Cowden married Mary E. Hatton, daughter of Frederick Hatton and Mary Barnett, of Lower Paxtang. They left a large family.

JAMES ELDER.

James Elder, son of Robert R. Elder and Sarah Sherer, was born Aug. 18, 1826, in Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His early years were spent on his father's farm. At the age of twenty-four he removed to New Castle, Pa., where he engaged in mercantile business until the death of his father in 1853, when he returned, and with his brother Robert purchased the homestead farm. During the war for the Union Mr. Elder raised a company for the emergency. In 1867 he embarked in the coal trade with a younger brother, withdrawing in 1869, and entered into partnership in the lumber business, in which he continued until failing health compelled him to relinquish all active pursuits. He left the farm and took up his residence in the city of Harrisburg, where he died Jan. 12, 1877, in his fifty-first year. Mr. Elder married, March 2, 1854, Rebecca O. Whitehill, daughter of John Whitehill, and they had Catharine O., Robert R., Martha K., Edward, and Ida.

HOTHER HAGE, C. E.

Hother Hage, son of Jens Friedrich and Gertrude Heitmann Hage, was born April 9, 1800, in the city of Copenhagen, kingdom of Denmark. He was a graduate at fourteen years of age of the Royal University of Copenhagen. In 1819 he came to the United States and settled upon a tract of land known as "Gallagher's Improvement," situated on Clearfield Creek, Clearfield Co., Pa., presented him by his father. He built a log hut and remained there about nine years, passing that time in studying, clearing the land, and hunting. In 1832 he found employment on the construction of the State canals in his chosen profession of civil engineering. In 1835 he was employed as chief engineer on the construction of the West Feliciana Railroad of Louisiana, a short line of road running from Bayou Sara to Woodville. During the years 1836-38 he was chief engineer of the Franklin Railroad, in Pennsylvania. May 30, 1838, he was appointed by the canal commissioners of the State principal engineer upon the survey of a route from the town of Chambersburg to Pittsburgh, also on the Raystown branch of the Juniata, as contemplated in the act of the Pennsylvania State Legislature, passed April 14, 1838. April 19, 1847, he was appointed principal assistant engineer of the eastern division of the Pennsylvania Railroad, under Wm. B. Forster, Jr. In 1852 he was employed in the construction of the Dauphin and Susquehanna Coal Company Railroad. From Sept. 1, 1850, to July 19, 1859, he was principal engineer on the enlargement of the Union Canal. July 19, 1859, he was appointed by Governor William F. Packer a commissioner to examine that portion of the line of the Sunbury and Erie Railroad lying between the harbor of Erie and the borough of Warren. On the 24th of April, 1860, was elected civil engineer to make survey and plan of the city of Harrisburg. In 1866 he was employed in the office of the assessor of United States internal revenue, continuing in the employ of the government until 1872, in which year, on the 27th day of June, he departed this life. Mr. Hage was married Dec. 18, 1849, by the Rev. J. Baker, of Lancaster, Pa., to Mary A. Kendig, second daughter of Henry and Salome Kendig, of Lancaster County.

James Elder

CAPT. JOHN P. RUTHERFORD.

John Parke Rutherford, son of William Rutherford and Sarah Swan, was born Feb. 14, 1802, in now Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was a farmer, and brought up in that pursuit. He held many places of public trust in his life; was superintendent of the Wiconisco Canal as early as 1837, an auditor of the county, a jury commissioner, and was vice-president and treasurer of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society. He was a strong anti-slavery advocate, as all his family were, and many a weary pilgrim in the days of the fugitive slave act, sore of foot and heart, found in Capt. Rutherford hospitable assistance, material aid, and manly encouragement. He hated slavery because he considered it a moral sin and a political blight upon the free institutions of America. During the late Rebellion he served as quartermaster in the United States army, ranking fourth on the list. While stationed at Harper's Ferry he was captured in one of the raids on that stronghold, but released on parole. He was then ordered to Camp Douglas, and subsequently to Charleston, S. C. In the latter city, about the close of the war, he contracted a disease from the effects of which he never fully recovered. He died at his residence in Swatara on the 12th of May, 1871, aged sixty-nine years. Capt. Rutherford married Eliza Rutherford, daughter of Samuel Rutherford, born Oct. 30, 1801, who died Jan. 30, 1850, and their children were Samuel Silas Brisban, William Swan, John Alexander, Elizabeth Martha, Sarah Margaret (married Rev. Job D. Randolph), Mary Jane (married John Elder), and Eleanor Gilchrist.

WILLIAM W. RUTHERFORD, M.D.

William Wilson Rutherford, son of William Rutherford and Sarah Swan, was born Nov. 23, 1805, in Paxtang (now Swatara) township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was, in the fourth generation, from Thomas Rutherford, one of the earliest settlers of the valley, and of Scotch-Irish ancestry. He commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Whiteside, of Harrisburg, then a prominent physician, in 1830, and after the removal of Dr. Whiteside continued under the instructions of Dr. Dean. He attended the lectures of Jefferson Medical College, 1830 to 1832, graduating from that institution on the 7th of March, the latter year. He located first at Mechanicsburg, where he remained nearly a year, when entering into partnership with his preceptor, Dr. Dean, he removed to Harrisburg, where for forty years he practiced his profession, winning for himself an honorable name not only at home but abroad. Dr. Rutherford had what few physicians possessed,—a most perfect knowledge of diseases in general; and it mattered little what the case, his diagnosis, when called in consultation, was final as it was accurate. An extensive practice of over forty years in every department of medicine and surgery gave him such a perfect knowledge of his profession that the loss of his advice and assistance in difficult cases has been severely felt by his surviving brethren.

For eight years prior to his death he had been the regularly-appointed surgeon to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, although he served it some ten years previously when called upon. From the organization of the old Harrisburg Gas Company he was one of its directors, and at his death president of the company. In numerous other enterprises he took an active part, and was always one of Harrisburg's public-spirited citizens. His life was an eventful one, and one fraught with many incidents of interest. In season and out of season, in life and in death, his good-natured face appeared upon the stage, gladly, even tearfully, welcome. He died at Harrisburg on the 13th of March, 1873, aged sixty-seven years. Dr. Rutherford married Eleanor Crain, daughter of Col. Richard M. Crain, who survives. Their children who lived to mature years were Dr. Alexander, who died shortly after his father; Sarah, married Capt. W. Harvey Brown, U.S.A., also deceased; and Elizabeth Crain, widow of the late John C. Kunkel.

BIOGRAPHICAL HISTORY.

II.

HAMILTON ALRICKS.

Hamilton Alricks, son of James Alricks and Martha Hamilton, was born June 1, 1806, at Oakland Mills, in Lost Creek Valley, then Millin County. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy at such a period as those who passed through it, from 1816 until 1826, know that the whole land was stricken with poverty, and collegiate education out of the question. Indeed, out of the thirty students of the classics at the academy, and among them the son of Governor Findlay, but one is remembered, who went, or could afford to go, to college. With such an education as the school could afford, and the study of history on top of it, Hamilton Alricks commenced reading law with Samuel Douglas, Esq., afterward attorney-general, and was admitted to practice in 1828. From the outset he exhibited more than ordinary ability, connected with indomitable energy and perseverance.

He has labored steadily at his profession for fifty years; rising usually at five in the morning, but at the same time taking such outdoor exercise as to secure sound, vigorous health, and is at this day able to endure as much mental and physical labor as most men younger in years, and withal, finding in the midst of professional engagements as much time and leisure to devote to strangers, and the hospitalities and civilities of life, as any other man in the community. During his professional career he has been engaged at every term of the court, in the trial of many of the most important civil and criminal cases, and in numerous cases in the Supreme Court, as the reports will show from 2d Watts to the last volume of Outerbridge. In the outset of his practice he was engaged as counsel by Mr. Gest, in the case of Gest vs. Espy, 2d Watts 266, after Thomas Elder, Esq., a senior member of the bar, had abandoned the case, upon a verdict being found for defendant. Mr. Alricks removed the case to the Supreme Court, where he succeeded in reversing the judgment. On one occasion, in arguing a case in the Supreme Court, and while reading an authority, he was abruptly interrupted by Judge Houston, saying, "That is not the law." "But," said Mr. Alricks, "I am citing from the opinions of the court."

Judge Houston sharply responded, "I don't care; for no judge ever declared such to be the law." To which Mr. Alricks further replied, "I have been reading the opinion of the court, delivered by your honor." "Then," said the judge, "the reporter took me down wrong; let me see the book." After examining it for some time, the judge closed it with the remark, "After all, I don't think this authority has any application to the case in hearing."

Proceedings were commenced before the Legislature of Pennsylvania about the year 1845, and testimony taken for the purpose of framing articles of impeachment against the Hon. William N. Irvine, judge of the York and Adams judicial district, and the only counsel of the respondent was Mr. Alricks, who conducted the defense with such skill and ability that the committee refused to report articles.

The then State treasurer and auditor-general on several occasions selected Mr. Alricks to argue cases on the part of the commonwealth involving questions of constitutional law. His argument before the Supreme Court of the United States in Butler et al., late Canal Commissioners of Pennsylvania, vs. the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania, 10th Howard United States Supreme Court Reports, 402, was not only well received by the profession as a sound exposition of the law, as to what constitutes a contract within the meaning of the Tenth Section of the First Article of the Constitution of the United States, prohibiting a State from passing any law impairing the obligation of contracts; but also as an able definition of the power of the Legislature to create and abolish offices, to impose taxes, etc., and will remain a lasting memorial of his research, industry, and ability as a lawyer.

In his long course of practice, and it has been an extensive one, it is not known that he ever had any rude or personal controversy with any member of the bar. He began the world without a dollar, and by his talents, integrity, and industry has risen to the front rank in his profession and acquired an ample competency, at no time condescending "to stoop" to politicians or any other class of men in order to obtain office or professional business.

His ambition Alricks

He has not entered the arena of politics, that maelstrom which has shipwrecked so many able men, but it has been his fortune, for his good professional reputation and success, and for his private gain, that he has lived in a district in which for fifty years he has acted politically with the minority. He was one year a member of the Legislature; was a member of the Chicago Convention in 1864, which nominated Gen. McClellan for President, and the series of resolutions drawn up and offered in the convention by him abounded in patriotic sentiments, evincing a rare and marked ability. He was a member of the Constitutional Convention for the revision of the constitution of the State, in 1872-73, that held its sessions first in Harrisburg and subsequently in Philadelphia, and acted on the committees on Cities and City Charters, and on Religious and Charitable Corporations and Societies. He has also been a director of cemetery, school, hospital, and bank in Harrisburg.

Mr. Alricks married, Dec. 28, 1837, Caroline, daughter of Rev. Levi Bull, D.D., of Chester County, Pa., a son of Col. Thomas Bull, of Revolutionary fame. She was born Aug. 3, 1811. Their only daughter, Annie, is the wife of Benjamin L. Forster, a lawyer of Harrisburg, and their only son, Levi, a student at Yale in the class of 1866, read law with his father, and has been a member of the Dauphin County bar since his admission, in 1865. *

CHARLES L. BAILEY.

Charles Lukens Bailey, son of Joseph Bailey and Martha Lukens, was born March 9, 1821, in Chester County, Pa. His paternal ancestors were of English, and his maternal ancestors of Welsh, descent. His great-grandfather, Edward Bailey, was a resident of Bucks County, and his grandfather, William Bailey, a resident farmer in Philadelphia County, Pa. His father, born in 1796, settled in Chester County in 1819, where he carried on farming until 1833, when he engaged in the iron business at the old Lukens Mill in Coatesville, and there manufactured boiler-plate for six years. In 1844 he removed to Berks County, near Pottstown, and erected on the site of the "Old Forge" of the Pine Iron-Works, a rolling-mill, and carried on business alone for a few years, and afterwards in connection with his sons (Joseph Bailey & Sons) until within a short period, when he retired from active life, leaving his manufacturing interest then in the hands of his son, Joseph L. Bailey. The other children of Joseph and Martha Bailey were Charles L., Sarah, Edward (manager of the iron-works at Glasgow, Montgomery Co.), Dr. George (of Philadelphia), William L. (treasurer and manager of the Thorndale Iron Company), Hannah, and Anne (deceased).

Charles L. Bailey, eldest son, obtained his early education at the Westtown School, Chester County, and for some time thereafter was a clerk in the drug-store of Thomas Evans & Co., Philadelphia. His career in the iron business began in 1838 as a clerk for his father at Coatesville, where he became thoroughly conversant with the details of the business carried on at that place. He removed with his parents to Berks County, where he continued his clerkship for five years, and from 1849 to 1852 was a partner with his father in the Pine Iron-Works.

In August of the latter year, Mr. Bailey removed to Harrisburg and founded the old Central Iron-Works, which he has latterly used as a puddling-mill. Here he continued business until 1859, when he became interested with the late James McCormick in the nail-works at Fairview, Cumberland Co., rebuilt the works, and carried them on successfully until 1866, when he retired from the firm, and in connection with his brother, Dr. George Bailey (Charles L. Bailey & Bro.), founded and erected the present Chesapeake Nail-Works in Harrisburg, now carried on under the firm-name of Charles L. Bailey & Co., Artemus Wilhelm being a part owner in the concern.

In 1869, Mr. Bailey removed to Pottstown, and until 1875 was the treasurer and general manager of the Pottstown Iron Company, manufacturing nails, boiler-plate, and pig-iron. Closing out his interests there he returned to Harrisburg, and in 1877-78 erected the present Central Iron-Works, contiguous to the Chesapeake Nail-Works, of which he is president. Mr. Bailey is thoroughly imbued with the spirit of progress and enterprise, as his various industrial undertakings attest, and although his mind is largely absorbed in business pursuits, he has not held entirely aloof from duties incumbent upon him as a citizen. He is one of the directors of the Harrisburg National Bank, president of the board of trustees of the Market Square Presbyterian Church, and in 1880 he was appointed by Governor Hoyt a trustee of the Pennsylvania Insane Asylum. He was elected a member of the Select Council of the city in 1877, was a member of the State Legislature in 1879, and in 1881 he was again elected a member of the Select Council, chosen president, and served as chairman of the Finance Committee. Mr. Bailey married, in 1856, Emma H. Doll, daughter of William Doll and Sarah M. Elder, of Harrisburg, whose maternal great-grandfather was Rev. John Elder. Their surviving children are William Elder, a graduate of Yale, in the class of 1882; Edward, Jr., a graduate of Yale Scientific Course in the class of 1881;

Charles L., a student at Yale; James B., and Emma D. *

JULIUS AUGUSTUS BECK.

Julius Augustus Beck, son of John Beck (born at Graceham, Md.; died Feb. 11, 1873), and his wife Joanna Augusta (born at Hope, N. J., died in February, 1877), was born April 2, 1831, in Litz, Lancaster Co., Pa., and was educated at the Litz Academy, of which his father, John Beck, was principal. In early life he devoted himself to the art of sculpture, and in 1855 visited Italy for the purpose of perfecting himself in that branch of the fine arts. In 1861 he turned his attention to portrait and landscape painting, an occupation in which he still continues. He married Miss Susan Maria Kepple, daughter of Henry and Catharine Kepple, of Lancaster, Pa., and their children are Abraham Raphael, Catharine Augusta, Henry Kepple, John, Martin Augustus, Marion, Edith Isabella, and Mary Alice.

PETER BERNHEISEL, Sr.

Peter Bernheisel, son of John Bernheisel and Catharine Loy, was born Aug. 18, 1806, in Cumberland (now Perry) County, Pa. His father was a native of Berks County, Pa., where he was born May 12, 1765, settled in Perry County about the year 1800, and where he died on the 21st of September, 1825. His mother was also a native of Berks County, born May 1, 1768, and died in Perry County on the 31st of August, 1833. Peter's early education was limited to the schools of the county until 1822, when he went to Carlisle, where he learned the trade of a carpenter and builder. About the year 1832 he came to Harrisburg, where he became a contract builder until the year 1859. He was the builder of the county jail and the Presbyterian Church on Second Street. He served as a member of the old Borough Council during the shipplaster era, and filled other municipal offices. In 1859 he relinquished house-building and went into the lime business. Mr. Bernheisel married, first, on the 28th of August, 1826, Margaret Uhler, daughter of John and Catharine Uhler (1809-1848), and their children were John Frederick (d. s. p.), Jeremiah (d. s. p.), Peter, Augustus (d. s. p.), George (d. s. p.), William Henry, and Jacob Houser (d. s. p.); married, secondly, Elizabeth Shott, daughter of John and Barbara Shott, and they had Barbara Catharine (d. s. p.), Valentine Hummel, and Rebecca Shott (married William Painter); married, thirdly, Frances Benedick, daughter of Bernard and Elizabeth Sigman.

MAJOR L. S. BENT.

Luther Stedman Bent, son of Ebenezer Bent and Nancy Stedman, was born Dec. 6, 1829, at Quincy, Norfolk Co., Mass. His ancestors were early settlers at Milton, in that State. Luther S. attended the public schools until the age of twelve years, afterwards working on the farm until his fifteenth year, when he went to Boston, where he served five years with the New England Glass Company, situate in East Cambridge, then one of the largest establishments in the country. From that period until the commencement of the Rebellion he was engaged in the glassware and crockery business at Boston. In May, 1861, he enlisted as a private in Company H, Fourth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, and participated in the battle of Big Bethel. Being mustered out at the end of his term of service at Boston, he re-enlisted as a private in Company K, of the Eighteenth Regiment Massachusetts Volunteers, for three years, and served in all the grades of non-commissioned and commissioned officer to that of captain. He served through the various campaigns in which his regiment was engaged in the Army of the Potomac, and was wounded in the right hand at the second battle of Bull Run. He remained with his command until their muster out, when he was detailed to take charge of a battalion of veterans and recruits. For meritorious services at Peebles' Farm he was promoted brevet major, was afterwards, on the recommendation of Gen. Griffin, commissioned by President Lincoln as major in the United States army, at the same time by the State of Massachusetts a lieutenant-colonel, on which commissions he was never mustered. His battalion having become decimated in numbers, it was consolidated with the Thirty-second Massachusetts, when at his request he was mustered out as a supernumerary officer. He returned home, and shortly after made engagements with the officers of the Union Pacific Railroad, and remained in their employ from the commencement to the completion of that great enterprise, filling various positions. During the last two years he was one of the largest contractors for grading that road, comprising two hundred miles through Salt Lake Valley and the Promontory. He subsequently became engaged in cattle-raising on the plains, and was one of the pioneers in that business, being among the first to establish cattle ranches along the line of the railroad in Nebraska. Here he remained three years. Returning to the East he married a daughter of S. M. Felton, Esq., of Philadelphia, which relations brought him into connection with the Pennsylvania Steel Company. In 1874 he took the superintendency of that immense establishment, and as the progress and history of that company is given elsewhere, we shall not further refer save that none have contributed more to its success than the energy, business management, and forethought of the subject of this sketch.

ANDREW K. BLACK.

Andrew Krause Black, son of Joseph Black (1794-1848) and Elizabeth Krause (1803-72), was born Jan. 16, 1825, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of the borough, and learned the trade of bricklayer and builder, in which occupation he is still engaged. He served as a member of the Select and Common Council of the city of Harrisburg, and for several years was one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison. He represented the county in the Legislature in 1871 and 1872, and under the Constitution of 1874 represented the city of Harrisburg in that body in 1877 and 1878. Mr. Black married, in 1849, Rebecca Irwin Clark, daughter of William and Maria Clark, of Clark's Ferry, and their children were Emma, Harriet, George Murray, Alfred T., Irene Elizabeth (married J. C. Harlicker), Maria Clark, and Amy Chaplin.

COL. FREDERICK K. BOAS.

Frederick Krause Boas, son of Frederick Boas (1785-1817) and Elizabeth Krause (1797-1847), was born April 5, 1815, at Harrisburg, Pa. He attended the schools of the borough until his sixteenth year. From August, 1832, to April, 1838, he was a clerk in the Harrisburg post-office, then assistant postmaster, as superintendent (not regularly) until July, 1843. He studied law with the late Judge Krause, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 22, 1837, in which profession he has been since engaged. He was appointed by Governor Porter aid on his staff, with the rank of colonel, which he held from 1839 to 1845; was school director from 1839 to 1848, being treasurer of the board from 1840 to 1842, and also served in the Borough Council six years, from 1846 to 1849. Col. Boas married in 1871, Sarah C. Nolen, daughter of William and Maria Nolen, of Harrisburg.

WILLIAM D. BOAS.

William Dick Boas, son of Jacob Boas and Sarah Dick, was born Sept. 6, 1803, at Harrisburg, Pa. He learned the art of printing with George Getz, of Reading, on the Berks and Schuylkill Herald, and afterwards worked at his profession in Philadelphia, Allentown, and Harrisburg. In 1837 he purchased an interest in the Reporter office at Harrisburg, in partnership, first, with Samuel D. Patterson, and then with William F. Copeland, retiring in 1842. During this period he was printer of the journals and bills of the House and Senate. He was cashier and clerk in the State treasurer's department during the administrations of Bickel, Bailey, Magraw, and McGrath, about nine years in all; was a clerk in the surveyor-general's office, and four years prothonotary of the county of Dauphin. From 1866 to 1868 he was one of the publishers of the Patriot. Mr. Boas married, in 1828, Martha Ingram, born Nov. 30, 1808, died Aug. 23, 1850, and their children are Margaret Ingram and Emma Elizabeth.

JACOB C. BOMBERGER.

Jacob Cauffman Bomberger, son of John Bomberger (1773-1847) and Elizabeth Cauffman (1784-1857), was born Dec. 11, 1817, at Middletown, Dauphin Co., Pa. His education was received in the schools of the town, which at that period were quite limited. His early life was passed in merchandising, and subsequently in the business of banking. During the sessions of the State Senate for 1851 and 1852 he served as assistant clerk of that body; the year following, upon the establishment of the Mechanics' Bank, was made cashier of that institution. In the historical reference to that bank we have alluded to its subsequent transfer to Mr. Bomberger as its sole owner, and through whose energy, financial tact, and ability it has become one of the most successful banking-houses in Pennsylvania. For many years Mr. Bomberger held the position of one of the trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, under the appointment of the Governor.

GEORGE M. BRUBAKER.

George M. Brubaker, son of Jacob Brubaker, and Sarah Mark, was born July 19, 1824, in Millersburg, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather, David Brubaker, of German ancestry, resided near Millersburg, on a farm. He married a Miss Dover, and of their children, Jacob, born in 1795, learned the trade of a tanner, located some years in Chambersburg, Pa., then in 1822 removed to Millersburg, where he died in 1838. Jacob Brubaker married in 1823 Sarah Mark, of East Hanover township, Lebanon Co., who survives. Of their children who reached mature age were George M. and Margaret R., married —

Eberly. George M. Brubaker received a common-school education, and spent several years in clerking. He subsequently, in connection with his stepfather, Simon West, engaged in the tanning business, which was continued until 1847. He then began merchandising, and in 1864 made the hardware business a specialty. Mr. Brubaker married first, Feb. 12, 1850, Elizabeth Beaver, died July, 1856, daughter of George Beaver, of Perry County, and they had Clara, George, Mary, and Charles; married secondly, in July, 1857, Mary Jane Lime, daughter of Jacob Lime, of Schuylkill County, and they had Albert, William, Sarah, John, Wood, Mark, and Ray. Mr. Brubaker was the first president of the Lykens Valley Bank, now the First National Bank of Millersburg, and was also one of the founders of the Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens. He is a gentleman of enterprise and public spirit, and prominently identified with the leading industries of the Upper End. *

JAMES DONALD CAMERON.

James Donald Cameron, son of Gen. Simon Cameron and Margaret Brua, was born in 1833, at Middletown, Pa. He received a classical education, and studied at Princeton College. Upon leaving college he entered the Middletown Bank as clerk, of which he subsequently became cashier. From 1866 to 1874 he was president of the Northern Central Railroad, in which latter year the road was leased to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company. Gen. Grant appointed him Secretary of War, May 22, 1876, which he held until the close of that administration. In 1876 he was a delegate to the National Republican Convention at Cincinnati, and upon the resignation of his father, Gen. Cameron, as United States senator, was elected by the Legislature to fill the vacancy, and subsequently re-elected for the full term ending March 3, 1885. Mr. Cameron was twice married,—first to Mary McCormick, daughter of James and Eliza (Buehler) McCormick, of Harrisburg, who was the mother of all his children; and secondly to Ellen Sherman, daughter of Judge Sherman, of Cleveland, Ohio.

GEN. SIMON CAMERON.

Simon Cameron, son of Charles Cameron and Martha Pfoutz, was born March 8, 1799, at Maytown, Lancaster Co., Pa. On the paternal side he is descended from the clan Cameron, of Scotland, who shared their fortunes with the unfortunate Charles Edward, whose star of hope sunk on the field of Culloden. Donald Cameron, his great-grandfather, was a participant in that memorable battle, and having escaped the carnage made his way to America, arriving about 1745-46. He afterwards fought under the gallant Wolfe upon the Heights of Abraham, and during the war with France was in continuous service. His grandfather, Simon Cameron, was an early associator in the Revolution, and took the oath of allegiance June 1, 1778; a brother, John, signed the same day. Of the latter Gen. Bingham, of Philadelphia, is a grandson. On the maternal side he is descended from Conrad Pfoutz, an emigrant from the Palatinate, Germany. He settled in Lancaster County, and Pfoutz's Valley, in now Perry County, perpetuates the name of a hero of the border warfare of Pennsylvania in the days when the treacherous Delawares and perfidious Shawanese sought to desolate the homes of the early pioneers of our State,—John Pfoutz. Charles Cameron and Martha Pfoutz had a large family, yet a remarkable one, and the history of our country gives but few instances of the successful career of an entire family, among whom the subject of this sketch is the most prominent.

When young Cameron was about the age of nine years his parents removed to Northumberland County, where his father shortly afterwards dying, he was early cast upon his own exertions. There were then few advantages afforded by public schools, and his educational facilities were exceedingly limited. Having an unquenchable fondness for books, young Cameron was able to perceive no other means so likely to satiate his appetite as a printing-office, it seeming to him the chief centre of thought in the community in which destiny had fixed his lot. He therefore entered, in 1816, as an apprentice to the printing business with Andrew Kennedy, editor of the Northumberland County Gazette, at Northumberland, where he continued one year, when his employer, owing to financial reverses, was obliged to close his establishment. Being thus thrown out of employment, he made his way by river-boat and on foot to Harrisburg, where he secured a situation in the printing-office of James Peacock, editor of the Republican, with whom he remained until he had attained his majority.

In January, 1821, he went to Doylestown, Pa., at the solicitation of Samuel D. Ingham, where he published the Bucks County Messenger. As editor of this paper he evinced a breadth of information which, in view of his limited advantages, seemed astonishing. In March of the same year he entered into partnership with the publisher of the Doylestown Democrat, and the firm merged their papers into the Bucks County Democrat, which publication was continued until the close of the year 1821, when the establishment passed into the hands by purchase of Gen. W. T. Rodgers. The succeeding winter Mr. Cameron spent in the office of Messrs. Gales & Seaton, publishers of the National Intelligencer, at Washington, as a journeyman printer. He returned to Harrisburg in 1822, and entered into partnership with Charles Mowry in the management of the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, then the organ of the Democratic party at the State capital, and enjoyed the official patronage of the State administration, and was elected one of the printers to the State, a position he held seven years. Having been the early friend and supporter of Governor Shulze, upon his ceasing to be State printer, he was honored by that executive with the appointment of adjutant-general of Pennsylvania, the duties of which office he discharged with ability and to the satisfaction of the public.

Gen. Cameron at an early period took a deep interest in the development of internal improvements, and took extensive contracts upon the Pennsylvania Canal, then in process of construction. In 1826 he began building the section between Harrisburg and Sunbury, and after this was well under way he took one or two sections on the western division of the canal. When Louisiana granted a charter to the State Bank of that commonwealth, it provided that the bank should build a canal from Lake Pontchartrain to New Orleans. Gen. Cameron took the contract for that great work, which was then regarded by engineers as the greatest undertaking of the time. In 1831 he started for New Orleans. He employed twelve hundred men in Philadelphia, and sent them by sea to that city. He, with his engineers and tools, went down the Mississippi River, embarking at Pittsburgh. He spent nearly half a year upon the work, and demonstrated beyond a doubt its entire feasibility. He was recalled from his work on the Lake Pontchartrain Canal by a summons from Maj. Eaton, Secretary of War under Gen. Jackson, who requested him to return to Pennsylvania and organize a delegation to the National Convention, which had been called to meet in Baltimore. This was in the interest of Martin Van Buren for the Vice-Presidency. Calhoun had served eight years, had quarreled with Gen. Jackson during his second term, and had otherwise put himself in antagonism to the prevailing popularity of Jackson. Gen. Cameron respected the summons, came home and organized a delegation that went to Baltimore in the interest of Mr. Van Buren for the Vice-Presidency. This was the first National Convention ever held in the United States. Mr. Cameron was requested to accept the permanent chairmanship of that convention, but declined, and a gentleman from North Carolina was selected.

After the National Convention in Baltimore he was appointed a visitor to West Point by Gen. Jackson, and upon performing his duties on the Hudson he made his first trip to New England. He went with a brother of Bishop Potter, of Pennsylvania, and thoroughly inspected the paper-mills and other manufactures of that section.

In the winter of 1832 the Legislature chartered the bank at Middletown, and he became its cashier. From the first the bank was successful, but the duties of cashier were so limited that Gen. Cameron sought other fields of labor and usefulness, although he remained there twenty-five years. He projected and created the railroads from Middletown to Lancaster, from Harrisburg to Sunbury, from Harrisburg to Lebanon, and at the same time gave large encouragement to the Cumberland Valley Railroad. And in this connection it may be stated that the Northern Central Railroad from Harrisburg to Baltimore was captured by him from Baltimore interests and made a Pennsylvania institution; and he was at one time president of not less than four corporations, all operating lines within a few miles of the spot where he was born.

In 1838, President Van Buren tendered to Gen. Cameron the appointment of a commissioner with James Murray, one of the most respected citizens of Maryland, under a treaty with the Winnebago Indians to settle and adjust the claims made against the Indians by the traders. These claims were for goods furnished the Indians during a long period of years, and the sum appropriated by the treaty was three hundred thousand dollars. In many cases the commissioners found the claims of the traders unjust, and every account allowed by them met with the approbation of the commissioner appointed by the Indians. In the settlement of some of the claims, the aggregate amount having been reduced from over a million to about two hundred and fifty thousand dollars, the traders refused to accept the award, and went to Washington with charges against the commissioners. It had been the usual custom to give the entire appropriation to the claimants, but this course did not allow of any division. The charges were met by a demand from the commissioners for a re-examination, which resulted in the appointment of a new commission the next year, under whose direction the Indians were assembled in council, who approved by a united vote of their council the entire acts of Messrs. Cameron and Murray, and the account thus adjudged was paid by the government.

In 1845, when James K. Polk tendered the State Department to James Buchanan, and that gentleman resigned his seat in the Senate of the United States, an election to supply the vacancy became necessary. Gen. Cameron was at this time in recognized sympathy with the Democratic party, and selected as the representative of the wing of the party which favored the policy of a protective tariff. The regular caucus nominee of the Democracy, however, was George W. Woodward, which was regarded as a free trade triumph, rendering it possible for some other Democrat known to be honestly devoted to the ever-cherished policy of the State to be elected by a union of the Whigs, Americans, and those Democrats in favor of the protective policy. The result was the election of Simon Cameron to the United States Senate. From March, 1845, to March 4, 1849, he served his State faithfully in that body, and proved himself true to the great interests committed to his charge, and he never wearied in the support of the principles on which he was elected. It may be here stated that President Polk at the first seemed inclined to ignore Mr. Cameron, declaring his election to the Senate as having been outside the party organization; but this treatment he found to his cost was not conducive to his own peace of mind, sent for Gen. Cameron, made a truce with him, and there was never any more trouble.

In the winter of 1857 the entire opposition members of the Legislature, consisting of Whigs, Native Americans, and Tariff Men, selected Gen. Cameron as their candidate to fill the place of Senator Brodhead, whose term of service expired on the 4th of March that year. The Democratic caucus nominated Col. John W. Forney, then the intimate friend of President Buchanan, who had written a letter to the Legislature naming him as his choice for the senatorship, although a large portion of the party were in favor of Henry D. Foster, who was an outspoken tariff man. The united votes of the opposition, with three Democratic votes, two from Schuylkill and one from York, in which counties Gen. Cameron possessed great strength and popularity on account of his firm devotion to their industrial interests, were cast in his favor, and he was elected for the full term. He took his seat in the Senate on the 4th of March, notwithstanding the futile assault made by his colleague from Pennsylvania, Mr. Bigler, upon his title to the place, and which that body refused to consider. Gen. Cameron's return to the United States Senate brought him again prominently before the public, and in the political movements which preceded the campaign of 1860 he was named as the choice of Pennsylvania for the Presidency, and his name early associated with that of Mr. Lincoln in connection with the Republican national ticket.

Gen. Cameron's national career began at the Chicago Convention in 1860, when the Republican party, crystallized into a national organization, made its open, clear, and stern antagonism to slavery. With intuitive sagacity the advocates of slavery recognized in the Republican party the force which would ultimately overthrow it, and men like Gen. Cameron were recognized as the leaders of that force. There was no mistaking the measure on which it entered on the canvass in 1860. When Mr. Lincoln was nominated, Gen. Cameron made himself felt in such a manner as to win the confidence of that illustrious statesman. After the great political battle of that year, Gen. Cameron was the first of those to whom Mr. Lincoln turned for counsel, and the offer of a cabinet office by the latter to the former was a voluntary act, and that appointment would have been made the first in the selection of his cabinet had not intrigues interfered to defer it at the time. Mr. Lincoln looked on Gen. Cameron from first to last not only as his political, but his warm personal friend, and there were no such relations existing between the President and his other constitutional advisers. This fact was well known when the cabinet was organized. While he was in the War Department his counsel was not only potential in cabinet meetings, but was sought by the President in private, and heeded in such a marked manner as to create a feeling of hostility, which caused the President much unpleasantness. Then, too, believing that the civil war would require all the available resources of the nation to preserve the Union, doubting the speedy settlement of the trouble, he began as Secretary of War a scale of preparations to combat it which puzzled the oldest officers in the army and chagrined the leaders of the Rebellion, who had calculated much on the supineness and lethargy of the Northern people. Gen. Cameron frustrated this hope by his energy, but he had the Cabinet to a man against him. When he sought to furnish the necessary supplies for the army, he was met by sickly sentimentality about settling the war in diplomacy. The Confederates resorted to the ruse of diplomacy by means of commissioners, for the purpose of retarding this activity, but at the same time Gen. Cameron was filling up the arsenals which had been despoiled by the former Secretary of War, thus supplying the army with huge quantities of ordnance, and commissary and quartermasters' stores, etc. Such work naturally attracted the attention of the sordid, excited the timid, aroused the jealous, and confounded the suspicious. The minister who thus labored to equip his country for a struggle with treason, the proportions of which he alone seemed fully to appreciate, was assailed for each and all of these acts. Mr. Lincoln had the fullest confidence in his Secretary of War; he believed in his sagacity and relied on his courage, but he could not wholly withstand the clamor, the outgrowth of cowardice on the one side and the cunning greed of adventurers on the other, so that Gen. Cameron, to relieve Mr. Lincoln from embarrassment, resolved to resign, and on the 11th of January, 1862, returned the portfolio of the War Department to the President; but in that act he commanded the renewed confidence of Mr. Lincoln, who the day he accepted his resignation nominated the retiring minister for the most important diplomatic mission in his gift. Nor was this all: Mr. Lincoln insisted that Gen. Cameron should name his own successor, an act which no retiring cabinet officer ever did before or since. The mission to Russia involved the safe and sagacious handling of our relations with the Czar's government at a moment when it demanded the most prudent direction. The kindly relations which existed between the colossal power of the North and the great republic of the West dated back in their amity when Catharine declined to take part with England in the suppression of American Colonial Revolution for independence. Gen. Cameron restored this feeling, and thus frustrated English and French intrigue to organize an alliance with Napoleon III. at its head in the interest of the Southern Confederacy. The country has never fully appreciated this fact, because it was a part of its diplomacy which admitted of no correspondence. This object accomplished, concluded Gen. Cameron's mission to Russia. There was in fact nothing more to do in St. Petersburg but to maintain what had been established, and he could with safety ask for his credentials and retire.

The relations between Mr. Lincoln and Mr. Cameron were always most cordial, and immediately upon his reaching the United States the latter was the accepted citizen-counselor at the White House. At this time efforts were being made looking to defeating the renomination of Mr. Lincoln for a second term. It was a period of great solicitude to the President, who with characteristic modesty declined to make any movement in his own behalf. In the winter of 1864 the intrigue referred to was talked of in political circles at Washington as a success. Gen. Cameron visited the national capital repeatedly at that time, and on reaching his farm after a return from one of these visits had a paper prepared, embodying the merits of Mr. Lincoln as President, acknowledging the fidelity and integrity of his first administration, and declaring that his renomination and re-election involved a necessity essential to the success of the war for the Union. That paper was submitted to the Republican members of both branches of the Legislature of the State of Pennsylvania, every one of whom signed it, and in this shape was presented to Mr. Lincoln, and telegraphed to the country at large. Its publication accomplished all that the forethought of its originator anticipated. In three weeks after the issuing of this letter, it was a curious spectacle to watch the precipitation with which the Republicans in all the States hastened to declare in favor of Mr. Lincoln's renomination; so that when the National Convention assembled to do that act, there was no opposition to him.

From 1864 to 1866, Gen. Cameron took a very active part in the politics of Pennsylvania, giving to the organization of the Republican party a prestige which enabled it to bear down all opposition. He was the one leader of that party who could rally it in despondency and hold it in fidelity to its pledges.

In 1866 he was re-elected to the United States Senate, a position he held a longer term of years than any man sent to the same body from the State of Pennsylvania. His influence on national legislation was as great as that of any man that ever served in the Senate. The singularity of this influence is revealed in greater force when it is remembered that he seldom participated in debate. He made no pretension to oratory, but his talk was sound, his argument lucid, and his statement of fact impregnable. What he lacked in fervid, flashing speech he made up in terse, solid common sense. From the time he entered the Senate until he resigned his seat in 1877—a continuous service of eleven years—he was recognized as one of its most useful and reliable members, and at the date of his resignation was chairman of the Committee on Foreign Relations, a position only accorded to a senator of admitted statesmanship. He was foremost always in practical legislation. His opinions on questions of commerce, manufacturing, finance, internal improvements, fortifications, and the public domain were always accepted as guiding counsel. He encouraged the building of the first Pacific Railroad, was a warm supporter of opening the public lands to actual settlers, and no man in Congress before or after he left it did more, and few as much as he, for the fostering, promotion, and protection of American industry. He lost no opportunity to advocate and further the organization of new States, and regarded the expansion of the boundaries of the Union as the only true course to preserve the equilibrium of power between the sections. He made history as few other statesmen in this country created it, by producing results in the practical walks of life, such as make men prosperous and happy, that stimulate the growth of communities, whereby the country has been constantly rendered powerful abroad and a blessing to its people at home. History in its broadest scope will ever keep such individuals before the generations of men which are to live in this country, for their models in public affairs.

Gen. Cameron married Margaret Brua, daughter of Peter Brua, of Harrisburg, and their children were Rachel, married Judge Burnside, of Bellefonte; Brua; Margaret, married Richard J. Haldeman; James Donald; and Virginia, married Wayne MacVeagh.

THOMAS M. CHESTER.

Thomas Morris Chester, son of George Chester and Jane Maria Russell, was born March 11, 1834, at Harrisburg, Pa. In January, 1851, he entered the preparatory department of Avery College, Allegheny City, where he remained until January, 1853, when he sailed for Liberia, West Africa, in the ship "Ban-shee," arriving at Monrovia on the 3d of June, same year. At Monrovia he attended the Alexander High School for one year, then returned to America, and in December, 1854, entered the junior class of Thetford Academy, Vermont. He graduated from that institution in 1856. In January, 1857, he entered upon the duties of superintendent of recaptured Africans from American slave-vessels at Cape Mount, Liberia, to instruct them in civilized customs. He published and edited The Star of Liberia, at Monrovia, and was the correspondent of the New York Herald at that point. In January, 1862, he returned to America on account of the civil strife, and assisted in recruiting the Fifty-fourth and Fifty-fifth Massachusetts Regiments, the first colored troops raised for the war. In 1867 he went to England, entered the Middle Temple, one of the Inns of Court at London, for the study of law, and was called to the English bar in 1870. While in England he was appointed aide-de-camp to President Payne, of Liberia, with the rank of major, and was intrusted with important missions to the courts of Russia and Belgium. In July, 1870, Avery College conferred upon him the degree of Master of Arts. On his return to the United States in 1871, he went to New Orleans, and received the appointment of storekeeper in the customs service. In March, 1873, he was admitted to the practice of law in the courts of Louisiana, by being admitted to the Supreme Court of the State. Governor Kellogg the same year appointed him brigadier-general of the first brigade of Louisiana militia. In 1875 was appointed district superintendent of public education of the first division, comprising seven parishes, including the white and colored schools, and in 1876 superintendent of the fifth division, comprising thirteen parishes. In 1878 was appointed United States commissioner for the district of Louisiana. On the 22d of June, 1881, he was admitted to practice in the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, and at the November term, 1882, made his first appearance at the bar of his native city and county.

J. R. CARL.

Jeremiah R. Carl, son of Jeremiah Carl and Julia Ann Radel, daughter of John Radel, was born Aug. 4, 1841, in Lykens Valley. His father was of Irish parentage, his mother of German, and their children were Elizabeth, Polly, Catharine, Daniel, George, Jeremiah R., and Susanna. Jeremiah R. spent his boyhood in labor, his educational advantages having been limited to a period of eight months at the public school. He learned the trade of a potter in Snyder County, Pa., and subsequently that of a plasterer. He removed to Williamstown in 1864, and subsequently was engaged in contracting and in the lumber business. He is now farming, and is a director of the James Calder.

REV. JAMES CALDER, D.D.

James Calder, son of William Calder and Mary Kirkwood, was born Feb. 16, 1826, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of the borough, the Harrisburg Academy, Partridge's Military Institute, and entered Wesleyan University, Middletown, Conn., in 1845, from which he graduated 1st of August, 1849. In September following he joined the Philadelphia Conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church, and was stationed in Lancaster County, where he remained until 1851, when he was appointed missionary to China, sailing from New York in the spring of that year. He reached Foo-Chow, his missionary station, in July following. He remained at this point until the year 1854, when, having changed his views on church polity, he withdrew from the denomination, and returned to the United States. Soon after he became pastor of the Bethel Church, Harrisburg, until the year 1859, and in the mean time editor of the Church Advocate, the organ of the Church of God. In 1857, while serving in this pastorate, he took charge of the Shippensburg Collegiate Institute, continuing there one year, until, owing to the death of his wife, he returned to Harrisburg.

In 1862 the larger part of the congregation here with their pastor connected themselves with the Free-Will Baptist denomination, and erected a new church building on State and Fourth Streets. The Rev. Mr. Calder ministered to that congregation until 1869, when he was elected president of the Free-Will Baptist College, Michigan. He continued at the head of that institution two years; when, in 1871, the presidency of the Pennsylvania State College having become vacant by the death of Dr. Burrowes, Mr. Calder was invited to succeed him. He accepted the position, returned to Pennsylvania, and until June, 1880, remained in charge of that institution. He then resigned, and came to Harrisburg, where he now resides. The past three years he has filled the position of Lecturer of the State Grange of Pennsylvania, and at the same time assistant editor of the Farmers' Friend, published in the interest of the State Grange. Hillsdale College, in 1866, conferred upon Mr. Calder the honorary degree of Doctor of Divinity. Dr. Calder married first, in 1850, Ellen C. Winebrenner, daughter of the Rev. John Winebrenner, who died in 1858. He married, secondly, Mrs. Eliza D. Murphy, daughter of the late Nicholas Reamshart, of Harrisburg.

Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens. Mr. Carl married, Feb. 5, 1865, Caroline Klinger, daughter of John A. Klinger, of Lykens Valley, and they had Lincoln, Calvin, Hattie Cardella, and James Abram Garfield.

JOHN J. CLYDE.

John Joseph Clyde, son of Thomas Clyde (1788-1821) and Mary Dentzel (1789-1845), was born Dec. 14, 1813, in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa. He was educated in the schools of Harrisburg, and learned the trade of bookbinder. In 1834 he established himself in business in Brownsville, Fayette Co., Pa., and two years after started the Fayette Journal, which he continued for three years. In 1840 returned to Harrisburg and purchased the bindery of Samuel H. Clark, connecting a book-store therewith. In 1849 he was elected treasurer of the county of Dauphin, and in 1851 started the Whig State Journal. The year following purchased the Pennsylvania Intelligencer, uniting it with the Journal. In 1853 sold the establishment to John J. Patterson, and commenced the publication of the Chrystal Fountain. The same year bought one-third interest in the Pennsylvania Telegraph, which in 1855 he sold to Mr. Bergner. During the Presidential campaign of 1856 he published the American. The same year started the Daily Herald, which was continued until 1858, when he sold to O. Barrett and entered the service of the Lebanon Valley Railroad as its agent. Mr. Clyde married first, in 1834, Emeline Harvey, born 1811, in Perry County, Pa., died April, 1870, at Harrisburg, daughter of John and Mary Harvey, and their children were Virginia D., Joanna H., Mary A., Thomas H., Olive L., John Joseph, Edward W., Harvey E., and Annie C. He married, secondly, Mrs. Eliza (Jacobs) Cornyn, of Harrisburg.

FREDERICK W. COOVER, M.D.

Frederick Welty Coover, son of Jacob Coover and Lydia A. Welty (1823-1860), was born Feb. 1, 1852, at Coover's Mill, on the banks of the Yellow Breeches Creek, in Upper Allen township, Cumberland Co., Pa. He received his education in the public schools of the township in winter, and in select pay schools in summer. He began the study of medicine in 1870, with Dr. W. W. Rutherford, of Harrisburg, with whom he continued six months, when being taken seriously ill he removed to his home at Dillsburg. Upon his recovery he continued his studies with Drs. G. L. and J. M. Shearer of that place. In October, 1872, he matriculated at the University of Pennsylvania, medical department, where he attended three full courses of lectures, and in addition the special spring course of 1873. He graduated in March, 1875, and on the 12th of April following entered upon the duties of resident physician of the City Hospital, Harrisburg, being the first to fill that position. The year succeeding he began the general practice of medicine in Harrisburg; was elected one of the visiting physicians to the hospital, in which position he continues connected with that institution. In 1878 he was elected physician to the county almshouse, and now (1883) serving his sixth term. Dr. Coover married, April 19, 1881, Elizabeth Faerster, only daughter of George and Catharine Faerster, of Harrisburg.

JOSEPH H. COOVER, M.D.

Joseph Henry Coover, son of Samuel Coover and Sarah Stayman, was born June 15, 1838, in Mechanicsburg, Cumberland Co., Pa. He was educated at Cumberland Valley Institute, Mechanicsburg, where he was prepared for entering the junior class of a college course, but determining to lead a professional life, commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Eli H. Coover, in the fall of 1860, and later with Professor D. Hayes Agnew, of Philadelphia, attending Jefferson College lecture course, 1861-62. In the spring of the latter year he was appointed by Governor Curtin one of the commissioners to investigate the sanitary condition of the Pennsylvania soldiers in the Army of the Potomac. Upon his return he went before the United States Medical Board, at Philadelphia, for examination, and was placed in charge of the reserve of the Fifth United States Artillery, Army of the Potomac. In the fall of 1862 he returned to college, where he graduated in March, 1863. Afterwards sent as assistant surgeon to the General Hospital, Nashville, Tenn.; from thence to the Officers' Hospital, at Annapolis, Md., where he remained until the winter of 1864, performing, as Surgeon Baers, U.S.A., says, "some of the most difficult operations in surgery, and discharging his professional duties at all times in a highly scientific manner, reflecting both credit to himself and honor to the medical fraternity." The winter of 1864-65 was spent at college and in the wards of the different hospitals of the city of Philadelphia. The following spring Dr. Coover located at Harrisburg, in the practice of his profession. Desiring to lessen the burden of his practice, he was led to devote special attention to diseases of the eye, ear, and throat, and with this object in view he went to Europe, where, during the years 1878-79, he pursued his studies in the specialties referred to in the hospitals of Vienna and London, under the most eminent and skillful surgeons and physicians in the world. Dr. Coover married, in 1865, Flora L. Wolford, daughter of Col. John Wolford, of York Springs, Pa.

WILLIAM KERR COWDEN.

William Kerr Cowden, the son of Matthew B. Cowden and Mary Wallace, was born Jan. 5, 1822, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was brought up a farmer, receiving such facilities of education as the schools of the township afforded prior to the adoption of the common-school system. He continued the occupation of a farmer until 1868, when he removed to Harrisburg and engaged in the coal and lumber business, subsequently establishing a planing-mill. For a decade of years he has been one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison. Mr. Cowden married Elizabeth M. Elder, daughter of Joshua Elder and Mary C. Gillmor.

JOHN B. COX.

John Bowes Cox, son of John Bowes Cox (1780-1831) and Matilda Willis McAllister (1787-1858), was born Nov. 19, 1817, at Estherton, Pa. He was descended from Dr. John Cox, who laid out Estherton, whose son was Col. Cornelius Cox, of the Revolution, father of John B. Cox, Sr. The children of the latter were Catharine Mary (married A. O. Hies-ter), Elizabeth (married Adam H. Orth), Matilda Willis, John B., George Washington (d. s. p.), Rachel, Esther Amelia (married Joseph E. Piolett), Cornelius, and George W. (deceased). Of the foregoing, John B., the subject of our sketch, was educated at the academies at Litiz, Burlington, N. J., West Chester, and York, Pa. He learned the profession of civil engineer, which occupation he pursued several years, subsequently engaging for a long period in flour and saw-milling enterprises, when he retired from active pursuits. Mr. Cox married, in 1844, Rebecca E. Lightner, daughter of John and Rebecca Lightner, of Pequa, Lancaster Co., Pa., and their children were Matilda Willis, Mary Richardson (married Ed. H. Buehler), John Bowes, Rebecca Hopkins, Edward Buchanan, and Catharine Hiester.

WILLIAM HOWARD DAY.

William Howard Day, son of John Day (1783-1828) and Eliza Dixon (1793-1869), was born Oct. 16, 1825, in the city of New York. He was educated in the public schools of his native city, in the private school of Rev. Frederick Jones, and prepared for college in the high school, Northampton, Mass., then in charge of Rev. Rudolphus B. Hubbard and Tutor Dwight, subsequently of Yale College. In 1843 he entered Oberlin College, graduating in 1847. He learned the art of printing in the Hampshire Gazette office at Northampton, and afterwards turned his attention to teaching and lecturing. In 1850 he was elected by the colored citizens of Ohio, at a State conference, to plead their cause before the Ohio Constitutional Convention. From 1852 to 1855 he edited The Alienated American at Cleveland, having previously been local editor of the Cleveland True Democrat, now the Leader. In 1861 he was invited to take the lecture platform in Great Britain, and remained there particularly at the request of the American residents from the North to explain to the people of England the issues at stake in the great civil conflict then transpiring in the United States. Returning to his native country he resumed his profession of teacher. In 1867 and 1868 he was superintendent of schools in the district of Maryland and Delaware under the United States government. During the incumbency of Gen. Harrison Allen as auditor-general of Pennsylvania, 1872-75, he held a clerkship in the corporation department of that office. In 1868, Mr. Day was ordained an elder in the African Methodist Episcopal Zion connection, and in 1875 and 1878 was secretary of the General Conference of that body. He was the first person of color elected to the board of school control of the city of Harrisburg, serving from 1878 to 1883.

JOSEPH W. DURBIN.

Joseph W. Durbin, son of William Durbin and Hannah Clapp, was born Nov. 12, 1834, in County Somerset, England. His grandfather, Samuel Durbin, was a native of County Somerset, England, married a Miss Green, and their children were William, James, Simon, George, Emily, and Elizabeth. William married Hannah Clapp, of County Somerset, and their children were John, Samuel, Joseph W., James C., and Ann. William Durbin emigrated to America with his family when in his fiftieth year, and now resides in Lykens Valley. At the age of twelve Joseph W. Durbin removed to Monmouthshire, Wales, where he was engaged in active labor until he came to the United States. He first settled in Schuylkill County, and four years later at Lykens, where he was employed in the coal-mines. Having discovered an attractive field for mercantile ventures at Williamstown, then a mere hamlet, he soon after removed to that point and established himself in business, which he successfully carries on. Mr. Durbin married, May 6, 1855, Louisa Hulett, daughter of Joseph Hulett, of Monmouthshire, Wales, and they have had James, Hannah L., William J., Samuel W., Elizabeth Simpson, and Leonidas, of whom four are living. He is a director of the Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens, and president of the Central Pennsylvania Conservatory of Music. *

chased a large number of lots and erected the first houses at Baldwin (now Steelton). In 1871 he laid out an extension to Steelton, now known as Upper Steelton, the same year the village of Highland, and in 1872 what was lately known as Lower Steelton, all now comprised within the limits of the borough of Steelton. In 1876 he laid out the Baldwin Cemetery, for the burial of white persons, and Midland Cemetery for colored persons. Mr. Dunkle erected a substantial market-house, and was the prime mover in the building of a public hall at Steelton. As one of the pioneers of this thriving town, of which he was the first burgess, his enterprise and energy are pre-eminent. Apart from his real estate interests, he is

JOSIAH A. DUNKLE.

Josiah A. Dunkle was born Sept. 11, 1834, in Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa. In 1846 his parents removed to a farm in Swatara township, where the son resided until 1853. He then learned the trade of a carpenter, and as contractor and builder was thus actively engaged until 1872. The same year he relinquished his coal and lumber business, in which he had large interests. He was the first to purchase a plot of ground where Churchville is located, and where he resided several years. When the Pennsylvania Steel Company were first constructing their works he pur-largely engaged in merchandising. Mr. Dunkle married Mary Bishop, daughter of William Bishop, and they had two sons and five daughters. *

WILLIAM H. EGGLE, M.D., M.A.

William Henry Eggle, son of John and Elizabeth Eggle, was born Sept 17, 1830, at Harrisburg, Pa. His father dying when he was four years of age, he went to his paternal grandmother's, to whom he was indebted for his careful training during childhood and youth. He was educated in the private and public schools of Harrisburg, and for two years attended Harrisburg Military Institute, under the care of Capt. Alden Partridge, where he pursued the study of the classics and higher mathematics. Not having the opportunity of entering college, he determined to learn the art of printing, and for this purpose spent three years in the office of the Pennsylvania Telegraph, during most of which time he was foreman of the establishment. Subsequently he had charge of the State printing. In 1853, having been a frequent correspondent to the monthly magazines, he undertook the editorship of the Literary Companion, which was discontinued at the end of six months, at the same time the editing of the Daily Times, afterwards merged into one of the other newspaper ventures of Harrisburg. In 1854 he began the study of medicine with Dr. Charles C. Bombaugh, of Harrisburg, during a portion of which period, that and the following year, he was an assistant teacher in the boys' schools of the then North Ward, afterwards mailing clerk in the post-office under Messrs. Brant and Porter. In the fall of 1857 he resigned his position, and entered the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania, from which institution he graduated in March, 1859. The same year he located at Harrisburg, and was in the practice of his profession there when, in 1862, after the battles of Chantilly and the second Bull Run, he was telegraphed by Adjutant-General Russell, of Pennsylvania, to go to Washington to assist in the care of the wounded, which duty he performed. In September of that year he was commissioned assistant surgeon of the Ninety-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in the summer of 1863 surgeon of the Forty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia. At the close of service with the latter command he resumed his practice, but afterwards at the earnest solicitation of Adjutant-General Thomas, of the United States army, he accepted the appointment by President Lincoln as surgeon of volunteers, and was ordered to Camp Nelson, Kentucky, to examine the troops for the United States regiments then organizing in that State. He was subsequently detailed with the cavalry battalion under Col. James Brisbin, now of the United States army, thence ordered to the Department of the James under Gen. Butler, and assigned to the Twenty-fifth Army Corps. During the Appomattox campaign he was chief executive medical officer of Gen. Birney's division, Twenty-fourth Army Corps, and upon the return from that campaign ordered to the Rio Grande with Gen. Jackson's division, Twenty-fifth Army Corps, as its chief medical officer. While at Roma he was repeatedly sent for by Gen. Canales, of the Liberal army of Mexico, for consultation, and at the earnest request of Don Flores, the alcalde of the city of Mier, performed several difficult operations with such success that during the further residence on the Rio Grande patients were brought him from places as remote as Monterey and San Luis Potosi.

In December, 1865, he resigned the service and returned home, when for a brief period he partially resumed the practice of his profession. Turning his attention to historic research, he commenced the preparation of his "History of Pennsylvania," which was published in 1876; at the same time, in connection with Hon. John Blair Linu, edited twelve volumes of the second series of the "Pennsylvania Archives." Apart from these he published the following: "Poems" in 1848, "Parson Elder, a Biography," "Col. Timothy Green," "The Dixons of Dixon's Ford," "Historical Review of Dauphin County," "Notes and Queries, Historical and Genealogical," first and second series, 1879-82, "History of the Counties of Dauphin and Lebanon in the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania," 1883. In 1877, in consideration of his researches into the history of Pennsylvania, Lafayette College conferred upon him the honorary degree of Master of Arts. Upon the organization of the National Guard of Pennsylvania, in 1870, Dr. Egle was appointed surgeon-in-chief of the Fifth Division with the rank of lieutenant-colonel, and subsequently in the consolidation of the commands transferred to surgeon of the Eighth Regiment, and is the senior medical officer in the National Guard of Pennsylvania. He has been honored by election as corresponding member of a number of historical and learned societies in America and England. Dr. Egle married, in 1860, Eliza White Beatty, daughter of George Beatty, of Harrisburg; and their children were Beverly Waugh (d. s. p.), Sarah Beatty, and Catharine Irwin. A. B. H.

DANIEL EPPLEY.

Daniel Eppley, son of George Eppley (1786-1852) and Susan Brookhart (1800-1850), was born July 26, 1817, in Fishing Creek Valley, Fairview township, York Co., Pa. He was educated in the common schools of the neighborhood, and brought up on his father's farm. On the 6th of October, 1834, he came to Harrisburg and entered the dry-goods store of George and Bernard Geiger, where he remained six years, when he made an engagement with Messrs. Elder & Piper in the same business. In April, 1847, he established himself in the mercantile trade, which he successfully conducted until in 1870 he retired from all business pursuits. On the organization of the Farmers' Bank of Harrisburg, in May, 1872, Mr. Eppley was chosen a director of that institution, and at present is president thereof. He has served in the various municipal offices of school director, city and county auditor, and also one of the trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg. Mr. Eppley married, June 2, 1845, Louisa Geiger, daughter of Bernard and Charlotte Geiger, of Harrisburg, who died March 2, 1849, leaving a daughter, Mary Lavinia, married Walter B. Fahnestock, of Pittsburgh, both dead, leaving two children. He married, secondly, Dec. 24, 1850, Anna Maria Heisely, daughter of George J. Heisely and Anna Maria Kurtz, of Harrisburg, and their children were Edward Kurtz, d. s. p.; Helen Elizabeth, married William H. Lyter; and Annie Maria.

BENJAMIN F. ETTER.

Benjamin F. Etter, lawyer of Harrisburg, and deputy attorney-general of Pennsylvania, was born at Middletown, Dauphin Co., Sept. 29, 1824. He obtained his early education at the Middletown Academy. At the age of twenty-two began reading law with James Fox, a lawyer of Harrisburg, and was ad-

A. and Barbara A. (Keller) Snyder, of Lancaster, Pa. Her father was a relative of Governor Snyder. Their surviving children are Charles F., clerk in the First National Bank of Harrisburg; Nannie E.; and George E. Etter, a student in Princeton College. His parents, George and Nancy (Shelly) Etter, died at Middletown, the former in 1850, aged sixty-seven; the latter in 1826, aged thirty. His grandfather, Abraham Etter, settled in Dauphin County, from Lancaster, about 1800, where he died, and was of German origin. His maternal grandfather was Abraham Shelly, of York County, Pa. *

mitted to practice on Nov. 24, 1851. He opened a law-office in Harrisburg the same year, and has been engaged in general practice in the civil courts of the county and State since, a period of thirty-one years. Mr. Etter was appointed and served for six years as deputy attorney-general under Attorney-General William M. Meredith, and for a short time under Attorney-General Benjamin H. Brewster. His safe and judicious opinions as a counselor, his integrity and fidelity to his clients, and his uncompromising desire to defend the wrong and encourage the right have given him a high reputation in the profession. He married, in 1857, Catharine A., daughter of Charles

A. K. FAHNESTOCK.

Adam K. Fahnestock, son of Obed Fahnestock (1770-1840) and Anna Maria Gessel (died 1842), was born July 12, 1806, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was descended from Diedrich Fahnestock, one of the earliest settlers at Ephrata, Lancaster Co. Adam K. was educated in the schools of the borough, and at the academy at Litz. He was brought up in mercantile pursuits, and for many years carried on brick-making extensively. He was engaged in the hardware business about fifteen years, and in 1833 established a glue manufactory at Harrisburg, which he successfully carried on for a long period. Mr. Fahnestock was thrice married,—his first wife being Sybil T. Holbrook, the mother of all his children, who were Harris C. (the prominent banker of New York), Holbrook (d. s. p.), Morris James (d. s. p.), Sybil Amelia (married T. H. Hubbard), Charles A., Wallace Weir, and Louis.

CHARLES B. FAGER, M.D.

Charles Buffington Fager, son of Dr. John Henry Fager and Mary H. Buffington, was born in the year 1837, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, read medicine with his father, and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1864, and commenced the practice of his profession at Harrisburg. He was a medical cadet in the United States army in 1862, and contract assistant surgeon in 1864, vaccine physician of Harrisburg, 1866-67, and one of the founders of the Homœopathic Medical Society of Dauphin County in 1866. Dr. Fager married Susan A. Hummel, daughter of Valentine Hummel, of Harrisburg.

SAMUEL M. FENN.

Samuel M. Fenn, son of Benjamin Sedgwick Fenn and Sarah Scranton, was born Aug. 3, 1839, in Canaan, Conn. He removed in early life to Harrisburg, and became an inmate of the home of his uncle, Theophilus Fenn, then editor of the Pennsylvania Telegraph, where he received such advantages of study as could be afforded him. At the age of sixteen he entered the office of the Palladium, at New Haven, Conn., and served an apprenticeship to the art of printing. In September, 1862, Mr. Fenn enlisted in Company C, Sixteenth Regiment Connecticut Volunteers, and served until the close of the war for the Union. After an interval he returned as foreman on the Hartford Times, and in November, 1868, removed to Lykens, having purchased the office and effects of the Upper Dauphin Register, which was subsequently changed to Lykens Register, which he has continued to edit and publish, having "brought both ability and energy to bear in its publication." Mr. Fenn married, April 14, 1872, Addie Miller, of Shrewsbury, York Co., Pa., and they had Emma M. and George B.

PROFESSOR L. O. FOOSE.

Lemmel Oliver Foose, son of James Foose (1811-1876) and Catharine Boyer (born 1817), was born Jan. 16, 1838, in Juniata County, Pa. He was educated at Markleville Academy, Perry Co., Pa., and at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg, leaving the latter institution at the close of the junior year in 1863. While attending the academy, and to some extent the college, he taught school. In 1864 he took charge of the academy at Aaronsburg, Centre Co., Pa. In 1866 and 1867 was superintendent of schools at Lima, Ohio; in 1868-69 superintendent of schools at Miamisburg, Ohio, and from 1869 to 1879 teacher in the Boys'

High School, Harrisburg. In 1879 he was elected superintendent of schools for the city of Harrisburg, which position he now holds. Of his work at Harrisburg, it may be said that especially in the high school he succeeded in bringing about system and order; a course of study was adopted and improved from time to time, the standard of scholarship and discipline raised, and the general scope and mission of the school so enlarged that it has reached a high grade among similar institutions in the State. Mr. Foose married, in 1868, Elizabeth Eleanor Kuhn, daughter of Rev. Samuel and Eleanor M. Kuhn.

REV. C. H. FORNEY, D.D.

Christian Henry Forney, son of Christian T. Forney (1806-1860) and Barbara Strohm, was born Oct. 17, 1839, in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the common schools, St. Thomas Institute, Milesburg Normal School, and Oberlin College, where he completed the course preparatory to the study of theology in 1860, and entered upon the ministry at Mount Ivy, Lancaster Co., Pa., in November of that year, where he remained until April, 1863. He also preached at Chambersburg, Franklin Co., Pa., from April, 1863, to April, 1866; at Harrisburg, Fourth Street, from April, 1866, to April, 1868; Lancaster City from April, 1868, to April, 1870, since which time he has been in charge of the editorial department of the church paper of his denomination, preaching only on special occasions. He was chaplain of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania in 1868, and has been twice Speaker of the East Pennsylvania Eldership of the Church of God; once Speaker of the General Eldership; almost a continuous member of the standing committee of the East Pennsylvania Eldership since 1869; member of Board of Missions and Board of Incorporation of the East Pennsylvania Eldership; member of the Executive Board of the General Eldership; continuous member of Board of Education of the General Eldership until elected on the Executive Board; a continuous member of the Board of Education of East Pennsylvania Eldership. In 1866 he was elected assistant editor of the Church Advocate, and upon the death of the editor, in 1869, became editor-in-chief, which position he still occupies. In June, 1881, Hillsdale College, Michigan, conferred upon him the degree of D.D.

ABRAHAM FORTENBAUGH.

Abraham Fortenbaugh, son of Samuel Fortenbaugh and Mary E. Miller, was born Aug. 5, 1838, in Newberry township, York Co., Pa. His grandfather, Peter Fortenbaugh, was of German birth; emigrated to America, and settled on a farm in Newberry township, York Co., Pa. He married and had eleven children, of whom Samuel, born April 14, 1813, was a farmer and merchant; died May 5, 1866; married Mary E. Miller, daughter of Henry Miller, of York County, Pa., died Oct. 11, 1881. Their children were Mary Ann, Abraham, Anne, Samuel H., Mary Ellen (married Prowell), Samuel, and Robert, of whom Abraham and Mary Ellen alone survive. Abraham Fortenbaugh during the early years of his life assisted his father on the farm and in the store, receiving such educational advantages as the country schools afforded. At the age of sixteen he became a clerk at Goldsboro', whither his father had removed, two years later going into business connection with his father at Yocumtown, where he remained until 1864. He removed to Halifax, and engaged in general merchandising, and soon established a large and rapidly increasing trade. He represented the county of Dauphin in the State Legislature, sessions of 1874-75 and 1876. He is a director and vice-president of the First National Bank of Millersburg, and one of the founders of the Miners' Deposit Bank of Lykens. Mr. Fortenbaugh married in 1862, Mary E. Byrod, daughter of John Byrod, of Halifax, and they had Seward B., d. s. p.; Mary, Catharine, and Samuel.

DAVID FLEMING.

David Fleming, lawyer, of Harrisburg, Pa., was born in Washington County, Pa., July 17, 1812; is one of a family of eleven children, and the son of Samuel and Sarah (Beckett) Fleming. His paternal grandfather was of Scotch ancestry, and a native of Ireland. He settled in Cecil County, Md., from Ireland, afterwards in Chester County, Pa., and subsequently at Bald Eagle, from which place, with his family, he was driven away by the Indians. In the attack one son, Samnel, father of our subject (1761-1851), was shot through the arm. He afterwards settled in Washington County, and in 1812 removed to Dauphin County, where he spent the remainder of his active life, a farmer, in West Hanover township. The family attended and were members of the Presbyterian Church there, under the well-known clergyman, Rev. James Snodgrass.

David Fleming spent his boyhood on the farm, obtained his early education at the common school and "Harrisburg Academy," and for several years, alternating with attending school, he was a successful teacher here and in Baltimore County, Md., in the latter place teaching classics and the higher mathematics. On account of ill health he turned his attention to business pursuits, and became a clerk for Dr. D. N. L. Reutter, a contractor on the Baltimore and Port Deposit Railroad, and after a time took charge for him of the shipment of pine timber for the navy-yard at Washington, D. C., from North Carolina, making several trips by sea and greatly improving his health. In 1838 he returned to Harrisburg, and for several years edited a local paper and reported the proceedings of the Legislature for four Philadelphia journals, including the United States Gazette. In 1839 he entered the law-office of William McClure as a student, was admitted to the bar at Harrisburg in November, 1841, and has uninterruptedly practiced his profession since. Mr. Fleming has regularly practiced in the Supreme Court of the commonwealth since 1843, and the reported decisions of that tribunal will show that he has been concerned in a large proportion of the cases removed from Dauphin and other counties, many of them involving principles of great importance. Of late years he has attended to bankruptcy practice in the two Federal courts.

He closed his labors as newspaper correspondent in 1847, and was elected chief clerk of the House of Representatives, and served during that session. He was renominated by the Whigs in 1848, but a tie in that body and the absence of one of his friends gave the place to the Democratic candidate by one vote. In 1854 he was elected district attorney, served three years, and declined a re-election. In 1863 he was elected to the State Senate, and served for three years in that body, being chairman of the Committee on the Judiciary during his second year, and Speaker in the closing session of his term. Outside his profession, Mr. Fleming has been identified in various ways with most of the leading interests in Harrisburg. He was one of the founders of the Harrisburg Car-Works in 1853, subsequently obtained its charter, and succeeded William Calder upon his death in 1880 as president, and also a member of the board and stockholder of the Foundry and Machine Company, which originated from the same enterprise, member of the board and counsel for the Lochiel Iron Company, and assisted in the organization of its successor, the Lochiel Rolling-Mill Company. He was counsel and one of the directors of the Harrisburg National Bank for many years, and was one of the incorporators in organizing the First National Bank of Harrisburg, for which he has been counsel since. He was a director of the Inland Telegraph Company, and afterwards of the United States Telegraph Company until its consolidation with the Western Union lines, and has been counsel for the latter, as well as for the Atlantic and Ohio and the Pacific and Atlantic Telegraph Companies, the Columbia Oil Company, and many other large corporations in several important suits, involving the taxation of these corporations by the State. He was one of the originators of the first Harrisburg Gas Company, and had been president of the People's Gas and Gaseous Fuel Company of Harrisburg. Mr. Fleming was one of the founders and secretary and treasurer of the Harrisburg City Railroad (now railway), and has been a director since its reorganization. He is a trustee for the Home of the Friendless of Harrisburg, and a member of the board of trustees of the Market Square Presbyterian Church, of which he was president for many years. He is one of the oldest Sunday-school teachers in the city, and has always aided in every enterprise tending to better educate the rising generation, and he was patriotic and rendered support to the Union cause by his influence and means during the civil war. Mr. Fleming's law partner, with whom he has been associated since 1870, is Mr. S. J. McCarrell, present district attorney for Dauphin County, who read law with him and was admitted to practice in 1867.

He married, in 1852, Susan, daughter of Charles and Mary (Richmond) Mowry, of Harrisburg. Her father published the first newspaper at Downingtown, Pa., and after his removal to Harrisburg he was appointed one of the first canal commissioners in the State, and conducted a newspaper in company with Gen. Simon Cameron.

Their children were Charles M., a graduate of Princeton College and member of the Dauphin County bar, recently deceased; Sarah, a graduate of Vassar College; David, a graduate of Princeton College, cashier of the foundry and machine-works; and George R., a law student. *

LEWIS H. GAUSE.

Lewis H. Gause, son of Samuel Gause (1781-1865) and Mary Bailey (1784-1868), was born Oct. 28, 1821, at Unionville, Chester Co., Pa. He was educated in the country schools of Delaware and Chester County, and at Westtown boarding-school. After having taught school a good many years, he graduated in 1861 from the State Normal School of New Jersey, located at Trenton. In early life he commenced teaching; came to Harrisburg in 1843 as teacher in the boys' high school of the South Ward, where he continued until 1851, when he became teacher of the sciences in the agricultural school at Mount Airy, conducted by Professor John Wilkinson, for one year. From December, 1852, to the spring of 1855 he taught at Treemount Seminary, Norristown, when he took charge of the Olive Branch, which he edited two years. In 1857 went to Springfield, Ohio, to engage in a newspaper venture, but purchasing a farm, followed farming two years, teaching during the winter. In 1859 he returned East, took charge of one of the public schools at Plainfield, N. J., subsequently attending the State Normal School as stated. During the Rebellion he entered the United States service, serving until the close of the war, and was made clerk to Maj. E. L. Moore, paymaster in the United States army. In October, 1865, he resigned, and established a select school at Harrisburg, which he successfully conducted ten years. In 1875 was elected by the school board of the city of Harrisburg supervisory principal of the Reily Street schools, which position he has since filled. Mr. Gause studied law while conducting the Harrisburg Institute, under John C. Kunkel, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar December, 1868. He married, Oct. 28, 1847, Sarah Fish Moore, daughter of Levi Moore and Sarah Fish, of Amherst, Mass., and their children are Leander M., Charles S., Helen, Frank L., Lucy G., and Laura B.

J. Z. GERHARD, M.D.

Jerome Z. Gerhard, son of William T. Gerhard (born Dec. 10, 1809, still living) and Elizabeth Seibert (1812-1881), was born Nov. 6, 1842, in Cherryville, Northampton Co., Pa. He was prepared for college in the high school at Lancaster, Pa., and the preparatory department of Franklin and Marshall College, and graduated from that institution in 1864; entered the office of Dr. John L. Atlee, of Lancaster, in September of that year, and graduated from the University of Pennsylvania in 1868, and at once opened an office in Lancaster, where he remained nearly two years in active practice. During this time he was visiting physician to the Children's Home, and one of the physicians to the Lancaster County Hospital. Feb. 1, 1870, he entered upon the duties of first assistant physician in the Harrisburg Hospital, and Feb. 12, 1881, succeeded Dr. Curwen as superintendent, which position he still holds. During the year 1877 he spent five months on the continent, and thoroughly inspected the methods of treatment practiced in hospitals there.

DANIEL W. GROSS.

Daniel Wiestling Gross, son of Abraham Gross (1781-1835) and Anna Maria Wiestling (1789-1856), was born March 11, 1810, in Middle Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the schools of the borough of Harrisburg and at the academy there. He learned the profession of druggist and apothecary, and commenced business in 1830, and has continued therein until the present. He served in the municipal offices of member of Town Council and school director a long period. He was for many years one of the trustees of the State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, and afterwards its treasurer; is president of the board of trustees of the theological seminary of the Reformed Church, vice-president of the board of trustees of Franklin and Marshall College, and was president of the board of publication of the Reformed Church of the United States for many years. Mr. Gross married, in 1841, Elizabeth Kunkel, eldest daughter of George Kunkel, of Harrisburg, who died in 1882, and their children were George A., John K., Joshua Wiestling, Daniel Wiestling, d. s. p., Edward Ziegler, Henry Sahler, Robert, d. s. p., and Mary Elizabeth, d. s. p.

A. BOYD HAMILTON.

Adam Boyd Hamilton was born in Harrisburg, in a house belonging to his grandfather Boyd, now No. 210 South Second Street, on a Sunday morning, Sept. 18, 1808, son of Hugh Hamilton, who was son of Capt. John Hamilton, and of Rosanna Boyd, only child of Adam Boyd. Both these ancestors were purchasers of property in 1785, both erected substantial brick mansions, and both died and are buried at Harrisburg. The subject of this notice received his first school training under Misses Graham and Smith, at Second and Mulberry Streets, Charles Still, Maginnes, Birkman, Hamilton, Tod, Davies. Most of his time was devoted to picking up the trade of printer in his father's establishment, the Harrisburg Chronicle. At this early period two late chief justices of the Supreme Court of Pennsylvania, Messrs. Lewis and Thompson, were employed there, as well as many other gentlemen who rose to social and political position. Having been carefully trained as a printer, after leaving the Harrisburg Academy he was appointed to a position in the engineer corps of the Juniata division of the State works, under De Witt Clinton, Jr., as chief. The partner of his father having died, he returned to Harrisburg and became partner in the Chronicle, where he continued until that paper was disposed of to other parties. He was chosen, when scarcely of voting age, one of the printers to the Legislature. After spending a couple of years in an unsuccessful business venture in the South, he returned to Harrisburg, and shortly after appointed to a position at Washington City; resigned, taking control of the Pennsylvania Reporter at Harrisburg; after a year or two was unanimously chosen assistant clerk of the Senate, resigning that, and becoming joint partner in the Pennsylvanian at Philadelphia with Millin, Parry, Joseph Neal, J. W. Forney, and S. D. Patterson. When that venture closed, became, under the contract law, printer to both houses of Congress, and at the repeal of that law, which carried his contract with it, came to Pennsylvania. Again became printer to the State until 1861, when he retired from that business and became an agriculturist. He has held many municipal offices,—a school director for twelve years; president of the Select Council, and one of the commissioners of 1860, and of a subsequent one in 1870, to make a plot of the city of Harrisburg; president of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society, the Dauphin County Society; at present a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy, secretary of the board of managers of the Harrisburg Hospital from the first meeting on the subject in 1872, president of the board of trustees of Derry Presbyterian Church, and the only president the Dauphin County Historical Society has had since its formation.

HON. THOMAS S. HARGEST.

Thomas Sewell Hargest, son of William E. Hargest (1819-72) and Rachel A. Taylor (born 1827, still living), was born Nov. 24, 1845, in Baltimore County, Md., and was educated in the public schools of Baltimore City. He came with his parents to Harrisburg in 1861, and in 1863 entered the army of the United States. He had previously studied the rudiments of some of the classics, physics, etc., and during the last year of the war studied law at Winchester, Va., and was admitted to the bar in August, 1877. In the early part of the year 1868 he was appointed commonwealth attorney for the county of Shenandoah, Va., and subsequently, in the same, judge of the Twelfth Judicial Circuit, embracing the counties of Page, Warren, Shenandoah, Rockingham, and Highland, which position he held until legislated, with all the judiciary of the State, off the bench, by the Democratic Legislature in 1870, when he resumed the practice of the law at Winchester, Va. In 1874 he returned to Harrisburg, and was elected city solicitor in 1876, and twice re-elected. He married, April 3, 1867, Virginia Diffenderfer, youngest daughter of William and Harriet Diffenderfer, of Winchester, Va.

PAUL A. HARTMAN, M.D.

Paul Augustus Hartman, son of John Joseph Hartman and Wilhelmina Stoever, was born Dec. 24, 1850, in Lebanon, Pa. He was educated in the public schools, at the State Normal School, Kutztown, Berks Co., and at Dickinson College, Carlisle. He then entered the office of Dr. Robert H. Seiler, of Harrisburg, and began the study of medicine under his instructions. He attended lectures at Jefferson Medical College, from which institution he graduated in March, 1874, and began the practice of his profession at Harrisburg, where he is now located. He is a member of the Dauphin County Medical Society, and of the State and American Medical Associations.

J. R. HAYES, M.D.

Joshua Roberts Hayes, son of Nathaniel Hayes (1792-1876) and Matilda Barwick (born 1797), was born in 1832, in New Castle County, Del. He received his primary and academic education at New Castle Academy, and entered the full course at the University of Pennsylvania in October, 1852, graduating from the medical department of that institution in 1855, having pursued the previous study of medicine under the late Dr. John B. Brinton, of West Chester, and the late Dr. George W. Norris, of Philadelphia. After graduating, in 1855, he settled in the practice of his profession at Rock Island, Ill., and while there, for a period of five years, attended professionally Abraham Lincoln, Stephen A. Douglas, and other celebrities in that State when they attended the courts of that county and district. When the war of the Rebellion broke out Dr. Hayes returned to Pennsylvania, and in 1861 was commissioned surgeon of the Seventy-second Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and in this and other commands served during four years. For a period of nine months he was in medical charge of Camp Curtin, at Harrisburg, and while there examined over ten thousand recruits. He was in seventeen battles of the late war, and performed or assisted in nearly eight hundred capital operations. In 1879 he established at Harrisburg a weekly newspaper,—The Saturday Night,—of which he continues to be the editor and proprietor. He is the patentee for several inventions for paving, and has devoted much time to the production of artificial stone, etc., and also for the utilizing coal, and machinery to compress the dust of coal. In addition to all these enterprises the doctor finds time to practice his profession. He married, in 1858, Elizabeth Rutter, daughter of John and Maria Rutter, of West Chester, and their children are Areta V. and John Lawrence.

JACOB M. HENSEL.

Jacob Myers Hensel, son of John Hensel and Elizabeth Myers, was born Jan. 7, 1825, in Lancaster. His grandfather, William Hensel, who was of Scotch and German descent, resided at Lancaster, Pa., and had children,—John, Jacob, William, Mary, and Elizabeth. John, the eldest son, born Aug. 3, 1785, died in his fifty-third year; married Elizabeth Myers, of Lancaster, born Aug. 7, 1785, and they had William, Mary Ann, Amelia, Christopher, Henrietta, Selina, Elizabeth, Sarah, and Jacob M. Jacob M., the subject of our sketch, passed his boyhood in Lancaster, received the ordinary school education until his sixteenth year, when he went to the trade of an iron-moulder at Margaretta Furnace, York Co. He then spent several years at Philadelphia and Baltimore, when, in 1865, he located in Lykens, where he established a factory and machine-shop, in which he is at present engaged. Mr. Hensel married in 1849, Catharine A. Cameron, daughter of Alexander Cameron, of Canada, and one daughter survives her mother.

J. M. Hensel

A. J. HERR.

Andrew Jackson Herr, son of Daniel Herr (1795-1857) and Sarah Gilbert (1801-80), was born Dec. 31, 1832, in Greencastle, Franklin Co., Pa. He was educated at the Zane Street Grammar School and the high school at Philadelphia, from which latter institution he graduated in 1845. He shortly after commenced the study of law with James McCormick, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Aug. 20, 1850, locating at Harrisburg in the practice of his profession. He served, by election, as district attorney nine years; was counsel for county commissioners one year, and represented the county of Dauphin in the Legislature in 1868 and 1869; was member of the State Senate in 1875 and 1876, and in the latter year re-elected for full term of four years; elected president pro tem. of the Senate at the close of the session of 1878, and re-elected to that office in the session of 1879. In November, 1880, he was re-elected again for full term of four years. Col. Herr married, first, Martha Linn Coyle, daughter of Scott Coyle and Martha Linn; secondly, Nannie M. Coyle, and their children were Daniel, a member of the Dauphin County bar, and Martha Coyle, d. s. p.; married, thirdly, Nannie Gilmore, daughter of James Gilmore and Eleanor McKinney, and they had Eleanor Gilmore. It may be here stated that in his early years he was a frequent contributor to the Saturday Evening Post and Neal's Gazette, of Philadelphia. When fifteen years of age he published three novels, entitled "Maid of the Valley," "Story founded on the Revolution," and "The Corsair," founded on the revolt of San Domingo. These books were republished in England. A novel called "The Chain of Destiny," also appeared from his pen.

A. O. HIESTER.

A. O. Hiester, son of Gabriel and Mary Otto Hiestter, was born at Reading, Nov. 11, 1808. At twelve years of age he was sent to Downingtown Academy, in charge of Joshua Hoops, a Hicksite Quaker, next sent to Lebanon and placed under the care of Rev. Mr. Ernst, a Lutheran preacher, by whom in company with A. E. Shulze, son of Ex-Governor Shulze, he was prepared for college. In 1824 entered Dickinson College, graduating in 1828, and was subsequently a trustee for many years; was elected a delegate with Dr. E. W. Roberts to the Infant-School Convention, which met in Washington, 1830. Traveled there in an old-fashioned gig, and dined with Henry Clay the day before the convention met. Then spent one year studying law in the office of Judge Krause. Law not being congenial to his taste, he abandoned the study, and spent six months at Huntingdon Forge (owned by Dr. Shoenberger); leaving there he spent six months with Reuben Trexler, at Long Swamp Furnace, in Berks County. Returned to Harrisburg, and in 1830 and 1831 assisted in the erection of the rolling-mills at the mouth of the Conedogunit Creek, when his father, in partnership with Norman Cullender, built a large boiler-plate and bar-iron mill. Took an active part in the management of the business until 1836, during the most disastrous period throughout the United States to ironmasters that they have been called to pass through.

He was a director many years of the Branch Bank of Pennsylvania until it was closed; was a director of the old Harrisburg Bank until it was changed, and is now a director of the Harrisburg National Bank. He was appointed associate judge by Governor Johnson to fill a vacancy occasioned by death, and was twice subsequently elected by the people for terms of five years each. He was also appointed one of three commissioners by the court of Dauphin County, under an act of the Legislature, to hear testimony and report their opinion of the damages sustained by individuals consequent upon Stuart's raid through the counties of Fulton, Franklin, and Adams. The commission consisted of Col. James Worrall, a gentleman from Lebanon County, and himself. He was by them elected chairman of the commission. He was chairman of the committee of arrangements of the first State fair, held at Harrisburg in 1851; was one of the five commissioners, composed of Judge Watts, Judge Miles, H. N. McAllis, Mr. Walker, and himself, to select a location for the State Agricultural College, and after it was finished annually elected a trustee for about fifteen years. His son, Gabriel, who graduated at the college, has taken his place, and is now a trustee. He was also secretary of the State Agricultural Society for four years. For six years he was a trustee of the State Lunatic Hospital.

While attending to his farm he has led an active business life, having settled twelve estates as executor, acted as trustee for eleven persons, as guardian for ten children, and assignee for the settlement of three estates. He was among the first of the subscribers to the Harrisburg Cotton Factory, the Harrisburg Car-Works (of which he was a director), of the Harrisburg Street Passenger Railroad (of which he was president), and of the Fort Hunter Road Commission, of which he has been secretary and treasurer since its organization.

In 1835 married Catharine M. Cox, daughter of John B. Cox, recently deceased. *

WILLIAM HOFFMAN.

William Hoffman, son of Jacob Hoffman (born 1805) and Eve Elizabeth Weiser (1805-1881), was born Sept. 7, 1831, in Jordan township, Northumberland Co., Pa. His grandfather removed from Berks facture of agricultural implements, which was continued until 1878, when he resumed his former business. In 1860, Mr. Hoffman was elected a justice of the peace, which office he held for twenty years. In 1877 he was chosen Burgess of Uniontown borough, and is a director of the First National Bank of Millersburg. Mr. Hoffman married, Oct. 20, 1853, Lydia Willier, daughter of Adam Willier, of Lykens township, and they had W. Jacob, J. Weiser, Sarah E. (married — Emrick), Kate A., and Eulera J. *

County, where he was born, to Lykens Valley at an early day, locating on a farm near Berrysburg. He married Rebecca Kuntzman, and they had Daniel, George, Jacob, John, and seven daughters. Jacob learned the trade of a carpenter, married Eve Elizabeth Weiser, and they had William, John, Mary (married — Witmer), Sarah (married — Moyer), and Elizabeth (married — Deppen). He removed to Northumberland County, where he followed farming and cabinet-making, and there most of their children were born. William Hoffman's early life was passed on his father's farm, and his educational advantages were limited to the country schools. In 1859 he removed to Uniontown, Dauphin Co., where he engaged in merchandising until 1865, when, having retired from mercantile pursuits, he began the manu-

WILLIAM T. HILDRUP.

Thomas Hildrup (1754-1795), a native of England, came to America and settled at Hartford, Conn., in 1766, where he learned the trade of a jeweler, and carried on that business there during the remainder of his active life. He was an influential citizen of the place, and was appointed and served as postmaster of Hartford for several years. He had five sons,—John, Joslin, Thomas, William, and Jesse,—and two daughters. Jesse Hildrup (1789-1865) spent his life as a tanner and shoemaker in Middletown and a farmer in Danbury, Conn., and died in Belvidere, Ill. His wife was Sophia Turner, of Middlefield, and their children were William T., Mary (married Rev. S. C. Howe, a Methodist clergyman), Jesse (a lawyer of Chicago, Ill.), Martha, and John (a machinist in the car-works at Harrisburg). William T. Hildrup, son of Jesse Hildrup, was born Feb. 6, 1822, in Middletown, Conn. His early life was marked by a desire for education and a full knowledge of mechanics. At the age of nineteen, with only twenty-five dollars in money, but with self-reliance, industrious habits, and a will to do for himself, he left his home to carve out a fortune for himself. He worked at the carpenter's trade for two years in Cape Vincent, N. Y., then proceeded to Worcester, Mass., where he became an employé in the Bradley Car-Factory. Here he began as a journeyman mechanic in a business that he became so thoroughly master of in nine years as to merit the highest place in the concern, and become principal manager of the works. It was here that decision, capacity of mind to direct and manage, and a natural talent for mechanics first developed in Mr. Hildrup, and were recognized by his superiors. He was a close student of mechanical theories, business rules and usages coupled with practical ideas. For one year following, he engaged in manufacturing car-wheels and car-castings in Elmira, N. Y. In 1853, upon invitation, he came to Harrisburg and was the leading mind in organizing the Harrisburg Car-Works, of which he was chosen future business manager, and has continued to conduct them successfully since, a period of thirty years. Finding only crude mechanics, he organized a free drawing-school the following winter, and taught mechanical drawing for mechanics, and ornamental drawing for painters, which resulted in preparing men for proficient work in the car-shops, and was the preliminary education for some who afterwards gained distinction as master mechanics in different parts of the United States. By his enterprise and superior capacity, coupled with capital brought to his aid, he has been the chief man in building up the manufacturing interests of Harrisburg. Every enterprise has succeeded under his supervision, and not one ever failed or proved a loss to its creditors. Urged to take the management of the Lochiel Iron Company in 1862, he lifted it out of distress, started it, and saved the company a large amount of money. A second time when the company was in difficulty he was made temporary president, managed it for nine months, lifted it from a large debt, and reorganized it under a charter of the Lochiel Rolling-Mill Company, with additional capital and a new organization. Thus Mr. Hildrup's thorough mechanical education and executive ability have been brought to the notice of the largest corporations in the city, and made useful to the interests of Harrisburg. Knowing the difficulty of the artisan in securing instruction, he interested himself in obtaining a bill from the Legislature in 1873 in behalf of a "Mechanic's High School," was made chairman of a commission to establish it, but sufficient appropriation not being made on account of the panic of that year, the school has never been established, although he caused to be added to several now existing colleges special mechanical professorships covering the interests of general and specific technical education.

Mr. Hildrup planned and constructed the fortifications for the defense of Harrisburg during the late civil war, and in connection with William Calder, furnished the government 42,000 horses, 67,000 mules, and 5000 oxen during the four years of the Rebellion. He was one of the incorporators of the First National Bank of Harrisburg, and has been a director since. He is the inventor of a great improvement for upsetting and enlarging the end of an iron rod, so that the thread shall be as long as the rod itself. In 1881, desirous of freeing himself from the entire care of his business interests in Harrisburg, he removed his family to Washington, D. C., where he spends a part of his time. He married in October, 1846, Harriet E. Esselstyne, daughter of Col. John B. Esselstyne, of Cape Vincent, N. Y., who died in 1876. His surviving children are Jessie, William T., and Clara. His present wife is Emma J. Piper, of Philadelphia. *

GEORGE R. HURSH.

George R. Hursh, third son of Christian and Eliza Hursh, was born Feb. 6, 1835, in Fairview township, York Co., Pa. He was brought up on his father's farm. At the age of sixteen he was sent to the Cumberland Valley Institute, where he remained about eighteen months. He then entered the office of Dr. A. J. Herman, of Carlisle, and began the study of medicine, and in due time attended lectures in Jefferson Medical College, where he graduated in March, 1857. He first located in New Cumberland, where he practiced two years, then removed to New Market, York Co. In September, 1864, he was appointed assistant surgeon in the army, and was stationed in the United States Hospital at York, Pa. Towards the close of the Rebellion he resigned his position, and resumed the practice of medicine at New Market. In 1868 he was elected a member of the Pennsylvania House of Representatives, and the year following re-elected. In 1871 he removed to Harrisburg, where he has since remained in the practice of his profession. In 1876 he was appointed on the medical staff of the city hospital, Harrisburg, a position he now holds. Dr. Hursh married, in 1859, Sarah A. Reiff. *

COL. WILLIAM W. JENNINGS.

William Wesley Jennings, son of William Jennings (1807-1875) and Elmira Elizabeth Boas, was born July 22, 1838, at Harrisburg, Pa. His father came to Harrisburg about 1823, to learn the trade of coachsmith, where he married, and subsequently established a foundry, which he successfully carried on for a long period. His grandfather, William Jennings, raised a company in the Juniata Valley for the War of 1812-14, but died very suddenly before the company left home. William W., the subject of this sketch, attended the public schools of Harrisburg until his fifteenth year, when he commenced to learn the trade of an iron-moulder in his father's foundry. From 1860 to 1875 he was engaged in the iron business. During the war of the Rebellion he raised the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, a nine months' regiment, and was in the battles of Fredericksburg and Chancellorsville (see history of the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment, ante p. 202). Shortly after being mustered out of service the Gettysburg campaign opened, and Col. Jennings was placed in command of the Twenty-sixth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia. From 1864 to 1866, Col. Jennings served as sheriff of the county of Dauphin, and again from 1876 to 1878. Upon the death of Mr. Calder, president of the First National Bank of Harrisburg, in 1880, he was elected to that position, in which he continues, and is the president of the Commonwealth Guarantee Trust and Safe-Deposit Company.

FRANCIS JORDAN.

Francis Jordan, son of John and Jane Jordan, was born in Bedford County, Pa., Feb. 5, 1820. His father was of English and his mother of Irish parentage, both highly esteemed for their intelligence and Christian virtues. He was educated by his maternal uncle, a Mississippi planter, at Augusta College, Kentucky, and at Franklin and Marshall College, Pennsylvania. He studied law, was admitted to practice, and soon after was appointed district attorney of Bedford County, and subsequently elected to the same position. At the outset his official conduct was able, his indictments being so accurately drawn that not one of them was quashed for informality. In 1850 he became the law partner of Alexander King, of Bedford, subsequently president judge, which relations continued until 1861. In 1855, Mr. Jordan commenced his public career, and was elected to the State Senate for a term of three years. There he was made chairman of the committee charged with drawing a bill for the readjustment of legislative districts under a new apportionment, chairman of the Judiciary Committee, composed of some of the best legal talent in the State, and a prominent advocate of the bill authorizing the sale of the public works. He declined a re-election, and was soon after appointed one of a commission of three to revise the civil code, which duty was postponed on account of hostilities, and finally passed to other hands. He was also tendered the appointment of attorney-general of the State by the Governor, which he reluctantly declined by reason of the complications attending it.

A pressing exigency called for a sudden concentration of troops upon the central border and at Cumberland, Md., in the fall of 1861. Upon the request of Governor Curtin, Mr. Jordan accompanied the noted Reserve Corps as assistant quartermaster, and while thus employed, without solicitation or even knowledge, he was appointed by President Lincoln paymaster in the army, and promptly confirmed, and served for two and a half years in Virginia, Maryland, Kentucky, Tennessee, Mississippi, and Louisiana, during the last four months of which time being chief paymaster in the Army of the Mississippi, and disbursing during his entire term four million dollars, under a bond of only twenty thousand dollars, rendering a satisfactory account. Urged by Governor Curtin he resigned his position, and was appointed by him military agent of the State at Washington, where the manifold interests of Pennsylvania were ably represented, and under his management the claims of our soldiers were promptly examined and paid. The Legislature, recognizing his efficient services, passed an act conferring upon him the rank of a colonel of infantry. In 1866, Col. Jordan was chosen chairman of the Republican State Central Committee, and conducted the canvass with great ability and discretion, resulting in the election of Gen. Geary, who appointed Col. Jordan Secretary of the Commonwealth, in which capacity he served with ability for six years.

In 1871, pending the agitation for the revision of the State Constitution, he wrote and published a paper advocating a revision and detailing his reasons, which was well received, and on the 19th of February, 1872, upon invitation, he delivered an address before the Social Science Association, of Philadelphia, and afterward in Pittsburgh, advocating thirteen amendments, covering the most vital defects of the old instrument, twelve of which were adopted by the State Convention. These papers served to establish the reputation of Col. Jordan as a sound lawyer, and elicited strong commendation from intelligent men both within and without the commonwealth.

Col. Jordan was prominently presented in the nominating convention as the successor of Governor Geary, but withdrawn to harmonize conflicting interests, and in the same convention his vote was next to the successful candidate for judge of the Supreme Court, although he was not before the convention for the office. Col. Jordan took up his residence in Harrisburg upon his appointment as Secretary of the Commonwealth, and in 1872 resumed the practice of law in partnership with Hon. Louis W. Hall, since which time he has acted as counsel for the Pennsylvania Railroad, and various other corporations. On Nov. 4, 1882, following the resignation of Secretary Quay, he was appointed by Governor Hoyt Secretary of the Commonwealth. Col. Jordan is an esteemed citizen, recognized as an able advocate and judicious and safe counselor, and possessed of sterling integrity in all his business relations.

About the same time he had also been prevailed upon to accept the presidency of the Pennsylvania Telephone Company. This is a new corporation, having half a million of dollars capital, and its operations extending from Easton, on the Delaware, to Chambersburg, including Harrisburg, York, Columbia, Reading, Pottsville, Mauch Chunk, and other important points.

His first wife, Louisa Farquhar, was the adopted daughter of Hon. Job Mann, ex-State treasurer and ex-member of Congress, and bore him children,—William F. Jordan, publisher of the Era, a daily newspaper of Bradford, Pa., and Mary Alice, wife of Walter F. Moore, of Bedford. His present wife, Mary, is a daughter of Rev. William M. Hall, a Presbyterian clergyman, and sister of Judge Hall, of Bedford, and of Hon. Louis W. Hall, his law partner. *

MAJ. JOHN B. KEEFER.

John Brua Keefer, son of Andrew Keefer (1803-1876) and Catharine Brua (1810-1836), was born April 10, 1832, at Harrisburg, Pa. He received his education at the public schools of the borough and at the Harrisburg Military Institute, established by Capt. Alden Partridge in 1845. Subsequently he learned the trade of a machinist in the shops of the Philadelphia and Reading Railroad at Reading. From 1853 to 1864 he carried on a foundry and machine-shop at Cresona, Schuylkill Co., Pa.; then engaged in the oil trade in Venango County; afterwards carrying on the rolling-mill business at Allentown; and from 1870 to 1877 in the manufacture of fire-brick at Harrisburg. On the 13th of February, 1877, he was commissioned by President Grant major and paymaster in the United States army, and at present in active service. Maj. Keefer married, Nov. 27, 1854, Caroline R. Boyer, of Reading. Their children were Horace A., Catharine A. (married Lieut. J. W. Duncan, U.S.A.), Edith M. (married M. H. Paxton), Mary F., Frank R., and Caroline R.

RUDOLPH F. KELKER.

Rudolph Frederick Kelker, son of Frederick Kelker and Catharine Fager, was born Feb. 17, 1820, at Harrisburg, Pa. In March, 1835, he entered the hardware-store of Oglesby & Hinckley, successors to his father, to learn the business, and continued with them until May, 1838, when, owing to delicate health, he left the establishment and gave attention to the improvement of his father's lands in the vicinity of Harrisburg. On the 18th of November, 1842, he purchased the interest of Mr. Hinckley and carried on the hardware business with his partner, Mr. Oglesby, until the death of the latter, March 21, 1846. He continued the business alone until May following, when he associated with him his two brothers, and conducted the same under the firm-name of Kelker & Brothers, remaining in business until May 14, 1851, when, on account of failing health, he retired from mercantile pursuits. In 1852 he was elected a director of the Harrisburg Bank, in which institution he has served a number of triennial terms, and is at present a member of the board. For several years he was a director of the First National Bank and a manager of the Harrisburg Cemetery. In the incorporation of Harrisburg as a city, he was appointed, with seven other citizens, by the Legislature on the commission to lay out the streets and avenues necessary in the new territory included within its limits. Since 1854 he has served as a trustee of the Harrisburg Academy, and was for a long time secretary and treasurer.

From 1866 to 1872, Mr. Kelker was one of the directors of the poor for the county of Dauphin, and through his instrumentality proper legislation was secured, new additional buildings erected, and such improvements made in the general management of the almshouse as greatly alleviated the condition of the unfortunate inmates. He was one of the founders of the City Hospital, a manager since its organization in 1873, from March, 1878, its treasurer, and was on the committee to superintend the construction of the new building recently erected. In 1873 and 1874 he was one of the trustees of the Pennsylvania State Lunatic Hospital at Harrisburg, and at the organization of the Harrisburg City Passenger Railway Company, in 1874, was made a director, and also since Nov. 2, 1874, has been its treasurer. A part from these active duties of citizen-life, Mr. Kelker's labors in the Reformed Church, of which he is a prominent member, it is here deemed proper to summarize. His parents were also members of the Reformed Church, and on the 27th of April, 1823, he was enrolled as a scholar in the Sunday-school. On the 27th of December, 1835, he was confirmed by Rev. J. F. Berg, D.D., a member of the church, a deacon of the church from 1841 to 1849, an elder in the same from 1849 to 1875, excepting the year 1867, and since May, 1883, has filled the same position. From October, 1836, until April 29, 1850, he served as a teacher, and from the latter date until January, 1870, as superintendent of the Sunday-school, when, at the request of the consistory of the church, he took charge of an adult Bible class, which during the first year increased from twelve to ninety members, and at the close of December, 1874, it numbered one hundred and sixty-one, when the class was assigned by the consistory to religious institutions of the city. For many years Mr. Kelker was one of the vice-presidents of the Pennsylvania State Sabbath-School Association, and for the last three years one of the vice-presidents of the board of managers of the American Sunday-School Union.

In 1845, Mr. Kelker was elected a trustee of Marshall College, Mercersburg, and subsequently, until 1869, a corporate trustee after its union with Franklin College, of Lancaster, as Franklin and Marshall College. The Eastern Synod of the Reformed Church the pastor of the church on account of Mr. Kelker's anti-ritualistic views. Being thus relieved of his work in the Sabbath-school, he accepted an invitation to organize and take charge of an adult Bible class of both sexes, to be composed of persons of all denominations, as well as of those who had no church relation, which organization was effected under the name of the "Salem Bible Class of Harrisburg," now numbering two hundred and sixty-eight members, and has had connected with it during its existence more than seven hundred persons. The class has a valuable library, and for years has been one of the established was incorporated in 1859, and he was one of the five trustees named in the charter and the first president of the board. For a number of years he was treasurer of Synod, and at present is vice-president of the board of trustees. Since 1863, with the exception of three years (1875-78), up to the present time he has served as treasurer of the Board of Foreign Missions of the General Synod of the Reformed Church. He was a member of the synodical committee to prepare the "Triglott Tercentenary Heidelberg Catechism," published in 1863, but dissented from the final action of that body, believing the many changes made in the new English translation as wholly unwarranted and uncalled for. He repeatedly represented his congregation in Classis, and the Classis as delegate to the Synod; was a member of the Synod of York in 1866, and made powerful opposition to the adoption and reference of the "New Order of Worship" to General Synod. In 1867, with others, he united in a call for a convention of the ministers and elders of the Eastern Synod, which assembled at Myerstown, Pa., to protest against the "Order of Worship," as being contrary to the doctrines and cultus of the Reformed Church. One of the results of this movement was the establishment, in 1869, of Ursinus College, at Freeland, Montgomery Co., Pa., under the presidency of Rev. J. H. A. Bomberger, D.D., with a university charter, thus enabling the institution to teach theology as well as the classics. In 1879, Mr. Kelker served as a member of the "Peace Commission," a body consisting of twelve ministers and twelve laymen, chosen by direction of the General Synod of the Reformed Church in the United States by the several District Synods to assemble at Harrisburg, Pa., and adjust the differences existing in that church in doctrine, cultus, and government. After eight days' discussion a basis of union was unanimously adopted, and a new era in the history of the church was opened up, which brought peace and harmony. The work of this commission was unanimously approved of by the General Synod, and the same persons were at once appointed by it to prepare an "Order of Worship" for the denomination suited to its wants and evangelical in its character.

In June, 1839, at his suggestion the Sunday-school teachers of Harrisburg founded the Harrisburg Sunday-School Union, and of which he was the first secretary, and upon its reorganization, in 1854, was chosen president thereof. He was one of the founders of the Young Men's Christian Association, in December, 1854, and president of the same in 1856. Mr. Kelker has likewise been deeply interested in the temperance work. In 1837, at the suggestion of and in connection with an intimate friend, James Cowden, they started the first total abstinence society in Harrisburg, as previous to this date the temperance organizations allowed the use of malt and vinous liquors. In 1840 he took a prominent part in the Washington temperance movement, and has often represented the cause in State conventions. Since their organization he has been the chairman of the executive committee appointed by the Christian citizens of Harrisburg, a number of years ago, to watch the applications for license, so as to prevent improper persons from obtaining the same, and to require all engaged in the liquor traffic to conform to the provisions of the license laws. As foreman of the grand jury of the county in 1871, 1873, and 1879, he made presentment of the license law as a public nuisance, and gave valuable statistics on the subject which attracted great attention. The report of 1873 was widely circulated, more than fifty thousand copies being printed by the friends of the temperance cause. In accordance with the suggestions of this report, almost one-half of the applications for that year for hotel and saloon liquor license were refused by the court. Mr. Kelker married June 17, 1844, Mary Anne Reily, daughter of Gen. William Reily, and their children were Frederick, Luther Reily, Rudolph Frederick, and William Anthony, of whom the second and fourth are living.

AGNES KEMP, M.D.

Agnes Kemp, daughter of Antoine Nininger and Katharine May, was born Nov. 4, 1823, at Harrisburg, Pa. She was educated partly at the public schools and at Mrs. Kingsford's seminary at Harrisburg, afterwards pursuing the study of the languages under competent instructors. In 1843 she married Col. William T. Sanders, of Harrisburg, who died in 1853. In 1855 she commenced the study of medicine in the city of New York, but the following year abandoned it, owing to domestic duties. In 1857 she married Joseph Kemp, a lawyer of the Blair County bar. In 1875, having ample leisure, she resumed her medical studies and entered the Women's Medical College, Philadelphia, from which institution she graduated in 1878. The following year was spent in the hospitals of New York and other cities. In 1879 she returned to Harrisburg and began the practice of her profession, which she continues. She was the first woman admitted a member of the Dauphin County Medical Society.

WALTER H. KENDIG.

Walter Henry Kendig, son of Martin Kendig and Rebecca McFarland, was born June 3, 1830, in Middletown, Pa. He was educated in the public schools of the borough, and learned merchandising. He afterwards was engaged with Philip Irwin and Stephen Atherton in several extensive railroad contracts on the New York and Erie Railroad. Returning to Middletown he engaged in the lumber business with Daniel Kendig & Co., and at present is in the same business as Kendig & Lauman, late Kendig, Bricker & Lauman. He was appointed postmaster at Middletown by President Lincoln, and removed by President Johnson. Mr. Kendig married on the 25th of December, 1856, Jane E. McMurtrie, daughter of William McMurtrie, of Huntingdon, Pa.

JOSEPH H. LANDIS.

Joseph H. Landis was born on the 14th day of May, 1832, in Hummelstown, Dauphin Co., Pa. He is the son of Christian Landis, who was born in 1807, and Elizabeth Hammaker, who was born in 1810. He attended the ordinary schools of the time, and subsequently the Pennsylvania College at Gettysburg, but did not take the full course. Worked some time on a farm, and was clerk in a store two years. He became manager of the Cameron Furnace at Middletown, and afterwards a partner of Landis & Co. in the same furnace. In 1878 he was elected a member of the House of Representatives, and served one term of two years, was on several important committees, but declined a second election. He is at present secretary of the Lochiel Iron Company, and superintendent of the Lochiel Furnaces; was married, about 1864, to Matilda L. Crist, daughter of the late George and Mary Crist, of Middletown, and their children are George C., Matilda C., Joseph Henry, and John C.

M. W. McALARNEY.

Matthias Wilson McAlarney, son of John McAlarney (1800-1874) and Catharine Wilson, was born June 7, 1840, in Millfinburg, Union Co., Pa. He was educated at the University of Lewisburg, graduating in the class of 1861. He learned the art of printing in the Chronicle office at Lewisburg, and from 1861 to 1867, a period of six years, published the Potter Journal at Coudersport, Pa. During the war was deputy provost-marshal of the Eighteenth District. Studied law with Hon. Isaac Benson, of Coudersport, and was admitted to the bar 27th of February, 1867. The same year he removed to Harrisburg, and entered upon the practice of his profession. From 1874 until the close of 1882 was more or less actively engaged in editorial work on the Harrisburg Daily Telegraph. In 1868 he was appointed clerk to the commission to settle the border claims, and in 1871 was attorney for the commonwealth in connection for the same work in the county of Cumberland. On the 23d of September, 1874, he was appointed postmaster at Harrisburg, reappointed in 1878, and again in 1882. During the erection of the United States court-house and post-office, he was appointed disbursing agent, and upon its completion, in 1882, custodian of that building. Mr. McAlarney married, Feb. 28, 1867, Ada Hoffman, daughter of Jacob and Eve Hoffman.

COL. HENRY McCORMICK.

Henry McCormick, son of James McCormick son of William, and Eliza Buehler, daughter of George, was born at Harrisburg, March 10, 1851. He had his education at the Harrisburg Academy, Partridge's Military Institute, and graduated at Yale College in 1852. Upon his return from college he commenced the study of the law with his father. His taste being for a more stirring pursuit, he gave it up and learned the iron business at Reading furnace, now Robesonia, at the first opportunity purchasing an interest in the Henry Clay and Eagle furnaces, near Marietta, Lancaster Co. In 1857 Paxtang furnace came under his management, and in 1866 the nail-works at Fairview, in Cumberland Co., at the mouth of the Conedoguit Creek, which he has successfully conducted since. In 1865, before a railway spanned the continent, he crossed the great plain and mountain range to the Pacific coast, returning by the Isthmus of Panama. In 1877 he visited Europe. Long before these journeys he had shown his devotion to his country. At the opening of the Rebellion he offered his life and services to the cause of patriotism, gathering a company of volunteers, Company F, Lochiel Grays, of the Twenty-fifth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, in the three months' service. When this organization was disbanded he was at once chosen colonel of the First Regiment Pennsylvania militia, under Maj.-Gen. John F. Reynolds, by whom he was assigned to the command of the First Brigade. The object of forming this division being accomplished by the contest at Antietam, it was mustered out of service.

Under the act relative to a new geological survey of Pennsylvania, he was appointed by Governor Hartranft a commissioner, and by his colleagues its treasurer. These positions he occupies at present. As a co-trustee of his father's estate he has shown tact and judgment, and in the pursuit of all the business in which he is engaged great energy and success. To all benevolent objects he is a most generous giver, without ostentation or publicity. As an evidence of the esteem in which he is held it may be stated that when a candidate for Congress, in 1882, his majority in his native county was one hundred and fifty-nine, while his party was in a minority of nearly fifteen hundred on the vote for other offices. He was married June 29, 1867, to Annie Criswell, daughter of John Vance Criswell and Hannah (Dull) Criswell, having children,—Henry Buehler, Vance, Mary (d. s. p.), Hugh (d. s. p.), and Annie.

JAMES McCORMICK.

James McCormick, son of James McCormick son of William, and Eliza Buehler, daughter of George, was born at Harrisburg, Oct. 31, 1832. He was educated in the common schools, Capt. Partridge's Military Institute, the Harrisburg Academy, graduating at Yale College in 1853. Studied law under his father, was admitted to the bars of Dauphin and Cumberland Counties, and practiced for several years. Upon the death of his father he became one of the trustees of his estate, a charge that absorbed his time and attention to such a degree that he abandoned his profession; the magnitude of this estate, and the enterprises conducted under it, requiring caution, prudence, and judgment in its management. Mr. McCormick has shown all these qualities in the successful performance of his duties. He has never held political office, but in the religious and charitable work of the day occupies a conspicuous position. He has been an elder in the Pine Street Presbyterian Church, from its foundation in 1858, a successful Sunday-school tutor, president and trustee of the Young Men's Christian Association; in all the active work of his denomination a most efficient and liberal agent; a large contributor to the Home for the Friendless in this city, to all charitable objects, and from its opening president of the Harrisburg hospital, and one of its most active, attentive, and competent advisers. He married at Harrisburg May 26, 1859, Mary Wilson Arlicks, daughter of Hermanus Arlicks and Mary Wilson Kerr, having children,—Hermanus (d. s. p.), Henry, James, William, Donald, Eliza, Mary (d. s. p.), and Robert.

ANDREW S. MCCREATH.

Andrew S. McCreath, son of William McCreath (died 1878, aged seventy-five) and Margaret Crichton (died 1870, aged sixty-three), was born March 8, 1849, in Ayr, Scotland. He was educated at Ayr Academy, and Glasgow University for classical course, and took special chemical courses at Andersonian University, Glasgow, under Professors Penny and Dr. Clark, and subsequently at Göttingen, under Professors Wochler and Filtig. He came to America in 1870, and assumed charge of the chemical laboratory at the Pennsylvania Steel Works, where he remained till August, 1874, when he was appointed by the State geologist, chemist to the Second Geological Survey of Pennsylvania, which position he still holds. He has prepared three reports for the State geologist, and special reports on the mineral resources along the lines of the Shenandoah Valley, Norfolk and Western, and New River Railroads. He was married Feb. 4, 1875, to Eliza, daughter of Charles L. and Mary W. (Hummel) Berghaus.

MAJ. ELBRIDGE MCCONKEY.

Elbridge McConkey, son of David McConkey (1800-1868) and Sarah Brinton, was born July 29, 1840, in West Chester, Pa. He was educated at East Hampton, Mass., University of Virginia, and Harvard University, from which he graduated in July, 1861. He studied law at Harvard and with Hon. Wayne MacVeagh, and admitted to the Chester County bar in 1863. He was aide-de-camp to Gen. McCall, First Division Pennsylvania Reserves, Fifth Army Corps, captain and brevet major, 1861-63. He was resident clerk of the House of Representatives in 1875-76 and 1883-84. He has been secretary of the Pennsylvania Agricultural Society since 1869. He married in 1863, Fanny W. Berghaus, daughter of Dr. Charles L. and Mary W. (Hummel) Berghaus, of Harrisburg, and their children are John, Charles B., Mary B., and Sarah B. McConkey.

COL. GEORGE F. MCFARLAND.

George McFarland, the great-grandfather of the subject of this sketch, came to this country from Scotland before 1750, and settled in Chester County. His son, John, was born about 1760, and became a miller. He married Mary Temple (born of English parents, Aug. 1, 1775), and soon after removed to Cumberland County, settling not far from Shiremanstown, where he died about 1818, and was buried in the Shiremanstown burial-ground; the family then removed to Dauphin County. Here the son, John, for a time the main support of the widow and family, grew to manhood, following his father's trade, that of a miller, and married Elizabeth Fisher, born and raised in Dauphin County. Of their children, George Fisher McFarland, the subject of this sketch, was born on the 28th of April, 1834, at what was then Todd's Mill, in Swatara township, Dauphin Co. When two years of age his father removed to a farm in Lower Paxtang township, one mile north of Linglestown, where he remained twelve years. George attended school at Gilchrist's school-house, five or six weeks in each winter, the only educational opportunity he enjoyed until nearly fifteen years of age, when his father removed to Harrisburg. At sixteen years of age he assumed charge of a select school on Duncan's Island, in May, 1850; the following winter in Pery County, and in August, 1857, a select school at Berrysburg, Dauphin Co., following with the public winter school, and then a select school till the next August, when he was employed as assistant teacher at the Freeburg Academy, in Snyder County, where he remained fifteen months. About the close of the year 1853 he became ticket agent at Lewistown, remaining eighteen months. He taught several months at Lewistown in 1856, when he leased the Freeburg Academy for four years. This venture was a successful one. In December, 1858, he purchased the McAllisterville Academy, Juniata County, whither he at once removed, and continued until the civil war, when he organized a company among his teachers, pupils, and friends, and enlisted in the One Hundred and Fifty-first Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, of which he afterwards became lieutenant-colonel. His regiment participated at Chancellorsville battle, he occupying an advance position with seven hundred men. He led his regiment at Gettysburg, and entered the first day's fight with four hundred and sixty-six men and twenty-one officers, of which number one hundred and thirteen men and seven officers were able to answer roll-call at night. He himself was severely wounded, both legs being shattered, necessitating the amputating of the right one below the knee. He was removed to McAllisterville, and although unable to leave his bed for almost a year, soon resumed charge of his academy, classes going to his bedside to recite. In April, 1864, he was appointed a clerk in the State Statistical Department. On the inauguration of the soldiers' orphan-school system, in October, 1864, he changed his academy into the first school established under this noble charity. He was appointed superintendent of soldiers' orphan schools April 28, 1867, by Governor Geary, and immediately began the work of organizing and perfecting the system, visiting and grading the schools. He prepared the original act, which was adopted almost without amendment, authorizing the schools, and served four years in this position. On the 28th of April, 1871, assumed control of the Temperance Vindicator, increasing its circulation from three hundred to upwards of five thousand. This weekly was maintained until 1877, when the extreme stringency of the times caused its discontinuance. His time since then has been devoted to the oversight of the McAllisterville Soldiers' Orphan School, of which he assumed proprietorship in 1871. *

SAMUEL McILHENNY.

Samuel McIlhenny, son of Samuel McIlhenny (1787-1864) and Mary Carson (1803-1871), was born June 4, 1823, in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools of Lower Paxtang township, and was brought up a farmer. At the age of seventeen he apprenticed himself to William J. Kaul to learn the trade of a tanner, since which period in life he has followed that occupation. In 1849 he commenced business for himself at Linglestown, in which he continues. Taking an active part in the political affairs of the county, Mr. McIlhenny was elected county auditor in 1869, serving three years, and in 1873 elected one of the county commissioners, and re-elected in filling that responsible station six years. During his term of office various needed reforms were made in the administration of the public affairs of the county, and much credit is due Mr. McIlhenny for his efforts in this direction. He has filled the various township offices, and in 1879 was appointed one of the inspectors of the Dauphin County prison. Mr. McIlhenny married, Jan. 9, 1847, Catharine Ann Culp, born April 30, 1823, near Fishersville, Jackson township, Dauphin Co.; died Sept. 15, 1881, at Linglestown, daughter of Louis Culp and Sarah Maria Albert. Their children were Sarah R., John H., Mary Ann (d. s. p.), Kate Ann, Lydia J., Elizabeth E. (married Jacob Balt-haser), Samuel C. (d. s. p.), Susan S., George W., Emma E., William A., Anna Maria, and Minnie C.

CAPT. THOMAS F. MALONEY.

Thomas Francis Maloney, son of Daniel Maloney (1795-1864) and Mary Houran (born 1800), was born 19th of August, 1843, in County Tipperary, Ireland. His parents emigrated to America in 1847, and settled at Harrisburg. Thomas F. was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, afterwards at St. Michael's Seminary, near Pittsburgh, and St. Vincent's College, at Latrobe, Pa. He learned the trade of a machinist with W. O. Hickok, at the Eagle Works, Harrisburg. During the Rebellion he enlisted as a private in Company A, One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, July 22, 1862; appointed corporal of the company July 26, 1862; promoted sergeant Aug. 1, 1862; promoted first sergeant

Aug. 6, 1862; and to adjutant of an independent battalion Nov. 4, 1862; mustered out with the regiment May 8, 1863. He was appointed conditionally by Governor Curtin second lieutenant and mustering officer United States volunteers Aug. 4, 1861, and upon the organization of the Two Hundred and First Regiment, Pennsylvania Volunteers, was commissioned captain of Company F, Aug. 27, 1864, serving with the command in the Army of the Potomac until his muster out by reason of General Order No. 94, A. G. O. War Department series, June 21, 1865. Upon the reorganization of the First City Zouaves of Harrisburg, Capt. Maloney, in 1869, was elected first lieutenant, and Dec. 16, 1870, commissioned captain of Company A of the Zouave Battalion. When the National Guard of Pennsylvania was established, the company became known as the City Grays of Harrisburg, and on the organization of the Eighth Regiment, Pennsylvania National Guard, was attached to that command and mustered in as Company D. He was recommissioned Dec. 14, 1875, and Dec. 16, 1880, is one of the senior captains in the service, and has repeatedly refused a field office, preferring to remain with his company, which has no superior in the National Guard. On the 1st of February, 1883, he was appointed arsenal-keeper of the State arsenal at Harrisburg, a position he now holds. Capt. Maloney married, in 1863, Ellen Casey, daughter of John Casey and — Powers, of Harrisburg, and they have one child living, Ellen. It may be stated in this connection that Capt. Maloney is the author of a military manual on "Guard Duty," which is considered an authority on that subject.

GEORGE MATHESON.

George Matheson, son of Adam Matheson and Isabella Wright, was born Oct. 27, 1828, at Jedburgh, Roxburghshire, Scotland. He enjoyed the benefit of only a common school education, and in June, 1845, left home and entered the employ as an apprentice of George and Robert Stephenson, the celebrated locomotive- and engine-builders, at Newcastle-on-Tyne, England. He remained with them the full term of five years, making himself proficient in all departments of the business. He afterwards worked a few months in England, but in October, 1850, embarked from Glasgow for America. On the second day after his arrival in New York City he commenced work in the shops of Hogg's & Delamater, and subsequently labored in and had charge of other works, finally settling down in the employ of the Old Novelty Iron-Works, where he remained ten years. He then assumed charge of the erection of engines in the vessels which were fitted out by the Fulton Iron-Works of James Murphy & Co., New York, remaining in that position several years. The civil war being then in progress, he had charge of all the outside work of that firm, including the fitting out of government vessels. In 1864 he was appointed superintendent of the East River Iron-Works, Samuel Secor & Co., at that time largely engaged in building marine and stationary engines. It was here he first became acquainted with the manufacture of tubing, having built the machinery for the Bergen Tube-Mill of New Jersey. In 1869 he entered into an arrangement with parties, afterwards incorporated as the National Tube-Works Company, to erect works for them in East Boston, Mass., and subsequently acted as superintendent of the works until 1872, when it was decided to erect a more extensive establishment at McKeesport, Pa. Mr. Matheson took entire charge of the projected works, and they were built under his management. He acted as general superintendent of this establishment until 1880, introducing several improvements in tubing manufacture, and successfully operating Siemens' gas regenerator furnaces, which had never been used in this country for that purpose, and not successfully in England. In 1880 he removed to Middletown, and with his sons projected and established the large and successful works of the American Tube and Iron Company, and of which his sons, A. Scott and James H. Matheson, have the general management. Mr. Matheson married, May, 1850, Isabella Hewison, a native of Newcastle, England, and they have had eleven children, of whom eight survive,—A. Scott, James H., Isabella H. (married John Sword, of Scotland), Elizabeth, Mary A. H. (married A. W. Momeyer), Hannah H., William D., and Cornelia C. *

E. F. MEYERS.

Benjamin F. Meyers, son of Michael D. Meyers, (1809-1867) and his wife, Sarah Shaff, was born July 6, 1833, near New Centreville, Somerset Co., Pa. He was educated at the Somerset Academy and Jefferson College, Canonsburg. Studied law under Hon. William H. Koontz, of Somerset, and was admitted to the Somerset County bar in 1855, and to that of Bedford County in 1856. In the year following he abandoned the profession of law to engage in journalism. He published the Bedford Gazette from 1857 to 1873, and from June, 1868, has been the publisher and editor of the Harrisburg Daily and Weekly Patriot. Represented the county of Bedford in the State Legislature in 1864, and was elected to the United States Congress from the district composed of the counties of Somerset, Bedford, Fulton, Franklin, and Adams, serving from 1871 until 1873. He was printer to the State from 1874 to 1877, delegate to the Democratic National Convention at Chicago in 1864, and at Cincinnati in 1880, and participated generally in the speaking campaigns of his party in this and adjoining States. Apart from his editorial labors, he has been an occasional contributor to literary periodicals. Mr. Meyers married, in 1854, Susan C. Koontz, daughter of Jacob and Rosa Koontz, of Somerset, Pa., and their children are Rosa S., married Ellis L. Mumma; Edwin K., Henry S., Susan I., and William K.

GEORGE F. MATTER, M.D.

George Frederick Matter, son of Michael Matter and Sarah Crum, was born Aug. 14, 1840, in Lykens Valley. John Matter, the great-grandfather, of German parentage, located in Lykens Valley at an early day. He had six sons, of whom George married a Miss Rumberger, and their son Michael, born in the valley, married Sarah, daughter of Frederick Crum. Michael Matter died Jan. 11, 1880, his wife

John Myers, born in 1817, followed farming until his removal to Maryland, where he died. He married Elizabeth, daughter of Isaac Keiser, first mayor of Burlington, Iowa. Their children were Henry K., Elias, d. s. p., Catharine (married — Stewart), Mary Ann (married — Neiffer), Eliza, d. s. p., and Margaret (married — Fries). Henry K., the subject of this sketch, was brought up on his father's farm until the age of sumed his studies by entering the office of Dr. Henry C. Caslow, of Halifax, attended his first course of lectures at Burlington, Vt., the second at the University of Maryland, where he graduated March 9, 1867. He at first located at York, afterwards removed to Augusta, Pa., and at the end of three years became a resident of Lykens, where he continues in the practice of his profession. In whatever relates to the prosperity of the "Upper End," Dr. Myers takes a deep and prominent interest, and is president of the Lykens Valley Savings Fund and Loan Corporation. *

Bro Neagley

JOHN NEAGLEY.

John Neagley, son of Daniel Neagley and Margaret Gable, was born Oct. 10, 1827, in Lykens Valley. His ancestor, Jacob Neagley, an emigrant from Wurtemberg, Germany, settled at first in Berks County, subsequently removing to Lykens Valley, where he permanently located. He had two sons, Joseph and George. Joseph, born Sept. 15, 1766, died July 12, 1828, married Maria Hoffman, born Jan. 8, 1773, died Feb. 18, 1840. Their children were Daniel, George, Elizabeth, Magdalena, Catharine, and Sarah. Daniel, the eldest, born Nov. 12, 1797, died Feb. 2, 1873, married Margaret Gable, and their children were George, John, Joseph, William, Daniel, Isaac, Mary, Catharine, Sarah, Margaret, and Hannah. Of these, John Neagley, the subject of this sketch, received a limited education, and learned the trade of cabinet-making at Liverpool, Perry Co. Upon his return home he established himself in business, but at the expiration of two years removed to Freeport, Ill., subsequently coming back to Pennsylvania, where for a period of seventeen years he conducted cabinet-making and undertaking at Liverpool. In 1869 he established a planing-mill at Millersburg, which he now carries on. Mr. Neagley married, Dec. 22, 1853, E. R. Murray, daughter of John and Anna Murray. *

JOSEPH H. NISLEY.

Joseph Herman Nisley, son of Martin Nisley (1786-1868) and Fanny Landis (1788-1871), was born Feb. 11, 1831, in Lower Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools, brought up a farmer, and afterwards engaged in the hardware business at Middletown. In 1865 he was appointed United States assessor, serving until elected prothonotary of the county, which office he acceptably filled from 1867 to 1873. He represented the county of Dauphin in the State Legislature in 1875-78. He is now connected with the Middletown Furniture Manufactory, one of the successful industries of that growing town. Mr. Nisley married Mary Catharine Croll, daughter of Henry and Mary Croll, and their children are Annie Croll, Lillian Frances (married William M. Lauman), Mary Josephine, and Fannie Heikes.

MORTIMER O'CONNOR, M.D.

Mortimer O'Conner is a native of County Kerry, Ireland. He received a classical education; commenced the study of medicine at Dublin, in October, 1846, and graduated there May 6, 1851. For a period of ten years he was connected with the English service as medical officer. He came to America permanently in 1863, and on the 13th of February, 1864, married Susan Frances Haldeman, daughter of Jacob M. Haldeman and Eliza E. Jacobs, of Harrisburg. He resides in that city, partly in practice of his profession.

"Upland," afterwards Chester, now Delaware County, and resided in or near Darby, where or in Philadelphia County the descendants long continued to reside. John Pearson, his grandfather, resided for the most of a long life in the village of Darby, or on his farm in its vicinity, during which time he raised a numerous family and held several offices of trust and importance, among others that of State senator for four years, of which body he acted as Speaker for some period about the year 1800. In the year 1827 he sold his farm in Delaware County and moved to Newcastle, then Mercer County, Pa., where he died in the year 1829, in the eighty-ninth year of his age.

Bevan Pearson, his fourth son, emigrated to Mercer

Hon. J. Pearson

HON. JOHN J. PEARSON.

John J. Pearson held the office of president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, composed of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon, for a period of nearly thirty-three years. Of Judge Pearson's early family history we know but little. Tradition says that they emigrated from Cheshire, England, to the Province of Pennsylvania at a very early period, and settled in what was then called

County, Pa., with his family in the year 1805, and settled on a tract of wild land which he had previously purchased, cleared a comparatively large farm, and constructed good buildings. He had on the 25th of October, 1795, married Anna Warner; they are the parents of the subject of our present memoir, who was their third son. They lived on their farm until they moved to the town of Mercer in the year 1809, where they resided for the remainder of their lives. At the election in the fall of 1808, Bevan Pearson was elected to the Legislature of Pennsylvania from Mercer County, and in the spring of 1809 was appointed to fill the offices of prothonotary, clerk of the several courts, register of wills, and recorder of deeds for that county, all of which offices he held for a period of nine years. He filled various other important county offices afterwards by election or appointment, and died on the 27th of September, 1842; his wife, Anna, died on the 6th of April, 1855.

John James Pearson was born in Delaware County, Pa., on the 25th of October, 1800, and was taken with his father's family to Mercer County in the fifth year of his age. He received a reasonably good education in the best school of that county, in a grammar boarding-school, for the Latin and Greek languages, and by private tuition became very conversant in the Latin language and various branches of science, but never had the advantage of a regular collegiate education. He wrote for a considerable time in his father's office, and in the month of January, 1820, entered on the study of the law, under the instruction of the Hon. John Banks, then a lawyer of high standing and extensive practice in Mercer and the neighboring counties, and who was afterwards elected for several different terms to the Congress of the United States, and ultimately appointed president judge of the Third Judicial District, composed of the counties of Berks, Northampton, and Lehigh, which office he filled for over ten years, with great honor to himself and benefit to the public.

Mr. Pearson, after studying law diligently for two and a half years, was admitted to the bar at the August term of the court in Mercer County in the year 1822. A few months afterwards he removed to Franklin, Venango Co., and entered on the practice of his profession in the counties of Crawford, Mercer, Venango, and Warren, in all of which he practiced regularly, and occasionally in those of Erie, Beaver, and Butler, it being the practice of the lawyers of that day to travel around large circuits. A considerable portion of the legal business of Western Pennsylvania then was the trial of land titles, with which Mr. Pearson became very familiar. In the spring of 1830 he removed with his family to Mercer, his former home, and continued to reside there and practiced his profession in the same counties enumerated until the year 1849, when, on the 7th day of April of that year, he was, by and with the advice and consent of the Senate, appointed by William F. Johnson, Governor of the State, to the office of president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District, composed of the counties of Dauphin and Lebanon, and moved with his family to Harrisburg in the summer of that same year, where he has resided ever since.

The judicial business of Dauphin County was found at that time to be greatly in arrears, being back as much as five or six years. This was partly owing to the large population, but mainly to the great amount of State business: all of the pecuniary claims by or against the Commonwealth had then and now to be tried in the county of Dauphin. With great labor and perseverance the business was in a few years so brought up that all cases desired to be heard could be tried in a short and reasonable time. The causes in Lebanon County were generally tried at the second term.

A change having been made in the Constitution of Pennsylvania, by which the judges were made elective, the president judges for a period of ten years, he was, in the autumn of 1851, elected and commissioned president judge of the same district, and again elected in the years 1861 and 1871, each time by a unanimous vote of the people, and without opposition.

The judicial business of this district was of more than ordinary magnitude and importance, involving as it did very many claims of the commonwealth of immense amount and great constitutional difficulty, involving momentous questions both under the Constitution of the United States and of this State, besides a more than ordinary amount of new and important criminal cases, and those arising on the equity side of the court.

His term of office expired on the first Monday of January, 1882, he having declined a re-election, being then in his eighty-second year.

During his residence in Mercer he was twice elected to office,—first to the Congress of the United States, for the counties of Beaver and Mercer, for the years 1835 and 1836, and afterwards, in the autumn of 1837, to the Senate of Pennsylvania, for the same counties for four years, for three of which he acted as chairman of the judiciary committee, then the most important and laborious one of the body; the duties were performed to the general satisfaction.

In the term of his judicial career he received from three different colleges of the State the honorable degree of LL.D.

In Judge Pearson's long and laborious life he was twice married,—first, on the 13th of October, 1827, to Ellen, only daughter of Gen. Samuel Hays, a very prominent politician of Venango County. She died in February, 1840. Afterwards, on July 12, 1842, he married Mary Harris Briggs, only daughter of Joseph and Caroline Briggs, granddaughter of Gen. John André Hanna, and great-granddaughter of John Harris, the founder of Harrisburg. She is still living.

BENJAMIN S. PETERS.

Benjamin Snyder Peters, son of William Peters and Elizabeth Snyder, was born March 19, 1834, in Londonderry township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His grandfather, Jacob Peters, was a native of Lebanon County, and died there. He married Barbara Beeley, of Lebanon. She died at Altoona. Their son, William Peters, was born in Londonderry township, now Cone-wago township, Oct. 27, 1811, and is still living. His wife was Elizabeth Snyder, daughter of Abraham Snyder, a native of Switzerland. She was born April 15, 1812, in Londonderry township, and is living. Benjamin S. Peters received a common school education, and at the age of sixteen entered a store at Kelly's Corner, Lebanon Co., to learn merchandising, and afterwards at Myerstown. In 1858 he commenced business at Palmyra Landing, in Lebanon County, where he remained until 1862, when he removed to Middletown, where he entered into partnership with his uncle in the mercantile trade. At the dissolution of the firm he purchased the store of Yetman Eves, and for several years was the senior partner of the firm of Peters & Brother. He retired from business in January, 1883, and when the Farmers' Bank was established was made a director and chosen president, which position he now fills. Mr. Peters married in November, 1855, Sarah Rupp, daughter of John Rupp and Polly Beane, of Lebanon County, and their children were Emma, Jerome G., and Elizabeth.

HUGH PITCAIRN, M.D.

Hugh Pitcairn, son of John Pitcairn and Agnes McEwing, was born in Johnston, Scotland, in August, 1845. While in his infancy his parents came to the United States, and settled in Allegheny City, Pa. His early education was acquired in the common and high schools of that city. In 1859 he entered the office of the Pennsylvania Railroad in Pittsburgh to learn telegraphy. In less than six months he was directed to take charge of the telegraph-office situated at the end of double track, Mill Creek, Huntingdon Co., where he continued one year, when he was appointed operator in the general office at Altoona. In this place he fulfilled the duties of clerk and operator until 1865, when he was called to Harrisburg as assistant train-master of the Northern Central Railway. Subsequently he was promoted to the situation of acting assistant superintendent and superintendent of the Susquehanna Division, while the directory at their ensuing meeting confirmed him as assistant general superintendent, and in this capacity he served two years. He was offered the position of superintendent of the Lehigh Coal and Navigation Company, with the office at Mauch Chunk, Carbon Co., Pa. (now known as the Lehigh and Susquehanna Railroad, leased by the Central Railroad of New Jersey), but later was sent by the president of the Pennsylvania Railroad to Kentucky for the purpose of completing and taking charge of the Evansville, Henderson and Nashville Railroad. After the completion of this road he was appointed general superintendent, and assisted in the purchase of the Edgefield and Kentucky Railroad, thus making a through line from Nashville, Tenn., to Evansville, Ind. He continued in charge of this road until its sale to the St. Louis and Southeastern Railroad, when he accepted the position of superintendent of the Pittsburgh, Cincinnati and St. Louis Railroad (Pan-Handle Route) at Pittsburgh, where he continued until the early part of 1875, when failing health compelled him to resign. He then went to Europe, attending clinical lectures in the hospitals of London, subsequently graduating from Hahnemann Medical College, Philadelphia. In 1880 he located at Harrisburg in the practice of his profession. Prior to leaving for Europe he had associated with H. C. Dean, of Altoona, as proprietor and editor of the Altoona Daily and Weekly Tribune, one of the largest and best inland papers of the State, and has continued to hold the same until the present time, though taking very little part in its active management since he entered the practice of medicine. *

C. A. RAHTER, M.D.

Charles A. Rahter, son of Christian Rahter and Charlotte Wehmeier, was born Aug. 9, 1839, near Minden, Westphalia, Prussia. His parents came to America about 1845, and settled near Littlestown, Adams Co., Pa. Charles A. was educated at the Hanover Classical Institute, Littlestown, and at Pennsylvania College, Gettysburg. Commenced the study of medicine, attending his first course of lectures at the University of Maryland, and the second course at the Long Island College Hospital, Brooklyn, from which institution he graduated in July, 1864. He began the practice of his profession in Harrisburg in July, 1865, where he has continued, except during the time he was absent in Europe; was acting assistant surgeon United States army at Fairfax Seminary, Va., and Campbell, Washington, D. C., general hospitals in 1864-65. During the Franco-German war he was an assistant surgeon at the garrison hospital, Coblenz, on the Rhine, and surgeon in charge of the barrack hospital, St. Johann, Saarbrucken, Germany. At the close of the war he resigned, traveled through France, Switzerland, Italy, and Austria, returned to Harrisburg, and resumed the general practice of his profession. He was one of the founders of the Dauphin County Medical Society, one of its presidents, one of the vice-presidents of the Medical Society of the State of Pennsylvania, and a member of the Pathological Society of Philadelphia.

Dr. Rahter married, in 1875, Mary R. Keffer, daughter of Peter B. and Ann M. Keffer.

JACOB RIFE.

Jacob Rife, son of Henry Rife and Susan Shelly, was born March 2, 1805, in now Londonderry township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the schools of the time, and worked on a farm until he went to learn the tanning trade with William King, of Middletown. He afterwards carried on the business for himself several years at what is known as the Keystone Tannery, at the same time conducting a small farm, now within the limits of the borough. Mr. Rife married, on the 12th of August, 1828, Mary Bomberger, daughter of Jacob and Sophia (Ettel) Bomberger, and their children were Susan, married Lewis P. Brady; Sophia, married Enoch Matlack; Henry J., of Philadelphia; Mary, married William C. Ross, of Iowa; Joseph B.; Margaret S., married David C. Kolp, of Iowa; Clara Lawrence, John Winebrenner, Jacob Flake, and William Bomberger. Of the foregoing, John Winebrenner Rife, born Aug. 14, 1846, was educated in the common schools and Crittenden's Commercial, from which latter he graduated in 1862. He learned tanning with his father, and when the latter retired from active business he and his brother Jacob took charge of the Keystone Steam Tannery, where they are extensively engaged in the manufacture of leather. He served in the One Hundred and Ninety-fourth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers. Jacob Flake Rife was born Sept. 29, 1848; was educated in common schools and at Pennsylvania College. He learned the tanning trade with his father, and is now associated with his brother above named in the business.

JOHN RINGLAND, M.D.

John Ringland, son of James Ringland and Magdalene Bomberger, was born Jan. 9, 1825, in Middletown, Pa. His paternal grandfather was a native of County Down, Ireland, and came to America in 1798. He died at Lancaster, Pa., in 1842. His son, James Ringland, born Dec. 5, 1795, in Chester County, Pa., settled in Middletown about 1821, where he entered mercantile life, at first in charge of the store of John Thompson, and subsequently establishing himself in business in that place, and also a branch store at Portsmouth, which was only opened during "the rafting season," for the accommodation of the lumbermen. He married Magdalene Bomberger, daughter of John Bomberger, born Sept. 16, 1799, who is yet living in Middletown. They had four children,—John, James, who died in April, 1855; Eliza Jane, married Samuel L. Yetter, of Middletown; and Mary M., married Benjamin F. Kendig, of Harrisburg. John Ringland, the eldest, was educated in the common schools of Middletown. At the age of fifteen he entered the Examiner and Herald office at Lancaster to learn the art of printing, with R. White Middleton, who afterwards sold the office and removed to Carlisle, where he purchased the Carlisle Herald, John accompanying him, as also back again to Lancaster, when he sold out the Herald and purchased the Lancaster Union. Here he remained until 1845. In 1846, Mr. Ringland commenced the study of medicine with Dr. Benjamin J. Wiestling, of Middletown, and graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1850. He located at Portsmouth, now Middletown, where he entered upon the practice of medicine, but was subsequently compelled to relinquish it owing to impaired hearing. In the fall of 1852 he engaged in the lumber business at New Cumberland, in which he continued until the spring of 1855, when he returned to Middletown, and established himself in the drug business. In 1860 he was elected recorder of deeds and clerk of the Orphans' Court of Dauphin County, and re-elected in 1863. While at Portsmouth, in 1850, a post-office was established there, and Dr. Ringland appointed postmaster. He has served as justice of the peace, was census enumerator in 1880, and filled various borough offices. Dr. Ringland married, in 1850, Margaret E. Smith, daughter of Henry Smith, of Middletown, and their children were James Henry, Robert Wiestling, d. s. p., John, Augustus, Kate Shelly, d. s. p., Mary Jane, Louisa Bomberger, Harry Smith, d. s. p., Maggie Smith, d. s. p., Anna Laura, Edwin Shott, d. s. p., Edith Matilda, d. s. p., and Almada Kunkel.

vania. He received the education afforded by the select schools of Paxtang Valley, and most of his life he has passed in farming. For several years he has been president of the First National Bank of Hummelstown; has been identified with other corporations, and active in various local enterprises of the day. In 1835 he was a captain of the Tenth Company, Ninety-eighth Regiment Pennsylvania Militia. For many years he has been one of the vice-presidents of the Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society, in the founding of which he took a prominent part.

in now Swatara township, Dauphin Co., Pa., on the farm where he now resides. He is the great-grandson of Thomas Rutherford, the progenitor of the family here. Being the only surviving son, he succeeded to the farm property of his father upon his death, Nov. 26, 1833, and has made farming his main business through life. In early manhood Mr. Rutherford was elected captain of the Dauphin Cavalry, and hence his military title. He has been active in politics, and was elected member of the Legislature on the Whig ticket in 1848, and re-elected in 1849. In 1847 he was elected to the State Senate for three years on the Republican ticket. He has been treasurer of Pennsylvania State Agricultural Society for a long time, elected in 1864, and re-elected annually ever since. Mr. Rutherford has been identified with the various offices in his township, and in old Paxtang Church is a ruling elder. He married, March 19, 1833, Keziah Parke, of Chester County, and have issue.

COL. SAMUEL SHOCH.

Michael Shoch, the grandfather of Col. Samuel, was a native of Germany, and on his emigration to America settled near Philadelphia. He had several children, among whom was John, whose birth occurred at the paternal home near Philadelphia. He in 1792 removed to Harrisburg, Dauphin Co., and there remained until his death in 1842. He married Miss Salome Gilbert, of Philadelphia, and had children,—Mary, Sarah, Rebecca, Eliza, Cassandra, Samuel, John, Jacob, and one who died in childhood. Samuel, whose life is here briefly sketched, was born in Harrisburg, May 28, 1797. His career covers some of the most eventful periods in our national history, and has been so closely identified with local events that it forms an inseparable part of them. His early education was commenced at preparatory schools before the establishment of the present school system, and continued at the Nottingham Academy, Cecil Co., Md. His further education and preparation for professional life were the result of personal application directed only by himself.

As early as 1812 he was recorder of patents under John Cochran, secretary of the land-office, and recorder of surveys in the office of Andrew Porter, then surveyor-general. In September, 1814, he joined the Harrisburg Artillerists, a company formed within twenty-four hours after the British had burned the capitol at Washington, and was the youngest man in the four companies that volunteered from Harrisburg on that occasion. The company marched to York and thence to Baltimore, and remained on duty there until the British withdrew and abandoned their contemplated attack on that city.

In May, 1817, he began the study of law under Hon. Amos Ellmaker, attorney-general, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar in 1820. He was always aggressive, and as a young lawyer displayed great energy and fearlessness in prosecuting what he believed to be wrong. He took an active part in an unsuccessful attempt to impeach Judge Franks, of the Lebanon and Dauphin district, for alleged offenses.

In 1835 he was elected clerk of the House of Representatives by a union of the Whig and Anti-Masonic members, defeating Francis R. Shunk, the Democratic candidate. In 1837 he was secretary to the convention which gave us the Constitution under which Pennsylvania lived from 1838 to 1873, and at the adjournment of that body was unanimously thanked. The colonel finds special pleasure in recounting his services with that body.

In 1839 he cast his fortunes with Columbia, and went there to live, having been elected cashier of the Columbia Bank and Bridge Company. The company had a nominal capital of $150,000, but actually not more than $80,000 to $100,000, as a bridge costing more than $175,000 had been swept away by an ice freshet in 1832, and the loss had not been wholly made up. The capital was afterwards increased, first to $250,000, and in 1837 to $322,500, with a change of title to Columbia Bank. In 1865 the bank accepted the national bank law and became the Columbia National Bank, with a capital of $500,000, at which it still remains, with a surplus fund of $150,000. He has thus maintained official relations with the corporation as its cashier and president for forty-four years, during a period the events of which are matters of local history.

Col. Shoch was, in 1842, married to Mrs. Hannah Evans, daughter of Amos Slaymaker, of Lancaster County, who was the leading manager of the line of stages between Philadelphia and Pittsburgh. Her death having occurred in March, 1860, he contracted a second alliance in August, 1865, with Miss Anna E., daughter of Robert Barber, of Columbia, Pa.

In 1848, Col. Shoch was appointed aid to Governor William Johnson, which by courtesy conferred upon him the title of colonel, a title by which he is better known than by his Christian name.

In 1860 the colonel was a member of the State committee of the Republican party, and a delegate to the National Convention at Chicago which nominated Abraham Lincoln, the martyr President.

During the war he was foremost in deeds of charity and patriotism, and presented to the first company formed in Columbia a beautiful and costly silk flag. He always took a warm interest in our public schools, and through his active exertions and liberal donations the "Shoch Library," in honor of its patron, was established.

Col. Shoch also took an active interest in local enterprises, and was at one and the same time president of the Columbia Gas and Water Companies, the Old Public Ground Company, and the Marietta, Chestnut Hill and Washington Turnpike-Road Companies. He was also treasurer of the Reading and Columbia Railroad Company, but resigned in 1862, before going abroad on a continental tour. He was for ten years president of the school board of the borough of Columbia, during which period a spacious edifice, devoted to the use of the public schools, was erected. He served a term as director of the poor of Lancaster County, two terms as county auditor, was a trustee of the Millersville Normal School, and director of the Wrightsville, York and Gettysburg Railroad. If responsible official positions are a measure of public confidence, then Col. Shoch was favored above all his fellow-citizens.

The colonel was always an active worker in the Sunday-school cause. In the early part of his professional career, he was both a teacher and superintendent of the Sunday-school of the Lutheran Church in Harrisburg. Within the last ten years his youthful enthusiasm for the cause has been specially reawakened, and his active services as teacher of a Bible class in the Columbia Fifth Street Presbyterian Sunday-school, together with the erection, furnishing, and endowment of their beautiful chapel (named "Salome" in honor of his mother) attests the sincerity of his motives. In 1854 and for several years thereafter, he maintained at his own expense a public night-school, employed teachers, and furnished books, etc., for the benefit of apprentices and other young persons who could not attend school during the day, and was happily rewarded by finding the school well attended. Many of the pupils since grown up have become prominent and well-to-do citizens, who gratefully acknowledge the advantages they derived from the enterprise.

In politics he has been uniformly and radically anti-Democratic, a great admirer of Thaddeus Stevens, and is in full accord with Republican administration.

The colonel's has been an eventful and busy life, and even now, when he has just crossed the threshold of his eighty-sixth year, not a single duty is neglected, not a responsibility evaded, and not an energy relaxed.

Having faithfully performed the duties of cashier of the Columbia National Bank for a period of thirty-nine years, he was, in December, 1878, elected its president, and notwithstanding his age, continues his routine of duties, beginning at eight o'clock in the morning and remaining to witness the settlement of all accounts after the bank closes. His principal diversion is his violin, an instrument of unusual excellence, which affords him many happy hours.

With a mind fresh and vigorous, and with a remarkable activity of body and buoyancy of step, he has reasonable expectations of passing many more years of usefulness. *

RT. REV. J. F. SHANAHAN.

Jeremiah Francis Shanahan was born July 17, 1834, at Silver Lake, Susquehanna Co., Pa. He was educated at the Academy of St. Joseph's, Binghamton, N. Y., afterwards entering the Theological School of

St. Charles Borromeo, at Philadelphia, from which he graduated, and was ordained to the priesthood the 3d of July, 1859. He was then appointed rector of the school preparatory to the Theological Seminary, where he continued until his appointment as bishop of the diocese of Harrisburg. His appointment dates from 3d March, 1863, and he was consecrated bishop by his Grace the late Archbishop Wood, at Philadelphia, on the 12th of July, 1863. Of the labors of Bishop Shanahan, it need only be stated that in the period which has intervened the new Roman Catholic diocese of Harrisburg has wonderfully increased in the number of priests, laity, churches, and parochial Ursinus College, then known as Freeland Seminary. He taught school three years, then entered Dickinson Seminary at Williamsport, where he graduated an A.B. in 1862. Resumed school-teaching for two years, when he entered the office of Dr. Jacob Rickahaugh, of Chester County, and in 1867 graduated from the Medical Department of the University of Pennsylvania. He located at Lancaster, where he practiced eight years, when he removed to Wiconisco, Dauphin Co., and resumed his profession. Dr. Schofield married, June 27, 1871, Mary M. Black, daughter of Hon. James Black, of Lancaster, and they had Eliza, Isadore, James B., Gertrude, and Walter Shafer. *

schools, to which the good bishop has recently established a theological school.

EDWARD L. SCHOFIELD, M.D.

Edward Lane Schofield, son of Edward L. Schofield and Susanna Force, was born Nov. 16, 1840, in Chester County, Pa. His father, of Scotch and English descent, born Oct. 30, 1796, in Chester County, Pa., died May 30, 1865, at Reading, Pa., married Susanna Force, of Chester County, who deceased Dec. 29, 1878. They had children,—William, Rebecca, Jacob, Martha, Ellen (married Rev. H. A. Cleveland), Isabella (married Rev. John F. Meredith), Sarah, Edward L., and John W. Edward Lane was educated in the public schools of the county, and at

JACOB SHOPE, M.D.

Jacob Shope, son of Abraham Shope and Elizabeth Wasser, was born Sept. 6, 1819, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His mother was the daughter of Dr. John L. Wasser, who was ship-surgeon on a Swiss vessel, and emigrated to America in 1769. His advantages of an early education were limited, and at the age of sixteen entered the office of the Gospel Publisher as an apprentice to the art of printing. He subsequently took charge of the office as foreman, then spent some time at Philadelphia, when returning to Harrisburg he there remained until the spring of 1840. He commenced the study of medicine with his uncle, Dr. David Shope, and began the practice of medicine in 1842, and upon the death of the latter located at Hummelstown, taking charge of the large practice left by the former. Until 1865 he continued in the active prosecution of his profession, and with much success. Dr. Shope married, in 1843, Esther Mann, daughter of E. J. Mann, of Hummelstown. Their children were Charles David (at the age of seventeen enlisted in Capt. Matthew's company of the One Hundred and Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers; was severely wounded in the hip at Gettysburg; subsequently rejoined his command; promoted sergeant-major of Col. McCoy's regiment; killed in front of Petersburg June 19, 1864), Elizabeth, Ernest Mann, Ada Esther, Agnes May, and Carrie Lenah.

J. W. Swinton

MAJOR H. J. SHEAFER.

Henry Jackson Sheaffer, son of Michael Sheaffer and Susan Cloud, was born May 21, 1826, in Lancaster County, Pa. When about six years of age his father removed to what was then called "Bear Gap," now Wiconisco, in the upper end of Dauphin County. Here he resided with his parents, getting a few months' schooling during the winter season, until the age of fifteen, when he went to learn the drug business at Harrisburg. He continued in this employment for four years, when he went to South Carolina and resided for some time in Columbia, the capital. Coming North, he settled in the town of Milton, Northumberland Co., and engaged in the drug trade. In 1848 he was married to America O. Wood, daughter of Nicholas B. Wood. At the death of his father, he removed to the old home at Wiconisco, for the purpose of settling his father's estate.

In 1856 he removed to Mendota, Dakota Co., Minn., where he engaged in the lumber business, in connection with Eli Pettijohn and Franklin Steele, of Fort Snelling. They built a large mill at the mouth of the Minnesota River, and had extensive yards on the Minnesota River. In the fall of 1858 he was elected a member of the Minnesota Legislature from Dakota County, and for some time took an active part in the politics of the young State. After the breaking out of the war all business was completely paralyzed, and in the fall of 1861 he returned to Harrisburg. During the winter of 1861-62 he recruited a company for the One Hundred and Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, and was mustered into service as captain of Company I. At the battle of Antietam his brigade fought in the noted corn-field almost fronting the Dunkard Church, and suffered terribly in killed and wounded. At one time, the line being driven back, both color-bearers were shot dead and left on the field. Capt. Sheaffer, ascertaining the fact, returned alone and rescued the colors, and rejoined his command without injury. On Dec. 21, 1862, he was commissioned major of the regiment. In the Gettysburg campaign, on the first day of the fight, shortly after Reynolds was killed, Maj. Sheaffer was severely wounded, but did not leave the field until the afternoon of the third day's fighting. Early in the fall he rejoined his command and participated with his regiment in the many battles they were engaged in up to March 8, 1865 (the expiration of his term of service), and was mustered out. After the war he made Harrisburg his permanent home and engaged in mercantile pursuits. In 1873 he was elected sheriff of Dauphin County, serving his term of three years.

HON. JOHN W. SIMONTON.

John Wiggins Simonton was born in West Hanover township, Dauphin Co., in 1830 (the exact register of his birth is missing from the record), son of Hon. William Simonton, son of William and Elizabeth W., daughter of Rev. James Snodgrass. His preparatory education was received at the country school near Hanover Church, continued at the Strasburg Academy, Lancaster County, then at Lafayette College, Easton, graduating at the College of New Jersey in 1850. His choice of profession was the law, and was entered as a student with Hon. Hamilton Alricks at Harrisburg, admitted to practice at the April term, 1853. With a very brief interval his residence has since been at Harrisburg. He married, July 8, 1856, Sarah H., daughter of George Kunkel, merchant, and Catharine Ziegler. It may be safely said of Judge Simonton that he never sought an office, his ambition was to be a thorough lawyer, and as such win success, and before office sought him he was considered a safe counselor as well as capable one. He was chosen district attorney in 1866. As soon as another opportunity presented itself to honor him with higher station, his fellow-citizens chose him without serious opposition, in 1881, president judge of the Twelfth Judicial District of Pennsylvania, to succeed Judge Pearson. Every opinion handed down since he has held this important position has shown an intimate knowledge of the laws of his native State, of his literary ability, acute perception of such facts as are necessary in considering cases, and in nearly every instance have been sustained by the higher court.

GEORGE W. SIMMONS.

George Washington Simmons, son of Robert Simmons and Sarah Ward, was born Feb. 17, 1814, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father was a native of Paxtang, of English ancestry, and died about 1859, aged seventy-five years. He married Sarah Ward, daughter of John Ward and Elizabeth Whitley, daughter of Capt. Michael Whitley, of Paxtang. She died at Dauphin at the age of seventy-three. The children of Robert Simmons and his wife, Sarah Ward, were George, Washington, John, Jane (married Samuel Fertig), Matilda (married McCullough), Robert, and Mary (married Revere Hetzel). George W., the subject of this sketch, passed his early years on his father's farm, came to Harrisburg in 1831, and learned chair-making, with George W. Boyd. After serving his apprenticeship, he began business for himself, which he carried on about ten years. He was for three years in charge of a packet-boat on the Pennsylvania Canal, and from 1849 to 1862, a baggage-master on the Pennsylvania Railroad. He was subsequently elected warden of the Dauphin County prison, a position he filled fourteen years, when he retired from active life. Mr. Simmons married in 1836, Elizabeth Bates, of Middle Paxtang, and their children have been: John (who died at Philadelphia, in 1881), William Henry (d. s. p.), Major Oliver, Annie, Martha (married Nelson Kilgore), and Frank.

ALEXANDER SLOAN.

Alexander Sloan, son of Robert Sloan (1769-1833) and Sarah McCormick (1779-1843), was born Oct. 9, 1802, at Harrisburg, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the private and select schools of Harrisburg, especially under that eminent mathematician, James Maginnis. He learned the trade of cabinet-maker with his father, and, after the latter's death, continued the business alone up to 1864, after that period for several years in connection with Mr. Boyd. Mr. Sloan married Sept. 19, 1833, Mary Todd, daughter of James and Sarah Todd, of Hanover. She died at Harrisburg on the 2d of December, 1871, in her sixty-third year, and their children were Robert (d. s. p.), Sarah (married H. Murray Graydon), Margaret A. (married Harry Shantz), and Isabella D. (d. s. p.).

ROBERT SNODGRASS.

Robert Snodgrass, son of Benjamin Snodgrass (1791-1861) and Ann Wilson (1797-1843), was born Oct. 12, 1836, in East Hanover township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He entered Lafayette College in 1854, and graduated in July, 1857. He prepared for the study of the law in Virginia, in 1860 and 1861, and subsequently studied with John W. (now Judge) Simonton, and admitted to the bar of Dauphin County May 4, 1863. He was United States commissioner prior to 1871, prothonotary of Supreme Court, Middle District, from November, 1871, to January, 1882. Since January, 1882, he has been deputy attorney-general of Pennsylvania. He was married, Dec. 25, 1866, to Anna E., daughter of William and Ann Peale, of Shippensburg, Pa., and their children are Frank Peale, Horace Wilson, Robert Davis, and Anna McNair Snodgrass.

JOHN D. SNYDER.

John D. Snyder, son of John Snyder and Elizabeth Wert, was born Dec. 9, 1827, in Lykens Valley. His grandfather, Leonard Snyder, of German parentage, was born in Lancaster County, and settled on a farm in Lykens Valley. He married Anna Maria

Shott, of the valley, and had children,—John, Samuel, and Elizabeth. John married Elizabeth Wert, and they had among others Jacob, Leonard, John D., and Emannel. The early life of John D. Snyder was spent on the homestead farm. At the age of seventeen he went to Berrysburg and learned the trade of an iron-moulder. On finishing his trade, he passed one year in working at his occupation in Pittsburgh, when he purchased an interest in the establishment of his former employer at Berrysburg, which business he continued. In 1863 he was elected a justice of the peace; in 1871 an associate judge of the county, and at the expiration of his term of office re-elected to his former position, which he now holds. Judge Snyder married, in 1849, Hannah Lark, daughter of Christopher Lark, and their children were Sarah Jane (married Peter S. Bergstresser), Lewis F., Ann Mary, Edwin G., John T., Rachel B., Catharine E., Joseph H., and Arthur L., of whom five are living. Mr. Snyder has been a zealous friend to all measures for the advancement of the cause of education and the advancement of the industrial interests of his neighborhood. *

REV. W. H. H. SNYDER.

William H. H. Snyder, son of John Snyder (1812-1856) and Jane Howe (1812-1844), was born Dec. 9, 1836, at McConnellstown, Huntingdon Co., Pa. In early life he attended the common school at McConnellstown, and subsequently was clerk in a dry-goods store, also in Read & Son's drug-store, in Huntingdon, and in the spring of 1855 entered the academy at Mercersburg, Pa., where he studied theology, and in the fall of the same year the Tuscarora Academy, of Juniata County, Pa. He taught school in the winter of 1856, and returned to Tuscarora Academy in the spring of 1857; entered Franklin and Marshall College, at Lancaster, Pa., in September, 1857, and graduated from that institution in July, 1861. He was pastor of the Reformed Church (English) at Akron, Ohio, from Jan. 1, 1864, to Dec. 16, 1864, and commenced his pastorate of Salem Reformed Church, Harrisburg, Pa., Dec. 18, 1864. He was chaplain of the House of Representatives of Pennsylvania in 1873, and chaplain of the Senate of Pennsylvania in 1876. He has been secretary of the Board of Missions of the Synod of the United States for ten years, also a member of the Board of Trustees of Synod for two terms (ten years). He married, April 20, 1865, Mary Naomi, daughter of Daniel and Mary Erisman, of Lancaster, Pa., and their children are Mary and John Paul.

ELI SWAB.

Eli Swab, son of Jacob Swab and Catharine Metz, was born the 7th of October, 1823, in Mifflin (now Washington) township, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was brought up on his father's farm, and received the limited education offered by the schools of the Lykens Valley region prior to the introduction of the common-school system. He afterwards learned the trade of a tanner, but never pursued the business. He began merchandising at Williamstown, which he continued for several years, but subsequently left it for farming, in which he is now engaged. He was elected one of the commissioners of the county of Dauphin in 1874, and re-elected in 1876, serving six years, an office he filled very acceptably. Mr. Swab married Nell Cooper, daughter of John Cooper, one of the representative men of the valley.

CHARLES V. THOME, M.D.

Charles Vesey Thome, son of Dr. Samuel H. Thome and Margaret Jeffries, was born June 16, 1839, in Palmyra, Lebanon Co., Pa. His father, born in 1806, in Manheim, Lancaster Co., Pa., practiced medicine forty-five years at Palmyra, and was not only a skillful physician, but popular in his profession and a leading citizen, having several times been the Democratic nominee for Congress, but defeated on account of his party's minority vote. He died in 1880, and his widow survives. Their children were Dr. William, of Palmyra; Dr. Charles V.; Emma J., married Dr. P. J. Roebuck, of Litz, formerly State senator; John, and Samuel. Charles V. Thome, the subject of this sketch, was educated at the common school and at White Hall Academy. He was reading medicine with his father as the Rebellion broke out, when he enlisted in the One Hundred and Twenty-seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, Col. W. W. Jennings. Upon being mustered out of service he resumed the study of medicine, and graduated from the medical department of the University of Pennsylvania in 1866. He practiced his profession one year at Palmyra, when he was appointed assistant physician in the Pennsylvania Hospital for the Insane at Harrisburg, where he remained four years; then two years at Litz, and in 1873 permanently locating at Earlyville, Dauphin Co. Dr. Thome married in 1875, Emma Early, daughter of M. Early, of East Hanover. *

ALEXANDER F. THOMPSON.

Alexander F. Thompson, son of Alexander Thompson and Isabella Penman, was born Dec. 7, 1845, in Pottsville, Schuylkill Co., Pa. His father was a native of Dolkeith, Scotland, where his life until his twenty-first year was spent, when he emigrated to America and located in Schuylkill County, Pa., engaging in the coal business. He died in December, 1873; was twice married,—first, to Isabella Penman, of Scotland, and had nine children; second, Mary Bast, of Pottsville, and had eleven children. In 1857, the father having removed to Porter township, in that county, Alexander F. was employed either in labor upon the farm or in mills owned by his father. On Aug. 2, 1862, he enlisted in Company B, One Hundred and Twenty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteers, serving nine months. On the 30th of June, 1863, enlisted in Company E, Thirty-ninth Regiment Pennsylvania Volunteer Militia, serving during the emergency. On the 20th of January, 1864, he joined Company G, Seventh Regiment Pennsylvania Veteran Volunteers, in which he continued until the mustering out of the regiment, Aug. 23, 1865. Mr. Thompson resumed employment in coal-mines in various parts of the State until 1871, when after an interval spent in study and business he began the study of law, and was admitted to the bar in 1876. The same year he established himself at Lykens, where he has continued to reside in the practice of his profession. Mr. Thompson was elected to the Legislature, session of 1881, and re-elected to that of 1883. He married, Oct. 24, 1872, Lizzie A. Hawk, daughter of William Hawk, of Wiconisco. *

JOHN TILL.

John Till, son of William Till and Catharine Miller, was born April 13, 1804, in the district of Kensington, Philadelphia. His parents were natives of Philadelphia, and he was the fourth child of ten sons and one daughter. Like his father, grandfather, and most of his male relatives, John was brought up a shipbuilder, learning that trade with the Messrs. Vaughan, of Kensington. In the winter of 1834 he came to Harrisburg to build a boat for W. P. Orrick, of Reading, who was extensively engaged in transportation on the Pennsylvania and Union Canals. Returning to Philadelphia after finishing his contract with Mr. Orrick, he entered into partnership with James Main, a ship-builder of that city, and removed to Harrisburg in August, 1835, establishing a boat-yard at the foot of North Street, on the canal. At that period boat-building was the leading business at Harrisburg. About 1840, owing to want of proper facilities, the firm purchased a location on the west side of the canal below Mulberry Street, where they constructed a large basin connected with the canal on the tow-path, over which they built a draw-bridge. At this place they carried on the building of boats for many years. A large number of packet-boats were built by them. During the winter the packet- and other boats of Leech & Co.'s extensive transportation line were repaired, the number filling the basin and the canal from Paxtang Street to now Herr Street, from one winding bridge to the other. It may be here stated that Messrs. Till & Main constructed on the river-bank below Mulberry Street two boats and one schooner for parties in New York City, which were launched in the Susquehanna during a rise and floated to the bay. In 1852 the firm erected a saw-mill adjoining their boat-yard, where they carried on a large lumber business. In 1853, Mr. Main died, and for several years Mr. Till conducted the enterprise alone, subsequently engaging in the coal trade a brief period, when he retired from all business pursuits. He served one term in the old Borough Council, for sixteen years a member of the school board, and was elected county treasurer for one term. Mr. education as the schools there afforded. He subsequently became the general agent of the Lykens Valley Coal Company, which necessitated his removal to Millersburg. He was thus employed until 1861, and four years later became identified with the Summit Branch Coal Company as their agent, when he constructed the basin and pier used by that corporation in their extensive operations. For several years he was superintendent of the Wiconisco Canal. He was thus actively employed until 1869, when he retired from all business enterprises. He is now the presi-

F. Wenrich

Till married, Nov. 6, 1825, Rebecca Rutter, of Philadelphia, who died May 16, 1871, at the age of sixty-five years. Their surviving children are William B.; Rebecca, married G. L. Suttie, of New York; and Mary E., married David C. Burnite, of Harrisburg.

FRANCIS WENRICH.

Francis Wenrich, son of Peter Wenrich and Susanna Umberger, was born Sept. 9, 1810, in Lower Paxtang township, Dauphin Co., Pa. His father, having been elected sheriff of the county, removed to Harrisburg in 1819, where Francis received such education as the schools there afforded. He has ever evinced a keen interest in the growth and prosperity of Millersburg, especially of its educational development. Mr. Wenrich married, in 1839, Mary Light, daughter of Squire Adam Light, of Millersburg, and their children were Isadore (married Mr. Stoner), Joseph, Mary, and Ellen. *

BENJAMIN J. WIESTLING, M.D.

Benjamin Joseph Wiestling, son of Samuel Christopher Wiestling and Anna Maria Bucher, was born Sept. 16, 1805, in Middle Paxtang, Dauphin Co., Pa.

He was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, whither his father removed in 1811, and also in the old Harrisburg Academy. He began the study of medicine with his father, and subsequently continued under the instructions of his elder brothers, Drs. Samuel C. and Joshua M. He attended lectures at the University of Pennsylvania, graduating from the medical department of that institution in March, 1827. He located at Middletown, Pa., where for over a period of fifty years he has been in the practice of his profession, and, although not as active as in his younger years, his skill is constantly brought into requisition. Dr. Wiestling married, June 23, 1831, Matilda Eveline Ross, a native of Georgetown, D. C., daughter of Andrew Ross and Hannah Templin.

GEN. EDWARD C. WILLIAMS.

Edward Charles Williams, son of Charles Williams (died 1835) and Rebecca Adams (died 1849), was born Feb. 10, 1820, in the city of Philadelphia. His father was a native of Philadelphia, his mother of Mount Holly, N. J., of Scotch parentage. The son was educated in the public schools of his native city, then organized under the old Lancasterian system. He learned the trade of a book-binder with Jacob Snyder, completing it with Robert P. Desilver. He shortly after came to Harrisburg, where he established himself in business, firm of Clyde & Williams, book-binders and stationers. For several years they did the State binding and also published several important works. In December, 1846, upon the call for volunteers for the war with Mexico, Mr. Williams raised a company called the Cameron Guards, which were accepted and formed a part of the Second Pennsylvania Regiment. As the history of that company is a portion of the history of Capt. Williams, our readers are referred to the sketch relating thereto. Previous to going to Mexico he had been connected several years with the old Dauphin Guards, one of the finest military organizations in the State, and was in service during the Philadelphia riots of 1844. Upon Capt. Williams' return from Mexico he was elected as an Independent, in 1850, to the office of sheriff of Dauphin County, serving the full term. When the Rebellion broke out and a demand was made for troops, Governor Curtin sent for Gen. Williams, who had been commissioned several years prior brigadier-general of Dauphin County militia, and at once directed to organize Camp Curtin, full particulars of which will be found in "Dauphin County in the War for the Union." Gen. Williams had the honor of being the first volunteer mustered into service for the defense of the Union. After organizing Camp Curtin, he organized Camp Slifer at Chambersburg. He commanded a brigade during the three months' service, was with Patterson in the Shenandoah, and subsequently mustered out at Washington City. He was then appointed by President Lincoln, through Secretary of War Cameron, colonel of the Lochiel Cavalry, directed to raise twenty-four companies of that branch of the service, which he accomplished in a very short time. Three battalions of raw cavalry it was difficult to handle, but by hard work Gen. Williams got his command into splendid discipline and drill; went into camp at Jeffersonville, Ind., where he exchanged his Pennsylvania horses for good Kentucky stock. After inspection by Gen. Buford, he was ordered to the front under Gen. Buell. On reaching Green River, and when ready to cross that stream, Gen. Williams was directed to take the advance, but the same evening, the news of the capture of Fort Donelson obviating that movement, he was ordered back, and his command cut up and distributed over Kentucky and Tennessee. His own regiment, the Ninth Cavalry, became very popular in that section with all classes of people, owing to their good discipline and behavior.

Gen. Williams was at Henderson with his regiment when Buell and Bragg made their march into Kentucky; was ordered to Louisville without delay, and from thence to Crab Orchard, where he prevented Kirby Smith's cavalry from entering Kentucky at that point. His services in that campaign were indeed arduous. Owing, however, to a question of rank, in which not only he but other officers in the volunteer service were concerned, he peremptorily resigned and returned to Pennsylvania.

Gen. Williams was twice married,—first, Jan. 16, 1843, to Selina Hetzel, daughter of John Hetzel, of Harrisburg; died May, 1865, at Harrisburg. He married, secondly, June 5, 1873, at Chapman, Pa., Mrs. A. E. Hetzel. Gen. Williams is now a resident of Chapman, Snyder Co., where he is engaged in merchandising.

JOHN O. WITMAN, M.D.

John Otto Witman, son of Benjamin Witman (1774-1856) and Margaret Otto (died in 1843), daughter of Dr. John A. Otto, was born Jan. 11, 1802, in Reading, Pa., and was educated at private schools and the Reading Academy. He studied medicine under Dr. Luther Reily, attended lectures at University of Pennsylvania in 1826-27, and received the honorary degree of M.D. from the University of Maryland in 1843. He commenced the practice of medicine in Harrisburg in 1827, and continued till 1832, when he removed to Gratz, Dauphin Co., where he practiced till 1837, when he returned to Harrisburg and associated himself with Drs. Luther Reily and E. L. Orth, which partnership continued till 1840. He then moved to Halifax, Dauphin Co., Pa., where he continued in an active and extensive practice till the fall of 1870, when bodily infirmity compelled him to relinquish all except office-work. He was a clerk in the surveyor-general's office under Gabriel Hiester during Schulze's administration, and physician to Dauphin County almshouse in 1827-28. He was first married, April 17, 1828, to Caroline Orth, daughter of Henry and Rebecca Orth. She was born in 1811, and died in Harrisburg, Jan. 10, 1848. Their children were Dr. Henry Orth, Luther Reily, Edward Lawrence, and Rebecca Catharine, married Robert H. Moffitt, D.D.S. His second wife was Margaret S., daughter of William Reed, of Dauphin County.

JAMES WORRALL, C.E.

James Worrall is a native of Limerick, Ireland, the son of John Worrall, of that city, merchant, who failed in business in consequence of some decree of the first Napoleon. He had cargoes of provisions on the ocean, and when the continental ports were closed against them they had to be sacrificed or rot in the ships, a fate which bankrupted their owner. He then emigrated to this country, and being a man of education he began teaching, in which occupation he successfully continued until his death at Philadelphia in 1845. He left a large family, of whom James, the subject of our sketch, was the eldest. The latter entered the establishment of Carey, Lea & Co., book-sellers, where he remained several years, when he secured a position on an engineer corps under Judge F. W. Rawle. The first rod Mr. Worrall ever held was on a railroad in Northumberland County in 1831, and, strange to say, the road was only commenced to be built in 1882, more than half a century later than its preliminary survey. He continued with Judge Rawle into 1832. In 1833, under Judge Benjamin Wright, one of the engineers of the Erie Canal, he assisted in making the surveys and maps of the great St. Lawrence Canal, between Prescott and Cornwall. He then joined the engineer corps on the Chesapeake and Ohio Canal, where he remained two years. In the fall of 1835 he helped Col. Schlatter on a survey across New Jersey for a railroad from Trenton to New Brunswick, which, through the opposition of the Camden and Amboy Railroad, was never built. Mr. Worrall then took service on the James River and Kanawha Canal, under Judge Wright, consulting engineer, and Charles Ellet, Jr., constructing engineer. He was subsequently called back to Pennsylvania by Hother Hage to make a survey over the Allegheny Mountains on a line from the Cumberland Valley to Pittsburgh. He was given the division from Bedford across the mountains as far as the Laurel Hill, a reconnoissance from thence to Greensburg, and again a survey from the latter point to the Youghiogheny at the mouth of the Sewickly. This was in 1838, and here Mr. Worrall first showed his skill and judgment, but the fact of their existence was not to be discovered until some forty-five years afterwards, when the highest engineering ability of the year 1882 was called upon for an opinion on the location then made; they unanimously pronounced it the true location for the road, the South Pennsylvania, and adopted it without hesitation. There was some difficult engineering suggested by Col. Worrall east of Bedford, upon which the syndicate of engineers was called upon to pronounce, which also they unanimously approved. It is questionable whether it would not have been hard to find, in the early history of engineering, an engineer who, locating a road upon a single examination, so marked it, as that the improved science of forty years later adopted it as the best without hesitation.

Limited as these personal sketches are, we can only refer in brief to other points in the career of Col. Worrall. He was afterwards engaged with Milnor Roberts as principal assistant engineer in the Erie extension of the Pennsylvania Canal; in 1844 became interested with others in canal and railroad contracts in the United States and Canada. In 1850 he was chief engineer of the Union Canal, where he continued until the completion of its enlargement, when he became principal engineer on the western division of the Philadelphia and Erie Railroad. Upon the completion of this work he returned to Harrisburg. After the year 1861 he acted as clerk in the quartermaster's department during the war. At the close of the Rebellion he was again engineering across the State for projected routes to the West; afterwards on a canal survey in Illinois, returning to Pennsylvania in 1869, since which period he has been prominently identified with the fishery commission of the State, and to him much that has been accomplished in that direction is due.

FRANCIS WYETH.

Francis Wyeth, son of John Wyeth and Louisa Weiss, was born April 6, 1806, at Harrisburg, Pa. He was educated at the Harrisburg Academy, and learned the art of printing in his father's office, subsequently entering Jefferson College, Canonsburg, from which institution he graduated in November, 1827. On his return home his father, who had conducted the Oracle of Dauphin thirty-five years, transferred that paper to his son, which he edited and published several years. He also entered into the business of bookseller and publisher. At the time Mr. Wyeth took charge of the Oracle the Whig party had just come into existence, of whose principles and policy he was an enthusiastic supporter. Becoming, however, tired of an editor's life, he sold out the newspaper establishment about 1831, continuing his other business until 1859, when he disposed of that. In April, 1861, at the outbreak of the Rebellion, he was placed in charge of the quartermaster's department at Camp Curtin, where he continued until the general government assumed control over all the military organizations of the State.

On the 20th of July, 1862, Governor Curtin appointed him one of the commissioners from Pennsylvania to visit all the hospitals in the Army of the Potomac, in the interest of the volunteer soldiers of the State who were sick or wounded, and, as his commission read, "to supply the wants of the suffering and needy as far as lies in your power, without infringing on any of the regulations or rights of the army, and assure each and all that their condition awakens the liveliest interest and sympathy of the people and Governor of Pennsylvania." Returning home, he reported the condition of the wounded soldiers, with this recommendation, that where it is possible "those from Pennsylvania be transferred to hospitals in their own State, that they might be near to their friends and acquaintances." This was subsequently carried out during the continuance of the war. On Nov. 28, 1863, he was again directed to visit the various hospitals. For a long term of years he has been one of the trustees of the Harrisburg Academy, and since 1879 president of the same. Mr. Wyeth married, May 29, 1829, Susan Huston Maxwell, daughter of William and Ann Maxwell, of Franklin County, Pa., who died Dec. 24, 1841, at Harrisburg, and they had among others William Maxwell, of St. Joseph, Mo., John, and Francis H., of Philadelphia. Mr. Wyeth married, secondly, Sarah C. Carson, daughter of Charles Carson, of Harrisburg, and their children were Charles C. (died in infancy) and Packer C., of Indian Territory.

JAMES YOUNG.

James Young is a grandson of Peter Young, gentleman, who resided near Sinking Springs, Berks Co., Pa., during the Revolutionary war, who performed active service during that trying struggle, and whose patriotism was evidenced by the public recognition of the Continental authorities. On Dec. 14, 1776, he was commissioned by the Council of Safety of Philadelphia second lieutenant of the Third Battalion of Berks County militia. The commission is signed by David Rittenhouse, vice-president. On May 17, 1777, he was commissioned by the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania second lieutenant of a company of foot in the Fourth Battalion of militia, Berks County; and on May 10, 1780, he was commissioned by the same authority lieutenant of a company in the Sixth Battalion of militia, of the same county. Those were the days in which militia men fought the battles of their country.

James Young's maternal grandfather was David Etila (son of David, who died in 1781), a native of Germany, who emigrated to this country about 1756, and settled at Middletown, Pa., where he pursued the occupation of a tailor for the greater part of his life. He was an important man in the history of the early settlement of that now prosperous borough, and was one of three commissioners appointed by the king of England to raise the necessary funds for the building of the old St. Peter's Lutheran Church, of Middletown. While in the performance of the duties incumbent upon him in that position, he on one occasion walked from Middletown to Philadelphia, through what was then a desolate and almost impassable section of the State. He married Magdalena Oldweiler, also a native of Germany, and had children,—David, who married Elizabeth Croll, of Middletown, settled at Covington, Ky., where he died leaving issue; Philip, who married Sarah Radenbaugh, pursued the occupation of a hatter in Middletown, where his descendants still reside; Conrad, a shoemaker by trade, who married Annie Smuller, of Middletown, pursued his vocation in Hummelstown for some time, and died in 1836, leaving issue still in Middletown; Jacob, who married Miss Hertz, of Harrisburg, and followed the calling of a shoemaker at that place, where he died leaving issue; and Sophia, who married Peter Young.

James Young, son of Peter and Sophia Young, was born at Swatara Hill, two miles east of Middletown, Pa., on July 25, 1820. His father, Peter Young, born Nov. 13, 1781, emigrated from Berks County, and passed the greater part of his life in the business of hotel-keeping. From 1820 to 1834 he was the proprietor of the stage-house on Swatara Hill, and on Feb. 1, 1835, took charge of the Washington House, Middletown, and kept it until his demise on Sept. 29, 1844.

James Young enjoyed only a common-school education, and passed his earliest years of usefulness in assisting his father in the hotel business. At this early period he evinced a remarkable degree of activity and ambition, and willingly performed the most menial labor if it conduced to his pecuniary advantage. By close economy and a careful and abstemious course of living, he had accumulated in 1839 a sum of money sufficient for him to purchase a canal-boat, which he ran for one year between Hollidaysburg and Philadelphia. In 1840 he established a lumber-yard at Middletown, to which he subsequently added the coal business, and for twenty-six years engaged in successful trade in these lines, at the same time furnishing supplies to the Pennsylvania Railroad Company under contract. He was also the purchasing agent for the Northern Central Pennsylvania Railroad Company for a number of years, and during the late war engaged in laying a portion of the second track for that company, under contract. About 1859 he purchased a valuable limestone quarry at Leaman Place, Lancaster Co., which he still owns and operates, and from which he has furnished a large amount of stone for building the bridges and abutments for the Pennsylvania Railroad Company.

James Young is emphatically a self-made man. Though springing from good stock, he started out in life a poor boy, and has won his present proud place among the representative men of his State by faithful, earnest work and the exercise of indomitable pluck and resolution. He owns a large amount of real estate in Middletown and elsewhere, including the Washington Hotel, in which he began his business life, the opera-house, and divers stores and dwelling-houses. He takes an active interest in local affairs, and is identified with various local institutions and enterprises. He is president of the American Tube and Iron Company of Middletown, president of the Cameron Furnace of the same place, and a director in the Commonwealth Guarantee Trust and Safe Deposit Company of Harrisburg, of the Farmers' Bank of Middletown, of the First National Bank of Lebanon, Pa., of the Lochiel Rolling-Mill Company, and has been a director of the Harrisburg, Portsmouth, Mount Joy and Lancaster Railroad Company for over twenty years. He is also a member of the State Board of Agriculture of Pennsylvania, by appointment of the Governor, and vice-president of the State Agricultural Society.

Though politically a Republican, he has always declined public position, feeling at the same time a warm interest in State and national politics. He is a regular attendant and supporter of St. Peter's Lutheran Church, of Middletown. He married Ann, daughter of Isaac and Catharine Redecker, of Elizabethtown, Pa., on June 8, 1843, and his children have been R. I. Young, residing in Baltimore, Md.; Delanson J. (deceased); Catharine S., wife of H. P. Dunbar, of Harrisburg; Sarah H. (deceased); James S., engaged in business with his father; Simon Cameron, civil engineer in the service of the Pennsylvania Railroad Company; and Henry P., residing at Columbia, Pa. *

JOHN W. YOUNG.

John Wesley Young, son of Josiah Carothers Young and Catharine Mary Kinter, was born Oct. 11, 1846, at Rockville, Dauphin Co., Pa. He was educated in the public schools of Harrisburg, read law in the office of David Fleming, and was admitted to the Dauphin County bar Jan. 21, 1868. From 1871 to 1874 he was clerk to the county commissioners, and from 1877 to 1883 solicitor of the county of Dauphin. He served as a member of the board of school control from 1876 to the present time (1883); was president of that body from 1877 to 1882 continuously, and is now secretary of that body.

THE PRIDE OF DAUPHIN COUNTY.

PERCHANCE nowhere in the United States are there to be found a series of farms which, for all that represents farming of the highest order in every detail, than those located near the borough of Middletown, and owned by Col. James Young, of that place. A faithful chronicler of the county could certainly not afford to omit proper and full notice of these examples of indomitable perseverance, enterprise, and energy; and so widely noted have these farms become that we may justly style them the "Pride of Dauphin." It has not been an uncommon thing to have visitors almost every week from even the most remote States and Territories in the Union, comprising Presidents of United States, Governors of States, and distinguished professional men in almost every walk of life, while they have been viewed and admired and appreciated by the titled nobility of Europe.

These farms extend along the turnpike road two and a half miles, and along the line of the Pennsylvania Railroad about the same distance, running back about a mile, more or less, nine of them lying west of Middletown, in what is Lower Swatara township, the others in Londonderry township, east of that town. There are eleven in number, named respectively Locust Grove, Sunset, Grand View, Eagle, White Hall, Thorndale, Rosedale, Roland, Oak Lane, Keystone, and Evandale, to which may be added a small place whereon are erected a number of houses, including a large tobacco warehouse, to which the name of Youngsport is given, and the same characteristics seem to control all,—method, system, neatness and order, superbly managed, and in the highest state of cultivation. The situation of this fine estate is so varied, with scenery so enchanting, that few landscapes there be more magnificent for pen or pencil.

These goodly acres did not come to their present owner by inheritance, nor all at one time. One farm after another has been added to the original purchase until over fourteen hundred acres, as rich and as well cultivated as any the sun shines on, are in his possession. They are specimens of "high art" in farming, the results of care, thrift, and energy.

Oak Lane, the homestead farm, is the better known to visitors, and it is a fair specimen of all the rest. Neat residences, with closely-mown lawns, capacious barns and outbuildings, whitewashed fences, well-kept gardens, well-cared-for fruit-orchards, all go to show that there is some master-spirit to direct and control. It is not alone "fields well tilled and barns well filled" which attract visitors, although these are important factors in Mr. Young's farming, for he farms to a purpose, and that is to see what he can make out of it. At Oak Lane is kept that splendid herd of Jersey and Alderney cattle to which Col.

Young has given so much attention, and which are at once his boast and pride. Here are found fifty-five milch cows, all of choicest strains, many of them importations, while the rest were grown by their present owner. We have seen many a choice herd, but never one like this. High breeding is seen in every animal. Their gracefully shaped heads, handsome bodies, and fine proportions are a sight to see. There they stand in their stalls, row after row, once seen not soon to be forgotten. Standing in straw up to their knees, some lying half buried in it, their coats are as fine and as glossy as a lady's sealskin coat. One can rub a white handkerchief over them without soiling it. Their stalls are so arranged that all filth is at once carried off and the cattle left clean and sweet. In addition to the milking cows there are a number of head of young stock, from the calf a few days old to the graceful heifer verging into cowhood. There, too, stand the sires, three in number, worthy of the admiration they receive from all who see them. What these cattle have cost their owner the author does not know, but seventy odd cattle, worth from a hundred to a thousand dollars each, are in themselves a respectable fortune. In 1882 five thousand dollars' worth of milk from this dairy was sold in Middletown. The young stock is disposed of with equal readiness. The demand is much greater than the supply. Calves sell readily from one hundred to two hundred dollars. So it is seen this costly herd of cows is not merely ornamental, but kept for revenue, and perhaps return a larger per cent. on their cost than any of the farming operations. All the stock purchased or raised is carefully registered; its pedigree can at once be told, and owner and purchaser know all about the animal. The soiling system is pursued here. Until after hay-making they do not leave their stalls, except twice daily for water. All the grass they can eat is cut and carried to them. They eat two large wagon-loads of it daily. It is hardly more trouble to do this than to look after the cows when turned out to pasture, while its advantages are many and obvious. It has been proved again and again by experiment that thirty-six acres of grass by the soiling system will easily support fifty head of cows, while the same number, if turned into a pasture-field, would in a month completely use up the grass in a hundred-acre field, eating it in part and destroying far more than they consume. The cattle themselves seem to thrive better by this system. All the doors and windows of the large barn where they are stabled are kept open. It is as light almost as out of doors; the cool winds of the early summer blow through it, and the temperature is far more comfortable than outside. They seem to enjoy the situation thoroughly, and as one passes along, reading each cow's name on the large printed card above her stall, one can almost fancy they appreciate the admiration they excite.

Oak Lane contains two barns, one for the fine-bred cattle, and the other for the fat stock. Overhead is the room where the feed is arranged and cut, run by steam. Corn-cribs are arranged on each side of the loft, and every other convenience for the proper distribution of feed exists. A large tank holding fourteen hundred gallons of water, supplied by a wind-mill, is situated in the basement, and it has never failed to give a full supply. The hennery is a neat-looking building, with a good supply of "Plymouth Rocks," while the pig-pens, containing a cross between a Chester White and Berkshire, are admirable in their design and construction. In the sheep department, Mr. Young has pure-bred Southdowns and lambs, which are in a thriving condition. The steam-chest, wherein all the feed for the other establishments is cooked, is rather an ingenious and useful invention. It is a long, substantially-built box, about eight feet in length and four feet deep. This is placed on four wheels, and filled with the necessary quality and quantity of feed. The box is then run into a house alongside of the boilers, and steam-pipes are then attached. By this means it is prepared, and when ready for shipment four horses draw it to the different estates. It supplies enough to the eleven places, starting out every morning.

As we have before remarked, Col. Young aims at big crops, and to get them he manures most liberally. He buys no manure and seldom uses fertilizers. In the winter of 1882-83 he fed two hundred and ninety-four steers; the year before he fattened three hundred and thirteen. Thirteen hundred very large loads of manure were the result. There is also the large tank, mounted on wheels, by which hundreds of barrels of liquid manure were carried out to those fields and places that seemed to require it most. Although he had out three hundred and fifty acres of corn, not a grain was sold, but large quantities were bought and fed. Last year more than six thousand bushels of wheat were sold, but not one ounce of straw. He has far more than he can use himself; the rest is given to others, and returned to him in the shape of manure. The three hundred and sixty acres of grass this season will give him a surplus of at least four hundred tons of hay above his own needs. Last year he sold three hundred and fifty tons. Every ton of hay and every sheaf of wheat was put into the barns, as was also nearly all the corn-fodder. No farmer needs to be told what a saving both of time and money and material this is. All the work on these fourteen hundred and forty acres is done by thirty-six mules; two of these do the dairy work besides. The land and barns lying close together permit of a great economy in this particular. Double this number would be required if this land was held by a dozen owners. There is but a single driving horse on the farms. As we have said before, no money is wasted on elaborate and costly dwellings. They are plain, neat, substantial, and in excellent repair, but there is nothing spent for show. The contiguous farms allow of great economy in the matter of fences. The fields are very large. One grass-field contains one hundred and six acres. There are wheat-fields of seventy acres. One corn-field is nearly a mile long; it contains one thousand and seventy-seven hills of corn, three feet nine inches apart in the row, making a total length of row of four thousand forty-nine feet. That would have made long "throughs" in the days of scythe and cradle. It may be observed that the fields are cultivated within a few inches of the fences. The usual strip of two or more feet of vacant ground is absent along the rails. Every available inch is made to yield its tribute. A rough calculation shows that at least five acres have been reclaimed in this way. This is equal to a hundred and twenty-five bushels of wheat, or its equivalent in some other crops, as the case may be. No feature struck the Duke of Sutherland more at his visit than this, who was accustomed to the hedge-rows and wide borders of England. The force of men employed the year through is thirty-five. In harvest-time the number is doubled, and these are always utilized in ditching, draining, and leveling. Hills are scraped down and low places filled. So large a number of men and animals are a great advantage. When occasion demands, they can all be concentrated at a given point, and quick work made of a field of grain or grass. Twenty-three big loads of hay hauled into one barn in a forenoon is evidence of this fact. Of course machinery is employed wherever it can be in the hay- and harvest-fields.

It is not only faster, but is cheaper than hand labor. Tobacco is also grown; only twenty acres in 1883. The yield, owing to the high farming, has been invariably large hitherto. Col. Young grows his tobacco crops in his fields.

We may say that the owner, with his son as assistant, exercises personal supervision of all his farms. There are no renters or croppers. All is his, and all receives his careful attention. He keeps the run of his hands and the work, and knows exactly what is being done on each farm from day to day. Daily visits are made to every part of the estate, for he finds his highest pleasure in being the first farmer in the land. No wonder that the Duke of Sutherland, after going over the place, said that he had no idea there was such a tract of land between the Atlantic and Pacific. Not only is there not another such a farm or series of farms in Pennsylvania, but it has not its equal on the Western Hemisphere. We make the assertion fully aware of its widest meaning. We think we have seen some single farms in other sections of the country where the land was as well cultivated, the fences as good, the fields as clean of weeds, the grounds around the buildings as neat and free of rubbish, the buildings as well kept, and the general order and thrift as good; but we know there is not another tract of land over fourteen hundred acres in extent under one ownership that will compare with Col. Young's, either in Pennsylvania or in North America.

GENERAL HISTORY.

CHAPTER I.

The Aboriginal Inhabitants—Indian Names—Purchase of 1732—Prices of Lands.

PRIOR to the coming of the European, the present beautiful Lebanon Valley was the hunting-ground of the Indian. From the South Mountain to the first range of the Kittochtinny, deer and other game were abundant, while almost annually the long grass was burned over by the natives to assist them in securing game, by driving the wild animals into the high inclosures prepared for their entrapping. So the valley was covered with stunted oaks, and these were on the wide stretch of land which greeted the first settlers. The country was not inviting, and the latter termed them "barrens."

Along the Lower Susquehanna and its branches, the Swatara especially,—the latter stream being most excellent fishing-ground,—we first hear of the Susquehannas. Of their history and their peculiar characteristics, and their sad fate, we have previously referred. The Shawanese came nearly twenty years after the Susquehannas had been driven from their fortified towns, they too fleeing before the vengeance of the Southern tribes. Most of the Indian relics within the region of Lebanon County are due, however, to the older—the primeval race, so far as modern research has revealed to us. Among the rocks of the Conewago region are found the remains of stone implements which go far back of the occupancy of the Shawanese. The latter came when the stone implements gave place to the articles supplied in barter with the white trader,—when the trade of the arrow-maker was passing away before the refined utensils of the refined white man.

It is somewhat difficult to give the precise location of Indian villages within the limits of the county. There are a large number of the original warrants which designate certain places as the sites of Indian towns. For instance, to John Alexander there was warranted March 25, 1738, two hundred acres of land "lying opposite the Indian town where Indian Sam lived, on the bigger Branch of the Suetaura." Another warrant included "a portion of the Indian town on Indian Town Creek." "Indian Bottoms on Suetara Creek" are frequently alluded to, showing that remains of old Indian towns were found in many sections.

Indian paths led through the county. One along "the north side of Conewago Creek." Another crossed the county, passing through the Great Swatara Gap. When the first settlers came these could be readily distinguished, and were described as having been broad, well-beaten paths, hollowed slightly in the middle by the constant tread and pressure of the feet of passing travelers, and for many years were used by the early pioeers as bridle-paths from one section to the other, and especially by the Moravian missionaries passing from the Schuylkill to the Susquehanna.

Indian relics were found by the early settlers almost everywhere, but by far the greater number in the Mühlbach settlement. A collection, made by H. L. Illig, containing some five thousand specimens, shows that a large Indian population must have been in that neighborhood. On the farm of Peter Witmer, near a large spring, in Lebanon township, many specimens of the aborigines have been found.

As the lovely valleys of Pennsylvania became the hunting-grounds of the Five Nations after their annihilating war against the Susquehannas especially, camping-grounds near springs of water are found along the Indian paths, and burial-places are said to exist at several points, but these have not been distinguishable to any of the present generation. It has been stated that during the construction of the Union Canal in the latter part of the last century, a burial-ground was struck near Myerstown, and although we have seen beads, axes, arrowheads, and ornaments stated to have been found therein, no other record has been preserved us.

As the Swatara and its branches were most excellent fishing-ground, fish-spears have frequently been found. These were longer than the arrowheads, and fastened to wooden shafts, some of which were used like our modern "gigs," and some shot from the bow. Hence most of the specimens found are broken. The Indian mode of fishing was to wade into the creeks and strike the fish as they passed up the stream. The shad and trout are supposed to have been their main dependence, although the eel was considered a luxury, and was plentiful. The Indian name SWAHADOWRY, corrupted from Schahadawa, of which Swatara is also a corruption, signifies in Susquehanna Indian "where we fed on eels." While upon this subject we may as well state that the following are the signification of Indian names within the county:

QUITOPAHILLA, corrupted from Cuitpehelle, or Cwitpehelle, signifying "a spring that flows from the ground among pines."

TULPEHOCKEN, corrupted from Tulpewi-hacki, signifying "the land of turtles." According to Zeisberger "Tulpe" means a water- or sea-turtle; "Tachquoch," a land-turtle; "Hac-ki," the earth, the land.

KITTOCHTINNY is a Delaware word, and means "the endless hills." It is corrupted into Kittatinny, and we adhere to the first as the proper orthography.

CONEWAGO, or Conewaugha, in Iroquois means "at the place of the rapids." From this fact there are several streams emptying into the Susquehanna so named.

The LECHAY. This is the Indian name of the Conewago Hills, or the South Mountain. In Delaware it signifies "where there are forks." This name was given to them because through them struck an Indian path or thoroughfare, which forked off into various trails leading north and east. The word Lehigh is a corruption, and was used by the German settlers, whose descendants at the present day in referring to the Lehigh River almost universally say "Lecha."

To give our readers some idea of the Indian language, we present the "Gloria in Excelsis" in that of the Six Nations:

"A-honawaseannien ne Niioh ne garouhiake teateron; nok Nonwent-siake skemon takenhake; ne tsi ronikoorlio ne Ongwe-ne ongatigwen.

"Ise tegwariwagwase; Ise gwatshennonniase; Ise gwaeniens; Ise

"O Sewennio, sonhatsiwa Niioh Iaienka Iesoe Keristos; Ise ne Niioh

"Ise ne seriwatonta ne gariwanerew Nonwentsiake, tagwentehak

"Ise ne seriwatonta ne gariwanerew Nonwentsiake, tagwentehak

"Ise ne seriwatonta ne gariwanerew Nonwentsiake, tagwat-houtats

"Ise nonwa ne t'ho tseron tsraweientetakoa ne Niioh Ronwanika, hatsiwa, O Iesoe Keristos;

"Ne seuzigwe ne Ronikonratokenton, agwa satesoniataneragwat, tsi tehouwarionientons ne Niioh Ronwanika. Amen."

In this connection we can only give a brief reference to the aborigines. In the introductory chapter to the history of Dauphin County a full account being given of the red men, further notice would be merely a repetition of what is there said and described. The Indians actually held title to all the land within the limits of Lebanon County until 1732, although it was considered by the Proprietaries that the deed of Chief Kekelappan, of 10th of September, 1683, to William Penn covered a portion of the territory upon which the whites located as early as 1710, if not prior. The final purchase was not made until the 7th of September, 1732, when the chiefs and sachems of the Delawares made a treaty by which they disposed of "all those tracts of land or lands lying on or near the river Schuylkill in the said Province, or any of the branches, streams, fountains, or springs thereof, eastward or westward, and all the lands lying in or near any swamps, marshes, fens, or meadows, the waters or streams of which flow into or toward the said river Schuylkill, situate, lying and being between those hills called Lechay Hills, and those called Kittochtinny Hills, which cross the said river Schuylkill, about thirty miles above (west of) the Lechay Hills, and all lands whatsoever lying within the said bounds and between the branches of the Delaware River on the eastern side of the said land, and the branches or streams running into the river Sasquahanna on the western side of the said land." This purchase included all the land in Pennsylvania not previously bought, lying between the Delaware and Susquehanna, and south of the Blue Mountains. The Indians, of their own free will, disposed of this land, and after this date they had no more claim, right, or title to any of the land within the boundaries of Lebanon County, though the sale did not drive or exclude them from the land. At this time there were a number of roving bands of Indians still living in the county, but their villages and council-fires were moved beyond the Kittochtinny.

It will be interesting to many to know the price that was paid for this large tract of land, which included about one-half of Berks County, the whole of Lehigh, and part of Northampton, with the whole of Lebanon and Dauphin, south of the first range of the Kittochtinny. The sachems received twenty brass kettles, one hundred stroudwater match-coats of two yards each, one hundred duffels, ditto, one hundred blankets, one hundred yards of half tick, sixty linen shirts, twenty hats, six made coats, twelve pairs of shoes and buckles, thirty pair of stockings, three hundred pounds of gunpowder, six hundred pounds of lead, twenty fine guns, twelve gun-locks, fifty tomahawks, or hatchets, fifty planting hoes, one hundred and twenty knives, sixty pair of scissors, one hundred tobacco-tongs, twenty-four looking-glasses, forty tobacco-boxes, one thousand flints, five pounds of paint, twenty-four dozen of gartering, six dozen of ribbons, twelve dozen of rings, two hundred awl-blades, one hundred pounds of tobacco, four hundred tobacco-pipes, twenty gallons of rum, and fifty pounds in money. The articles paid for this and the tracts previously purchased, and the numerous presents given the Indians when they visited Philadelphia officially, were generally articles indispensable in every sphere of civilized life. On one occasion there were "four dozen jewsharps" among the items presented by the government, and this shows that they must have had some taste for music. The Indians were resolute and very tenacious of their customs and habits of life, but the eagerness with which they accepted these articles, and applied them to their proper uses, shows how quickly they saw that they were superior to theirs, and how readily they relinquished many of their usages and adopted those of the settlers.

It is not positively known when the first settlements were made within the present limits of the county of Lebanon. The earliest assessment extant of taxables which included this county is that of Conestogoe township, Chester County, for the year 1718. Among the names we recognize a number which a few years after appear on the tax-list of Lebanon township, and more especially among the first warrantees of land. Prior to 1732 the land lying between the Lechay or Conewago hills on the south and the Kittochtinny range on the north, from the Delaware to the Susquehanna had not, as we have previously stated, been purchased from the aborigines. This latter fact, however, did not prevent a settlement of the country, and although the proprietary government would not survey or grant lands in the unpurchased district, no objections were ever made, save in one or two instances, to the actual occupation of the land by the white settlers.

PROVINCIAL PAPER CURRENCY.

Although a treaty was entered into between Governor Patrick Gordon, on behalf of the proprietaries, with the Indians for the land in question, it was not until 1733 that lands were surveyed to actual settlers. Lands, it is true, were granted at an earlier date, but these were warrants to the holders of deeds given the original purchasers.

Miererhoeje farms varied in size from 100 to 500 acres, whereof usually about one-third was made arable. The selling price of land was graduated from time to time by local and natural advantages. From 1713, the common price per 100 acres was £5, and a bushel of wheat, or 1s. sterling, quit-rent. In 1730, from £15 to £18. From 1732, the price was more uniform and steady at £15 10s. per 100 acres, and a half-penny sterling quit-rent per acre, which continued till 1768, except a slight variation between 1761 and 1763, when warrants were issued at £9 per 100 acres. After 1768 the lands purchased from the Indians that year were offered at £5 per 100 acres, and one penny annually per acre as quit-rent. Immediately preceding the Revolution, improved lands were sold in Lancaster County, near the town of Lancaster, from £12 to £18 per acre, and near Lebanon from £3 to £5 per acre. In 1742 land had risen ten per cent. Unimproved lands were sold from 4s to 15s. per acre. At the close of the eighteenth century improved land sold generally twenty-five per cent. higher than it did the preceding decade.

CHAPTER II.

The Early Warrantees of Land—Lebanon—Heidelberg—Bethel

FROM the records of the land department of the State of Pennsylvania we have gathered the important information which follows. It is simply the names of the early warrantees, date of warrant, and number of acres taken up within the townships of Lebanon, Heidelberg, and Bethel. These, it may be observed, do not include all the land within the county. Some are included in the lists of Hanover, Derry, and Londonderry, to be found in the history of Dauphin County, while some of the warrants in those for Heidelberg may now be comprised within the limits of Berks County. In many instances no township was given, and unless we could positively localize the warrants we omitted them altogether. The names are given as in the original. As in the case with the assessment-lists we shall give in the course of this work, we have not ventured to change the spelling of a single name. Many were written as they were pronounced, or as they struck the ear of the clerks in the land-office. Deining is written Teiuing, Espy, Aspie, Dubbs, Tupz, and so on ; and where the name is duplicated another change in orthography is noticed. The dates to which an asterisk (*) is attached denotes the time from which interest on the purchase-money commences. It may also be noted that frequently among the earliest warrants the owners of lands adjoining are given; but in many cases no warrants for these are to be found. It was customary for certain persons to obtain warrants for several hundred acres of land, and a few days thereafter sell or transfer the same in small tracts to others, who may perchance have been original settlers, but do not appear among the original warrantees.

The warrants in question are all embraced within the county of Lancaster, as originally constituted:

CHAPTER III.

The Early German Settlers in Pennsylvania—Emigration of Redemptioners—The Scheme to Educate the Germans—Not Hessian Mercenaries—Manners and Customs.

THE early pioneers of Lebanon County, with the exception of the western portion, were principally from Germany, a few Swiss and French Huguenots settling among them. So imperfectly is this German settlement understood that we propose to review as briefly as possible that portion of the history of the county and the State.

The origin of the German population in Pennsylvania dates back to the latter part of the seventeenth century. As early as 1684, Francis Daniel Pastorius, of whom the poet Whittier has sung so sweetly, was a colony of Germans settled and laid out Germantown near to the metropolis. These came from Cressheim, Germany, and were in religious opinions and proclivities allied to the Quakers. Other colonies followed, settling in different parts of the Province. It was not, however, until the years 1709 and 1710 that the emigration of the Germans was of any magnitude. For two or three years previous Queen Anne, of England, gave refuge to thousands of the Palatinates, who, oppressed by the exactions of the French, were forced to flee from their homes. It is stated that in the month of July, 1709, there arrived at London six thousand five hundred and twenty German Protestants. Transportation was gratuitously given many to America through the aid of the queen and the government of England. The vast majority were sent at first to New York, from whence many reached the confines of Pennsylvania, a Province the laws of which were more tolerant than those of any of the other colonies. Among these German emigrants were Mennonites, Dunkards, German Reformed and Lutherans. Their number was so great during the subsequent years that James Logan, secretary to the Proprietary, wrote, "We have of late great numbers of Palatines poured in upon us without any recommendation or notice which gives the country some uneasiness, for foreigners do not so well among us as our own English people." Two years afterwards Jonathan Dickinson remarks, "We are daily expecting ships from London which bring over Palatines in number about six or seven thousand. We had a parcel who came out about five years ago, who purchased land about sixty miles from Philadelphia and prove quiet and industrious. Some few came from Ireland lately, and more are expected thence. This is besides our common supply from Wales and England. Our friends do increase mightily, and a great people there is in the wilderness which is fast becoming a fruitful field."

The German emigrants settled principally in Montgomery, Bucks, and Lancaster Counties; the latter including the present counties of Dauphin and Lebanon. They were well educated, and brought with them their ministers and school-masters; the latter very frequently, when there was a want of supply of the former, read sermons and prayers.

Between the years 1720 and 1725 a large number of Germans, who had previously settled in Schoharie County, N. Y., descended the Susquehanna River on rafts to the mouth of the Swatara, ascending which stream, already settled by the Scotch-Irish, they took up their abode near the waters of the Tulpehocken, partly in Berks County, some few within the present limits of Lebanon County. The celebrated Conrad Weiser, to whom we shall refer hereafter, was of this party of colonists.

From 1725, for a period of ten years, there was another great influx of Germans of various religious opinions,—Reformed, Lutherans, Moravians, Swenfelders, and Roman Catholics. By a letter of Secretary James Logan, in 1725, it appears that many of these settlers were not over-scrupulous in their compliance with the regulations of the land-office. He says, and perchance with much truth, "They come in in crowds, and as bold, indigent strangers from Germany, where many of them have been soldiers. All these go on the best vacant tracts and seize upon them as places of common spoil." He again says, "They rarely approach me on their arrival to propose to purchase;" and adds, "when they are sought out and challenged for their right of occupancy, they allege it was published in Europe, that we wanted and solicited for colonists, and had a superabundance of land, and therefore they had come without the means to pay." In fact, those who thus "squatted" without titles acquired enough by their thrift in a few years to pay for the land which they had thus occupied, and so, generally, they were left unmolested. Secretary Logan further states, "Many of them are Papists,—the men well armed, and as a body a warlike, morose race." In 1727 he writes, "About six thousand Germans more are expected (and also many from Ireland), and these emigrations" he "hopes may be prevented in the future by act of Parliament, else these Colonies will in time be lost to the Crown." The italics in the last sentence are our own. To us it seems like a prophecy.

From 1735 to 1752 emigrants came into the Province by thousands. In the autumn of 1749 not less than twenty vessels with German passengers to the number of twelve thousand arrived at Philadelphia. In 1750, 1751, and 1752 the number was not much less. Among those who emigrated during these years were many who bitterly lamented having forsaken their native land for the Province of Pennsylvania. At that time there was a class of Germans who had resided some time in Pennsylvania, well known by the name of Neulander, who, acting in the capacity of agents for certain firms,—prominent Quakers of Philadelphia,—went to Germany and Switzerland, prevailing on their countrymen to sacrifice their property and emigrate to Pennsylvania. Many persons in easy circumstances at home were induced to embark for America. False representations were made, lands were offered for the settling thereon, a nominal charge was to be made for the passage on ship-board, and every incentive employed by these nefarious agents to beguile the unsuspecting.

Of the horrors and privations of that six or eight weeks on ship-board we shall not refer, the bare recital of which is terrible to contemplate even at this late day. The condition of these emigrants on their arrival was absolutely wretched. The exactions of the masters of the vessels, the plundering of their baggage by these unscrupulous pirates, placed them at the tender mercy of the Quaker merchants who purchased the entire cargo of living freight as a speculation, such being the object in sending out their agents; and men, women, and children were thus sold at auction for a term of years to the highest and best bidder. It was white slavery, and those concerned considered that it paid better than negro slavery. We have recently examined some records which throw additional light upon this subject of German emigration, which prove conclusively that for years this nefarious traffic was carried on. Such statement is not flattering to Pennsylvania and her history, it is true, but the people at large or the government were not wholly responsible for the acts of those who insisted upon their "pound of flesh."

The persons thus disposed of were termed redemptioners. They were usually sold at ten pounds for from three to five years' servitude; and in almost every instance the time for which they were sold was honestly served out, while many subsequently, by dint of industry and frugality, rose to positions of wealth and importance in the State and nation.

In later times, say from 1753 to 1756, the Germans having become numerous, and therefore powerful as "make-weights" in the political balance, were much noticed in the publications of the day, and were at that period in general very hearty co-operation with the Quakers then in rule in the Assembly. From that time onward, although not so numerous, almost all the German emigrants to America located in Pennsylvania.

A manuscript pamphlet in the Franklin Library at Philadelphia, said to have been written by Samuel Wharton in 1755, contains certain facts which are worthy of reproduction in this connection, showing, as it does, their influence in the Province, whether fancied or actual we do not say. "The party on the side of the Friends," says the writer, "derived much of their influence over the Germans, through the aid of Christopher Sauer, who published a German paper in Germantown as early as 1729, and which, being much read by that people, influenced them to the side of the Friends and hostile to the Governor and Council. Through this means they have persuaded them that there was a design to enslave them, to enforce their young men, by a contemplated militia law, to become soldiers, and to load them down with taxes, etc. From such causes," he adds, "have they come down in shoals to vote, and carrying all before them." "To this I may add," says Watson, "that I have heard from the Norris family that their ancestors in the Assembly were warmly patronized by the Germans in union with Friends. His alarms at this German influence at the polls, and his proposed remedies for the then dreaded evils, as they show the prevalent feelings of his associates in politics, may serve to amuse the present generation. He says the best effects of these successes of the Germans will probably be felt through many generations! Instead of a peaceable, industrious people as before, they are grown now insolent, sullen, and turbulent, in some counties threatening even the lives of all those who oppose their views, because they are taught to regard government and slavery as one and the same thing. All who are not of their party they call 'Governor's men,' and themselves they deem strong enough to make the country their own! Indeed, they come in in such force, say upwards of five thousand in the last year, I see not but they may soon be able to give us law and language too, or else, by joining the French, eject all the English. That this may be the case is too much to be feared, for almost to a man they refused to bear arms in the time of the late war, and they say it is all one to them which king gets the country, as their estates will be equally secure. Indeed it is clear that the French have turned their hopes upon this great body of Germans. They hope to allure them by grants of Ohio lands. To this end they send their Jesuitical emissaries among them to persuade them over to the Popish religion. In concert with this the French for so many years have encroached on our Province, and now are so near their scheme as to be within two days' march of some of our back settlements," alluding, of course, to the state of the western country, overrun by French and Indians just before the arrival of Braddock's forces in Virginia in 1755, and concerning which we shall have something to say further on in our history.

The writer imputes their wrong bias in general to their "stubborn genius and ignorance," which he proposes to soften by education; "a scheme still suggested as necessary to give the general mass of the inland country Germans right views of public individual interests. To this end he proposes that faithful Protestant ministers and school-masters should be supported among them; that their children should be taught the English tongue; the government in the mean time should suspend their right of voting for members of Assembly, and to incline them the sooner to become English in education and feeling, we should compel them to make all bonds and other legal writings in English, and no newspaper or almanac be circulated among them unless also accompanied by the English thereof." "Finally," he concludes, "without some such measure I see nothing to prevent this Province from falling into the hands of the French."

A scheme to educate the Germans as the one alluded to was put on foot in 1755, and carried on for several years, but really with little good results. The German settlers appreciated education, for they brought their ministers and school-masters with them, and there were few who could not read or write. They could write their name, and as great a proportion as their English neighbors, the Quakers. The difficulty was not alone to educate them in the English tongue, but for the English Church. That they did not take kindly to, and after the lapse of a century and a quarter in many localities there is the same objection to the "scheme of 1755." This matter has been wrongly construed to the detriment of the German settlers. They fostered education, but they did not at the first take kindly to the English vernacular.

While upon this subject of the early settlement, it may as well be stated that the Pennsylvania Germans are not the descendants of the Hessians who were brought to America by the British government to put down the rebellion of 1776, as has repeatedly been charged by New England historians. This statement is as impudent as it is false. All of the German "Mercenaries," as they are called, who were prisoners of war and stationed in Pennsylvania, according to Baron Reidesel, who was one of the commanders, were properly accounted for, and were returned to their own country upon the evacuation of New York by the British. They did not remain; as it was a condition entered into by the English government with the Landgrave of Brunswick, the Duke of Hesse-Cassel, and the petty princes of Hanau and Waldeck, that a certain price was to be paid for every man killed, wounded, or missing. Before the official proclamation of peace, the Hessian prisoners were on their way to New York, by direction of the Supreme Executive Council of Pennsylvania. Some few deserted, and some eventually returned to America after their transportation to Germany, but the bold assertion that the origin of the large German population of Pennsylvania is due to the settlement of those hired mercenaries of England, cannot be supported, and shows the profoundest historical ignorance and audacious stupidity.

Pennsylvania took the lead of all the colonies in agriculture because of the great number of Germans settling in the Province; and Governor Thomas, as early as 1738, wrote, "This Province has been for some years the asylum of the distressed Protestants of the Palatinate and other parts of Germany, and I believe it may with truth be said that the present flourishing condition of it is in a great measure owing to the industry of those people—it is not altogether the goodness of the soil, but the number and industry of the people that make a flourishing colony."—(Cbl. Rec., iv. p. 313.) The exportation of farm products kept pace with the increase of the population. In 1751 there were exported 86,000 bushels of wheat, 129,960 barrels of flour, 90,743 bushels of Indian corn. The total exports of 1761 exceeded $1,000,000 in value. This was at a period when the entire population did not exceed 180,000, whereof nearly one-half were Germans.

That the Germans of Pennsylvania have been so uniformly successful in acquiring wealth is due to their industry, to their thrift, and to their knowledge of agricultural pursuits. If some portions of Pennsylvania are the garden-spots of America they have been made so by the Germans who have tilled them, —who have indeed "made the wilderness to blossom as the rose." Not anywhere in the New England States, in New York, nor in the South are farms so well tilled, so highly cultivated, as in the sections of Pennsylvania where the descendants of the Germans predominate; and we assert, without fear of contradiction, that more works on agriculture, more papers devoted to farming, are taken and read by the so-called "Pennsylvania Dutch" farmers than by the farmers of any other section of the Union. That our German citizens are not "content to live in huts" is palpably certain, and whoever will go into the homes of our farmers will find evidence of both refinement and culture, their farms being easily distinguished from those of others by the good fences, the extent of the orchard, the fertility of the soil, the productiveness of the fields, the luxuriance of the meadows, the superiority of his horse, which seems to feel with his owner the pleasure of good living. And although their barns are capacious, because their dwellings are not castles, they should not be accused of indifference to their own domiciles. At the present time it is rare to find a farm-house in the old German settlements that does not contain a double parlor, sitting-room, dining-room, kitchen and out-kitchen, with six or eight bedrooms. This is more general in the counties of Berks, Lancaster, Lebanon, Dauphin, and Cumberland than among the New England settled counties of the North and West,—the Quaker counties of Chester and Bucks, in Pennsylvania,—and to go to New England, the latter are not to be mentioned in comparison.

Of the Pennsylvania German language or idiom, which is the vernacular of the greater portion of the people of Lebanon County, we will not speak, except to state that, at the present time, there are few persons speaking this patois who are unable also to speak and read English. Those who are not conversant with English are of recent importation from the Fatherland. Because the Dunkards and other religious bodies retain the peculiar views of their ancestors they are accused of being unprogressive, of preserving the customs and general characteristics of the race, which is far from the truth. Next to the Scotch-Irish no race has left such a high and lofty impress upon this nation as has the German. There is less ignorance and superstition in the German counties of Pennsylvania than will be found in any agricultural region East, West, North, or South. Because some old plodding farmer, who prefers remaining on his farm, attending to his cattle and grain, caring little of going beyond the county town in his visits, his disinclination ought not to be imputed to either his ignorance or to his being close-fisted. In the German counties one rarely meets with an individual who has never been "to town," and we venture an opinion that both in the New England States and in New York are there many persons who have never visited the county seat; and as for visiting Boston and New York City, where one farmer has visited either metropolis, we assert that two Pennsylvania German farmers have seen their own city of Philadelphia.

German opposition to common schools has been a terrible bugaboo to very many outside of Pennsylvania, who never understood the occasion of it. Foremost among the opponents of the free-school system were the Quakers, the opposition arising from the fact that, having had schools established for many years, supported by their own contributions, they were opposed to being taxed for the educational maintenance of others. Precisely similar were the objections in the German districts. As stated in the outset of this article, the German emigrants brought their school-masters with them, and schools were kept and supported by them. More frequently the church pastor served as teacher, and hence, when the proposition came to establish the system of public education, the people were not prepared for it, for the free schools severed education from positive religion. But that was nearly fifty years ago, and, to the credit and honpr of the German element in Pennsylvania, Governor George Wolf, the father of the free-school system, and Governor Joseph Ritner and William Audenreid, the earnest advocates of the same, were of German descent. The opposition died away in a few years, and a glance at the school statistics of Pennsylvania would open the eyes of our New England friends and astonish the descendants of Diedrich Knickerbocker. The present system and management of public education in our State is in the lead in the Union, and figures and facts will bear us out in our assertion.

To the domestic manners and customs of the Pennsylvania Germans we shall not particularly refer, save to repel certain insinuations frequently made by ignorant historians. It has been stated as a veritable fact that the custom of "bundling" is a peculiar custom among the Pennsylvania Germans, and that it survives to the present day, which is as absurd as it is false. Despite all that may be said in regard to it, it was a rare circumstance seventy-five or eighty years ago, and all knowledge of it was obtained from the staid New England people and the lowe Dutch of New York. According to the Rev. Samuel Peters, who published a "History of Connecticut" a hundred years ago, that custom prevailed in New England for one hundred and sixty years, while most of the New England genealogies and histories refer to it as occurring there. Stiles, in his history of it, states that the custom was not only brought over from Holland by the Dutch emigrants to New York, but blames New England for propagating it, and refers incidentally to the fact that "the contagion" reached in time the German settlements in Pennsylvania. To fasten its origin or prevalence to a great extent upon the Pennsylvania "Dutch" is as impudent as it is unjust. If it was a rare occurrence eighty years ago, propriety and good manners, of which the Germans of Pennsylvania have as proper conceptions as the people of any other State, have obliterated the evil borrowed from the Eastern States of the Union, where it was indigenous.

As a general thing, the first settlers were staid farmers. Their mutual wants produced mutual dependence, hence they were kind and friendly to each other,—they were ever hospitable to strangers. Their want of money in the early times made it necessary for them to associate for the purpose of building houses, cutting their grain, etc. This they did in turn for each other without any other pay than the pleasures which usually attended a country frolic. Strictly speaking, what are attributed to them as virtues might be called good qualities, arising from necessity, and the peculiar state of society in which these people lived,—patience, industry, and temperance.

Within the limits of Lebanon County are to be seen many stone houses erected by the pioneers, which are owned by the great grandsons of those who settled prior to 1735, and by whom these records of their ancestry will be greatly prized.

DIE ERSTE DEITSCH E SETTLE R.

Die Erste Deitsche Settle r—Ken Hessische Mercenaries—Die Redemp-tioners—Der Plan die Pennsilfianisch Deitsche zu Lerne—Ihre Wehge, etc.

Die erste settle r fon Levnon County, echsept's westlich dehl, ware's menscht fon Deitschland; en paar Schweitzer un Franzoesische Huguenots settelten sich unnich sie. So unfolkkome is des Deitsch settelten ferstanne, dos mer im sinn hen, so kurz os mer kenne, en dehl fon der g'schicht fom county un der schaaft zu gewe.

Der ursprung fon der Deitsche population in Pennsilfani geht z'rueck bis in's siverzehnte yohrhunnert. So frueh os 1684 hot der Francis Daniel Pastorius, fon dem der dichter so suez g'sunge hot, German-town naecht der Hoptstadt mit ehner colony fon Deitsche g'settelt un ausg'legt. Die sin fon Cresheim, Deitschland, komme, un ware in ihrer Christlicher sinne un opinions mit der Quakers ferbunne. Annere colonies sin nochkomme un hen sich in differente dehle fom Provinz nunner g'settelt. Es war awer net bis die yohr 1709 un 1710 dos fiel Deitsch-laenner ruewer komme sin. For zweh oder drei yohr forher hot die Koenigin Anne fon Englonde tausende fon der Palatinates die fon der Fransose unnerdrueckt ware un ihre hehmatie ferlosse hen muesse, ufholt gewe. Es werd g'sawt dos im monat Juli, 1709, about 6520 deitsche Brotestante noch London komme sin. Durch die huelff fon der koenigin uns government fon Englonde sin fiel frei noch Amerika g'schickt worre. Der groeszt dehl is sehrst noch Nei Yorrick g'schickt worre, un fon do sin fiel noch Pennsilfani gange. Do ware die laws meh g'lind os sie in ehnicke fon dene annere neue colonies ware. Unner dene Deitsche eisiedler ware Mennonische, Dunker, deitsche Reformirte un Lutherische. Ihre nummer war so grosz in der naechste yohre dos James Logan, secretary zu der Proprietary, g'schriewer hot, "Mer hen schun en weil her grosze nummer fon Palatinates do ruewer g'schickt krickt, unnich ehnicke recommendation oder notis, un es machet die leit unruhig, weil anslaenner net so gut duhn unner uns os unser ehgane englische leit." Zweh yohr nocherhand hot der Jonathan Dickson g'sawt, "Mer echspeckte alle dawg schiff fon London, die fon sechs bis siewe tausend Palatinates ruewer bringe. Mer hen en klehne drupp die about fuef yohr z'rueck ruewer komme sin, un hen sich lond gekauft about seelstzig meil fon Fildelfy un sie sin stille, hortschaffige leit. En paar sin kerzlick fon Eirland komme un mer echspeckte noch meh fon dort. Dernoht sin ehwe noch fiel Welsche un Englaenner. Unsere freind duhne maechtig zunehme un en grosz folk is do in dere wildernisz die eb long en fruechtbar feld gebt."

Selle eisiedler hen sich's menscht in Montgomery, Bucks, un Lengeshter Counties nunner g'settelt. Selle-mols hen Dauphin un Levnon Counties noch zu Lengeshter kehrt. Sie ware gut g'lernt un hen ihre parrer un schulmehster mit sich gebrocht; un oftmols wann's net genug porrer ware hen die schulmehster predige un gebeter g'lese.

Zwische der yohr 1720 un 1725 sin en grosze nummer Deitsche die fruher in Schoharie County, Nei Yorrick, g'settelt hen kot, der Susquehanna Revver nunner gange uf rafts bis an's maul fon der Schwatar un sin dernoh der strom nufgange, wo schun g'settelt war fon Scotch-Eirische, un hen sich hehmathe uf g'nomme naechst an der Dulbehoocke, un dehl derfon in Berricks County un en paar in was nau Levnon County is. Der beruehmt Conrad Weiser, fon dem mer nochher mehner zu sawge hen, hot zu derer party fon settler kehrt.

Fon 1725, for en zeit fon zehe yohr sin fiel Deitsche fon unnerschittliche christliche g'sinne ruewer komme, Reformirte, Lutherische, Herrnhuter, Schwenkfelder, un Roemisch Kadolische. Aus'me brief dos der secretary James Logan in 1725 g'schriew hot scheint's dos fiel fon dene settler sich net fiel g'wisse g'macht hen wege der ruhls fon der lond offis. Er sawgt, un erleicht mit fiel wohret, "Sie komme rei in druppe, un wie bolde, arme fremme fon Deitschlond, wu fiel derfon soldawte ware. Sie gehne all uf's best lehr lond un nemme's os wann's ehng epper kehre date." Er sawgt widder, "Sie komme selte zu mier wann sie ahlande un foddere zu kawfe," un sawgt er, "wann mer sie aussucht un frogte sie for ihre rechte zum lond, dann sawge sie 'swar bekonnnt g'macht in Eiroba dos mer settler hawe welle un dos mer lond im uewerflusz hette, un for des sin sie komme unne geld for's lond zu kawfe." In der daht, die wu sich so nunner "geblotscht" hen unnich ehnich recht hen in a paar yohr geld genung g'spart for's lond zu bezahle wu sie uf g'nomme kot hen, un so sin sie g'woehnlich geh g'losst wore. Der secretary Logan sawgt weiter naus, "Fiel fon dene sin Kadolische—die mannsleit hen feier g'wehre, un os en kloss sin sie en ferfochte un souer folk." In 1727, schreibt er, "About sechs dousand meh Deitsche werre echspect (un ah fon Eirlond) un die eisiedler," er "hofft kenne ferhueht werre uf weider naus dorch en Act fon Parliament, unsnt werre die colonies in zeit zu der crown verlohre. Die letz sentence hen mer selwer in schworze buchstalwe ufsetze losse. Es scheint uns schier gar wie en profezeihung.

Fon 1735 bis 1752 sin emigrants in die Province komme beim dousand. Im herbst fon 1749 sin net weniger os zwansich schiff mit Deitsche passengens zu der nummer fon 12,000 in Fildelfy ahkomme. In 1750, 1751 un 1752 war die nummer net fiel wenicher. Unnich dene wu in dene yohre ahkomme sin ware fiel wu's orrig g'speit hot dos sie ihre hehmathe ferlossen hen un noch der Province fon Pennsilfani komme sin. Zu seller zeit war en kloss Deitsche wu schun aweil in Fildelfy g'wohnt hen, gut bekannt beim nahme fon Neuhaenner, wu gedient hen ols agents for g'wisse firma, fon der foerdeste Quakers in Fildelfy sin noch Deitschlond un der Schweitz gange, un hen ihre londsleit ferbloudert ihre hehmathe zu verlosse un noch Pennsilfani zu geh. Fiel leit in gute umstaende derbehm sin ferbloudert worre noch Amerika zu geh. Falsche b'richte sin g'macht worre—lond is abgebotte worre youscht for's drufsettle—en klehne sum hot gechargt selle werre for uf em schiff ruewer zu komme —un alle fersprechnung sin g'macht worre fon dene deiflische agents die unschuldige zu ferfuehre. Fon der schrecke un suffering in seller sechs oder acht woche uf'm schiff weller mer mix sawge, 'sis so schlimm genung wann mer alleweil noch drahdentk. Der zustand fon dene emigrants wu sie ahkomme sin war orrig schrecklich. Die maester fon der schiff hen sie so hort kalte, hen ihr baggage geplundert un wu sie ruewer komme sin warre sie ewe in der haend fon dene Quaker merchants un die hen die ganz load fon lewendiche menseche gakawft for en speculation —for sell war ihr object wu sie ihre agents naus g'schickt hen—un maenner, weier, un kinner sin uf seller weg uf auction ferkauft worre for en g'wisse zahl yohr zum hoechste un beste bieter. 'Swar weise schlakferei un die wu connect ware mit hen gezaehlt dos es besser bezahlt wie nejer schlakferei. Mer hen kerzlich dehl fon der records unnersucht, un die hen uns meh licht gewu uf der subject fon 'Deitsche emigration, un pruft ganz deitlich dos for yohre long die deiflisch bissnis angecarried is worre. Des statment weist net orrig gut for Pennsilfani un sei history, sell is wohr—awer die leit im ganze oder's goverment ware net ganz zu blahme for die acts fon seller wu druf insit hen uf's "pund fleesch."

Die leit wu so abg'schafft sin worre sin Redemptioners g'heese worre. Sie sin fon kommen an zehe pund ferkauft worre for en dienst fon drei bis fuef yohr; un schier alsfort hen sie die ganz zeit ehrlich ausge dient, un fiel derfon sin nochderhond mit hort schaffes un spares reich worre un hen importente stelle in der Sthate un im goverment kohwe.

In spaetere zeite, sag fon 1753 bis 1756, hen die Deitsche orrig zug'nomme un hen en groszer power kot in der politics; 'sis fiel fon'ne g'sawt worre in der zeitinge wu gedruckt worresin, un zu sellere zeit ware sie in partiker ehng mit der Quakers wu sellemol in der Semnly g'ruht hen. Fon seller zeit fort, wann schun net so fiel komme sin, hen schier all die Dietsche wu ruewer komme sin noch Amerika sich in Pennsilfani g'settelt.

En schreiwes in der Franklin library, in Fildelfy, dos sie sawge fon ehm Samuel Wharton g'schriew is worre in 1755, hot fiel facts drin dos es derwerth is dos mer do mentioned, weil's ihrer eiflusz weist in der Province. Eb's youscht so war kenne mer net sawge. "Die party uf der seit fon der Quakers," sawgt der schreiw, "hen fiel fon ihrem eiflusz uewer die Dietsche krickt dorch die hilf fon Christopher Sauer, der en Deitsche zeiting gedruckt hot in Germantown, schun in 1729, un weil die fiel g'lese is worre fon dene leit hot's en groszer effect kot sie uf die seit fon der Quakers zu bringe un sie gehge der Governier un der Council zu mache. Uf der weg hen sie sie weis g'macht dos sie schklawfe aus ihne mache wette; sie hen fiel fun ihre junge maenner dorch die militz soldawte werre mache, un hen sie nunner glawde mit toxe, &c., un aus dene ursache, sawgt er, sin sie in druppe komme zu stimme un hen olles gebotte wos gelge sie war." "Zu dem mag ich sawge," sawgt der Watson, "dos ich fon der Norris familieh g'hoert hab, das ihre ferfetter in der Semmlly unnerstuetzt sin worre fon der Deitsche un der Quakers. Sei schreibe wehde fon Deitsche ihrer eifluz an der lechshun un die mittel wu er proposit hot for die schreckliche uewel, so wie sie fon seiner komrade ahg'sehne ware, sin laecherlich wann mer z'rueck denkt. Er sawgt dos der grosz success fon der Deitsche ferleicht noch dorch fiel yohr g'fuecht werd! Anstatts os ruhige un hortschaffige leit, wie sie derfor ware, sin sie nau groszmeilich un ferfochte,—un in dehl counties duhne sie's lewe drowe fon dene wu en differente opinion hen, weil sie g'lernt worre sin dos es government un schklaferei ehns sin. All die wu net zu ihrer party kehre hehse sie die "Governier's maenner," un sie mehne sie wehre selwer stark genug for's lond ihrer ehges zu mache! In der daht sie komme do rei in grosze druppe, about 5000 im letzte yohr, un ich kann uet annerst sehne dos newer aweil sie uns law un die sprochen gewew, oder gehne ci mit der Fransoze un duhne's Englisch ganz ferwerfe. Es mus ehm bang sei dos es noch so werd, weil kehns fon'ne g'wehre getrahge hot im letzte krieg, un sie sawge, 'sis all ehns zu ihne weil koenich os es lond krickt, weil ihrer property enihow sicher is. In fact, 'sis plahn dos die Fransoze ihre hoffung hen in derer grosze drupp fon Deitsche. Sie ehsspeckte sie zu locke dorch laenner dos sie ihne in Ohio gewewelle. For des schicke sie fon ihrer Kadolische speis unnich sie for sie newer zu ferblaudere in die Kadolisch kerch. Beseits des sin die Fransoze schun for fiel yohr ols weiter rei komme un hen ihre plans nau so naechst fertich dos sie in zueh dawg's march in unsere hinnere settelments kenne,"—er meht bei dem, beshure, der zustond fom westliche dehl wu uewerontt wor mit Fransoze un Insching, youscht eb der Braddock ahkomme is mit seine druppe in 1775, un fon sellem hen mer noch meh zu sawge weiterah.

Der schreiwere schreibt ihre falsche notions im allgemehne zu ihrer "stoweriche idees un dummheit" wu er mit lerning ferrennerer will "en plan wu als noch forg'schlage werd un die mehnte fon der Deitsche im inland rechte opiniuns zu gewew fon ihre ehgene interesse. Dohere schlagt er for dos getreue protestantische prediger un schulmehter unnerstuetzt werre fon ihne. Dos ihre kinner in der englische sprochen g'lernt werre; es government sett in derer weil ihne's recht nemme zu schtimme for members fon der Semmlly; un un sie des der g'schwinder zu kriege die Englisch sprochen ahzunemne sette sie gezwunge werre ihre benner un anner schreiwes in Englisch mache, un ken annere os wie Englische zeitinge oder kallener sette unnich sie g'schickt werre."

"Im schlusz," sawgt er, "wann ken so mittel gebrucht werre kann ich net sehne wie's ferbuht kann werre dos die Province net in die haend fon der Fransoze fallt. En plan un die Deitsche zu unnerichte, wie ohwe g'meld werd, is g'sthaert worre in 1755, un for en paar yohr ahgecarried worre, awer hot net fiel gebatt. Die Deitsche settler hen lerning net feracht, un hen ihre ehgene prediger un schulmehter mit sich gebrocht, un 'sware wennich unnich ihne dos net lese un schreiwne hen kenne. So fiel fon ihne hen ihre nahme schreiwne kenne os ihre englische nochborre die Quakers. Die difficulty war net sie in der englischer sprochen zu lerne, awer for die englisch kerlich. Selle hen sie net gegliche, un nau wann en hunnert un zwansich yohr ferbei sin hot's noch fiel gehgende wu sie die sehme obheckschuns hen zum 'plan fon 1755.' In derer sach sin die Deitsche settler unschuldig geblahmt worre—sie ware in favor fon lerning—awer sie hen net am ehrste die englisch sprochen gegliche."

Weil mer nan uf dem subject sin for der erster settler, moecht mer youscht so well sawge dos die Pennsilfanisch Deitsche ken nochkimmling sin fon der Hesse wu's British government ruewe gebrocht hot for in der rebellyun fon 1776 zu helpe, wie fiel fon den Nei Englaenner schreiwere schun so oft g'sawgt hen. Sell sthatement is about so mean as es falsch is. All die Deitsche "Mercenaries," wie sie kelse worre sin, wu pressender ware in Pennsilfani, wie der Baron Reidesel sawgt, wu ihrer Kommander war, sin widder all newer g'schickt worre noch ihrem ehgene lond, nochdem die Brittsche Nei Yorrick ufgewewen. Sie sin net doh gebuehwe; weil's Englisch government en baehrge g'macht kotte hot mit'm Landgrave fon Brunswick, der Duke fon Hesse-Kassel, un die klehne Prinze fon Hanau un Waldeck, dos en gewisser preis bezahlt werre mus for alle man os dohd g'macht, ferwund werd oder ferlohre geht. Eb dos der friede g'sproche war, ware die Hessische pressender uf'm weg noch Nei Yorrick, bei der order fom Suprem Executiv Council fon Pennsilfani. En paar sin dorch gange un sin widder noch Amerika komme, nochdem dos sie in Deutschlond ahg'land hen, awer dos die grosz Deitsch population fon Pennsilfani fon dene Hessische "Mercenaries" herstant, kann net gepufft werre, un weist wie dumm fiel fon dene schreiwere sinn.

Pennsilfani hot der lead g'nomme fon all der anner colonies im bauerer, weil schier all die Deitsche sich dort hie g'settelt hen; un der Governier Thomas hot schun so frueh os 1738 g'schriewe, "Die Province war schun for etliche yohr en sylum for die nunnere gedruckte Protestante in der Palatinate un annere dehle fon Deutschlond; un, ich glawb, es kann mit der wohret g'sawt werre, dos ihrer jetziger wochsicher zustand im groeszte dehl is wehde dene fleische leit, —'sis net youscht der bodder, awer die nummer un der fleisz fon der leit wu en successfule colony macht." Die bauerei sache wu sie ferkawft hen, hot zu g'nomme wie die population groeszer is worre. In 1751 sin 86,000 bushel weitze, 129,960 barl flauer, un 90,743 bushel welschkorn ferkawft worre. Alles tsamme war in 1751 uewer eh million dahler werth. Des war annere zeit wu die ganz population net uewer 180,000 war, un fon dene ware schier die haelft Deitsche.

Weil die Deitsche fon Pennsilfani so orrig successful ware un reich worre sin is weil sie fleiszige, sparsome leit un gute bauerer sin. Wann dehl blaetz in Pennsilfani die schoenste sin in Amerika dann sin sie so g'macht wore fon der Deitsche wu d'ruf g'wohnt hen, die hen g'wiss "die wildernis bluche mache wie en rose." Net in der Nei Englund stahte, in Nei Yorrick, oder in der Suedliche stahte werre die bauereie so gut gebaut, oder's lond so gut gekultivaht os wie in dene sections fon Pennsilfani, wu die nochkimmling fon der Deitsche former drah sin; un mer sawe, unne fercht fon widderbatt, dos meh buecher of baueri sache, un meh bauerer zeitunge g'nomme un g'lese werre fon dene so g'nannte "Pennsilfanisch Deitsche" bauerer os fon ehniche annere bauerer erghends sunscht in der Union. Dos unsere Deitsche eiwohner net "g'satisfied sin in huette zu wohne" is ganz g'wis, un wererer in ehns fon der hehmethe fon unserer bauerer geht werd tsechle finne fon lernung un refinement. Ihre bauereie kann mer gut kenne fon der annere wehge ihre gute fense, grosze bahmgaerte, gutte bodde, fruchtbare felder, maschte wisse, un fon der beschte geil, die so gut os ihre mehster wisse wos gut lewe is. Un wann schon ihre scheierer grosz sin, weil ihre wohnheiser ken palaste sin, sett doch niemond denke dos sie nix um ihre heiser gewe. Zu derer zeit is es hort en bauererhos zu finne in der alte Deitsche settlements dos net en doppelter parlor, sitzstub, esstub, kich; un ausklich, mit sechs oder acht schlofstuwe hot. Des is meh der foll in der counties fon Berrieks, Lengeshter, Levnon, Dauphin, un Cumberland, ols wie unnich denne Nei Englund g'setzelte counties fom Nord un West,—die Quaker counties fon Chester un Bucks in Pennsilfani, un wann mer noch Nei Englund geht, do sin sie gar net zu fergleiche mit dene annere.

Fon der Pennsilfanisch Deitschesproch, wu's groeszte dehl fon der leit in Levnon County schwaetze, weller mer net fiel sawge, echssept dos zu derer zeit es ganz wennich hot wu die sproch schwaetze dos net ah englisch lese un schwaetze kenne. Du wu net englisch kenne sin youscht kerzlich fom Fodderlond komme. Weil die Dunker un dehl annere sekte die appartige notions fon ihre forettere noch hen sawge fiel sie duhne ken fortschritt mache—duhne ols noch die alte wehge un notions ufhalte—awer sell is weit fon der wohret. Naechst zu der Scotch-Eirische is hen folk dos so'n groeszer un guter eidruck g'macht hot uf en lond os wi die Deitsche. Sie sin net so schlecht g'lernt un so superstiches in der Deitsche counties fon Pennsilfani os wi sie sin in fiel annere gehende oestlich, westlich, noerdlich, oder suedlich. Weil en alter, hartschafflicher bauer, der liewer uf seiner bauerei bleibt, un seim fieh un frucht nochguckt, un geht net fiel weck fon behm, dann sett mer net sawge dos er dum un geizich is. In dene Deitsche counties find mer net boll ehner os net schon in "der sehtad" war un mer ventere zu sawge dos in der Nei Englund sthate un in Nei Yorrick fiel meh zu finne sin dos noch nie net in der county-stodt ware; un so weit os Boston un Nei Yorrick City abgeht, wu eh bauer in dene sthade war hen zweb Pennsilfanisch Deitsche bauerer ihre ehgene sthad fon Fildely g'sehne.

Wehge der Deitsche opposition zu freischule hen fiel fon dene wu uteseid fon Pennsilfani g'wohnt hen en gross fuss g'macht, awer sie hen die soch nie net ferstanne. CHAPTER IV.

The Lebanon Valley in 1748—Bishop Cammerhoff's Journey from Bethlehem to Shamokin; Thrilling Narrative of his Adventures.

AMONG the Moravian archives, at Bethlehem, is the narrative of Bishop Cammerhoff of his journey to Shamokin, now Sunbury, on the Susquehanna, in the winter of 1748, and for the translation of which we are indebted to Rt. Rev. Edmund de Schweinitz, of the Moravian Church. The narrative is of exceeding interest to us, for it gives us a number of facts relating to this section of country, besides illustrating in a great measure the self-denying devotion of those pious men of the Moravian faith, who, to spread the power of the gospel to all peoples, thought not of personal comforts, home, or of life itself. The lives of these heroic missionaries are in striking contrast with the self-abnegation of the early Quakers, and shed an undying glory not only upon the church to which their labors were given, but upon the provincial history of Pennsylvania, tinging its clouds with a silver halo.

In September of 1742, Count Zinzendorf, Bishop Boehler, Anna Nitschman, and John Martin Mack and wife, with Conrad Weiser, Henry Leinback, and Joshua and David, Indian converts, visited Shamokin with a view of commencing a mission there among the Indians. The town, in consequence of its commanding position, was one of the most important Indian towns in the Province, and was held by the Six Nations, the well-known chief, Shikellimy, residing there as viceroy. At the date of this narrative, it contained upwards of fifty houses, and three hundred inhabitants, one-half Delawares, and the others Senecas and Tudelars. The acquaintance which Zinzendorf made with Shikellimy was carefully followed up by the Moravian Brethren, and ripened into a friendship which ceased only with his death. In the summer of 1747, at the request of Shikellimy, a smithy and house were erected by the Brethren Joseph Powell and John Hagan, and in August Anton Schmidt was appointed blacksmith. J. Martin Mack and wife were also appointed to superintend the mission to be commenced. Zeisberger, Post, Bruce, Rauch, Pyrlaeus, and other Moravian brethren, visited and labored there until the abandonment of the station in October of 1755. In closing his review of the Shamokin mission, Bishop Loskiel writes,—“Their house was frequently injured by the violent storms of thunder and rain prevailing in that district. Sometimes their plantations were destroyed by hail; earthquakes shook their dwellings and filled them with apprehension; but their principal danger arose from the drunkenness of the Indians, whose fury in that state threaten the lives of all who interfere with them. The Brethren were also often alarmed by parties of warriors of different nations, then at war with the Catawbas, passing to and fro with captives. They treated their prisoners with great cruelty, and the Brethren, as white people, were in danger of being murdered in their riots. But their confidence in God remained unshaken; otherwise, witnessing such horrid abominations, and subject to great abuse and insult, their courage might have subsided had not the hand of God in mercy supported them.”

NARRATIVE OF BISHOP CAMMERHOFF, 1748.

“January 6.—Accompanied by Brother Joseph Powell I set out for Shamokin in the afternoon. We proceeded this day as far as Macungy.

“January 7.—Set out for Tulpehocken. The snow lay deep on the ground, and being covered with a hard crust, the horses which carried our supplies could travel but slowly, and as all traces of a road were frequently obliterated, evening had set in when we struck the Ooutalauna. We passed the night at the house of Moses Starr, a Quaker, with whom our itinerant brethren frequently lodged.

“January 8.—Early in the morning arrived at the Schuylkill. We found the river frozen in the middle, but open along the banks. Well knowing that we were making a venture, and yet there being no alternative, we leaped upon the ice with halter in hand, our horses following. When half-way across the stream, Brocken's bay, whom I was leading, broke through the ice, but by a well-directed spring regained its footing.

“Powell and the grey had a similar mishap near the farther bank. My companion, more unfortunate than I had been, got into the river waist deep. After a ride in intensely cold weather, with no other adventures, we entered Heidelberg. Here we met Brother Neubert, who was on his way to Bethlehem from the Swatara. He informed us that one of his members had set out for Shamokin with supplies for the Mission, three weeks ago, but finding the mountain roads obstructed by snow, had returned. In the evening reached Michael Schaeffer's¹ in Tulpehocken.

“January 9th.—Resumed our journey and at nine o'clock arrived at George Loesch's.² Both parents and children gave us a cordial welcome and showed us much kindness. They also pressed us to take a supply of provisions with us for the brethren at Shamokin, but as we were desirous of husbanding our horses' strength, we accepted only of some meat, butter, and dried fruit. We now held a consultation on the choice of a route for the remainder of the journey, and after weighing the advantages and disadvantages offered at this season of the year respecting the mountain road¹ and the Indian path along the Susquehanna, leading from Harris' Ferry to Shamokin, decided to follow the latter. This decision, it is true, imposed upon us additional miles of travel, but we reflected that we would have the river for a guide, and that at the settlements we could bait our horses. Taking leave of our kind friends at noon, we rode on through the snow, repeatedly sang the hymn beginning with the lines,— “Die Wanderschaft in dieser Zeit, Hat manche rauhe Wege.”

² George Loesch, born near Worms in 1699, emigrated with other Palatines in 1710, and settled in Schoharie, N. Y., in 1723 removed to the Tulpehocken and united with the Moravians in 1747. He died at Nazareth in August, 1790.

“Dismounted at Peter Kucher's² in Quittopville, and after loading our horses with oats for their use at Shamokin, rode on five miles to Henry Zander's,³ where we passed the night.

“January 10.—Set out for Harris' Ferry. This proved a long day's journey, through a wild and dreary region of country. We struck the great Swatara at noon,⁴ and after a short halt crossed it in safety on the ice, although the stream was open along its banks.

“We were now seven miles from the ferry, but losing the way we strayed through the woods till sundown, and it was seven o'clock before we reached our place of destination. We found a large company of traders collected at Harris'. One of them had just returned from an attempt to reach the Allegheny country, in which he had been baffled by the increasing depth of the snow after he had penetrated the wilderness to the distance of one hundred miles west of the Susquehanna. On making inquiry about the course of the path that leads to Shamokin, we were told to follow a trail left in the snow by a company of Indians, who had a few days ago come down to the mill above the ferry.

“January 11.—Kept along the river, and after having ridden some distance through the Narrows at the base of the first Blue Mountain, at 9 A.M. came to Chambers' mill, at the mouth of Fishing Creek, seven miles above the Ferry. The people of the house were very courteous; mentioned that Anton Schmidt⁵ had lodged with them several times, and evinced sincere regard for the brethren. The miller's mother stated privately that she had attended worship in our church in Philadelphia, and that as for herself she sympathized with us in our religious views, having experienced what we taught, namely,—that love towards Christ, the Saviour, was the sinner's only source of true happiness in this life. Although our entertainers sought to dissuade us from venturing any farther, assuring us that in the event of a long continued storm the journey would be impracticable, we set out at noon. After a few miles' ride we struck the base of Second Mountain,⁶ at a point where it butts down to the river's edge, which point is in a line with the northern limit of the Proprietaries' land as fixed in the last purchase. We were now in the Indian country. The rain continued to beat down, and as we toiled through the snow in the Narrows, we occasionally lost the Indian trail where it led into the Susquehanna, which had overflowed its banks. Nevertheless, we kept up heart, and felt as though we were being carried along on invisible hands. After having crossed several streams,⁷ the path left the river (which here suddenly bends to the west, and then returns upon itself several miles higher up, after describing an arc of a circle)⁸ and struck up Peter's Mountain, which I am inclined to believe is a continuation of the Thürrstein.⁹ The ridge was high and precipitous, and the ascent tried our loaded horses' strength. Just as we reached the summit the rain poured down in torrents, and in a few minutes we were wet to the skin. Below us the thick clouds were drifting along, the snow lay on the ground to the depth of three feet, and there was no longer any vestige of a trail. Not venturing to make a random descent, we lost some time in searching for tracks, and on discovering what had the appearance of a path, led our horses cautiously down, after crossing several lesser spurs of the mountain, entering the valley in safety. We next forded Powell's Creek, and a mile above the point where we again struck the Susquehanna, came to the house of a trader, Armstrong by name. We were now eighteen miles from Harris' Ferry. Here we resolved to end the day's journey and pass the night, as the rain had not abated and we were completely exhausted. The trader bid us welcome and showed us much kindness during our stay. He was well pleased and was acquainted with Schmidt. Perceiving that I was a minister of the Gospel, he asked me whether I would consent to baptize three of the children of one of his servants, who were lying ill of the smallpox, and then marry a couple. On stating that it was not my custom to perform such acts rashly and for remuneration, he expressed himself satisfied and dropped the subject. In the evening a violent storm blew up from the South, with rain that poured down in torrents, and about midnight there was an appalling crash, and a booming report like the discharge of heavy ordnance,—which told us that the ice in the river had suddenly broken up. Amid the fury of the elements our thoughts reverted to Bethlehem, where our brethren we knew were at this moment keeping the vigils of New Year, according to the old style. Daylight revealed a wonderful change without; for the deep snow that had filled the valleys had vanished as if by magic, and the water-courses were running with ice.

“January 12.—The words of Scripture given us on this day¹⁰ for meditation, ‘Jacob went on his way, and angels met him,’ reassured us, as we thought of the obstacles that we would, in all probability, have to encounter in the next stage of our journey. The trader pressed us hard to stay with him, arguing that we could not possibly continue on our journey, because of the swollen streams and other perils to which we would expose ourselves. Having crossed the creek¹¹ near his house, and after having passed the plantations of several squatters, we suddenly saw the river before us. In a narrow part of its channel¹² the ice was dammed up to the height of ten or twelve feet, and the Narrows, through which the path along the river wound, was overflowed and choked with cakes of ice. It was in vain that we endeavored to effect a passage or keep to the trail. Foiled in this, we were compelled to climb the spurs of the mountain which here abut against the river, until we again struck a wide expanse of lowland. It was a laborious task, but we kept brave hearts, and our poor horses did their part nobly. After toiling on in this way for seven miles we reached the Wicomico, which ran very far above its banks, with an impetuous current, and was full of floating ice. We were told that any attempt to ford it would be at the peril of our lives; but Powell rode in, and as I followed I encouraged him by the words of the text. It was a special providence that we reached the farther bank in safety. A short distance beyond we came to a house where we halted. Our host was acquainted with our brethren at Shamokin, and had assisted them in transporting their supplies. He informed us that on the west bank of the river opposite to his house began the great path to the Allegheny country, estimated to be three or four hundred miles distant.

“The country was populous with Indians, and a trader with a train of twenty or thirty pack-horses could in a very short time dispose of his wares. He also stated that many of the Indians living along the river were removing thither, among the number Andrew Montour.¹ Continuing on our way, we overtook in the woods two Indian squaws, who lived fifty miles above Shamokin, returning from Chambers' Mill. At three in the afternoon we reached Benigna's Creek,² near its outlet, which we found as wide as the Lehigh at Bethlehem. Turning our horses' heads up the creek we commenced the search for a ford which had been described to us, but were unsuccessful, as the large rock which was to be our landmark was covered with water. Darkness fast approaching, we determined to build a fire and encamp under some pines, but to our great joy we descried, on the other side of the creek, a house in the distance. Our shouts soon attracted the attention of the inmates, who upon learning of our situation, volunteered to first bring us over in a canoe, and afterwards to swim the horses over. At first we hesitated to trust ourselves in so frail a boat in the creek filled with running ice, but commending ourselves to the care of the Lord, I crossed first, with all our effects, then Powell followed, swimming the horses. One of the latter at one time was carried by the current under the canoe, and almost upset it. Being now but three miles from Capt. Thomas McKee's, we determined to press on, and took the path over the hills. Losing our way after proceeding about two miles, we turned and attempted to force our way between the ice-barrier and rocks along the river, but were compelled to return to the house near the creek, where we passed the night, thankful that our Saviour had safely brought us one day's journey nearer to Shamokin.

The custom of issuing a collection of daily texts consisting of a selection of verses from the Bible for each day, with appropriate collects taken from the hymn-book, has prevailed in the Moravian Church since the year 1731. They are published in the English, German, French, Dutch, Swedish, Danish, Esquimaux, and Negro-English (used in Surinam, S. A.) languages.

² Proceeding on our journey we came to the long stretch of narrows by the river, and for a short distance worked our way between the rocks and ice, but were compelled to retrace our steps. Thereupon we crossed three steep hills, thence to the low lands, and again to the river. At three in the afternoon reached the Mahanoy Creek,³ up which we rode to a ford described to us by McKee. Powell, heading his horse up stream, crossed in safety, but mine got into a hole and was carried down some distance. He, however, swam with me to land. Night overtook us while still five miles from Shamokin, but as it was moonlight we determined to push on. Reaching the precipitous Spangenberg⁴ we laboriously climbed to the summit, and when searching for a path to descend on the other side too late realized that the warnings we had received from the settlers of the dangers attending the crossing were not exaggerated. In this search we were unsuccessful; so, resolving to trust ourselves to the guidance of the Saviour, we began the perilous descent, leading our horse by their halters. The snow on this side (north), knee-deep to the horse, was covered with a hard crust, which, by the rain, had frozen into glistice, and at the base ran the impetuous Eva Creek,⁵ into which we would have been precipitated had we slipped. Thanks be to God! for His angels watched over us, and we descended in safety. While searching for a ford we found what we thought was a road leading into the creek, but struck a wrong one, and as we subsequently learned, Powell insisted upon making the perilous crossing first, with the gray horse laden, with three bushels of oats and other baggage. When but a short distance from the shore the impetuous current soon swept both several hundred feet down the stream, and all that I could see was the heads of each, and the occasional rearing and plunging of the horse, which threatened to throw both lackwards. Fortunately, Powell succeeded in grasping the branch of a tree that was hanging over the water, and with his left hand controlled his horse. Lifting himself to the trunk, he walked along it to the shore leading his horse. My heart and eyes overflowed with tears of joy when I saw him land, although so exhausted and chilled he could scarcely utter a word. He begged of me not to follow him, but await his return from Shamokin with assistance. I then called to him to be of good heart, and prayed to the Lord to give him strength, as I was apprehensive he might from exhaustion give out and be frozen to death. Meanwhile, Mack,⁶ who had been expecting our arrival for a day or so, had a feeling that we could not be far distant, and, although nine o'clock, left his house and when half a mile from the town met Powell, now almost insensible from exhaustion and the cold. Together they hastened to the town, where my companion was provided with warm clothing and restoratives by his brethren. After Powell disappeared I succeeded in finding a protected spot near the creek for a camp, unloaded my horse and tied him to a tree, and endeavored to make a fire, for I was cold and wet, and my clothes stiff with ice, since swimming the last creek. While thus engaged my horse broke loose, swam the creek, and went in the direction of Shamokin. I was in a fearful frame of mind, thinking he might be met by some of my brethren, who would be terrified lest some accident had befallen me. Fortunately he was not found until three o'clock, when my situation was fully known. After waiting one hour and a half, Mack and Anton Schmidt, who had been informed by Powell of my situation, appeared on the opposite bank, and commenced to construct a raft with which to bring me across. By two o'clock they finished building it, but owing to the wood being green it would only bear the weight of one person, so this attempt to succor me had to be abandoned. In the mean time I had succeeded in making a fire, when, seeing me more comfortable, my brethren returned to Shamokin for some assistance. By five o'clock my heart was gladdened to see Mack, Anton, and James Logan dragging a sled after them upon which was a canoe, which Anton quickly launched and crossed over to me. Hastily collecting my things together I recrossed with him, and finally, escorted by my rescuers, we entered Shamokin at daybreak on Sunday.

³ January 14.—Shikellmy, when informed of my arrival, came to see me, gave me his hand and welcomed me with smiles, and also expressed regret at my fatiguing journey. When he was told that I was T'geritontie's (Spangenberg) younger brother, he greeted me as such without scruple. After leaving me, all his sons⁷ and their children called, and later sundry Delawares and Tudelars. During the day I visited Hagen's⁸ grave, which is in the corner of a field near the Susquehanna. I ascer-

² John Martin Mack, for many years a missionary among the Indians, was born 13th April, 1715, at Leysingen, in Wurtemberg. In 1740 he came to Pennsylvania, and was one of the founders of Bethlehem. In 1745 he and his wife were sent to Shamokin, "the very seat of the Prince of darkness," he states in his autobiography, "where we resided four months, and were in constant danger. There was scarcely a night but we were compelled to leave our hut and hide in the woods, from fear of the drunken savages." In 1747 he again visited the town, where he remained until the arrival of Bishop Cunnerhoff, as noted further on in this narrative. He died on Santa Cruz, W. I., Jan. 9, 1784.

³ Tachnachdoorus, "a spreading oak," alias John Shikellmy, James Logan, named after Secretary Logan, and John Pettry, who bore the name of an Indian trader.

¹ The oldest son of Madame Montour. Zinzendorf thus describes him: "Andrew's cast of countenance is decidedly European, and had not his face been encircled with a broad band of paint, applied with bear's fat, I would certainly have taken him for one. He wore a brown broadcloth coat, a scarlet damasked lappet waistcoat, breeches, over which his shirt hung, a black cordovan neckerchief, decked with silver bugles, shoes and stockings, and a hat. His ears were hung with pendants of brass and other wires plaited together like the handles of a basket. He was very cordial, but on addressing him in French he, to my surprise, replied in English."

² The Mahantango, or Kind Creek, so named by Zinzendorf, after his daughter, Benigna, in September of 1742.

³ Zinzendorf, on his way to Shamokin in September of 1742, named the Mahanoy Leimback's Creek, for Henry Leimback, one of his fellow-travelers.

⁴ Named for Bishop Spangenberg. Zinzendorf crossed in 1742, and states, "A precipitous hill, such as I scarce ever saw. Anna (Nitchuan), who is the most courageous of our number, and a heroine, led in the descent."

taised that our Brethren are on intimate terms with Shikellimy and his family; that the Indians begin to understand and appreciate our motives in coming to live among them, and say that we are different from other white people, and contrary to their reluctance and prejudice to teach whites their language, cheerfully instruct us. Bro. Mack and his wife¹ are especially held in high esteem, as they speak their language and are always ready to assist in cases of sickness. Our smith is kept constantly employed, many Indians coming from a great distance.

"Recently an Indian from Wyoming came to our house, when he was invited to enter and warm himself by the fire. After a long silence he turned to Br. Mack and said, 'I have been in Shamokin nearly two days and have visited in all the houses, yet no one has offered me anything to eat. Will not the white squaw give me something to eat, for I am suffering?' Thereupon she gave him some bread and meat, for which he expressed hearty thanks and departed.

"Last August turnips were planted in our lot, and the yield was large. A quantity was distributed among our friends, and Shikellimy, who is always delighted with a present of some, in return treats us to venison.

"Logan's wife, who is a Mohican and a relative of Abraham's,² was much impressed with the visit of Mack and Nathaniel³ last autumn. While away on the annual hunt last November, her little daughter died, being, as she informed us, bewitched by a Delaware sorcerer. She immediately returned home with the body, and asked for nails and wood to make a coffin, which we gave her. To Br. Mack she related that the child, shortly before it died, said to her, 'Mother, I will soon die; greet the white people, and tell them that I never stole turnips; they must not suspect me of such a theft, for when I want-d any, I asked for them.' When the mother asked whether her daughter would go to our God, Br. Mack replied in the affirmative, and spoke of the love of God to children. Our Brethren attended the funeral. The mother showed them the corpse in the coffin with its presents, viz.: a blanket, several pairs of moccasins, buckskin for new ones, needle and thread, a kettle, two hatchets, and flint, steel and tinder; so that on its arrival in the new country it could go at once to housekeeping. Besides, it was beautifully painted, and had a supply of bear's meat, Indian corn and a calabash. The family thought it cruel in us not to have supplied Bro. Hagen with all these things when he was buried, but we explained to them, that as soon as we came to the Saviour, he would supply us with all we needed. The mother sat by the grave, and wept and sang 'Wake up, my child, arise and eat; for five days ye have tasted no food—this my child was killed by the sorcerer.' In these lamentations she was joined by another squaw. After the funeral she presented Br. Mack with a quart tin, saying, 'This belonged to my daughter—accept it in remembrance of her.' It is an Indian custom, that when one dies, not all the effects are buried, but some are restored for distribution among friends.

"During the afternoon, with Bro. Mack, we visited Shikellimy and his family. Last autumn many of his family died, viz.: his wife, his oldest son's wife and five children, three of Logan's children, and his son-in-law and some of his children.

"January 15.—This morning I sent for Shikellimy, and requested him to assemble his council in our house, as I had something to communicate to them. We decided upon the afternoon for the interview, after which he sat awhile with us and smoked by the hearth. The cap I was wearing seemed to 'strike his fancy,' and he asked whether we made such things in Bethlehem. 'Yes,' I replied, 'and if you visit Bethlehem in the spring, I will present you with one.' I then invited him to dinner, which he accepted, deeming it a great honor. After dinner we sat around the fire, and for nearly an hour he instructed me in the Maqua tongue. Later he left to announce his councilors, and we conferred with Bro. Powell, who is now to take charge of the Shamokin Economy. The council met, viz.: Shikellimy and his two sons, with Logan's wife as interpreter. His oldest son is sick, and the other Iroquois councilors are absent on the hunt. Bro. Mack translated my words into Mohican to Logan's wife, she then into Shawanese to her husband, and he into Ogeida for his father. Shikellimy arose and said, 'Do not take it amiss, my brother, that I speak first. You said that you wished to tell me and my brethren some words; but first I must tell you something. My brother, do not take it amiss, that the smith at Shamokin up to this time, has not had more meat to eat. I have been sick, and so have my sons and their children, and many of them have died. We have been mourning and unable to go on the hunt, but when we recover, we will go on the hunt, and the smith and his wife shall have plenty to eat.'

"Cammerhoff.—'Shikellimy my brother! T'giritontie, you and my brother has heard of your sickness, and he sympathizes with you. We rejoice to see that you are convalescent, and T'giritontie wishes you to keep up a good heart. [These remarks appeared to please them all very much.] Shikellimy, my brother! my brother, the smith, and his brethren in Shamokin are not dissatisfied; they have had as much meat as was necessary. T'giritontie and his brethren are also not dissatisfied, but rejoice of your kindness towards them.'

"Shikellimy.—'So far the smith has only taken deer-skins compensation for his work. Cannot he also take raccoon, fox, wild cat, and other-skins at the market price? Some of us are old and can no more follow the deer. T'giritontie and his brethren could as well take other skins and sell them, and in this way the smith will be paid for all his work.'

"Cammerhoff.—'Shikellimy my brother! T'giritontie and his brethren are no traders, nor do they traffic in furs. This is not their business, and hence the smith cannot take all kinds of skins. The deer-skins T'giritontie uses to make breeches, caps, gloves, &c., for his brethren. But as we love you, the smith may sometimes take other, raccoon, and fox-skins when they are good. We have also instructed the smith not to deliver any work until it is paid for, else he will be cheated.'

"Shikellimy.—'My brother! I always have told the smith not to trust every Indian, but as soon as he mended a gun or put it in order to keep it until it is paid for. Why did he trust? I knew he would be deceived.' [He aimed this cut at the Delawares, whom the Iroquois despised.—Cammerhoff.]

"Cammerhoff.—'Shikellimy, my brother! The smith loves the Indians, and hence he trusted them. When Indians come to him from 'out of the woods' with their broken guns he dislikes to send them back to get skins, for they would lose several days of the hunt, hence, also, he trusted them. But he finds that he is being cheated, and is unwilling to trust any more.'

"Shikellimy.—'Cannot the smith also take bear- and elk-skins for his work?'

"Cammerhoff.—'He can take as many bear-skins as are brought, for he and his brethren need them to sleep on. But it is best that he be paid to deer-skins, for T'giritontie and his people are no traders.'

"Shikellimy.—'Now, my brethren, I have said all I had to say, and I thank you for your answers. Now you can speak.'

"Cammerhoff.—'T'giritontie and all his brethren send greetings to Brother Shikellimy and his brethren! T'giritontie said, 'Shikellimy, my brother, I send to you this my younger brother, to greet you and to state my joy that you are again well, for I love you tenderly. Johanan [Zinzendorf], my brother, who lives over the great water, and whom you know, for you accompanied him to Wyoming,' has sent his younger brother over the great water to greet you and your brethren, and tell them he loves you. I have sent the smith here to aid and work for you, and I rejoice that you all love him. Continue to do so. I need my Brother Mack and his wife at Bethlehem, but I have sent Brother Powell to live with the smith and to help him. I love him and do you also love him.'

"'Shikellimy my brother! You said that you would give the smith and his brethren more land to plant corn, pumpkins and turnips. Do as you said, so that they may begin to split rails and fence it in before planting time.'

"'Shikellimy my brother! It would delight us to have you visit Bethlehem. If you are accompanied by your son James and his Mohican wife, and your other sons, they will be heartily welcomed.'

"'I have said all that I had to say, and thank you for your attention. You have leave to reply if you have anything to say.'

"Shikellimy.—'Great Brother T'giritontie and his brethren, and tell them that as soon as the weather becomes warmer, so that I can sleep in the woods, I will come to Bethlehem.'

"At the close of the interview I distributed the following presents, ¹ Shikellimy accompanied Zinzendorf to the Wyoming Valley in 1742.

¹ On 14th September, 1742, Mack married Jeannette Ran. Her knowledge of the Mohawk, which she had acquired in the home of her girlhood, and of the Delaware, rendered her an efficient assistant in the mission. She died at Gadenhütten, 15 December, 1749.

² Mohican Abraham, or Captain Abraham, or Abraham Shabash, one of the first Moravian converts from the Indians; first of Schemoneko, and then of Gadenhütten. Deceased in Wyoming in December of 1762.

³ Mack, between 1746 and 1755, annually visited the Indian villages on the Susquehanna and the West Branch.

viz.: to Shikellimy, a pair of fine red ———; to his three sons, each a kaffe; and to the Mohican woman, a gay-colored handkerchief. We then accompanied Shikellimy, who pointed out to us the land he proposed to give to the smith. I stated that Brother Pow-ll would make the rails, and when finished they should direct him where to run the fence.

"After our return to the house we held a conference and resolved,—
"First, That the smith decline to trust.

"Second, That we entertain no Indians, as it makes Shikellimy distrustful. There are special houses provided for visiting Indians in the town, and for us to lodge there would be a mark of great confidence.

"Third, The smith must decline to trust a trader.

"Fourth, No Indian must be trusted on a trader's account, lest the Indians think we will trust a trader sooner than them.

"Fifth, Our brethren must not interfere with, or pass judgment in case of any dispute between Indians and traders, nor interfere with their bargains.

"Sixth, We must impress upon the Indians that we are not traders.
"Seventh, That we must not lead them into temptation by allowing many things to be about the shop.

"Eighth, Traders shall not be entertained—send them all to Shikellimy. The only exception is Capt. McKee.

"Ninth, Always be punctiliously and scrupulously truthful to the Indians,—never say that we have nothing, when we have.

"Tenth, Owing to our circumstances, we cannot be as hospitable to the Indians here as at Bethlehem; but always be self-denying 'to the last crust,' to the needy, suffering, and sick.

"Eleventh, Our Brethren are to visit the Indians frequently in their huts, and no partiality must be shown to Iroquois, Delaware, or Tidelara.

"Twelfth, Strive to secure the good-will of Shikellimy and his family, and invite them frequently to dinner.

"Thirteenth, No more land is to be accepted of the Indians than is absolutely necessary for our wants, and is to be farmed in the Indian manner. Only corn, beans, potatoes, and turnips are to be raised.

"At the conclusion of our conference, we celebrated the Holy Communion, all six of us being present.

"January 16.—After taking leave of Shikellimy and our brethren, at seven o'clock I set out on my return journey, accompanied by Bro. Mack and his wife. Crossed the Spangenberg in safety, and struck the trail which leads over the three high ridges between the Spangenberg and the Thürstein.

"Towards evening we crossed Benigna's Creek, and thence to the Double Eagle,¹ and encamped at a spring two miles beyond. As it rained hard until midnight, we had but little sleep.

"January 17 —By three o'clock (A. M.) the weather cleared, and the moon shined brightly, we continued on our way. At dawn of day, as we were passing through Anna's Valley,² a sudden storm of thunder and lightning overtook us, and for one hour it rained in torrents. This was succeeded by so dense a fog, that we could scarcely see a few feet in front of our horses. At noon we reached the Thürstein, where we found deep snow. The ascent was perilous as well as fatiguing, owing to the gill-ice. By two o'clock we had crossed the mountain, and struck the Swatara;³ thence through Anton's Wilderness,⁴ to the Kittochtingy Hills by sun down⁵ Being but twelve miles from Loesch's, we determined to push on, and by ten o'clock arrived at his house, where, although unexpected, we were given a hearty welcome.

"January 19 —To-day we safely reached Bethlehem, by the way of Heidelberg and Mexatawoy.⁶

² Lyken's Valley, Dauphin County, named for Anna Nitschman, who accompanied Zinzendorf to Shamokin in 1742.

³ Probably in Pine Grove township, Schuylkill County.

⁴ Noted on Lewis Evans' map of 1749, and named for Anton Seyfert, one of the nine colonists whom Bishop Spangenberg led to Georgia in 1735.

⁵ The Blue Mountains, or "Endless Hills."

⁶ The name of a township in Berks County, in which Zinzendorf preached in 1742. Cammerhoff and party probably lodged at Levans, which Scull's Map locates on the road from Easton to Reading, about six miles west of Mertztown.

CHAPTER V.

The French and Indian War—Braddock's Expedition—Murders by the Indians in Lebanon County—The Stockades or Forts—The Soldiers under Lebanon in that Struggle.

ALTHOUGH open hostilities were declared between Great Britain and France in 1744, a decade of years had passed ere the machinations of the latter powers succeeded in alienating the Indians from the British interest. Much has been said and written concerning the causes which led to the severing of this bond of friendship between the government of Pennsylvania on the one hand, and the red savage of the forest on the other, who had promised that peace should remain "as long as the sun shines and the waters run." As our readers will have learned, there was nothing manly in the aborigine. He was treacherous and perfidious, false and deceitful, and the history of the Indian race within the past two hundred years is evidence of these facts. It was no easy task for the French who were determined to possess themselves of this entire region of country, at least all west of the Alleghenies, by a few trivial presents and many promises to call to their aid the thieving Shawanese, the murderous Delaware, and the arrogant and brutal Six Nations. Treaties were only made to be broken; they were more occasions for junketing than aught else, and as will be seen in the history of our State, arson and murder were committed by participants of those treaties on their way to their distant homes. So the old story that they became dissatisfied on account of their lands, and thus went over to the French interest, is far from the truth. Of course every old chief or sachem who did not happen to get to every treaty, receive a share in the "gew-gaws" which were part of the purchase—"money," or the white man's rum so freely circulated at those times, was not in a very good humor, and was "for war."

Naturally blood-thirsty, the Indian gladly accepted the invitation of the French to aid them in "driving the English into the Atlantic," and to the authorities of that nation who enlisted in their ranks the savage red man with his scalping-knife and tomahawk, must we lay the inhuman atrocities which for a period of ten years darken the pages of our provincial history.

The occupancy of the Ohio country by the French, the erection of Fort Duquesne and other fortifications in the Allegheny country, convinced the English government that the only alternative was to oppose force by force. Several of the royal regiments were sent to Virginia, and the American colonies and provinces were ordered to supply the troops on their arrival with provisions, and to furnish all necessaries for the soldiers landed or raised in America. The Assembly of Pennsylvania was slow to act in aid of the contemplated expeditions, but, notwithstanding, the home government was taking every measure to oppose the growing power of the French.

On the 14th of January, 1755, Maj.-Gen. Edward

Braddock, Sir John St. Clair, adjutant-general, and the regiments of Dunbar and Halkett sailed from Cork, and they arrived early in March at Alexandria, in Virginia, whence they marched to Fredericktown, in Maryland. The place of debarkation was selected with that ignorance and want of judgment which distinguished the British ministry. The country could furnish neither provisions nor carriages for the army; while Pennsylvania, rich in grain and well stocked with wagons, could readily supply food and the means to transport the army to any point. The result of the expedition was disastrous in the extreme. No European army in America had ever met with such an overwhelming defeat, and fear and consternation among the inhabitants ensued.

It has been repeatedly charged, and that without reply heretofore, that the delay of Braddock, leading possibly to his defeat and the disasters consequent, were owing to the determination of the German farmers of Pennsylvania, who refused to supply teams and forage for his army, until threatened by having the hussars of his force sent upon them, and by the earnest appeals of Benjamin Franklin when they were brought to terms, and furnished all that was required of them. We are compelled to give these assertions an emphatic denial.

Gen. Braddock was arrogant in his demands, and insulting in much of his intercourse with the men of the different provinces. He asked certain aid from the Province of Pennsylvania, but that body of Quakers who formed the Assembly were deaf to all entreaties for a proper defense of even their own people, much less to the demands of Gen. Braddock. It was not to be expected that at the call of the arrogant Braddock every German farmer of Pennsylvania would rush with his horses, teams, and forage to the headquarters of the British army. Had Braddock made his rendezvous at Carlisle, instead of Frederick, Md., he would have been nearer supplies both of food and forage, but, located as it was, with the circumstances heretofore referred to, it ought not to be expected the people would promptly answer his bidding. Suppose this should be the case to-day, with better roads and greater facilities of communication, how few would respond. Braddock went the wrong way about it. As soon as Franklin was appointed commissary-general of the Province, and there was a responsible head, with prospect of recompense for time and labor, no difficulty was encountered. The most ridiculous part of these charges is that they were hurled at the German settlers, not at the rich Quaker farmers of Chester, Philadelphia, and Bucks, who had a surplus of all that was required; but no, it was the poor Germans on the frontiers, who were struggling for existence, and who preferred, and whose duty it was, to protect themselves, their wives and little ones, and to attend to their harvests. No more infamous charges were ever laid at the door of any class of people; and writers in the interest of Quaker history, to palliate or hide the disgraceful conduct of their members of the Provincial Assembly, throw the responsibility where it does not belong. This assertion of sensational historians is as impudent as it is false. The truth of history demands this duty at our hands, to repel the insinuations, and place upon the record the facts as they are. Our ancestors, although of German and Swiss parentage and birth, were loyal to the crown of Great Britain in that struggle for supremacy upon the American continent, and true to the Province in which they lived. They deserve the grateful esteem of those who occupy their lands, and their memory should be spared the blunders of careless historians, or the vilification of natural-born traducers.

Following the defeat of Gen. Braddock's army, the apprehensions of those who feared a general Indian war were soon realized. Governor Morris in his message of the 24th July following, uses this language: "This unfortunate and unexpected change in our affairs deeply affects every one of his majesty's colonies, but none of them in so sensible a manner as this Province, which having no militia is thereby left exposed to the cruel incursions of the French and barbarous Indians, who delight in shedding human blood, and who make no distinction as to age or sex, as to those that are armed against them, or such as they can surprise in their peaceful habitations,—all are alike the objects of their cruelty, slaughtering the tender infant and frightened mother with equal joy and fierceness. To such enemies, spurred by the native cruelty of their tempers, encouraged by their late success, and having now no army to fear, are the inhabitants of this Province exposed, and by such must we now expect to be overrun if we do not immediately prepare for our own defence; nor ought we to content ourselves with this, but resolve to drive to and confine the French to their own just limits."

It is not to be wondered at that there was much excitement upon the frontiers. The news of the brutal massacres of the ruthless savages west of the Susquehanna in the autumn of 1755, was soon followed by the alarming information that the Indians had crossed that river and had killed many people from Thomas McKee's down to Hunter's mills. Expresses were sent through all the frontiers, arousing the people, warning them of their danger, and bidding them arm for their defense. A letter of Conrad Weiser, at this juncture, gives a succinct account of affairs, which we present in full. It is dated at "Reading, Oct. 27, 1755," to Governor Morris, and reads:

"Since the date of my last letter, which I sent by express by Sammy Weiser, dated last Sunday evening, 5 o'clock, and about 11 o'clock the same night I sent a letter to Mr. Read, in this town, who forwarded it to your honor by the same opportunity.

"The following account of what has happened since I thought it was proper to lay before your Honor, to wit: After I received the news that Paxtang people, above Hunter's mills, had been murdered, I immediately sent my servants to alarm the neighborhood. The people came to my house by the break of day. I informed them of the melancholy news, and how I came by it, etc. They unanimously agreed to stand by one another and march to meet the enemy if I would go with them. I told them that I would not only myself accompany them, but my sons and servants should also go. They put themselves under my direction. I gave them orders to go home and fetch their arms, whether guns, swords, pitchforks, axes, or whatever might be of use against the enemy, and to bring with them three days provision in their knapsacks, and to meet at Benjamin Spycer's, at three of the clock that afternoon, about six miles above my house, in Tulpehocken township, where I had sent word for Tulpehocken people also to meet.

"I immediately mounted my horse and went up to Benjamin Spycer's, where I found about one hundred persons who had met before I came there, and after I had informed them of the intelligence that I had promised to go with them as a common soldier, and be commanded by such officers and leading men, whatever they might call them, as they should choose, they unanimously agreed to join the Heidelberg people, and accordingly they went home to fetch their arms, and provisions for three days, and came again at 3 o'clock. All this was punctually performed, and about two hundred were at Benjamin Spycer's by two o'clock.

"I made the necessary disposition, and the people were divided into companies of thirty men in each company, and they chose their own officers, that is, a captain over each company, and three inferior officers under each, to take care of ten men, and lead them on, or fire, as the captain should direct.

"I sent privately for Mr. Kurtz, the Lutheran minister, who lived about one mile off, who came and gave an exhortation to the men, and made a prayer suitable to the time. Then we marched towards Susquehanna, having first sent about fifty men to Tolheo, in order to possess themselves of the gaps or narrows of Sackatoga, where he expected the enemy would come through. With those fifty I sent a letter to Mr. Parsons, who happened to be at his plantation.

"We marched about ten miles that evening. My company had now increased to upwards of three hundred men, mostly well armed, though about twenty men had nothing but axes and pitchforks. All unanimously agreed to die together, and engage the enemy wherever they should meet them; never to inquire the number, but fight them, and so obstruct their way of marching further into the uninhabited part till others of our brethren come up and do the same, and so save the lives of our wives and our children.

"The night we made the first halt, the powder and lead was brought up from Reading (I had sent for it early in the morning), and I ordered it to the care of the officers, and to divide it among those that wanted it the most.

"On the 28th, by daybreak, we marched, our company increasing all along. We arrived at Adam Reed's, Esq., in Hanover township, Lancaster County, at about ten o'clock, there we stopped and rested till the rest came up. Mr. Reed had just received intelligence from Susquehanna by express, which was as follows, to wit: That Justice Foster, Capt. McKee, John Harris, and others, to the number of forty-five, went up to Shamokin to bury the dead bodies of those that had been killed by the enemy on John Penn's Creek, and coming up to George Gabriel's, about five miles this side Shamokin, and on the west of Susquehanna, they heard that the dead bodies had been buried already, and so they went along to Shamokin, where they arrived last Friday evening and were seemingly well received, but found a great number of strange Indians, the Delaware, all painted black, which gave suspicion; and Thomas McKee told his companions that he did not like them, and the next morning—that is, last Saturday—they got up early, in order to go back; but they did not see any of the strangers. They were gone before them. Andrew Montour was there, painted as the rest; he advised our people not to go the same road they came, but to keep on this side the Susquehanna, and go the old road; but when they came to the parting of the roads a majority was for going the highest and best road, and so crossed Susquehanna contrary to Andrew Montour's counsel, in order to go down on the west side of the river as far as Mahabang; when they came to John Penn's Creek, in going down the bank, they were fired upon from this side by the Indians that had waylaid them: some dropped down dead; the rest fled and made towards Susquehanna and came to this side, and so home, as well as they could. Twenty-six of them were missing and not heard of as yet, last Monday.

"Upon this we had a consultation, and as we did not come up to serve as guards to the Paxtang people, but to fight the enemy, if they were come so far, as we first heard, we thought best to return and take care of our own townships.

"After I had given the necessary caution to the people to hold themselves in readiness, as the enemy was certainly in the country, to keep their arms in good order, and so on, and then discharged them, and we marched back, with the approbation of Mr. Reed. By the way we were alarmed by a report that five hundred Indians had come over the mountain at Tolheo to this side, and had already killed a number of people. We stopped and sent a few men to discover the enemy, but, on their return, proved to be a false alarm, occasioned by that company that I had sent that way the day before, whose guns getting wet, they fired them off, which was the cause of alarm; this not only had alarmed the company, but whole townships through which they marched. In going back I met messengers from other townships about Conestoga, who came for intelligence, and to ask me where their assistance was necessary, promising that they would come to the place where I should direct.

"I met also at Tulpehocken, above one hundred men well armed, as to fire-arms, ready to follow me; so that there were in the whole, about five hundred men in arms that day, all marching up towards Susquehanna. I and Mr. Adam Reed counted those that were with me, we found them three hundred and twenty.

"I cannot send any further account, being uncommonly fatigued. I should not forget, however, to inform your Honor that Mr. Reed has engaged to keep proper persons riding between his house and Susquehanna, and if anything material shall occur, he will send me tidings to Heidelberg or to Reading, which I shall take care to despatch to you. I find that great care has been taken at Reading to get the people together, and near two hundred were here yesterday morning; but upon hearing that the people attending me were discharged, the people from the country went off without consulting what should be done for the future, through the indiscretion of a person who was with them, and wanted to go home; and near the town they met a large company coming up, and gave such accounts as occasioned their turning back. I think most of the inhabitants would do their duty, but without some military regulations, we shall never be able to defend the Province.

"I am sure we are in great danger, and by an enemy that can travel as Indians, we may be surprised when it would be impossible to collect any number of men together to defend themselves, and then the country would be laid waste. I am quite tired, and must say no more than that."

Every day's news added to the alarm and consternation of the inhabitants. Conrad Weiser, who had orders from the Governor, sent an express to William Parsons, who was then within the borders of Lebanon County, to take command of about one hundred men. One-half of them had no ammunition, but Parsons ordered them to go over the mountain and "erect a breastwork at the upper gap of the Swatara," and that those who had no powder or lead should take axes. On the 31st of October Parsons writes to the Rev. John Nicholas Kurtz as follows:

"This morning, very early, between four and five o'clock, Adam Reed, an inhabitant over the first mountain, about six miles from Lawrence Houtz, who lives on this side of the mountain, came to my house, and declared, that yesterday, between 11 and 12 o'clock, he heard three guns fired towards the plantation of his neighbor, Henry Hartman, which made him suspect that something more than ordinary had happened there. Whereupon he took his gun and went over to Hartman's house, being about a quarter of a mile off, and found him lying dead upon his face; his head was scalped; but saw no body else. He thereupon made the best of his way through the woods to the inhabitants on this side of the mountain, to inform them of what had happened.

"He further informs me, that he had been to Adam Reed's, Esq., and related the whole of the affair to him, and that Reed is raising men to go over the mountain in quest of the murderers."

The Adam Reed referred to was a very prominent man at this period on the frontiers. His residence was on the Swatara within the limits of Lebanon County. The following day Parsons wrote to Squire Reed:

"I wrote you yesterday, that I intended to be with you at the unhappy place, where Henry Hartman was murdered; but when I got to the top of the mountain, I met some men, who said they had seen two men lying dead and scalped, in the Shamokin road, about two or three miles from the place where we were; wherefore, we altered our course, being twenty-six in number, and went to the place, and found the two men lying dead, about three hundred yards from each other, and all the skin scalped off their heads.

"We got a grubbing hoe and a spade, and dug a grave as well as we could, the ground being very stony, and buried them both in one grave, without taking off their clothes or examining at all their wounds; only we saw that a bullet had gone through the leg of one of them. I thought it best to bury them, to prevent their bodies from being torn to pieces by wild beasts. One of the men had a daughter with him that is yet missing; and the other one had a wife, and three or four children, that are also missing.

"I shall be obliged to return home in a day or two, but hope to see you sometime about Christmas, and to find my unhappy countrymen somewhat relieved from this distressed condition. I can't help thinking that it would be well for a good number of the inhabitants to go next Monday, and help to bring the poor people's grain and corn to this side the mountain—it will help to maintain them, which we must do, if they can't maintain themselves; and 'tis very likely those barbarous Indians will set fire to, and burn all, if it be not soon secured."

Parsons' suggestion was carried out, and the force of Squire Reed's, with horses and teams, crossed over the mountain and brought from thence to the temporary places of refuge such articles as it was possible to remove belonging to the inhabitants, all of whom had fled from their homes.

The murder of the Six family on the Berks frontier, only a few miles from Bethel, added to the consternation. Capt. Morgan's deposition concerning this affair is worth preserving in this connection:

"That on Sunday, the 16th November inst (1755), at about five o'clock P. M., he, the deponent, Mr. Philip Weiser and Mr. Peter Weiser, set out from Heidelberg towards Dietrich Six's, to get intelligence of the mischief done at Tolheo, or thereabouts, and to get a number of men to join them to go and seek for the persons who were scalped by the Indians, and to help in the best manner they could the poor distressed inhabitants. That about nine miles from Mr. Weiser's, they found a girl about six years old scalped, but yet alive, and a vast number of people there; but he knows not at whose house it was, nor the name of the child. That at the request of the people there Mr. Weiser's son and deponent went back to Mr. Weiser's for powder and lead. That at or about two o'clock yesterday morning, they were alarmed at Mr. Weiser's with an account that the Indians had beset George Dollinger's house, and his family were fled; whereupon Philip Weiser, the deponent, and a person whose name deponent does not know, set off immediately, and at Christopher Weiser's overtook a large company, consisting of about one hundred men, and with them proceeded to George Dollinger's and surrounded his house, where they found a deal of damage done, and in the garden, a child about eight years old, daughter of one Cola, lying dead and scalped, which they buried.

"That the whole company went on to a plantation of Abraham Snieder, and found in a corn-field the wife of Cola, and a child about eight or nine years old, both dead and scalped, and in the house they found another child of the said Cola's, about ten years old, dead and scalped; but the deponent knows not of what sex either of these two children was. That while they were preparing the grave, they were alarmed by the firing of a gun, and flying to their arms, they went (a few staying to take care of the dead) to the place from whence the sound came, and about half a mile from the place they came from, they met the company, one of whom had indiscreetly discharged his musket, and then went back to bury the dead; on their return they found the scalp of a white person. That having buried the woman and children, they went to Thomas Bower's, in whose house they found a dead man scalped, whose name the deponent thinks was Phillip, by trade a shoemaker, but knows no more of him.

"That the company increased fast, and were now about one hundred and thirty men, who marched on the Shanokin road to near Dietrich Six's; about half a mile from whose house they found Casper Spring dead and scalped, and having buried him, they marched about one hundred rods and found one Beslinger dead and scalped—they buried him. That at the same distance from Beslinger's they found an Indian man dead and scalped, which Indian, it was generally believed, was a Delaware. Mr. Frederick Weiser scalped him the day before.

"That twenty of their body, who had gone a little out of the road, about two miles from Dietrich Six's, found (as the deponent and the rest of the company were informed, and as he believes without any doubt) a child of Jacob Wolf—he cannot say whether a boy or a girl—who was scalped. Its age the deponent does not know, but the father carried it in his arms to be buried, as they were informed. That the deponent was informed by Mr. Frederick Weiser that a company, with whom he had been the day before, had buried John Leibberger and Rudolph Candel, whom they found scalped.

"That the deponent and company finding no more scalped or wounded they returned, being then, by the continual arrival of fresh persons, about three hundred men, to George Dollinger's. That Casper Spring's brains were beat out, had two cuts in his breast, was shot in the back, and otherwise cruelly used, which regard to decency forbids mentioning, and that Beslinger's brains were beat out, his mouth much mangled, one of his eyes cut out, and one of his ears gashed, and had two knives lying on his breast. That the whole country thereabout desert their habitations and send away all their household goods. The horses and cattle are in the corn-fields and everything in the utmost disorder, and the people quite despair. And further, that he heard of much mischief done by burning houses and barns, but not having been where it was reported to have been done, he chooses not to have any particulars thereof inserted in this deposition."

With such terrible atrocities before their eyes it to be wondered at that the inhabitants were becoming incensed at the conduct of the Assembly? Peter Spyccker, the day after the murder of the Six family, writes to Conrad Weiser,—

"We are, at present, in imminent danger to lose our lives or estates; pray, therefore, for help, or else whole Talpehocken will be laid waste by the Indians, in a very short time—all the buildings will be burned, the people scalped. Do, therefore, lose no time to get us assistance. The Assembly may learn from this work, what kind and fine friends the Indians are!! We hope members of the Assembly will get their eyes opened, and manifest tender hearts towards us; and the Governor the same. They are, it is hoped, true subjects to our king George II., of Great Britain, or are they willing to deliver us into the hands of these cruel and merciless creatures?"

The savages now fully bent upon the destruction of the frontier settlements, and meeting with little or no resistance owing to the want of arms and ammunition by the frontiersmen, had full sway. During the months of November and the first part of December they had destroyed over one hundred houses and murdered over one hundred and fifty persons on the borders of Lancaster and Berks Counties. The Provincial Secretary writes,—

"All the frontier country which extends from the river Potomack to the river Delaware, not less than one hundred and fifty miles in length, and between twenty and thirty in breadth, but not fully settled, has been deserted, the houses and improvements reduced to ashes, the cattle, horses, grain, goods, and effects of the inhabitants, either destroyed, burnt, or carried off by the Indians, whilst the poor planters (farmers) with their wives, children, and servants, who could get away, being without arms, or any kind of defence, have been obliged in this season of the year to abandon their habitations, naked and without support, and throw themselves upon the charity of the other inhabitants within the interior parts of the province, upon whom they are a very heavy burthen.

"Such shocking descriptions are given, by those who have escaped, of the horrid cruelties and inhumanities committed by the merciless savages on the bodies of those unhappy wretches who fell into their hands, especially the women, without regard to sex or age as far exceeds those related of the most abandoned pirates! Which has occasioned a general consternation, and has struck so great a panic and damp upon the spirits of the people, that hitherto they have not been able to make any considerable resistance, or stand against the Indians."

The cold indifference of the Assembly at such a crisis awoke the deepest indignation throughout the Province. Public meetings were held in various parts of Lancaster and in the frontier counties, at which it was resolved that they would "repair to Philadelphia and compel the provincial authorities to pass proper laws to defend the country and oppose the enemy." In addition, the dead bodies of some of the murdered and mangled were sent to that city and hauled about the streets, with placards announcing that these were victims of the Quaker policy of non-resistance. A large and threatening mob surrounded the House of Assembly, placed the dead bodies in the doorway, and demanded immediate relief for the people of the frontiers. Such indeed were the desperate measures resorted to for self-defense.

The times were perilous, and despite the offense given to the Assembly, Governor Morris issued a proclamation on the 14th of April, 1756, offering the following bounties, hoping thereby to incite not only the energies of the soldiers, but to alarm those Indians who were still friendly: "For every male Indian enemy above twelve years old who shall be taken prisoner and delivered at any forts, garrisoned by the troops in pay of this Province, or at any of the county towns to the keepers of the common jails there, the sum of one hundred and fifty Spanish dollars or pieces of eight; for the scalp of every male Indian enemy above the age of twelve years, produced as evidence of their being killed, the sum of one hundred and thirty pieces of eight; for every female Indian taken prisoner and brought in as aforesaid, and for every male Indian prisoner under the age of twelve years, taken and brought in as aforesaid, one hundred and thirty pieces of eight; for the scalp of every Indian woman, produced as evidence of their being killed, the sum of fifty pieces of eight; and for every English subject that has been taken and carried from this Province into captivity that shall be recovered and brought in and delivered at the city of Philadelphia to the Governor of this Province, the sum of one hundred and fifty pieces of eight, but nothing for their scalps; and that there shall be paid to every officer or soldier as are or shall be in the pay of this Province who shall redeem and deliver any English subject carried into captivity as aforesaid, or shall take, bring in, and produce any enemy prisoner, or scalp as aforesaid, one-half of the said several and respective premiums and bounties." A barbarous act it may appear to us, yet it was absolutely necessary to the securing of proper protection to the borders. To the credit of the hardy pioneers of Pennsylvania be it said, no Indian was wantonly killed for the sake of the reward.

To guard against the Indian devastations, a chain of forts and block-houses were erected at an expense of eighty-five thousand pounds, by the Province of Pennsylvania, along the Kittochtinny hills, from the river Delaware to the Maryland line, commanding the principal passes of the mountains, garrisoned with from twenty to seventy-five provincials, as the situation and importance of the places respectively required.

The Moravians of Bethlehem cheerfully fortified their town and took up arms in self-defense. Franklin took up the sword, and, with his son William, raised without difficulty over five hundred men, proceeded to the frontier, and assisted in erecting and garrisoning the line of forts.

Of the stockades or forts within the limits of Lebanon County there was really only one of much account. We have alluded to that at the upper gap on the Swatara, built by Capt. Parsons. It is not definitely known where this was actually located. It is stated that it was fourteen miles distant from Fort Henry. If it was on the Swatara, fourteen miles from the latter, its location would be in the neighborhood of Hummelstown, or within the limits of the present Dauphin County, and as designated on the "Historical Map of Pennsylvania." As there seem to have been two forts named Fort Henry, there is no doubt that one of these and Fort Swatara were the same, although the accounts are very confusing; and that fort, so called, was erected on the site selected by Capt. Parsons in the fall of 1755 for a stockade and breastworks. It was also named Bussé's Fort, for Capt. Christian Bussé, an officer of the provincial forces. Governor Morris, in a letter of the date of 1st of February, 1756, after describing several forts already erected on the west side of the Susquehanna, as part of a chain of defense from Delaware along the Kittochtinny Hills to the Susquehanna, says, "Those between the two rivers are to be about ten or twelve miles asunder. The most considerable of them is built at an important pass through the Kittochtinny Hills on our northern frontier, and I have called it Fort Henry." Again he writes, "On the east side of Susquehanna the forts are ten or twelve miles asunder, among which the most considerable are Fort Henry, at a pass through the mountains called Tolihaio. . . . The garrisons in these are from fifty to twenty men each, according to their situation and importance." On the 9th of February he makes use of the same expression as to location, etc. Prior thereto, in January, instructions had been given Capt. Bussé "to proceed as soon as possible with the company under his command to the gap at Tolihaio, where Swehatara comes through the mountains, and in some convenient place there you are to erect a fort of the form and dimensions herewith given you, unless you shall judge the stockado already erected there conveniently placed, in which case you will take possession, and make such additional works as you may think necessary to render it sufficiently strong."

On the 25th of January, 1756, Governor Morris writes to Conrad Weiser, "I have ordered Capt. Christian Bussé, with a company of fifty, in the pay of this Province, to proceed to the Gap at Tolihaio, and there to erect a stockado fort of the form and dimensions given him, and to take post there and range the woods from that fort Westward towards Swehatara, and Eastward towards a stockado to be built by Capt. Morgan, about half way between the said fort and Fort Lebanon."

On the 20th of April, 1757, the Governor, in writing to the Proprietaries says, "The long frontier between the Susquehanna and Delaware was to be defended by Col. Weiser's battalion, and all the forts reduced to three, Forts Henry, Allen, and Hamilton, in each of which was to be a garrison of one hundred men, the remainder was to be employed in ranging or marching where the attacks of the Indians should make it necessary." Governor Denny says to the Proprietaries, "intending to go to Fort Henry—the only garrison my time would allow me to visit—I desired Col. Weiser to acquaint the leaders of these infatuated people that I should be glad if they would come and speak with me at the fort. Accordingly about fifty substantial freeholders, well mounted and armed, joined the escort and attended me to Fort Henry, where I had an opportunity of undeceiving them. Convinced of their error, they presented me a very respectful address, assuring me of their desire to have a proper militia law, and that they were determined under such a law to serve and do their duty to their king and country. Forty instantly were enlisted by Col. Weiser out of this neighborhood, and a magistrate about twenty miles off wrote me he had enlisted forty more." October, 1757. Murders are daily committed, and Col. Weiser says, "I am now preparing to go to Fort Henry to consult with the officers what may best be done." February 21st. James Burd visits Fort Henry, which is six miles from Snevelys, and that is four miles from Souders.

"Left Lieutenant Broadhead, with a party at Souders to march four miles to Snevelys—he marched with Adj. Thorne and eight men on horseback—found at Fort Henry Capt. Weiser, Adj. Kern, and Ens. Biddle and Craighead, doing duty with ninety men. 22d. Had a review at 9 A.M.; found ninety soldiers under good command, and fine fellows; about two months' provisions, and two months' more about six miles from Fort Henry, at Jacob Myer's mill; no powder; two hundred and twenty-four pounds lead; no flints; about eighty Province arms belonging to these two companies good for nothing. Ordered Ens. Craighead with fifteen men to this garrison to march for Fort Swattarow."

About six miles from this fort on June 19, 1758, Capt. Bussé writes—John Krantz, wife, and three children were carried off by the Indians. Lieut. Johnston and nine men were sent along the mountains to the "Hole" to intercept them, and Sergt. Mowrer and two men to seek for their tracks. News was also received of a son of Jacob Snabell being killed near Dubb's with five shots through the body. He thinks from the tracks there must have been about twenty Indians. A sergeant and eight men are also sent to join a party of farmers from Tulpehocken. The fort is much in want of powder and lead.

FORT BROWN was at Adam Reel's, on the Swa-tara. In a letter from Adam Reed to Edward Shippen, dated at Hanover, Aug. 7, 1756, from which it would appear that Capt. Smith had a company there, and that Jacob Eller, one of his soldiers, "a liver before, 2½ miles over the first mountain just within the gap, at said fort," took an escort of ten men to help him, with consent of an officer, to cut down some wheat at his place, where they were attacked by three Indians, who crept to the fence just at their back and fired upon them, killed the corporal and wounded one other. The men returned to the fort, but find James Brown missing. The lieutenant sent men out then to bring him in. Capt. Smith had sent more men "from the other fort." Brown was found killed and scalped.

These were perchance the only forts within the limits of the county, in fact only one can be thus designated. The latter was merely a stockade around a block-house. Block-houses were numerous. Every three or four families selected the most eligible farm, placed palisades around it, and from the roof port-holes. Into these the families of the neighborhood would congregate for weeks and months.

The inhabitants on the frontiers of the Province were aroused, and, despite the tardiness of the Assembly, the people began arming for their own defense. Among the State archives is the roll of a company in the provincial service indorsed "St. Vincent and Puke's (Pike) Land Association," May 10, 1756, which is evidently wrong, as that would designate the company as belonging to Chester County. The officers and men were from Lebanon County, as any one who will read over the following names will readily perceive, and the mistake is in the indorsement:

Captain.

Adam Heylman.

Lieutenant.

John Hart.

Ensign.

Adam Rontour.

In the first provincial battalion, raised in the spring of 1756, Lieut.-Col. Conrad Weiser commanding, the following officers of a company raised in Lebanon County were attached :

Captain.

Charles Foulk.

Lieutenant.

Michael Beltz.

Sergeants.

John White. Dewalt Bassing.

Privates.

Michael Lawry. Killian Long.

These are all the names of privates to be found.

In June, 1756, the station of the provincial forces within the limits of Lebanon were :

CAPT. FREDERICK SMITH'S COMPANY.

"In the Hole," at the Moravian House, eight men.

"Fort under the Hill," twenty-four men.

CAPT. CHRISTIAN BUSSÉ'S COMPANY.

"At Bernhard Friedle's, next to the Moravians," ten men.

"At Casper Snebelie's," eight men.

"At Daniel Shue's or Peter Klop's," six men.

In the Pennsylvania regiment, consisting of three battalions, "the Honourable William Denny, Esquire, Lieutenant-Governor of the Province of Pennsylvania, colonel-in-chief," the following officers were from Lebanon County :

FIRST BATTALION.

Adjutant and Ensign—John Philip De Haas, April 30, 1758.

Ensign—Conrad Bucher, April 1, 1758.

SECOND BATTALION.

Ensigns—Adam Henry, Dec. 6, 1757.

Martin Heidler, March 16, 1758.

THIRD BATTALION.

Captain—Adam Reed, May 4, 1758.

Among the officers of the Pennsylvania regiment for the year 1760 are these names :

FIRST BATTALION.

Captain—John Philip De Haas, April 28, 1760.

Lieutenant—George Miller, May 8, 1760.

Ensign—John Nice, May 6, 1760.

Lieutenant—Nicholas Haussegger, May 6, 1760.

SECOND BATTALION.

Lieutenant—Conrad Bucher, April 19, 1760.

From the "list of officers of the Pennsylvania regiment, commanded by the Hon. J. Penn, Esq., 1764, who had served under Col. Bouquet that year, we find those of

FIRST BATTALION.

Major—John Philip De Haas, June 9, 1764.

Captain—Nicholas Haussegger, Nov. 11, 1763.

Lieutenant—John Nice, Oct. 14, 1763.

Ensign—William McMeen, Dec. 10, 1763.

SECOND BATTALION.

Adjutant—Conrad Bucher, Sept. 6, 1764.

In the first part of the summer of 1764 there were stationed at the following places within the limits of Lebanon County :

At John McFarlane's, Hanover township, Lieut. Charles Stewart, one sergeant and fifteen men.

At Godfried Young's, Hanover township, Ensign Thomas Campleton and fifteen men.

At Fort Henry, Bethel township, Capt. John Philip De Haas, one sergeant and eighteen men.

In the sketches of the townships we have referred in full to other incidents in the border warfare. They form part of the sad, sad story of those ten years of brutal atrocities committed by the Indians. It is well occasionally to rehearse these facts, for they call to mind the struggles of our ancestors when the torch, the scalping-knife, and the tomahawk of the red savage spread death and destruction among the early pioneers; then the warmer will be our appreciation of our peaceful homes and the true greatness of our beloved country, the grandest the sun ever shone upon.

With the close of Bouquet's expedition to the westward, when he dictated terms to the Indians on the Muskingum, ended the incursions of the savages into the interior of Pennsylvania. The result was seen in the extending of the settlements north and west, and the Lebanon County townships became the centre of the settlements instead of the border. Peace and prosperity dawned upon the country, population rapidly increased by immigration from the effete provinces of Europe, and "the wilderness" was truly "blossoming as the rose."

CHAPTER VI.

The War for Independence—Early Action by the Inhabitants—The Heidelberg Company—Col. Greenawald's Battalion—Capt. Peter Grubb's Company of the Pennsylvania Line.

THE exactions of the British government becoming intolerable; and no redress of grievances, the right of petition ignored, led the people to ponder well a step they were not slow in taking, to repel tyranny in whatever form it might manifest itself, to act upon the defensive, and to stand up boldly for their rights. It has been stated that the German element in Pennsylvania were slow to realize the dangers threatening them in 1774 and 1775. Documents in our possession disprove such assertions, for as early as June, 1774, when the port of Boston had been closed by the arbitrary measures of the crown, a meeting of the citizens of the town of Lebanon was held, and resolutions adopted which evidence the patriotism, integrity, and generous spirit of the German inhabitants of Pennsylvania:

"At a meeting of the inhabitants of Lebanon and the adjoining townships on Saturday, 25th of June, 1774, holden at the house of Capt. Greenawalt, whereof Major John Philip DeHaas was chairman, to take into serious consideration the state of public affairs, it was unanimously declared and resolved,—

"1. That the late act of the British parliament by which the port of Boston is shut up, is an act oppressive to the people of that city and subversive of the rights of the inhabitants of America.

"2. That while we profess to be loyal subjects of Great Britain, we shall not submit to unjust and iniquitous laws, as we are not slaves, but freemen.

"3. That we are in favor of a Congress of Deputies who will act in behalf of the people for obtaining a redress of grievances.

"4. That we will unite with the inhabitants of other portions of our Country in such measures as will preserve to us our rights and our Liberties.

"5. That our Countrymen of the City of Boston have our sincerest sympathy, that their cause is the common cause of America.

"6. That Messrs. Philip Greenawalt, Thomas Clark, Michael Ley, Killian Long, and Curtis Grubb be a committee to collect contributions for our suffering brethren.

" J. P. DEHAAS,
" Chairman.

" JOHN LIGHT,
" Secretary."

The committee appointed followed up the professions of sympathy, and collected money and flour to be forwarded to Boston. Unfortunately, the articles were included in the contributions sent forward from Philadelphia, without particularizing localities from which they were sent.

On the 22d of November, 1774, the committee of the borough of Lancaster met and prepared a handbill to be scattered throughout the county. It ran as follows:

"To the freeholders and electors of the county of Lancaster:

"The committee for the borough of Lancaster, taking in their consideration the resolves and recommendations of the American Continental Congress, request that the freeholders and others qualified to vote for Representatives in Assembly for the county of Lancaster, would meet at the Court house in Lancaster, on Thursday the fifteenth day of December next, to choose by ballot sixty proper persons for a committee, to observe the conduct of all persons touching the general Association of the general Congress; which committee, it is proposed, when elected, shall divide the county into different districts, and appoint members of the committee to superintend each district, and any six of the members so appointed for a district to be a quorum for transacting business.

"It will be necessary, previous to the general election, that each township shall elect a proper person to act as inspector, and receive the tickets of the electors on that day."

Agreeably to the foregoing call an election was held on the day designated. The members of the committee selected from what is now Lebanon County were as follows:

Lebanon.—Thomas Clark, Curtis Grubb, Henry Light, Henry Buchler.

Bethel.—Ludwig Shuey, Casper Kohr, John Be-shore, Killian Long, Samuel Jones.

Heidelberg.—John Weiser.

The committee of inspection for the county, of which the foregoing were members, met at Lancaster on the 14th of January following, and appointed deputies to the Provincial Convention held at Philadelphia on the 23d of January. The disputes were fast drawing to a crisis, and prompt measures were taken to prepare for the terrible alternative, war. On the 1st of May the committee resolved to organize associations for public defense. The first company enrolled was that of Londonderry, followed in a few days by the Heidelberg company of Heidelberg township, showing that the German inhabitants were as ardent and patriotic as their Scotch-Irish neighbors.

These commands were in active service during the campaign of the following year (1776), closing with the retreat across the Jerseys. Of the troops called into the Continental service several companies were raised in Lebanon County. The roll of one only has come down to us, and of those honored names there are some who belonged to the townships adjoining, now comprised within the present limits of Lancaster and Berks Counties. Of the services of Col. Miles' battalion, with which they were connected, we have referred elsewhere, as also of their participation in the disastrous battle of Long Island, on the 27th of August, 1776:

Roll of Capt. Peter Grubb, Jr.'s, Company.

In Col. Timothy Green's Hanover Rifle Battalion, in 1775 and 1776, was the company of Capt. Thomas Koppeneffer, which was wholly composed of Lebanon County men. They were at Fort Washington at the time of its surrender, Nov. 16, 1776, but shortly after paroled, sent home, and subsequently exchanged. Many of the men were afterwards connected with the Pennsylvania Line, three years' service, and proved themselves brave and gallant soldiers.

CHAPTER VII.

The War for Independence (Continued)—The Meeting of the Associated Battalions at Lancaster—Roll of Capt. Klotz's Company of the Flying Camp—Non-Associators in 1777, for Lebanon, Heidelberg, and Bethel Townships.

THE formation of the Flying Camp, as directed by Congress, from such of the associated battalions as volunteered for the purpose, required full organization, and a meeting was called at Lancaster, to which the militia of the State were directed to send representatives. This meeting, consisting of the delegates from the officers and privates of the fifty-three battalions of associators, convened on the 4th of July, 1776, for the purpose of choosing two brigadier-generals. The minutes of this convention have never been published in full, and we present, therefore, the record, for which we are indebted to the Clymer papers :

At a meeting of the Officers and Privates of 53 Battalions of the Associates of the Colony of Pennsylvania, at Lancaster, on the 4th day of July, 1776, on due Notice to choose two Brigadier-Generals to command the Battalions and Forces in the said Colony.—Col. Geo. Ross, President; Lieut.-Col. Daniel Clymer, secretary.

The Protest of the Board of Officers of the Five Battalions of the City & Liberties of Philada to the Assembly was read.

The Circular Letter signed by the Chairman, Col. Roberdeau, was read.

The Circular Letter from the Committee of Privates of the City & Liberties of Philada signed by the Chairman, Mr. Sam^l Simpson, was read.

The Protest of the Privates of the City & Liberties of Philada to the Assembly signed by Mr. Samuel Simpson was read.

At this time the non-associators, of which there were a large number in the townships, were disarmed by Col. Greenawalt's battalion. Many of these people were scrupulous of bearing arms,—Mennonites, Moravians, and a few Quakers. They were not disloyal, but disinterested spectators of the struggle. As long as they were not disturbed in their religious devotions it mattered little to them under whose dominion they were. It may as well be here remarked that not every one who was classed as a non-associator was unwilling to bear arms. Some were disabled by physical ailments, some beyond the age of fifty-three, who were exempt from military duty, and yet assessed with those first alluded to. As the war progressed those not really liable for service were heavily fined, three pounds ten shillings being the uniform rate. We give herewith the assessment for the three townships, omitting the amount, which was as stated.

CHAPTER VIII.

The War for Independence (Continued)—British Prisoners at Lebanon
 —The Oath of Allegiance to the State.

As unsuccessful as the expedition to Canada proved, it left a large number of British officers in the hands of the Americans. Those of the Seventh Regiment Royal Fusileers, captured at the St. Johns, arrived at Lancaster on the 9th of December, 1775, where they were confined under parole and guard until April, 1776, when most of the officers were sent to Carlisle, York, and Lebanon.¹ With these were women and children. It is more than probable that few if any would have been forwarded to Lebanon, but the smallpox at that time was raging at York, and those not having had the contagion declined to go to that place; as a result they were sent to Lebanon. These were billeted upon the inhabitants, to the great annoyance of those who did not wish to have their domestic arrangements interfered with. Protesting against this outrage, the prisoners were taken to one or two public-houses, one of which was kept by Matthew McHugh. On the morning of the 14th of June, as appears by the following communication from the Committee of Observation at Lancaster to the committees of York and Cumberland, the prisoners had disappeared from Lebanon. Writing on the 16th of June they say, "We conceive it our indispensable Duty to inform you of the Contents of a Letter rec'd last night from the members of committee of Lebanon Township—in this County. They acquaint us by an Express that all the Officers Prisoners of war at Lebanon with their servants disappeared from their Lodgings on the 14th inst—in the morning before Day. The night before they made preparations to go a fishing as they sometimes amused themselves in that way—by means whereof they were not suspected until the Evening before last. One Barrington went off on Friday about 8 o'clock on Pretence of being of the Fishing party, and went by the way of Grubb's Forges. They further inform us that it was generally thought there that they had made toward New York by Private Roads over the mountain. And that persons had been dispatched to several places on the mountain side to alarm the country. The Express left Lebanon yesterday at 2 o'clock in the afternoon, and we have not since heard from that Quarter. We cannot take upon ourselves to determine whether the suspicions entertained of the escape of the Prisoners are well founded or not. It cannot but be obvious that the Public is intimately interested to prevent Practices of this nature as well as to apprehend the Prisoners—who have meditated their escape. Your good sense will point out to you what is fitting and necessary to be done—with Respect to such of the Prisoners as are stationed with you. We are convinced every prudent moderate Precaution will be made use of by your

¹ The following is a copy of the parole taken by each prisoner at Lancaster, who was removed to Lebanon:

"I, _____, being a Prisoner in the United Colonies of America, do upon the Honor of a Gentle promise that I will not go into or near any Seaport Town, nor farther than Six Miles distant from Lebanon in Lancaster County, my present place of Residence, without leave of the Continental Congress, or of the Committee of Safety of Penna; and that I will carry on no political Correspondence whatever on the subject of the dispute between Great Britain & these Colonies so long as I remain a prisoner."

Board to secure their continuance among you—and to preclude the Possibility of an escape."

As may be expected there was considerable uproar, and in the excitement of the hour the poor landlord came near being mobbed by the populace, believing that McHugh had been conniving for the escape of the prisoners. This reached the ears of the general committee, who at once wrote to Messrs. Philip Greenawalt and John Light, the Lebanon members, under date of 25th of June, as follows:

"Complaint has been made to us by Matthew McHugh, that he has been threatened by divers Persons in Lebanon, on account of the Prisoners lodging at his House, and having made their escape from thence. We mean not to offer our Sentiment, whether McHugh is in any wise censurable for his Conduct respecting the officers. We are not possessed of any Proof on either side on which we can form any judgment.

"All we mean by our present letter is to transmit our opinion to you concerning the part we think each member of the Committee should take when Individuals assume to themselves the Right to punish persons for any supposed offense against the Common Cause. We need only refer you on the head to the late Resolve of Congress, which is clear and express in Point. Indeed, the most pernicious Consequence must arise from private persons taking into their own hands the Power of judging and carving out Remedies in matters concerning the public welfare, independent of the Resolutions of some public Body. We have no doubt, Gentlemen, but you will use your utmost influence in your neighborhood to prevent any Outrage on private property under the Pretext of serving the public Interest. You will discourage all such violent proceedings, and as far as may be prevent them, by recommending a different line of Conduct as the duty of every good man in the Community."

Lebanon was not only a point of produce supply for the army, but quite a number of cannon were cast at Cornwall Furnace. The following letter from the committee of Congress to Col. Peter Grubb, owner of the furnace, is worthy of preservation in this connection. It is dated at "Philadelphia, 18th September, 1776," and signed by "R. T. Paine":

"SIR,—By Capt. Joy I understand you have at last made some 12-Pounders, but I fear they are heavier than they ought to be. Those made by Col. Bird weigh but 27¹/₂ and some under. You have drawn on the Committee for £1500, it is not sent because the matter is not understood. We can't suppose you want such a sum to carry on the Works, & you certainly don't desire the Cannon to be paid for before they are delivered. The sum you draw for is the value of the Guns already made, & as the contract was made with your Brother, Col. Curtis Grubb (Th'o you may be equally interested with him), yet I should like to hear from him before so large a sum was paid; however, I have sent you by Capt. Dan'l Joy one thousand dollars. I mentioned to Congress your inclination to have some of the Prisoners from Lancaster to work for you, but it was supposed the Committee of Lancaster would object to it. I hope you will make all Expedition in making the Cannon & getting them down, for they are much wanted. The Cannon must be proved with two shott, or they will never be put on board the Ships. I am your huml^l Servt."

There were at Cornwall several of these cannon, and at the old arsenal at Harrisburg two, which were carelessly sold for rubbish when the building was razed, and had been objects of curiosity to all visitors.

The victories at Trenton and Princeton left a large number of prisoners in the hands of the Americans. These were mostly the "Hessian Mercenaries." Lancaster, Reading, and Lebanon were the several stations where these were held in duress. Some of these were quartered in the Moravian, or rather "congregation," house still standing at Hebron. For the space of ten months the house was occupied by one or another detachment. At that time the minister of old Hebron was Brother Bader, who, together with his family, remained living in the lower story of the building. As a matter of course he was constantly thrown into contact with the Hessians. In fact, as many a quaint exclamation in his diary testifies, often saw much more of them than he desired. An anecdote, translated by my friend, Bishop De Schweinitz, is herewith given:

"To-day a rifleman from Anspach (ein Ansbacher Yaeger) and a corporal visited Brother Bader. They related to him that Howe had written a letter to Washington containing merely the seventh chapter of the prophet Ezekiel, and that Washington had replied by copying and sending to Howe the fourth chapter of the book of Baruch."

Any one who shall take the trouble to read these two chapters will see with what wonderful tact Gen. Washington selected a proper Biblical answer to the British general's Biblical dispatch.

As early as May, 1776, the Continental Congress declared that it was "irreconcilable to reason and good conscience that the American people should take the oaths for the support of government under the Crown of Great Britain," and that it was "necessary that every kind of authority under the crown should be suppressed." The struggle which ensued between the Quakers and those in the proprietary interest, and the Whigs of the Revolution, was bitter, but the plan of the latter for the calling of a convention was finally successful. At a conference of the committees of observation for the different counties, held at Carpenter's Hall on the 18th of June, 1776, it was resolved that it "was necessary to call a Provincial Convention to form a new government, in the authority of the people only," and the following religious test was proposed to the members thereof:

"I, ———, do profess in God the Father, and in Jesus Christ His Eternal Son, the true God, and in the Holy Spirit, one God blessed evermore, and do acknowledge the sacred scriptures of the Old and New Testament to be given by Divine Inspiration."

Notwithstanding the spirit, perhaps, of intolerance which actuated the adoption of this oath, immediate efforts were taken for a proper representation of every county in the State. The county of Lancaster was, the better to carry out the objects of the Provincial Conference, divided into six districts. The fifth division, comprising the townships of Elizabeth, Heidelberg, Bethel, Lebanon, and East Hanover, held their election at the town of Lebanon, the judges appointed to conduct the same being Casper Kuhn, Jacob Eckart, and Philip Greenawalt. Of the eight members of the convention chosen for the county of Lancaster, Philip Marsteller, of Lebanon, was the only one residing in the district referred to. The convention met on the 15th of July, the members without hesitancy taking the prescribed test, and during its session it not only discussed and perfected the measures necessary in the adoption of a constitution, but assumed the supreme authority in the State, and legislated upon matters foreign to the object for which it was convened. Among other things this body appointed a Council of Safety to carry on the executive duties of the government, approved of the Declaration of Independence as passed by the Continental Congress, and appointed justices of the peace, who were required before assuming their functions to each to take an oath of renunciation of the authority of George III., and one of allegiance to the State of Pennsylvania. The old Provincial Assembly which had adjourned on the 14th of June to meet on the 14th of August, could not obtain a quorum, and adjourned again to the 23d of September. It then interposed a feeble remonstrance against the invasion of its prerogatives by the convention, but it was a dying protest. The Declaration of Independence had given the old Provincial government a mortal blow, and it soon expired without a sigh, thus ending forever the proprietary and royal authority in Pennsylvania.

The Constitution of 1776 went into immediate operation on its adoption, the 28th of September. The oath prescribed for members of Assembly was as objectionable as that required to be taken by the members of the convention, and political disputes waged warm and bitter. The refusal of the State Navy Board, referred to in the minutes of that body, to take the oath of allegiance to the State, tended to increase the excitement, and this, with the disarrangement of the associators, required the adoption of more stringent measures.

The Legislature, by a general militia law, passed June 13, 1777, not only made full provision for the enrollment of all persons fit for military duty, but established a test and oath of allegiance, a measure highly necessary to restrain the insolence of the Tories. The preamble and oath are in these words:

"WHEREAS, From sordid or mercenary motives, or other causes inconsistent with the happiness of a free and independent people, sundry persons have or may yet be induced to withhold their service or allegiance from the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as a free and independent State, as declared by Congress:

"AND WHEREAS, Sundry other persons in their several capacities have, at the risk of their lives and fortunes, or both, rendered great and eminent services in defence and support of the said independence, and may yet continue to do the same, and as both these sorts of persons remain at this time mixed, and in some measure undistinguished from each other, and the disaffected deriving undesired service from the faithful and well affected:

"AND WHEREAS, Allegiance and protection are reciprocal, and those who will not bear the former are not nor ought to be entitled to the benefits of the latter:

"Therefore it is enacted, etc., That all white male inhabitants of the State, except of the counties of Bedford and Westmoreland, above the age of eighteen years, shall, before the 1st day of the ensuing July, and in the excepted counties before the 1st day of August, take and subscribe before some justice of the peace an oath in the following form:

"I, ———, do swear (or affirm) that I renounce and refuse all allegiance to George the Third, king of Great Britain, his heirs and successors; and that I will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as a free and independent State, and that I will not at any time do or cause to be done any matter or thing that will be prejudicial or injurious to the freedom and independence thereof, as declared by Congress, and also, that I will discover and make known to some one justice of the peace of said State all treasons or traitorous conspiracies which I now know or hereafter shall know to be formed against this or any of the United States of America."

Severe penalties were imposed by this law on all who neglected or refused to take the oath. Many of the names which follow are those who took an active and prominent part in the revolutionary contest, and as a part of the history of that famous era, the record is worth preserving. Not until the adoption of the constitution of 1790 was the religious test dispensed with. The following lists are those of John Thome and Henry Sheaffer, justices for the townships of Lebanon and Heidelberg. We have not been able to secure that for Bethel, if there ever was a list, which is doubtful, as many of the inhabitants took the test oath before Col. Timothy Green, of Hanover, or Squire Thome. As will be perceived by reference to the latter's record, it was not required to subscribe to the oath within the township, for some of the inhabitants took the same at Lancaster, the county seat, and others in Philadelphia.

NAMES OF PERSONS WHO TOOK THE OATH OF ALLEGIANCE TO THE STATE OF PENNSYLVANIA, 1777-78.

To John Hubley, Esquire, Recorder of Deeds, &c. in and for the County of Lancaster.

Lancaster County, ss.

The Subscriber, one of the Justices of the Peace for the said County do hereby certify that the following is a true list of the Names and Surnames of all such Persons who have since the 27 day of September last Taken and Subscribed a Majority of them, the Oath, and the others the affirmation of Allegiance and Fidelity before me as directed by an Act of General Assembly of this State, passed the 13th Day of June, 1777.

We, the subscribers, do swear (or affirm) that we renounce and refuse all allegiance to George the Third, King of Great Britain, his heirs and successors, and that we will be faithful and bear true allegiance to the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania as a free and independent State, and that we will not at any time do, or cause to be done, any matter or thing that will be prejudicial or injurious to the freedom and independence thereof, as declared by Congress, and also that we will discover and make known to some one justice of the peace of the said State, all treasons and traitorous cooperacies which we now know or hereafter shall know to be formed against this or any of the United States of America.

For the western end of the county the reader is referred to the history of Dauphin, to those taken before Timothy Green, Esq., one of the justices of the peace for Lancaster County. He resided then in Hanover township, not far from the Dauphin and Lebanon line. Several of the companies of his battalion of associators were raised within the limits of now Lebanon County.

CHAPTER IX.

The War for Independence (Continued)—Escape of British Officers from Lebanon—Capt. Andrew Lee's Exploits—Capt. John Groninger's Militia Battalion.

THE frequent escape of the prisoners of war confined at Lancaster, Lebanon, and Reading, of which during the winter of 1777-78 there was a large number confined, principally those taken at Burgoyne's surrender, as also those at Trenton and Princeton, owing to the difficulties encountered in the negotiations for a proper exchange. As a result, the American authorities found much difficulty in guarding them, and many of the associators were employed in this work. The places named were selected from the fact that the country was not only thickly settled, but the inhabitants most decidedly hostile to the English. At first the prisoners at Lebanon were confined in old Hebron Church, but the increase being so great temporary barracks were erected adjoining thereto, inclosed with a stockade and vigilantly guarded by Col. Greenawalt's and Col. Klotz's battalions by turns. In spite of all precaution the prisoners often disappeared in an unaccountable manner, and nothing was heard of them until they had resumed their places in the British army. Many and various were the conjectures as to the means of their escape; the officers inquired and investigated in vain; the country was explored to no purpose; the soldiers shook their heads and told of fortune-tellers, peddlers, and such characters, who had been seen at intervals; and sundry of the more credulous could think of nothing but supernatural agency; but whether man or spirit was the conspirator, the mystery remained unbroken.

When this became known to Washington, he sent Col. Hazen, commanding "The Congress Regiment," chiefly Pennsylvanians, to take this responsible charge. This energetic officer, after exhausting all resources, resorted to stratagem. He was convinced that, as the nearest post was more than a hundred miles distant, the prisoners must be aided by Americans, but where the suspicion should fall he could not even conjecture, the reproach of Toryism being almost unknown in that region. Having been trained to meet exigencies of this kind in a distinguished career as colonel in the British army, his plan was formed at once, and communicated to an officer of his own, upon whose talent he relied for its successful execution. This was Capt. Andrew Lee, whose courage and ability fully justified the selection.

Concerning Capt. Lee we have spoken elsewhere. Suffice it to say, that during this period he was at his home in Paxtang recruiting for the army. It was not known until recently that the incidents connected herewith referred to our Capt. Lee, but papers which have come into our researches give positive evidence of not only that fact, but fix the location at Lebanon instead of Lancaster as was supposed, since every matter of importance transpiring within the limits of Lancaster County during the trying period of the Revolution was referred to Lancaster, not distinguishing the borough from the district.

The secret plan concerted between them was this: It was to be given out that Capt. Lee was absent on furlough or command. He, meantime, was to assume the dress of a British prisoner, and having provided himself with information and a story of his capture, was to be thrown into the barracks, where he might gain the confidence of the soldiers and join them in a plan of escape. How well Capt. Lee sustained his part may be inferred from the fact that when he had disappeared and placed himself among the prisoners his own officers and soldiers saw him every day without the least suspicion. The person to whom we are indebted for most of these particulars was the intendant of the prisoners, and familiar with Lee; but though compelled to see him often in the discharge of his duty, he never penetrated the disguise. Well it was for Capt. Lee that his disguise was so complete. Had his associates suspected his purpose to betray them, his history would have been embraced in the proverb, "dead men tell no tales."

For many days he remained in this situation, making no discoveries whatever. He thought he perceived at times signs of intelligence between the prisoners and an old woman who was allowed to bring fruit for sale within the inclosure. She was known to be deaf and half-witted, and was therefore no object of suspicion. It was known that her son had been disgraced and punished in the American army, but she had never betrayed any malice on that account, and no one dreamed that she could have the power to do injury if she possessed the will. Lee watched her closely, but saw nothing to confirm his suspicions. Her dwelling was about a mile distant, in a wild retreat, where she shared her miserable quarters with a dog and cat, the former of which mounted guard over the mansion, while the latter occasioned superstitious fears, which were equally effectual in keeping visitors away.

One dark stormy night in the spring of 1778, Capt. Lee was lying awake at midnight, meditating on the enterprise he had undertaken, which though in the beginning it had recommended itself to his romantic disposition, had now lost all its charms. It was one of those tempests which in our climate so often hang upon the path of the departing year. His companions slept soundly, but the wind which shook the building to its foundation and threw heavy splashes of rain against the window, conspired with the state of his mind to keep him wakeful. All at once the door was gently opened, and a figure moved silently into the room. It was too dark to observe its motions narrowly, but he could see that it stooped towards one of the sleepers, who immediately rose; next it approached and touched him on the shoulder. Capt. Lee immediately started up; the figure then allowed a slight gleam from a dark lantern to pass over his face, as it did so whispered, impatiently, "Not the man—but come!" It then occurred to Lee that it was the opportunity he desired. The unknown whispered to him to keep his place till another man was called; but just at that moment something disturbed him, and making a signal to Capt. Lee to follow, he moved silently out of the room.

They found the door of the house unbarred, and a small part of the fence removed, where they passed out without molestation. The sentry had retired to a shelter, where he thought he could guard his post without suffering from the rain; but Lee saw his conductors put themselves in preparation to silence him if he should happen to address them. Just without the fence appeared a stooping figure wrapped in a red cloak, and supporting itself with a large stick, which Lee at once perceived could be no other than the old fruit woman. But the most profound silence was observed. A man came out from a thicket at a little distance and joined them, and the whole party moved onward by the guidance of the old woman. At first they frequently stopped to listen, but having heard the sentinel cry "all's well," they seemed reassured, and moved with more confidence than before.

They soon came near to a log cabin under an overhanging bank about midway between Cornwall and Shaeffertown, half hidden by trees, where a bright light was shining out from a little window upon the wet and drooping boughs that hung near it. The dog received them graciously, and they entered. A table was spread with some coarse provisions upon it and a large jug, which one of the soldiers was about to seize, when the man who conducted them withheld him. "No," said he, "we must first proceed to business." He then went to a small closet, from which he returned with what seemed to have been originally a Bible, though now it was worn to a mahogany color and a spherical form. While they were doing this, Lee had time to examine his companions; one of them was a large quiet-looking soldier, the other a short stout man with much of the aspect of a villain. They examined him in turn, and as the captain had been obliged formerly to punish the shorter soldier severely, he felt some misgivings when the fellow's eyes rested upon him. The conductor was a middle-aged, harsh-looking man, whom Capt. Lee had never seen before.

As no time was to be lost, their guide explained to them, in few words, that before he should undertake his dangerous enterprise he should require of them to swear upon the Scriptures not to make the least attempt to escape, and never to reveal the circumstances or agents in the proceeding, whatever might befall them. The soldiers, however, insisted on deferring this measure till they had formed some slight acquaintance with the contents of the jug, and expressed their sentiments on the subject rather by actions than words. In this they were joined by Capt.

Lee, who by this time had begun to contemplate the danger of his enterprise in a new and unpleasant point of view. If he were to be compelled to accompany his party to New York, his disguise would at once be detected, and it was certain he would be hanged as a spy. He had supposed beforehand that he should find no difficulty in escaping at any moment, but he saw that their conductor had prepared arms for them, which they were to use in taking the life of any one who should attempt to leave them—and then the oath. He might possibly have released himself from its obligations, when it became necessary, for the interests of his country, but no honorable man could well bear to be driven to an emergency in which he must violate an oath, however reluctantly it was taken. He felt that there was no retreating, when there came a heavy shock as of something falling against the sides of the house; their practiced ears at once detected the sound of the alarm gun, and their conductor, throwing down the old Bible which he had held all the while impatiently in his hand, directed the party to follow him in close order, and immediately quitted the house, taking with him his dark lantern.

They went on with great dispatch, but not without difficulty. Sometimes their footing would give way on some sandy bank or slippery field; and when their path led through the woods, the wet boughs dashed heavily in their faces. Capt. Lee felt that he might have deserted his precious companions while they were in this hurry and alarm; but he felt that as yet he had made no discoveries, and however dangerous his situation was he could not bear to confess that he had not nerve to carry him through. On he went, therefore, for two or three hours, and was beginning to sink with fatigue when the barking of a dog brought the party to a stand. Their conductor gave a low whistle, which was answered at no great distance, and a figure came forward in the darkness, who whispered to their guide and then led the way up to a building which seemed by the shadowy outline to be a large stone barn. They entered it and were severally placed in small nooks where they could feel that the hay was all around them except on the side of the wall. Shortly after some provisions were brought to them with the same silence, and it was signified to them that they were to remain concealed the whole of the coming day. Through a crevice in the wall Lee could discover, as the day came on, that the barn was attached to a small farm-house. He was so near the house that he could hear the conversation which was carried on about the door. The morning rose clear, and it was evident from the inquiries of horsemen, who occasionally galloped up to the door, that the country was alarmed. The farmer gave short and surly replies, as if unwilling to be taken off from his work, but the other inmates of the house were eager in their questions, and from the answers Capt. Lee gathered that the means by which he and his companions had escaped were as mysterious as ever.

The next night, when all was quiet, they resumed their march, and explained to Capt. Lee that as he was not with them in their conspiracy, and was accidentally associated with them in their escape, they should take the precaution to keep him before them, just behind the guide. He submitted without opposition, though the arrangement considerably lessened his chances of escape. He observed, from the direction of the stars, that they did not move in a direct line towards the Delaware, but they changed their courses so often that he could not conjecture at what point they intended to strike the river. He endeavored, whenever any peculiar object appeared, to fix it in his memory as well as the darkness would permit, and succeeded better than could have been expected, considering the agitated state in which he traveled.

For several nights they went on in this manner, being delivered over to different persons from time to time, and, as Capt. Lee could gather from their whispered conversations, they were regularly employed on occasions like the present, and well rewarded by the British for their services. Their employment was full of danger, and though they seemed like desperate men, he could observe that they never remitted their precautions. They were concealed days in barns, cellars, caves made for the purpose, and similar retreats, and one day was passed in a tomb, the dimensions of which had been enlarged, and the inmates, if there had been any, banished to make room for the living. The burying-grounds were a favorite retreat, and on more occasions than one they were obliged to resort to superstitious alarms to remove intruders upon their path; their success fully justified the experiment, and unpleasantly situated as he was, in the prospect of soon being a ghost himself, he could not avoid laughing at the expedition with which old and young fled from the fancied apparitions under clouds of night, wishing to meet such enemies, like Ajax, in the face of day.

Though the distance to the Delaware was not great they had now been twelve days on the road, and such was the vigilance and suspicion prevailing throughout the country that they almost despaired of effecting their object. The conductor grew impatient, and Lee's companions, at least one of them, became ferocious. There was, as we have said, something unpleasant to him in the glances of this fellow towards him, which became more and more fierce as they went on, but it did not appear whether it was owing to circumstance or actual suspicion. It so happened that on the twelfth night Capt. Lee was placed in a barn, while the rest of the party sheltered themselves in a cellar of a little stone church, where they could talk and act with more freedom, both because the solitude of the church was not often disturbed even on the Sabbath, and because even the proprietors did not know that illegal hands had added a cellar to the conveniences of the building.

The party was seated here as the day broke, and the light, which struggled in through the crevices opened for the purpose, showed a low room about twelve feet square, with a damp floor, and large patches of white mould upon the walls. Finding, probably, that the pavement afforded no accommodations for sleeping, the worthies were seated each upon a little cask, which seemed like those used for gunpowder. Here they were snoking pipes with great diligence, and, at intervals not distant, applying a huge canteen to their mouths, from which they drank with upturned faces, expressive of solemn satisfaction. While they were thus engaged, the short soldier asked them in a careless way if they knew whom they had in their party. The others started, and took their pipes from their mouths, to ask him what he meant. "I mean," said he, "that we are honored with the company of Capt. Andrew Lee, of the rebel army. The rascal once punished me, and I never mistook my man when I had a debt of that kind to pay. Now I shall have my revenge."

The others hastened to express their disgust at his ferocity, saying, that if, as he said, their companion was an American officer, all they had to do was to watch him closely. They said that, as he had come among them uninvited, he must go with them to New York, and take the consequences; but meantime it was their interest not to seem to suspect him, otherwise he might give an alarm; whereas it was evidently his intention to go with them till they were ready to embark for New York. The other person persisted in saying that he would have his revenge with his own hand; upon which the conductor, drawing a pistol, declared to him that if he saw the least attempt to injure Capt. Lee, or any conduct which would lead him to suspect that his disguise was discovered, he would that moment shoot him through the head. The soldier put his hand upon his knife, with an ominous scowl upon his conductor, but seeing that he had to do with one who was likely to be as good as his word, he restrained himself, and began to arrange some rubbish to serve him for a bed. The other soldier followed his example, and their guide withdrew, locking the door after him.

The next night they went on as usual, but the manner of their conductor showed that there was more danger than before; in fact, he explained to the party that they were now not far from the Delaware, and hoped to reach it before midnight. They occasionally heard the report of a musket, which seemed to indicate that some movement was going on in the country. Thus warned, they quickened their steps, and it was not long before they saw the gleam of broad clear light before them, such as is reflected upon the calm waters, even in the darkest night. They moved up to it in deep silence; there were various emotions in their breasts; Capt. Lee was hoping for an opportunity to escape from an enterprise which was growing too serious, and the principal objects of which were already answered; the others were anxious lest some accident might have happened to the boat on which they depended for crossing the stream.

When they came to the bank there were no traces of a boat on the waters. Their conductor stood still for a moment in dismay; but recollecting himself, he said it was possible it might have been secured lower down the stream, and forgetting everything else, he directed the larger soldier to accompany him, and giving a pistol to the other, he whispered, "If the rebel officer attempts to betray us, shoot him; if not you will not, for your own sake, make any noise to show where we are." In the same instant they departed, and Capt. Lee was left alone with the ruffian.

He had before suspected that the fellow knew him, and now doubts were changed to certainty at once. Dark as it was, it seemed as if fire flashed from his eye, now he felt that revenge was within his power. Capt. Lee was as brave as any other officer in the army, but he was unarmed, and though he was strong, his adversary was still more powerful. While he stood, uncertain what to do, the fellow seemed enjoying the prospect of revenge, as he looked on him with a steady eye. Though the officer stood to appearance unmoved, the sweat rolled in heavy drops from his brow. He soon took his resolution, and sprang upon his adversary with the intention of wresting the pistol from his hand; but the other was upon his guard, and aimed with such precision that had the pistol been charged with a bullet that moment would have been his last. But it seemed that the conductor had trusted to the sight of his weapons to render them unnecessary, and had, therefore, only loaded them with powder; as it was the shock threw Capt. Lee upon the ground; but, fortunately, as the fellow dropped the pistol, it fell where the captain could reach it, and as his adversary stooped and drew his knife from his bosom, Capt. Lee was able to give him a stunning blow. He immediately threw himself upon the assassin, and a long and bloody struggle began; they were so nearly matched in strength and advantage that neither dared unclench his hold for the sake of grasping the knife. The blood gushed from their mouths, and the combat would have probably ended in favor of the assassin, when steps and voices were heard advancing, and they found themselves in the hands of a party of countrymen, who were armed for the occasion, and were scouring the banks of the river. They were forcibly torn apart, but so exhausted and breathless that neither could make any explanation, and they submitted quietly to their captors.

The party of armed countrymen, though they had succeeded in their attempt, and were sufficiently triumphant on the occasion, were sorely perplexed how to dispose of their prisoners. After some discussion, one of them proposed to throw the decision upon the wisdom of the nearest magistrate. They accordingly proceeded with their prisoners to his mansion, about two miles distant, and called upon him to arise and attend to business. A window was hastily thrown up, and the justice put forth his night-capped head, and with more wrath than became his dignity, ordered them off; and in requital for their calling him out of bed in the cold, generously wished them in the warmest place. However, resistance was vain; he was compelled to rise, and as soon as the prisoners were brought before him he ordered them to be taken in irons to the prison at Philadelphia. Lee improved the opportunity to take the old gentleman aside, and told him who he was, and why he was thus disguised. The justice only interrupted him with the occasional inquiry,—"Most done?" When he had finished, the magistrate told him that his story was very well made, and told in a manner very creditable to his address, and that he should give it all the weight it seemed to require. And Capt. Lee's remonstrances were unavailing.

As soon as they were fairly lodged in prison, Capt. Lee prevailed on the jailer to carry a note to Gen. Lincoln, informing him of his condition. The general received it as he was dressing in the morning, and immediately sent one of his aids to the jail. That officer could not believe his eyes that he saw Capt. Andrew Lee. His uniform, worn out when he assumed it, was now hanging in rags about him, and he had not been shaved for a fortnight. He wished, very naturally, to improve his appearance before presenting himself to the Secretary of War, but the orders were peremptory to bring him as he was. The general loved a joke full well. His laughter was hardly exceeded by the report of his own cannon, and long and loud did he laugh that day.

When Capt. Lee returned to Lebanon he immediately attempted to retrace the ground, and so accurately, under the unfavorable circumstances, that he brought to justice fifteen persons who had aided in the escape of the British prisoners. There was among the papers of Judge Jasper Yeates interesting notes of the trial of these offenders, some of whom were imprisoned until the close of the war. As the descendants of these people are among us to-day, prominent in civil and political life, we shall not present the memoranda relating thereto. The incidents are in the main correct, and, as a part of the history of the exciting period of the Revolution, are worthy of preservation in the form which we give it.

On the 14th of May, 1778, there was found on the woodland of Michael Baughman in Lebanon township, by Daniel Youngblood, "a large brass kettle almost full of Bacon strawed over with ashes;" also "three Barrels of Whiskey buried in the Ground in three different places, and also a Bucket full of Hog's Lard with one of said Barls;" and in addition, "five Hogsheds of Wheat buried in his [Baughman's] clear field." This caused considerable commotion in the loyal neighborhood. "Capt. Michael Holderbaum with Lieut. Henry Kelker seized the articles and carried them into Annville, a small village about five miles from Lebanon town," but as they could not be kept there without a guard, the goods were hauled into Lebanon. Information was at once made before "Squire John Thome and the General Committee of the county notified.

It never transpired what the object was in secreting these goods, but as parties in the neighborhood, who seem to have been Mennonites, "had secreted and buried rifles and guns on the same land in 1776, when the militia were called into and then served in the Jerseys," some dozen or more non-associators were arrested and committed to Lancaster jail, but subsequently released upon giving security for their future good behavior and taking the oath of allegiance. Following this many of the non-associators at first refused to pay their assessments, but threatened with arrest and the institution of legal proceedings by the committee of the district admonished them that the Whigs were really in earnest, and no further difficulty ensued. In fact, when Col. Philip Marsteller was directed by the Supreme Executive Council to secure flour and provisions for the French fleet, he had no trouble whatever, and the greatest loyalty was manifested by those who heretofore had strenuously opposed the struggle for independence.

The war continued, and the demand for volunteers was promptly met by the inhabitants of Lebanon. While the major portion of the male population between the ages of sixteen and fifty-three were in the Continental service, others, mere children and old men, armed with their trusty rifles, were ranging along the northern frontier, guarding it from the marauding Indians and their white allies, who now and then came swooping down from their home in New York to devastate the half-protected settlements of Pennsylvania.

It is to be regretted that the rolls of those officers and men who were in the Continental service during the Revolution are not in existence. They would be of exceeding value, and would show better than our words can express, the great patriotism of our people, and how cheerfully they entered into the struggle for Independence. We can only refer to Col. John Philip De Haas, of the First Pennsylvania Battalion, Lieut.-Col. Joseph Wood of the Second Battalion (Col. Arthur St. Clair's), subsequently colonel of the Third Regiment of the Line, and Col. Nicholas Haussegger of the German regiment, with whose commands there were a large number of the heroic men of Lebanon County. The inhabitants did not only volunteer promptly, but gave of their substance, and the Earlys, Henrys, Kreiders, Millers, Meilys, Immels, Orths, Sheaffers, and others, not only contributed to the patriot army, but hauled to Valley Forge, during that terrible winter of 1777-78, flour and meat, with such articles of clothing as would be of service to half-clad soldiers. At several tanneries in the neighborhood leather was prepared, and all who could make shoes assisted in the work of supplying those who were barefooted in the American camp. This was all done cheerfully, freely, and very often gratuitously. The men, women, and children of Heidelberg, Lebanon, and Bethel were imbued with patriotic devotion, and did noble work for their distressed defenders. Too much praise cannot be awarded them, and we wish we had the names of those brave women of Lebanon who spun the wool and wove coverlets for the army, and to whom in a letter in our possession written Col. Marsteller, says, "God bless the good women of Millbach!" The brave women of the Revolution who cultivated the soil while their husbands and fathers were battling for their rights, their liberties, deserve loving remembrance on the page of history. They were indeed "Sisters of Mercy" during the darkest hours of our nation's beginning, and no Florence Nightingale has ever excelled them in deeds of charity and good-will.

From 1780 to the 15th of April, 1783, and perchance until the promulgation of the treaty of peace, the militia raised in the townships of Heidelberg and Lebanon, and also a portion of Bethel, comprised the Second Battalion of Lancaster County. They were commanded by Lieut.-Col. John Gloninger, concerning whom our readers are referred to the biographical history of the county. We have only the rolls of officers, which are as follows:

Return of Militia Officers of the Second Battalion, Lancaster County, as they stood April 15, 1783:

Lieutenant-Colonel.

John Gloninger.

Major.

Baltzer Orth.

In the First Battalion, commanded by Lieut.-Col. John Rogers, of Hanover, for which see Dauphin County, there was probably one if not two companies belonging to Lebanon County. The same was the case with Lieut.-Col. Jacob Cook's battalion, the Fourth, raised in Derry and Londonderry.

CHAPTER X.

The War for Independence (Continued)—The Abolition of Slavery in Pennsylvania—The Act providing Therefor—Register of Negro and Mulatto Slaves—Continental Paper Money.

THE year 1780 is made memorable in the annals of Pennsylvania for the passage of the act for the gradual abolition of slavery in Pennsylvania. On the 5th of February, 1779, the Supreme Executive Council, in their message to the Assembly, called the attention of that body to this subject. "We think," say they, "we are loudly called on to evince our gratitude in making our fellow-men joint-heirs with us of the same inestimable blessings, under such restrictions and regulations as will not injure the community and will imperceptibly enable them to relish and improve the station to which they will be advanced. Honored will that State be in the annals of mankind which shall first abolish this violation of the rights of mankind; and the memories of those will be held in grateful and everlasting remembrance who shall pass the law to restore and establish the rights of human nature in Pennsylvania. We feel ourselves so interested on this point as to go beyond what may be deemed by some the proper line of our duty, and acquaint you that we have reduced this plan to the form of a law, which, if acceptable, we shall in a few days communicate to you." Although the subject was thus forcibly presented, the matter was dismissed by the Assembly, "as the Constitution would not allow them to receive the law from the Council." Nothing more was done until in the November Assembly, when George Bryan, formerly Vice-President of the State, having been elected a member of the Legislature, urged the passage of a bill which had been prepared several years prior by William Brown, a member of the Legislature from Lancaster County. The main features of the act were those of Mr. Brown, as recently-discovered memoranda in his handwriting go to show. On the 1st of March, 1780, by a vote of thirty-four yeas to twenty-one nays, the act passed the Assembly. We give the act entire, its title being "An Act for the Gradual Abolition of Slavery."¹

"I. When we contemplate our abhorrence of that condition to which the arms and tyranny of Great Britain were exerted to reduce us, when we look back on the variety of dangers to which we have been exposed, and how miraculously our wants in many instances have been supplied, and our deliverances wrought, when even hope and human fortitude have become unequal to the conflict, we are unavoidably led to a serious and grateful sense of the manifold blessings, which we have undeservedly received from the hand of that Being from whom every good and perfect gift cometh. Impressed with these ideas, we conceive that it is our duty, and we rejoice that it is in our power to extend a portion of that freedom to others which hath been extended to us, and release from that state of thralldom to which we ourselves were tyrannically doomed, and from which we now have every prospect of being delivered. It is not for us to inquire why in the creation of mankind the inhabitants of several parts of the earth were distinguished by a difference in feature or complexion. It is sufficient to know that all are the work of an Almighty Hand. We find in the distribution of the human species that the most fertile as well as the most barren parts of the earth are inhabited by Men of complexions different from ours and from each other; from whence we may reasonably as well as religiously infer that He who placed them in their various situations, hath extended equally His care and protection to all, and that it cometh not us to counteract His mercies. We esteem it a peculiar blessing granted to us, that we are enabled this day to add one more step to universal civilization, by removing as much as possible the sorrows of those who have lived in undeserved bondage, and from which by the assumed authority of the Kings of Great Britain no effectual legal relief could be obtained. Weened, by a long course of experience, from those narrow prejudices and partialities we have imbibed, we find our hearts enlarged with kindness and benevolence toward men of all conditions and nations, and we perceive ourselves at this particular period extraordinarily called upon by the blessings which we have received, to manifest the sincerity of our profession to give substantial proof of our gratitude.

"II. And, whereas, the condition of those persons who have heretofore been denominated Negro and Mulatto slaves, has been attended with circumstances which not only deprived them of the common blessings that they were by nature entitled to, but has cast them into the deepest afflictions by an unnatural separation and sale of husband and wife from each other and from their children, an injury the greatness of which can only be conceived by supposing that we were in the same unhappy case. In justice, therefore, to persons so unhappily circumstanced, and who, having no prospect before them wherein they may rest their sorrows and hopes, have no reasonable inducement to render their services to society, which they otherwise might, and also in grateful commemoration of our own happy deliverance from that state of unconditional submission to which we were doomed by the tyranny of Britain.

"III. Be it enacted, and it is hereby enacted, That all persons as well Negroes and Mulattoes, as others, who shall be born within this State from and after the passing of this Act shall not be deemed and considered as servants for life, or slaves; and that all servitude for life, or slavery of children in consequence of the slavery of their mothers, in the case of all children born within this State from and after the passing of this Act, as aforesaid, shall be, and hereby is, utterly taken away, extinguished, and forever abolished.

"IV. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That every Negro and Mulatto child, born within this State after the passing of this act as aforesaid (who would, in case this act had not been made, have been born a servant for years, or life, or a slave) shall be deemed to be, and shall be, by virtue of this act, the servant of such person, or his or her assigns, who would in such case have been entitled to the service of such child, until such child shall attain unto the age of twenty-eight years, in the manner, and on the conditions, whereon servants bound, by indenture for four years are or may be retained and holden; and shall be liable to like correction and punishment, and entitled to like relief, in case he or she be evilly treated by his or her master or mistress, and to like freedom dues and other privileges, as servants bound by indenture for four years are or may be entitled, unless the person, to whom the service of any such child shall belong, shall abandon his or her claim to the same; in which case the Overseers of the Poor of the city, township or district, respectively, where such child shall be abandoned, shall, by indenture, bind out every child so abandoned, as an apprentice, for a time not exceeding the age herein before limited for the service of such children.

"V. And be it further enacted, That every person, who is or shall be the owner of any Negro or Mulatto slave or servant for life, or till the age of thirty-one years, now within this State, or his lawful attorney, shall, on or before the said first day of November next, deliver, or cause to be delivered, in writing, to the Clerk of the peace of the county, or to Clerk of the court of record of the city of Philadelphia, in which he or she shall respectively inhabit, the name and surname, and occupation or profession of such owner, and the name of the county and Township, district or ward, wherein he or she resideth; and also the name and names of such slave and slaves, and servant and servants for life, or till the age of thirty-one years, together with their ages and sexes, severally and respectively set forth and annexed, by such person owned or stately employed, and then being within this State, in order to ascertain and distinguish the slaves and servants for life, and till the age of thirty-one years, within this State, who shall be such on the said first day of November next, from all other persons; which particulars shall, by said Clerk of the sessions and Clerk of the said city court, be entered in books to be provided for that purpose by the said Clerks; and that no Negro or Mulatto, now within this State, shall, from and after the said first day of November, be deemed a slave or servant for life, or till the age of thirty-one years, unless his or her name shall be entered as aforesaid on such record, except such Negro and Mulatto slaves and servants as herein excepted; the said Clerk to be entitled to a fee of two dollars for each slave or servant so entered as aforesaid, from the Treasurer of the county to be allowed to him in his accounts.

"VI. Provided always, That any person, in whom the ownership right to the service of any Negro or Mulatto shall be vested at the passing of this act, other than such as are hereinbefore accepted, his or her heirs, executors, administrators, and assigns, and all and every of them, severally, shall be liable to the Overseers of the city, township, or district, to which any such Negro or Mulatto shall become chargeable, for such necessary expense, with costs of suit thereon, as such Overseers may be put to through the neglect of the owner, master, or mistress of such Negro or Mulatto, notwithstanding the name and other descriptions of such Negro or Mulatto shall not be entered as aforesaid, unless his or her master or owner shall, before such slave or servant attain his or her twenty-eighth year, execute and record in the proper county, a deed or instrument, securing to such slave or servant his or her freedom.

"VII. And be it further enacted, That the offences and crimes of Negroes and Mulattoes, as well slaves and servants as freemen, shall be enquired of, adjudged, corrected, and punished, in like manner as the offences and crimes of the other inhabitants of this State are, and shall be enquired of, adjudged, corrected, and punished, and not otherwise, except that a slave shall not be admitted to bear witness against a freeman.

"VIII. And be it further enacted, That in all cases wherein sentence of death shall be pronounced against a slave, the jury before whom he or she shall be tried shall appraise and declare the value of such slave; and in case such sentence be executed, the court shall make an order on the State Treasurer, payable to the owner for the same, and for the costs of prosecution, but in case of remission or mitigation, for costs only.

"IX. And be it further enacted, That the reward for taking up runaway and absconding Negro and Mulatto slaves and servants, and the penalties for enticing away, dealing with, or harboring, concealing or employing Negro and Mulatto slaves and servants, shall be the same, and shall be recovered in like manner, as in case of servants bound for four years.

"X. And be it further enacted, That no man or woman of any nation, or color, except the Negroes or Mulattoes who shall be registered as aforesaid, shall, at any time hereafter, be deemed, adjudged, and holden within the territories of this commonwealth as slaves and servants for life, but as free men and free women: except the domestic slaves attending upon Delegates in Congress from other American States, foreign Ministers and Consuls, and persons passing through or sojourning in this State, and not becoming resident therein, and seamen employed in any ships not belonging to any inhabitant of this State, nor employed in any ship owned by any such inhabitant; provided such domestic slaves be not aliened or sold to any inhabitant, nor (except in the case of Members of Congress, foreign Ministers and Consuls) retained in this State longer than six months.

"XI. Provided always, and be it further enacted, That this act, or anything in it contained, shall not give any relief or shelter to any absconding or runaway Negro or Mulatto slave or servant, who has absented himself or shall absent himself, from his or her owner, master or mistress, residing in any other State or country, but such owner, master or mistress, shall have like right and aid to demand, claim, and take away his slave or servant, as he might have had in case this act had not been made; and that all Negro and Mulatto slaves now owned and heretofore resident in this State, who have absented themselves, or been clandestinely carried away, or who may be employed abroad as seamen, and have not returned or been brought back to their owner, masters or mistresses, before the passing of this act, may, within five years, be registered, as effectually as is ordered by this act concerning those who are now within the State, on producing such slave before any two Justices of the Peace, and satisfying the said Justices, by due proof, of the former residence, absconding, taking away, or absence of such slaves as aforesaid, who thereupon shall direct and order the said slave to be entered on the record as aforesaid.

"XII. And whereas attempts may be made to evade this act, by introducing into this State Negroes and Mulattoes bound by covenant to serve for long and unreasonable terms of years, if the same be not prevented.

"XIII. Be it therefore enacted, That no covenant of personal servitude or apprenticeship whatsoever shall be valid or binding on a Negro or Mulatto for a longer time than seven years, unless such servant or apprentice were, at the commencement of such servitude or apprenticeship, under the age of twenty-one years, in which case such Negro or Mulatto may be holden as a servant or apprentice, respectively, according to the covenant, as the case shall be, until he or she shall attain the age of twenty-eight years, but no longer.

"XIV. And be it further enacted, That an act of Assembly of the Province of Pennsylvania, passed in the year one thousand seven hundred and five, entitled An Act for the trial of Negroes; and another act of Assembly of the said Province, passed in the year one thousand seven hundred and twenty-five, entitled An Act for the better regulating of Negroes in this Province; and another act of Assembly of the said Province, passed in the year one thousand seven hundred and sixty-one, entitled An Act for laying a duty on Negro and Mulatto slaves imported into this Province; and also another act of Assembly of the said Province, passed in the year one thousand seven hundred and seventy-three, entitled An Act for making perpetual an act for laying a duty on Negro and Mulatto slaves imported into this Province, and for laying an additional duty on said slaves, shall be, and are hereby, repealed, annulled, and made void."

We have given this act in full for various reasons. In the first place, it is not printed in full in any of the volumes of Pennsylvania laws; secondly, it disproves what historians in all sections of the Union have repeatedly stated, that the origin and passage of the law was due to the Quakers of Pennsylvania. The first section of this law was so framed that no peaceful Quaker could conscientiously vote for it. The members of that persuasion at that era were few in numbers in the Assembly, they had lost their power, and could not have carried such an important measure. When the Quakers had the majority in the Assembly they did not make an attempt even to abolish slavery. They did not even prevent the importation of slaves, merely laying a duty on them. Many of the Pennsylvania Quakers were, like their Puritan friends of New England, engaged in the slave traffic,—that is, were interested in it pecuniarily, and they did not do what they have been given the credit of doing. Of course, when the law of 1780 had passed, and a stop had been put to slavery, they became warm and ardent in the cause of abolition. They were no longer financially concerned, and hence for nearly a century have received the credit for doing what they did not, could not, and would not do.

So much for this humane act of our forefathers. They found then that slavery was inconsistent and utterly antagonistic to the principles and permanency of free institutions, and it was abolished. As it provided for the registration of every negro or mulatto slave or servant for life, or till the age of thirty-one years before the first of November following, and also provided "that no man or woman of any nation or color, except the negroes or mulattoes who shall be registered as aforesaid, shall at any time hereafter be deemed, adjudged, or holden within the territory of this commonwealth as slaves or servants for life, but as free men and free women," a book was opened at the county-seat for such purpose. From that at Lancaster we have those belonging to persons within the present Lebanon County. It will be seen that nearly all were owned by Curtis Grubb, of Cornwall :

About this period the Continental paper money, of which a specimen is herewith given, took up the attention not only of the people but of the law-making power. On the 20th of March, 1780, the Continental Congress, yielding to the necessity, authorized the States to revise the laws making the Continental bills a legal tender, and to amend them as it was thought proper. The next day, in the Assembly, a motion to suspend the operation of the law, so far as it made the Continental currency equal to gold and silver in payment of debts, was lost by a tie vote. The effort, however, to prevent a suspension of the tender laws could not be maintained very long. On the 24th of May a bill was proposed, which passed the 31st, effecting this plan for three months, and on the 22d of June the suspension was continued until the next session, and on December 22, indefinitely. On the 1st of June, for the purpose of bringing the war to a close, the Assembly authorized the passage of an act to redeem the Continental bills to the amount of twenty-five millions of dollars, by the collection of taxes at the rate of one million dollars to forty millions. Every effort was made to keep the State money up to par. The measures adopted bringing but temporary relief, the Assembly, on the 29th of May, passed resolutions, authorized the borrowing of a sum of money not exceeding £200,000 sterling, pledging the faith and honor of the State for its repayment after ten years. It was deemed necessary to send an agent to Europe, but neither in Holland or France, countries whose sympathies were the strongest for the struggling colonies, could this be effected, and he was, in July, 1781, recalled by the Supreme Executive Council of the State. Other measures were adopted to relieve pressing necessities. The army was not only without pay, but without clothing, and full short of provisions. To supply their destitute countrymen subscriptions were instituted by the ladies, while to relieve financial embarrassment, the "Bank of Pennsylvania" was established. The Continental money, however, continued to sink in value, while efforts were made again and again to sustain it. At last the financial crisis came, and many who deemed themselves in affluent circumstances by being in possession of large amounts of currency suddenly found they had only so much paper. In the agricultural sections the blow came with great effect. The inhabitants had supplied the armies and fleets of France, and of the colonies with provisions, receiving this Continental currency. For years—yes for half a century thereafter—there was not a farmer in Lebanon, Heidelberg, or Bethel township who had not large amounts of this worthless money. As this evil beggared our ancestors, it is fondly hoped future generations may be spared such grave disaster.

FAC-SIMILE OF CONTINENTAL MONEY.

CHAPTER XI.

The War of 1812-14—Proclamation of Governor Snyder of Pennsylvania—Rolls of Companies of Captains Achey, Derr, Doebler, Fisher, Leshner, Rees, and Snyder.

FROM the close of the Revolution and the ratification of the treaty of peace which guaranteed the independence of the American colonies, the ill-temper of the British began to manifest itself. The United States held that a foreigner could be naturalized and thus become an American citizen, enjoying all its privileges. On the other hand the English government insisted upon the doctrine, "Once an Englishman, always an Englishman." The British naval officers, therefore, claimed the right of stopping American vessels on the high seas, searching for seamen of English birth and pressing them into their navy. British ships were stationed before our harbors, and every vessel coming or going was searched. Within a period of eight years nine hundred American vessels were captured for alleged violations of English commercial regulations, and at one time there were more than six thousand names registered on the books of the State department of seamen who had been forced into the British navy. The feeling against the old enemy became intense, and it was finally greatly aggravated by the fact that British emissaries had been busy arousing the Indians along the then northwestern border, and an unsuccessful effort to excite hostility to the national administration in the New England States in order to bring about a dissolution of the Union.

On the 29th of June, 1812, war was formally declared against England. Never was a country more poorly prepared for war than the United States at this period. The regular army and navy were weak and inefficient. The former numbered five thousand men, and the latter comprised eight frigates and twelve sloops. The officers of the Revolution were either dead or had become so old and feeble as to be of little service. Although most of the States were "for war," the New Englanders opposed it as impolitic and unnecessary. Boston denounced this struggle and the flags of her shipping were hoisted at half-mast when the news came of the declaration. The Middle and Southern and Western States were true to the Union, and the courage of its citizen soldiery with the valor of its little navy, under the blessings of Divine Providence saved the country.

Pennsylvania never flinched; as when in the days of seventy-six she stood in the forefront of the struggle, so she was just as true, just as loyal, in the second conflict with the enemy. On the 12th of May, nearly a month preceding the declaration of war by Congress, Governor Snyder issued the following "General Orders," and we present them in full as part of the story of that war:

"The President of the United States having, in conformity to an act of Congress, required a draft of 14,000 men, as the quota of Pennsylvania towards the detachment of 100,000 militia, the Governor is desirous, with promptitude, to perform all the duties which the constitution and laws, principle and patriotism, assign him. He feels his high responsibility; He knows the ardent heart—warm zeal of the Pennsylvania militia; and his sensibilities are alive to the honor of his country.

"The revolution of America, that great and mighty struggle, which issued in giving to the United States that place among the powers of the earth, to which the laws of nature and of nature's God entitled them, had scarcely been consummated, when the King, over whom we had been triumphant, began an invasion of our rights and property, which has almost uninterruptedly been continued, and yearly aggravated in kind and in degree. Remonstrance has followed remonstrance, but they 'have been only answered by repeated injury,' and new outrage. Their promises—their written engagements—their pledged faith—have all been wantonly violated. These wrongs have been so long endured, that our motives have been mistaken, and our national character misrepresented. Our forbearance has been called cowardice—our love of peace, a slavish fear to encounter the dangers of war. We know that these representations have no foundation in truth; but it is time that our enemies—that our friends—that the world, should know, we are not degenerated sons of gallant sires.

"For nearly thirty years we have been at peace with all the nations of the earth. The gales of prosperity, and the full tide of happiness, have borne us along; while the storm of war has been desolating the greater part of the civilized world, and inundated it with the bitter waters of affliction. All the means, which wisdom and patriotism could devise, have been in vain resorted to, in the hope of preserving peace. The cup of patience—of humiliation and long suffering, has been filled to overflowing; and the indignant arm of an injured people must be raised to dash it to the earth, and grasp the avenging sword.

"In the cultivation of the earth, and in manufacturing and transporting its products, the people of the United States have been honestly, usefully, and harmlessly employed; and for many years have we been feeling the nation, whose navy 'has plundered our seas, ravaged our coasts, and destroyed the lives of our people.' Our ability and disposition to serve them has whetted their commercial jealousy and monopolizing animosity.

"It is our property that has been plundered—it is our rights that have been invaded—it is the persons of our friends, relatives and countrymen, that have been 'taken captive on the high seas,' and constrained 'to bear arms against their country; to become the executioners of their friends and brethren, or to fall themselves by their hands.' It is our flag that has been lashed in our waters—made red with the blood of our fellow-citizens. Every gate from the ocean wants to our ears the sighs—the groans of our impressed seamen, demanding retribution. It is our homes and firesides that have been invaded by 'the merciless Indian savages,' who have been instigated to pollute our sacred soil with hostile feet, and tomahawk our citizens reposing in peace in the bosom of our country. The seeds of discord have been sown amongst our people by an accredited Spy of the British government, at a time too when the relations of peace and amity were subsisting between our own and that government, founded on reiterated assurances from them of national esteem and friendship.

"If ever a nation had justifiable cause of war, that nation is the United States. If ever a people had motives to fight, we are that people. Our government, the watchful guardians of our welfare, have sounded the alarm—they have called upon us to gird on our swords and be ready to go forth and meet our enemies. Let us hasten to obey the government of our choice, and rally round the constituted authorities of the Union. Let an honorable zeal glow in our bosoms, as we eagerly press forward to render our services. It would give the Governor inexpressible satisfaction, if Pennsylvania would volunteer her quota. May each State animate the others, and every citizen act as if by the public weal—the national honor and independence rested upon his single arm. The example of the Heroes and Statesmen of our revolution, and the rich in-heritage their courage and wisdom achieved, cannot fail to urge all who love their country, to flock around her standard—upborne by the right hands of freemen, planted in the sacred soil their valor won, and consecrated by a righteous cause:—this nation may well go forth with a firm reliance on the protection of Divine Providence, and a conscious belief that the Arm of the Lord of Hosts, the strength of the Mighty One of Israel, will be on our aids.

"The last appeal being now to be made, by an injured and indignant nation; it remains for the Militia and Volunteers of Pennsylvania, by a prompt co-operation with her sister States, to render efficient the measures which are or may hereafter be adopted by the United States government.

"The Adjutant-General is charged with the necessary organization of the quotas of the State, conformably to the following plan:

"1st. There shall forthwith be drafted, in the manner prescribed by law, 14,000 militia, officers and privates, to be formed into two divisions, four brigades, and twenty-two regiments.

"The offer of service to the Governor of any flank company or companies, attached to any regiment, of a number equal to the number of militia required to be drafted from such regiment, may be accepted in substitution of such draft from the regiment.

"The corps of artillery, cavalry, riflemen and infantry, shall be in the following general proportions, as nearly as practicable: Artillery, 700; cavalry, 700; riflemen, 1400; infantry, 11,200.

"2d. The whole quota required shall be apportioned among the several divisions of the State, agreeably to a detail to be furnished by the Adjutant-General.

"The quotas of the several divisions of the State shall be formed into two divisions for the present service.

"The quotas of the first, second, third, fourth, fifth, sixth and seventh divisions of the State, shall form the first division for service, under the command of Major-General ISAAC WORRELL, a Brigadier-General from the first division, and a Brigadier-General from the third division of the State.

"The quotas of the eighth, ninth, tenth, eleventh, twelfth, thirteenth, fourteenth, fifteenth, and sixteenth divisions of the State, shall form the second division, under the command of Major-General ADAMSON TANNEHILL, with a Brigadier-General from the second division, and a Brigadier-General from the fourth division of the State.

"3d. The men shall be mustered and inspected as soon as the drafts are made, and without delay returns shall be made to the Adjutant-General, who shall thereupon transmit copies to the Secretary at War.

"When the organization of the detachment shall be effected, the respective corps will be exercised under the officers set over them—Drafted militia, by their proper officers; volunteers, as prescribed by law. The corps (either of drafted militia or of volunteers) will not remain embodied, nor be considered as in actual service, until by subsequent orders they are directed to take the field."

The Pennsylvanians responded nobly to the call of the Governor of the State, and there was a tender of three times the number of men requested. With the exception of the western troops, who fought under Harrison in the Ohio country, and those who served with Gen. Brown at Niagara, few Pennsylvania troops were long in active service.

The destruction of the capitol and public buildings at Washington, and the threatened attack by the enemy on the city of Baltimore, brought the war near home to Central Pennsylvania, and there was no want of men to defend the State. Every man was a soldier. The following are the rolls of those soldiers who were in that campaign, and although they "snuffed the battle from afar," they were nevertheless patriots deserving well of their country.

The rolls of 1812-13 are not to be found, which is to be regretted, as this record would be the more complete.

Among the general officers we find the following who were from Lebanon County. There were no doubt others, but we have failed to distinguish them:

On the 24th of December, 1814, a treaty of peace was signed by the commissioners of the United States and of England at Ghent. It did not, however, settle the great question of the war, the impressing of seamen, but there was a tacit understanding, and it was never revived. The news did not reach the United States until the month of February. In the mean time one of the most brilliant victories ever achieved by the American arms, that of the battle of New Orleans, on the 8th of January, 1815, had occurred.

Following the war came on the financial crisis, which has ensued and will follow every war, ruining many. Soon, however, the country became prosperous, and every branch of industry or valuable interest received a beneficial impulse, and thus through nearly half a century trade and commerce, agriculture and the mechanic arts prospered. The resources of the country were becoming rapidly developed. In the towns industrial establishments were erected, the old-time theories gave place to modern views and designs and thoughts. In the farming communities the old log cabins and log barns were removed, large, capacious houses erected, and stone and brick buildings occupied the site where the early pioneers erected the rude log hut, or the more capacious structure used for frontier defense. Among the lead were the people of the townships now forming the county of Lebanon. Many removed to the West during these years to better their condition. Some did, it is true, but in the end they have only done what their ancestors who in Mühlbach, on the Quitapahilla or of Bethel, did over a century before, made "the wilderness to blossom as the rose."

CHAPTER XII.

The Formation of Lebanon County—Boundaries—Court-House and Jail—First Courts—Admissions to the Lebanon County Bar, 1813-83.

At the close of the war of the Revolution the inhabitants of Lancaster County north of the Cone-wago Hills clamored for a new county. Many and various were the reasons assigned. As early as 1782 petitions were presented to the Assembly detailing the many inconveniences in attending the courts at Lancaster. The feeling within the projected new county was at first almost unanimous, but no sooner did the most favorable plan—the erection of the county, with the seat of justice at or near Harris' Ferry—meet the approval of the Assembly, when there suddenly arose most violent opposition. Harrisburg was considered as being on the verge of the county instead of in the centre. Remonstrances were sent to the Legislature from almost every township, and especially from Heidelberg, Lebanon, and Bethel. The opposition was so great that the commissioners of the county refused to assess and levy a tax for the purpose of erecting the court-house and prison, on the demand of the trustees, believing that a change of the location of the county-seat would eventually be accomplished, and until this question was permanently settled the people should not be put to any expense for the erection of the county buildings. As a result, the trustees accused the commissioners and assessors of dereliction of duty, and the power of the Supreme Executive Council was called to the aid of the trustees. At this juncture the following memorial, signed by all the inhabitants in the townships alluded to, was sent forward to the executive authorities :

"To His Excellency the President and the Honorable the Supreme Executive Council of the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania.

"The Petition of the Subscribers Freeholders and Inhabitants of the County of Dauphin, Humbly sheweth: That Your Petitioners and many other Inhabitants of the said County did remonstrate and petition to the Honorable House of Assembly at the last Session setting forth the Grievances of the Inhabitants and Harshships and Inconveniences under which they labour, in resorting to the very Verge of the County, to the present Seat of Judicature near Harris' Ferry and praying that the Seat of Justice be appointed in a more-convenient part of the County &c., &c. To which remonstrance and Petition, and to the Act entitled 'An Act for erecting Part of Lancaster County into a Separate County' Your Petitioners humbly refer Your Honorable Body.

"That the Commissioners and Township Assessors of the said County have declined to assess and levy any Monies on the Inhabitants for the purpose of building a Court House and Prison at a Place so inconvenient, As the Commissioners & Assessors are well acquainted of the General Dissatisfaction of the Inhabitants of the said County to pay any such Assessments.

"That Your Petitioners are apprehensive, that in the present Recess of the Assembly, Application may be made to Your Honorable Body accusing the County Commissioners, for neglecting their Duty in not assessing the Sum or Sums of Money judged necessary by the Trustee, mentioned in the said Act of Assembly for the Purposes aforesaid, and therefore in Case of any such Application to Your Honorable Body. Your Petitioners humbly pray Your Excellency & the Council will be pleased to Suspend the Infliction of any Fines or Penalties on the Commissioners of Dauphin County for having declined to comply with the Requisitions of the said Trustees until the Issue & Event of the Remonstrance & Petition aforesaid be determined by the Legislature."

Finding that the law was imperative, the proper officers attended to the performance of their duty, and further proceedings in opposition thereto ceased. However smooth the machinery of the new county of Dauphin may have worked, efforts were at once made to secure a division of the same, adding, if possible, a small portion of the adjoining counties of Berks and Lancaster, with the town of Lebanon as the county-seat. Determined opposition was made at first from the counties referred to, and also from that portion of Dauphin now included therein. It was only when the Legislature had decided to locate the State capitol at Harrisburg that the approval of those formerly opposed was secured.

At each session of the General Assembly for a period of twenty years petitions and remonstrances for the erection of a new county were presented. The proposed name therefor was "Hamilton," in honor of Alexander Hamilton, who fell in the duel with Aaron Burr, and whom it was thought fit to honor by his admirers in Pennsylvania, but for some cause, probably political, this was objectionable. Finally the name of the principal town was given to that of the county, it having been derived from the original township, and the measure passed in that shape.

On the 16th of February, 1816, Governor Simon Snyder approved "an act erecting parts of Dauphin and Lancaster Counties into a separate county, to be called Lebanon," the first section of which recites "that all those parts of Dauphin and Lancaster Counties lying and being within the limits following, to wit: beginning at the southeast corner of Dauphin County, where it intersects the Berks County line, about four miles from Newmanstown; thence through Lancaster County to a sandstone house, formerly occupied by George Wyman, and including the same, on the great road leading from Scheafferstown to Elizabeth Furnace; thence to a house formerly occupied by one Shroyer, deceased, and including the same, on the great road leading from Lebanon to Manheim; thence to Snyder's mill on Conewago Creek, excluding the same; thence northwesterly to the house of one Henry, at the cross-roads leading from Harrisburg to Reading, including the same; thence to Raccoon Creek, on the Blue or Kittatinny Mountain; thence along the said mountain, on the top thereof, to the Berks County line; thence along the said line to the place of beginning, shall be, and the same are hereby, according to said lines, declared to be erected into a county henceforth to be called Lebanon."

By an act approved 21st February, 1814, three commissioners were appointed to run and mark the boundary lines between the counties of Lebanon and Lancaster, and Lebanon and Dauphin. Their report is on file in the Quarter Sessions of Dauphin County. That part which relates to the line between Dauphin and Lebanon Counties is as follows, to wit:

"Starting from Snyder's mill on the Conewago Creek; thence north $14\frac{3}{4}$ degrees, west seven miles and 132 perches, to Andrew Henry's, including the same; thence north $15\frac{1}{2}$ degrees, west eight miles and 239 perches, to the source of Raccoon Creek; thence on the same course 32 perches to the summit of the first or Blue Mountain; thence along the same north 64 degrees, east 13 miles and three-fourths of a mile to the Berks County line."

On the 29th of March, 1821, another act of Assembly was approved, providing,—“That so much of the townships of East Hanover and Bethel, in the county of Dauphin, as lies north of the Blue or Kittatinny Mountain, shall be and compose a part of the county of Lebanon.”

These divisions took from the county of Dauphin the entire townships of Heidelberg, Bethel, Lebanon, Anville, East Hanover, and a large portion of Londonderry, and a small strip of West Hanover west of Raccoon Creek.

Commissioners were afterwards appointed to run the extended lines, as directed by the act of March, 1821, and their report, recorded in Dauphin County, Road Docket A, page 73, is as follows:

REPORT OF COMMISSIONERS APPOINTED TO RUN THE DIVISION LINE BETWEEN LEBANON AND DAUPHIN COUNTIES, JAN. 16, 1832.

“William Cochran, Martin Hocker, and John Harrison, the commissioners, the two first appointed by an act of Assembly passed the 23d day of March, A.D. 1829, and John Harrison (the third), appointed by a supplement to said act passed the 13th day of March, A.D. 1831, in the room of John Weldman, deceased, do report that they have performed said service agreeably to said act, by commencing at a black oak on the top of the Blue Mountain; thence north fifteen degrees, west four miles one hundred and ninety-two perches, to a pine on the top of the Fourth Mountain; thence along the top of Fourth Mountain, north sixty degrees, east ten miles two hundred and seventy-two perches, to a pine at the Schaykill County line, a plat or draft of which in to the said report annexed.”

It may be here stated that the commissioners supposed all the territory between the First and Fourth Mountains belonged to East Hanover and Bethel townships, when, in reality, they included a portion of Middle Paxtang township, which was wholly unauthorized. As the inhabitants within the extended lines were few, and perchance none within that portion of the township referred to, no objections were made to the report, and the county of Lebanon on its northern boundary reaches to the top or ridge of the Fourth Mountain.

The commissioners appointed under the act of 16th of February, 1813, to purchase sites for the county buildings, bought of George Karch on the 11th of April, 1814, the lot numbered fifty-two in the borough of Lebanon, for the county prison, for five hundred and fifty dollars, said lot fronting on Walnut Street (now Eighth Street) sixty-six feet, in depth one hundred and ninety-two feet on a fourteen feet alley to another alley, and bounded on the south by another lot of George Karch. At the same time they purchased of Peter Shindel, Esq., and Peter Shindel and wife, the lot on the corner of Walnut (now Eighth) and Cumberland Streets, bounded on the north by a fifteen feet alley, and on the west by lot of Philip Greenawalt, being sixty-six feet in front and one hundred and ninety-eight feet in depth, for two hundred dollars. A subsequent purchase was made from Philip Greenawalt, on the 20th of January, 1817, of the half lot adjoining on the west, being thirty-three feet on Cumberland Street, and one hundred and ninety-eight feet in depth to an alley, for the sum of twelve hundred dollars.

In 1816 the county commissioners contracted with Stephen Hills, the architect of the capitol at Harrisburg, to erect a court-house, in which year they paid him fourteen hundred dollars on account towards the building. The next year they paid him thirteen thousand six hundred dollars, and in 1815 the further sum of six thousand four hundred and fifteen dollars and eighty-seven cents, in which year it was completed at the total cost of twenty-one thousand four hundred and fifteen dollars and eighty-seven cents. It is a substantial brick structure, and although it has been several times repaired and remodeled, its architecture is not to be admired. Nevertheless, its offices are very commodious and well arranged, while the acoustic properties of the court-room are not equalled by any of the modern-built halls in the State. Ornate and elaborate workmanship in these days is more studied than comfort.

The first jail was a temporary structure rudely constructed. For this Michael Huber furnished boards and scantling to amount of $200; Jacob Knapp same, for $75; Christian Seyler, six locks for $72, and for repairing one lock, $3. When the second jail was constructed there were paid for different items: To Conrad Fasnacht and others for digging foundation for jail cellar, $37.50, and for cellar, $350; William Glenn, for mason work, $2534.32; Daniel Muller, for smithwork, $1703.56; Samuel Meily, smithwork, $180; Samuel Lutz, hauling lumber, $7; Michael Bross, same, $3; Christian Gingrich, same, $3; Jacob Dillier, for carpenter work, $200; Jacob and Frederick Embich, same, $465.50; Jacob Knapp, boards and scantling, $235.86; Edward Godwin and Jacob Goodheart, "for surveying and calculating jail," $200; Michael Shugar, cellar steps, $9; Daniel Foght, cleaning cellar, $1.50; Samuel Rohrer, one lock, $4; George Heilman, hauling lumber, $34, and digging well, $120; Thomas Sanders, plastering, $216.82; George Fesler, mason work to jail wall, $400; and William Glenn, same, $836.75. The total cost of first or temporary jail was $250; and of the second, $7103.81. The latter has been often repaired and altered. The present wall and stable cost $5161.

The First Court of Quarter Sessions of the Peace for Lebanon County was held on Dec. 13 and 14, 1813, before Walter Franklin, president, and John Gloninger and David Krause, associate judges. The constables present and sworn were: Annville township, Henry Redick; Bethel township, Frederick Hower; East Hanover township, Henry Smith; Lebanon township, George Hoke.

The next session was held on the 14th of February, 1814. The following tavern licenses were granted by the Court: Heidelberg Township.—Simon Bassler, Michael Valentine, Jacob Shoener, John Meiser, George Guss. Lebanon Borough.—Frederick Embich. Bethel Township.—George Stein, John Lick, Daniel Kaufman. Annville Township.—Michael Furry. The foreman of the grand jury was Samuel Rex, of Heidelberg.

At the May sessions of 1814 the following tavern licenses were granted: Heidelberg Township.—Andrew Stouch, Frederick Overlin, Abraham Rex, Abraham Andrews. Lebanon Borough.—Peter Wentling, Jacob Shindel, Abraham Doebler, Bernhard Reinhard, John Imhoff, Peter Lineaweaver, John Young, Godlieb Orth, Philip Fisher. Bethel Township.—Henry Backenstose, John Rank, John Glick.

At the September sessions, 1814, John Whatmough, for blasphemy, was fined ten pounds, or suffer three months in the county jail, pay the costs of prosecution, etc.; John Bickel, foreman of grand jury. At the same sessions the following constables were sworn: Annville township, David Baily; Bethel township, John Fasnacht; East Hanover township, Christian Zering; Elizabeth township, George Wolfesberger; Heidelberg township, John M. Reily; Lebanon township, John Huber; Londonderry township, David Bigham; foreman of grand jury, Jacob Hantz.

The First Common Pleas Court of Lebanon County convened Dec. 10, 1813, with Walter Franklin president judge, and John Gloninger and David Krause associate judges. The first case was that of John Becker for the use of Peter Becker vs. Henry Becker, for debt, £126 3s. Judgment for amount claimed, and settled in full, Jan. 23, 1816. This was the only business transacted at this term; J. Y. Smith attorney for plaintiff. At the next term, on Feb. 10, 1814, the first case was that of Robert Young vs. John Wilhelm, for debt not exceeding three hundred dollars; Edward Godwin attorney for plaintiff. The second case was that of Michael Stroh vs. John Lick; Certiorari to John Houte, Esq; Proceedings quashed Aug. 11, 1815; Edward Godwin attorney. The third case was Elizabeth Elder et al. vs. John Stauffer; Thomas Elder attorney for plaintiffs. The fourth case was same vs. John Stauffer; same attorney. The next was Samuel Betz and his wife Esther vs. John Dengler; Godwin attorney. John Kean and John Forster, lately merchants trading under the firm of Kean & Forster, for use of John Forster, vs. Isaac Moyer; Thomas Elder attorney for plaintiff.

Next court convened May 16, 1814, but adjourned to Aug. 1, 1814, without transacting any business. At this term (August) the first case tried was Sarah Ritter vs. George Eckert, for breach of marriage contract; James Buchanan and Edward Godwin attorneys for plaintiff, and Thomas Elder and James Hopkins for defendant.

The following petit jury (first in the county in a civil action) tried the case: Basler Fetterhoff, George Jöhler, John Hostetter, George Garrett, Jr., Adam Bosler, John Logan, Jacob Peiffer, Tobias Ulrich, George Stine, Jacob Selver, Michael Gingrich, and Thomas Clark, who found for the lady in the sum of two hundred and five dollars, and costs.

For the December term, 1813, two suits were entered; February term, 1814, six; May term, thirty; and September term, twenty-two. At the December term, 1814, the cases numbered thirty-nine, showing a gradual increase in litigation.

FIRST WILLS RECORDED.—The first will admitted to record was that of Christian Seybert, Sr., of Heidelberg township, dated Oct. 19, 1811, with a codicil of April 15, 1813, and a second codicil of April 22, 1813, and same was recorded Aug. 7, 1813.

The next will was that of Michael Moyer, of Heidelberg township, dated March 13, 1813, and recorded May 12, 1813.
